MUST GO FORWARD THROUGH DEVELOPMENT OF LAW

Stirring Addresses by Rev. Mr. Willmott, City Clerk Crane and C. H. Johnson

Memorial Day Observances by Paul Revere Post And Kindred Organizations

"Obedience to the law" was the general theme of the speakers in Quincy at the Memorial Day exercises by the Grand Army. The day was an ideal one. A cool breeze prevailed for the greater part of the day, making it more comfortable for the aged veterans of the civil war, in which to march in the performance of their sacred duty of decorating the graves of those comrades who have been summoned before the great General above.

In accordance with general orders the post assembled at headquarters, in full uniform at 7 o'clock. A detail under command of Luther S. Parrott visited Mt. Auburn cemetery and decorated the graves of Col. Paul J. Revere and Samuel H. Spear. Senior Vice Commander, Mark E. Hanson, accompanied by the Chaplain of the day, Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, and a detail of comrades visited the cemetery at the National Sailors' Home, and held appropriate exercises. Junior Vice Commander Thomas Ring with a detail visited Mt. Wollaston cemetery decorating graves there. Others visited the Hancock and English cemeteries, the Hall and St. Mary's cemeteries.

At 9.30 a line was formed in front of the headquarters and accompanied by the Wollaston band and escorted by Abner B. Packard camp, Sons of Veterans, the Boy Scouts and Spanish War Veterans, marched to the junction of School and Franklin streets where cars were taken for West Quincy. Alighting at the junction of Copeland and Crescent streets a short march was taken to the Hall cemetery where appropriate exercises were held about the Solomon Willard monument, where a brief address was made by Rev. P. S. Neldon. The command then proceeded to the St. Mary's cemetery where exercises were held.

AT WEST QUINCY.

The address at the St. Mary's cemetery was by Rev. Thomas R. McCoy, who spoke in part as follows:

He made special reference to the founding of the country, its defense by immigrants in times of danger and civil strife and said "Our country today demands the same respect for her laws, rights and for its stars and stripes. If these tributes and loyalty are refused then her perpetuity is in dauger."

In closing he said, "The great American people love and admire you, the veterans of the Grand Army of this great republic. Year by year as we witness your ranks diminishing our hearts are saddened, but your example will live on. It will be a stimulous to the youth of our land as it has been to our Spanish War Veterans who love our country and shed blood in its defense, and to those who valiantly followed the flag into Mexico.

"You have done your duty well. Your example of heroism, and your deeds of valor have not been in vain. You men, and men like you, have helped to make this nation the greatest on God's earth.

"You have given an example that the youth of our land will love to follow. Future generations will be inspired by your patriotic spirit and you can rest assured that our beloved country will ever be the land of the free and the home of the brave.

"Go then, I bid you, and lay your garlands on the graves of your departed comrades and in the performance of that sad and solemn duty I would ask you to pour forth a prayer for the happy repose of your members who have died.

"Pray that the great and omnipotent God who guides the destiny of nations may guide and protect our beloved country, that she may ever remain the bright star for the oppressed of all nations, where all men will be forever free and equal and where liberty will ever be the freeman's right."

Services were also held at the grave of John A. Boyd by the United Spanish War Veterans.

This duty over the command proceeded by the same route to post headquarters. At the hour of noon the flag which had been at half-mast was raised to the mast-head, and the veterans stood, with uncovered heads for five minutes, in a silent toast to departed veterans.

The line then marched to Faxon hall where the noon lunch was served by the ladies.

At a little after 2 o'clock the Woman's Relief Corps, the Rebecca Wiswell Tent, Daughters of Veterans and the Ladies' Auxiliary preceded by a drum corps, marched to the Adams Academy grounds where they formed on the west side of a miniature monument to await the arrival of the Grand Army.

Veterans with drum corps then marched to the Quincy depot where they received Bumpus camp, Army of the Philippines under command of Capt. Vern G. Brooks, and a detail from the Coast Artillery located at Fort Banks, whom they escorted to Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

The exercises at the Academy grounds were opened by Commander Marstin who said that the post had

FLAG WITH A HISTORY

Waved on Spear Street House During Civil War

People passing through Granite street Memorial Day, doubtless noticed an old flag waving in front of the home of Mrs. George T. Waldron, but it is doubtful if many knew of the interesting bit of history connected with that flag.

It is one of home manufacture yet none the less interesting. It was made by Mrs. Harriett E. Waldron. Bass, at the time of the Civil war and was waved over her home on Spear street to welcome home the Quincy boys at the close of the war. It also waved during the time the boys were at the front fighting for liberty.

Time has shown its marks on the flag however, so that all that now remains of the original flag is the blue field with its large centre star surrounded by 31 smaller stars. It might also be added that the rope by which the flag is suspended is the original rope. The red and white stripes are of later date as the original became so frayed by use that they hac to be replaced.

Since the war the flag has been flown on all patriotic occasions and especially on Memorial Days.

This is not the only relic of the civil war in the possession of Mrs. Waldron for among her many other interesting articles is a pewter pitcher, from the Port Hudson campaign, and which was sent home by J. M. Munroe who was one of the forlorn hope.

ACTIVE SERVICE BY BOY SCOUTS

Render Effectual Work at Memorial Day Exercises

The Boy Scouts were given an opportunity during the Memorial Day exercises at the Adams Academy grounds Saturday afternoon to show the result of their training. In one corner of the grounds the Scouts had erected its emergency tent which was in charge of a hospital squad all day.

During the early part of the services, Arthur Smith one of the scout color bearers who stood in front of the miniature monument toppled over. Scout Master Hodgkinson rushed to his side, but before he could loosen the coat about the boys throat the hospital squad arrived with a stretcher and he was taken to the tent where he was soon revived.

A few minutes later Mrs. Mary A. Fox of the Woman's Relief Corps was overcome and again the Boy Scouts came to the rescue and she was taken to the hospital tent. Mrs. Aiden Hotbrook and Harrison G. Newcomb were also partly overcome by the march and the standing in the hot sun and were assisted to a shady spot, near the hospital tent.

On the return to headquarters after the exercises one of the Sons of Veterans was overcome and fell in the street opposite the Hancock cemetery. He was revived in a few minutes by comrades.

IN MEMORY OF SAILOR DEAD

The members of the Womans Relief Corps held their service in memory of the sailor dead Friday afternoon at the foot of River street. The speaker was Rev. Stephen C. Lang of the Washington Street Congregational church. At the close of the services flowers were cast upon the water.

Fore Rivers Win Game in Manufacturers League

The Fore Rivers had little difficulty in winning their third straight game in the Manufacturers league from the Gillette Co., at Merrymount Park Saturday afternoon, 3 to 0. Knight allowed but two hits and increased his strikeout total to 42 in three games.

The team demonstrated that as at present constituted it is the fastest organization the city has had in years. Intelligent base ball and hitting in the pinches games brought victory.

Right Fielder McCarthy knocked a boy off a bicycle and fell in the path of an auto leaving the field while chasing a high drive by Ed Jenkins. He and the boy escaped injury. Jenkins was ordered to bat over because it appeared McCarthy could have caught the fly.

William Cain, the local third sacker, who played the star game, was slightly hurt when he collided with the baseman in stealing second. He was able to continue. Knight would have pitched a no hit—no run game if he hadn't been careless and grooved the ball in the seventh and ninth. The score by innings.

Supt. Charles C. Hammond and a delegation of letter carriers of the Quincy post office escorted the remains of John W. O'Malley from his home on Cottage avenue Sunday afternoon to St. John's church where funeral services were conducted by Rev. Fr. Florence McCarthy. Burial was in Holy Cross cemetery. The deceased was attached to the East Boston office.

On Washington street, an unknown woman and child had a narrow escape from being run down The runaway was stopped at the coal yard of C. Patch & Son.

Miss Hattie Waterhouse of Atlantic street has gone to Lisbon, Maine for a two weeks' visit with friends and relatives.

M. P. HEANEY AS ASSISTANT

Appointed to Vacancy in Commissioners Department

Late Friday afternoon Mayor Miller announced the appointment of Martin P. Heaney, as Assistant Commissioner, thus filling from the civil service list the vacancy that has been filled temporarily since its establishment by Thomas Cahill. The Mayor desired to retain Cahill in the position, but as he had failed to pass the civil service examination and there was an eligible list, the Civil Service Commissioners refused to allow Cahill to remain. He was discharged from the position a week ago. Mr. Heaney is well known in West Quincy and has had considerable experience in the line of work to which he has been apopinted. He was one of the three who successfully passed the recent civil service examination. He assumed his new duties this morning.

The most extreme case of early rising heard from lately is that of the United States Senate, which has voted to begin work at 11 A. M.

It is believed the farmers will consent to sell direct to the consumer if the latter will pay a little higher prices than the retail store charges.

The New England Civics Institute has secured a foot-hold in Quincy and begun to give a course in Citizenship and Government at Coddington School hall. Judging from the program and the names of the persons back of it, the course should be of tremendous value to any one who is fortunate enough to be able to take it. Political science, practical politics state and national government and city problems are among the subjects to be taught. There will also be lectures on the legal rights and duties of women. The Director is Shailer Mathews Dean of the University of Chicago where the idea was conceived of bringing high grade instruction to the very doors of the people. Dr. Berle of Tufts College is the local Director of Instruction. Miss Jane Addams of Chicago is among the contributors. The School Committee have been asked to allow the use of the Coddington School hall free of rent, to the organization and it is expected that they will vote to do so if they can grant the application without violating any of the rules governing the letting of school halls.

The proposed course looks like one of the things that are really worth while and it is to be hoped that there will be a large enrollment in Quincy . It is a case of obtaining college instruction in important subjects without leaving town to get it.

TOOK FLOWERS FROM CEMETERY

The police this morning presented sufficient evidence at the trial of Mrs. Ralph Crelli of Brackett street, charged with stealing flowers from Mt. Wolalston ceemtery, to convince Judge Avery of her guilt, and he imposed a fine of $25. She denied stealing the blossoms and said she had taken them from girls coming from the cemetery and was appreehnded before a chance was offered to return them.

THE SUNDAY ALARM.

A crowd of neighbors prevented an explosion in the burning barn of Louis Romeri on Willard street Sunday afternoon by removing a 25 gallon tank of kerosene. The paint on the top of the tank was scorched. Several of the neighbors suffered from the heavy smoke. The damage to the interior and hay will be about $60.

TEAM HAD NO LIGHTS.

An auto, operated by W. M. Lindon of Bryantville, hit an abandoned team at Hancock and Grant streets Friday evening and narrowly escaped being wrecked. The machine was slightly damaged and the driver shaken up. He reported to the police that there was no lantern on the team. Because of the heavy darkness at this spot and the negligence of the owner to provide a lantern action may be taken by the police.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

William Marr, of the firm of Marr & Gordon of Barre, Vt., formerly of this city, was fatally injured while erecting a monument in Troy, N. Y., Thursday. A block of granite weighing 19 tons was being lifted into position by a derrick when a snatch block gave away and Mr. Marr, was struck by a steel cable. His chest was crushed. He was 60 years of age and leaves a wife. When in this city he was a granite cutter.

188 BODIES IN QUEBEC MORGUE

Mothers and Children Are Locked In Death Embrace

EMPRESS OF IRELAND WRECK

Responsible For Loss of More Than Nine Hundred Lives—Many Remain In Hull of Steamer Shattered by Collision With Collier Storstad In St. Lawrence River—Catain Places Blame For Catastrophe Upon Master of Storstad—Says He Sounded Warning Five Times Before Collision—Canadian Pacific Railway Libels Collier For $2,000,000 and Vessel Is Detained at Montreal

Quebec, June 1.—The Canadian government steamer Lady Grey brought from Rimouski 188 bodies recovered from the wreck of the Empresss of Ireland, which was rammed and sunk by the collier Storstad in the St. Lawrence river. The historic heights overlooking the St. Lawrence were black with spectators as the funeral ship moved slowly up the river and moored at the new embankment wall in the breakwater. The coffins were carried ashore and the mournful work of identification began without delay.

The Lady Grey was escorted by H. M. S. Essex, and fifty sailors from the warship, with bared heads, carried the coffins down the ganglank and laid them in rows on three long tables stretched under the freight shed on the pier. The building was draped with black. A crowd that contained many of the survivors and relatives and friends of the dead gathered at the doors and waited in silence for permission to enter and pass down the aisles between the rows of bodies.

Sad Scene In Morgue

The three tables, each 100 feet long, soon held coffins of every description. Assembled on one were twenty-five little white caskets that held the bodies of children. Although the Lady Grey had taken to Rimouski all the coffins that could be gathered in the short time at the disposal of the government and steamship officers, they were not enough. Besides the children's caskets there were eighty-eight containing the bodies of adults. The other victims were brought here in rough pine boxes hastily nailed together for the occasion.

There was no sadder sight in the building than the table where rested these improvised coffins; for many of them held the bodies of mothers and children locked in the last embrace just as they had sunk to their death off Father Point early Friday morning.

There, amid pathetic scenes, many of the victims were speedily recognized and claimed by relatives. It may be days before others, difficult of recognition, are identified.

Hundreds Not Yet Recovered

Besides the 188 bodies which the Lady Grey had on board, eighteen have been identified and cared for at Rimouski by families of the dead. Search of the waters near Father Point has revealed few more of the victims; and it seems probable that the bodies of hundreds of the more than 900 persons whose lives were lost when the liner went down lie imprisoned within the shattered hull of the big steamer, resting on the bottom, ninety feet below the surface of the St. Lawrence river.

Investigation into the responsibility for the disaster, begun before a coroner's jury at Rimouski, was adjourned for a week, after Captain Henry G. Kendall and the chief engineer of the Empress of Ireland had given testimony placing the blame for the collision in the Storstad.

Kendall's Testimony

Had the Storstad steamed ahead after the collision and held her bow in the wound she made in the Empress of Ireland, Captain Kendall testified at the inquest before the coroner at Rimouski, the probabilities were there would have beeen little loss of life other than that caused by the impact.

Kendall, in substance, declared that he had taken all possible precautions against a collision. His ship had been stopped, he gave the requisite signals when the Storstad was still two miles away, but the collier had kept on through the fog, which settled down soon after the two vessels sighted each other and had rammed the Empress of Ireland while the latter was virtually motionless.

Kendall took up his story of the disaster from the point at which the Empress of Ireland had dropped her pilot on Thursday night at Father Point, near which the disaster occurred.

Sighed the Storstad When Clear

"We then proceeded full speed," continued Kendall. "After passing Rock Point gas buoy I sighted the Storstad, it then being clear.

"The Storstad was then about one point twelve degrees on my starboard bow. At that time I saw a slight fog bank coming gradually from the land and knew it was going to pass between the Storstad and myself. The Storstad was about two miles away at that time. Then the fog came and the Storstad's lights disappeared. I rang full speed astern on my engines and stopped my ship.

"At the same time I blew three blasts on the whistle, meaning 'I am going full speed astern.' The Storstad answered with the whistle, giving me one prolonged blast.

"I then looked over the side of my vessel into the water and I saw the Empress was stopped. I stopped my engines and blew two long blasts, meaning my ship was not under way. He answered me again with one prolonged blast. The sound was then about four points upon my starboard bow.

Sighted Ship's Length Away

"It was still foggy. I looked out to where the sound came from. About two minutes afterward I saw his red and green lights. He would then be about a ship's length away from me. I shouted to him through the megaphone to go full speed astern, as I saw the danger of collision was inevitable. At the same time I put my engines full speed ahead with my helm hard aport, with the object of avoiding, if possible, the shock. Almost at the same time he came right in and cut me down in a line between the funnels.

"I shouted to the Storstad to keep full speed ahead to fill the hole he had made. He then backed away. The ship began to fill and listed over rapidly. When he struck me I had stopped my engines. I then rang full speed abead again, when I saw the danger was so great, with the object of running her on shore to save passengers and ship. Almost immediately the engines stopped, the ship filling and going over all the time to starboard.

Ship Quickly Foundered

"I had in the meantime given orders to get the lifeboats launched. I rushed along the starboard side to the boat deck and threw all the gripes out of Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 7 boats. Then I went back to the bridge again, where I saw the chief officer rushing along to the bridge. I told him to tell the wireless operator at once to send out distress signals. He told me that this had been done. I said: 'Get the boats out as quick as possible.' That was the last I saw of the chief officer. Then in about three to five minutes after that the ship turned over and foundered.

"I was shot into the sea myself from the bridge and taken down with the suction. The next thing I remember was seizing a piece of grating. How long I was on it I do not know, but I heard some men shout from a lifeboat: 'There is the captain; let us save him.'"

"What was the cause of the collision?" asked the coroner.

"The Storstad running into the Empress, which was stopped," answered Kendall. In answer to a question by a juror, Kendall said that when he shouted to the Storstad's captain to stand fast he received no answer. It was impossible for him not to have been heard, he added.

Shouted Five Times

"I shouted five times. I also shouted 'Keep ahead!'" said Kendall, "and if he did not hear that he should have done it, as a seaman should have known that."

"There was wind?"

"It was quite still."

"How many boats were there aboard the Empress?"

"Between thirty and forty. There were boats for everybody. She had boats for more than 2000 persons.

"There was no panic. I had full control of the crew and they fought to the end. There was no panic among the passengers or crew. Everybody behaved splendidly. About four boats were launched; these were the four of which I loosened the gripes. As the ship sank and the water rose these boats floated away. The persons who were saved were saved by the Empress' boats and by the wreckage."

Storstad Libeled For $2,000,000

The collier Storstad reached Montreal under her own steam. Contrary to the stories which have been received of her condition, she was very little injured. Her stem was bent back for over a dozen feet high above the water line and she stood up straight. She has about 11,000 tons of coal on board. Only a few officials were allowed to board her.

As soon as the vessel tied up, a writ, issued by the Canadian Pacific railway claiming $2,0000,000 in the Quebec admiralty court, was served on Captain Anderson and the Storstad was placed under detention.

Anderson said he could make no statement, as the officials of the Dominion Coal company, the charterers of the boat, had arranged to do that.

It was declared by seamen, who were persuaded to tell something of the collision, though they had been warned by the officers not to talk to newspaper men, that Anderson was off duty at the time of the accident, that the ship had been ordered astern before it struck the Empresss a glancing blow, and that 350 people were saved by the crew of the Storstad.

SUBJECTED TO LONG GRILLING

Peaslee Is Questioned About the Murder of His Father

WOOD SEEMS TO HAVE ALIBI

Two Persons Found Who Positively Declare Shooting Occurred About 9 O'clock, at Which Time Farmhand Now Under Arrest Was Some Distance From Scene of the Crime

Henniker, N. H., June 1.—The Henniker selectmen closely questioned Morrison H. Peaslee in relation to the death of his father, Howard W. Peaslee, who was found murdered in his den the morning of May 23, and for whose murder Eugene A. Wood, a farmhand, is now being held without bail.

The selectmen, assisted by Detective Hildreth of Manchester, began questioning Peaslee in the Henniker hotel at 9 o'clock last night and the inquiry continued until after midnight. Shirley W. Peaslee, another son, was not permitted inside the room.

The two men were informed by Selectman Connelly at 8 o'clock that the board of selectmen wanted to talk about the case with them, but it was 9 o'clock before the pair appeared.

Meanwhile they had been at the house of Miss Ida Barnes, talking in the yard. Miss Barnes was the chief witness against Wood at the preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Two persons yesterday positively said that the time of the shooting was not more than a minute before the 9 o'clock whistle blew the night of May 22, when Peaslee was killed.

These new witnesses practically assure the freedom of Wood, who at 9 o'clock and shortly afterward was seen at the Riverside hotel, a good fifteen minutes' walk from the scene of the shooting.

On the strength of these witnesses' statements, the selectmen have worked hard to find evidence against the man who committed the murder.

WOMEN BOUNCED FROM CATHEDRAL

One Slips Into St. Paul's Lectern and Begins Harangue

London, June 1.—A militant suffragette, invading the watchful officials in St. Paul's cathedral, mounted the steps of the lectern Sunday and harangued the astonished worshipers upon "The wrongs of women."

The archdeacon had just concluded reading the lesson when a woman ran to the lectern and, grasping the ironwork, addressed the congregation for upward of a minute, despite the efforts of the ushers to dislodge her. She was finally carried bodily from the cathedral.

Other suffragettes then began praying for "martyred women." They were also ejected.

There were similar scenes in the Birmingham cathedral, the women there rising in their seats and shouting.

Considerable routine business was transacted and plans for the day's celebration were outlined.Definite plans however cannot be made until it is known just now much money can be collected. AMUSEMENTS

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The announcement that "The End of the Bridge" is to be revived at the Castle Square this week is of great interest. This Harvard Prize Play it will be remembered, had a run of nine weeks three seasons ago, and in every way, both artistically and popularly, it was a triumph. It is effectively dramatic and humorous, and there is certain to be a renewed interest in it as again produced by Mr. Craig. It will be staged exactly as before, and the cast will include Mr. Craig as the Doctor, Mr. Meek as Felix Marriott, Miss Henrietta McDannel as Peter, Mr. Roberts as the German, Miss Colcord as the Nurse and Miss Mary Young as the Wife.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

"The Misleading Lady," with Lewis S. Stone in the principal part and the original New York cast which played seven months at the Fulton theatre commences its fifth week at the Colonial theatre, Boston, tonight. This is a play of laughs and thrills; its to do with a woman garbing herself with the suggestive modern garments that appeal to the sex instinct in man; it's to do with a man's sense of justice as applied to himself and to the woman who is tempting him. What the woman gets, the man thinks is right; what the audience thinks is probably the same. How far a woman can go in tempting a man is a question. In the cast, as in New York, are besides Mr. Stone, Miss Grace Barbour, Hazel Sexton, Alice Wilson, Frank Sylvester, Albert Sackett, Walter Regan, Stanley Dark, Walter Scott. Evenings at 8.15. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday at 2.15.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

Among Our Churches

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

This church is rapidly regaining the ground lost during the vacancy in the pastorate. The different activities of the church are being quickened and there appears to be a strong disposition on the part of all the people to help the cause along. The spirit of optimism is in evidence.

Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. D. B. McLeod, preached on the "Plan of Salvation" and in the evening on "The law of Compensation." Despite the heat, there were good attendances.

The Last Supper will be celebrated June 14th. This is a sacrament to which great importance is attached by the Presbyterian church in all jurisdictions.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST

Both preaching services Sunday were of a patriotic nature throughout. In the morning, Rev. Joseph Walther the pastor, preached from the subject, "Alabaster Boxes of a Nation's Gratitude." He spoke of our pouring out our love and reverence for the soldiers who sacrificed their lives for us, that we might enjoy the liberty that we now have. The music was appropriate for the service; the selection rendered by the choir was Eichberg's "To Thee, O Country!" The regular evening service was held at 7.00, in the auditorium. This is more of a praise service, with a short sermon by the Pastor. His subject was "Patriotism, National and Heavenly.

Sunday school was held in the chapel with a good attendance. Elaborate preparations are being made in the primary department for the Children's day exercises which will take place June 14.

Attendance in both Junior and Senior C. E. societies does not decrease with the coming of the warm weather. The children discussed "The Good That Comes From Keeping Our Pledge" as their subject, and the older ones "Converted Purses," with John E. Leavitt as leader.

Thursday evening at 7.45 the regular meting for praise, prayer and testimony will be held in the chapel. Immediately at the close of this meeting the standing committee will gather in the Albee class room. Those desiring to be baptized should be present.

Friday evening at 7.00 the C. E. Society will hold its monthly business meeting in the chapel. Following this, there will be a union social with the Epworth League of the Methodist church and the Congregational C. E. Society.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

The Rev. Thomas W. Davison, pastor if the Congregational church of Atlantic, occupied the pulpit in exchange with Rev. Carl G. Horst. This is the first time that we had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Davison in our church and all who heard him were pleased with his message.

Spalding, Secretary of the Massachusetts Prison Association speaks on "The Treatment of Crime: What is was; is; and should be." Meyer Bloomfield speaks on "The Immigrant and some of his Problems." Other speakers are Prof. Daniel Evans D. D., Rev. Walter Calley D. D., Rev. Charles F. Dole D. D.

The officers and teachers of the Sunday School meet at the home of the minister this evening.

Rev. Carl G. Horst attended today the annual public meeting of the Massachusetts Convention of Congregational Ministers (Trinitarian and Unitarian) at King's Chapel. The speakers were Rev. Thomas Van Ness of Brookline and Rev. Samuel C. Bushnell of Arlington.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

Whit Sunday, as the English call the day, was very beautiful and those attending the Wollaston Congregational church enjoyed a most inspiring sermon by Dr. Sneath, who took for his subject "The Witnessing Spirit" from Acts 5:32. "And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him."

"As the members of all organizations are its witnesses so the church, needs witnesses for religion through members if Christianity is to prosper and reflect the religion of Jesus Christ The Christian must witness to all mankind Christ said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." We fail to value the gospel as we ought when it promises so much of inestimable value. It is a remarkable privilege to know we may be saved from our sins and assured of a life beyond. If we realize this we will be ready to tell others and thus bless our lives, for when we save others we save ourselves. We never can tell how much we may achieve, we may never know the results, but we do know that they labor not in vain who labor in the Lord. We should never refuse to witness by reason of limitations or because of not being qualified. All must witness in some way in order to grow. Imperfection does not necessarily imply failure. God has given us an inexhaustible power which will enable us to be and do and go. How, we know not, but we know that it is true."

Wednesday, the Christian Endeavor Society will conduct a trip aroung the world. Automobiles will leave the church at 7.30 P. M. and visit England, Germany, China and California. Thursday, in vestry the regular midweek service will be led by Dr. Sneath, topic—"Jesus and Nature"—Lessons He Taught from It."

PARK AND DOWNS.

At the Sunday services the musical program was rendered by the vested choir, assisted by the pastor, whose rich powerful voice, was a pleasing addition. Rev. Mr. Ayers took for his morning text, I Chronicles, XXVIII-9th. "Remember the Lord God of thy fathers and Serve Him." A memorial sermon, reviewing the gifts which past generations have bequeathed to this generation, material, intellectual, and spiritual. The value of the material and the intellectual is found in their ministry to the spiritual part of man's life. We may fear the strong personality, even admire such. We stand in awe of the great thinker and are willing to be taught by such but our real homage and reverence is for the man who reveals to us the most of the nature of God. If you wish to build for the future you can build no surer, or more permanent monument than a structure of character, reared upon the character and the spirit of God. This was a deep, spiritual sermon, full of helpful, stimulating thoughts and ideas, and filled one's soul with a great pure longing for that which is high, noble and unselfish—for conquest and victory over self, for strength and courage and for faith which is spiritual power.

Evening sermon text Galatians VI-7th." Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." The speaker pointed out the multiplication of laws and of bodies of men employed by the different divisions of government. When we realize how many men in our country today are non-producers, and receive their incomes from Government, so that if all civic, state and National employees should pool their votes, they could almost surely determine a national election. We begin to realize how necessary it is that our public servants should be men impelled by a high sense of duty."

Whole Army From "Little Rhody."

One of the Rhode Island boys in the civil war on picket duty near Yorktown, Va., declared a truce with a Confederate soldier. This frequently happened during the war. "What regiment do you belong to?" asked the inquisitive Yankee. "The Seventeenth Georgia," was the reply. "And what is yours?" "The One Hundred and Fifth Rhode Island." The Confederate gave a long, low whistle and departed.

General Smith's Threat.

"Extra Billy" Smith, the Confederate general, was as irascible as he was brave. One day he had his soldiers on an exceedingly difficult march. When they halted the general had a hard time getting them started again. Finally he exclaimed, "If you fellows don't get up pretty quick I'll march the regiment off without you and leave you all behind."

MUST GO FORWARD

mustered out seven comrades since last Memorial day. Today is the veterans Sabbath, yet is not a day of mourning, but a day of congratulation. We will not weep over these graves of the heroes but will hang garlands over them.

Rev. Mr. Willmott was then introduced and spoke in part as follows:

REV. B. A. WILLMOTT.

Again in the good Providence of God we are permitted to stand together as citizens and hold this simple memorial service. By so doing we honor those living and those dead, who perfiled their lives in defence of our flag and country. On land and on sea alike they gave their witness to the patriotism which all Americans should share. For the Unity of their country and freedom of all men under the stars and stripes they offered willingly of their young manhood.

At home patient and brave mothers, wives and lovers bore the terrible strain which only uncertainty can bring. With a prayer on the lips and tears in their eyes they saw the ever rolling stream bears all her sons away" and upon her bosom many have been borne to the sea of eternity. "We honor their memory: some, thank God, still remain and we hold them in honor for that which was wrought by them and thro them.

But even when the great Captain of our common salvation musters out all who are present today, our children will tell to their children, and one generation shall recite to another what you did for the life and land which they enjoy. We cannot afford to forget, nor to allow our children to forget the high devotion and noble self-sacrifice for our country. It is such history that inspires the citizens of a land to lofty patriotism and strengthens them for new tasks which await them; for "sterner tasks await race that rises in your honored place," and your example shall inspire us for those tasks. In the rush to secure a living and surrounded by materialism we are in danger of forgetting and it is for you to remind us of the cost of blood and treasure which secured for us this great heritage we enjoy.

This day should be a challenge to us to be loyal to all those principles for which you contended. To bid us be loyal to that flag which is the symbol of a beneficent government of the people for the people, by the people. To you that flag is beautiful, for you have followed it in battle, and planted it on field and fort. To us it shall be beautiful because we too will defend it from dishonor. Wherever you planted that flag the slave became a man, with the rights of freeman, and it shall be our effort to maintain and develop larger freedom but always under the restraint of law.

The traitor today is he who betrays any place of trust or sells his vote: more than he who tramples on the flag, is that man a traitor to our country who corrupts legislators and purchases votes.

We shall defend it best by urging the sacredness of all law. It cannot be possible that a good citizen can defy or violate laws which are for the good of all, simply because comfort, pleasure or convenience urges him to do so. This country can only remain a unit in economic and political development as rich and poor educated and uneducated obey law. And no man will hasten the disruption of society so rapidly as he who thro wealth, social or political prestige, manages to evade law. America is alive and growing, we are going forward to greater social and economic justice. Our angel of destiny with flaming sword points us onward; but we go forward not thro social chaos, but thro steady and orderly development under laws both Divine and human. We must learn to subordinate our "interests to the good of all, it must be all for each and each for all," for if each is to select those laws he will, and those he will not obey we can only expect to disrupt this greatest of experiments in governments which the race has witnessed.

We cannot say we shall always be right, but we will purpose to be right. Here on this Memorial Day we stand young and old as citizens of varying political and religious creed, but all making our proud boasts "we are Americans," and as such we pledge ourselves to take this trust, to develop it wisely and carefully and whatever the years may bring, as in the past, so in the future, we will be true to our God and our Country.

Adjutant James H. Webb then read Gen. John A. Logan's first general orders to the Grand Army and Lincoln's address at Gettysburg.

City Clerk Emery L. Crane, representing Mayor Miller was then introduced and spoke in part as follows:

(speech to come)

CITY CLERK CRANE.

To most of us here, the events of the 60's are simply a history. To you men of the Grand Army they are living facts. And yet, we of the succeeding generation, join with you today in these memorial services, not from a sense of duty, but from choice.

This is historic ground. Here John Hancock played when he was a boy and we are standing in the shadow of an edifice erected to the memory of another patriot, John Adams. As some one has well said, this is the place where American independence began. On July 4th we honor the patriots of 76 and today we honor the patriots of '61 and it seems to me that Memorial Day is observed in a far more fitting way than is Independence Day

The lesson which this day should teach us is patriotism. And what does patriotism mean? Love of country most of you will say. And what do those words mean? Why, respect for law and order and allegiance to the flag. The war of the Revolution was fought to give us liberty. The war in which you men took part was fought to give us freedom. Liberty and freedom, the two greatest treasures that any country can possess.

And still there are those in this country, and I fear that they are increasing in number, who are dissatisfied. They would pull down this structure of liberty and freedom and give us a country founded on anarchy. Right here in our city, inside of a month, a so-called man standing on the steps of the fountain has assailed our army, our navy, our flag and what was still worse, the memory of a young man who had died for his country and on that very day had been given a hero's burial.

The men of '76 gave us our flag, the men of '61 saved the flag for us and it is the duty of the men of this generation to see that it is not insulted, either by Huerta in far off Mexico or by the I. W. W. in the streets of Quincy.

CHARLES H. JOHNSON.

Mr. Johnson delivered an address that evidently moved the throng of citizens. An eloquent tribute was paid to the memory of John Hancock. Then followed an appeal to the citizens to keep alive the memories of the day. The citizens were reminded that it was for them to provide suitable quarters for the Boys of '61, other than rooms in the attic that they now occupy. This brought applause from the people. Mr. Johnson referred in his vigorous manner to the Haggerty incident and proclaimed in behalf of the citizens of the City a word of protest to the slur cast the life of the young Irish Hero Haggerty. This was followed by a stirring appeal for loyalty to the flag, and the speaker closed with the eyes of all the vast throng fixed upon him by quoting from O. Wenedll Holmes—One Flag, one land, one heart, one hand, one nation evermore.

Senior Vice Comander Mark E. Hanson then deposited the red, white and blue wreath in memory of Loyalty, Charity and Fraternity. Junior Vice Commander Thomas Ring deposited the white wreath in the name of Charity, Past Commander Francis Loud the blue wreath in the Loyalty and Commander Marstin the red wreath in the name ofFraternity.

The Woman's Relief Corps then held their service in memory of the unknown dead which was conducted by President, Mrs. Idella Savage and a ladies' quartette. This service closed with a poem by Mrs. Kate Blaisdell and benediction by Rev. Mr. Willmott.

The Boy Scouts then deposited a wreath on the monument and exercises at the Academy grounds closed with three volleys by the color guard.

The Command then marched back to headquarters and was dismissed.

AT BUMPUS LOT.

The exercises at the grave of Lieut. Edward Bumpus at Mt. Wollaston cemetery were conducted by the officers and chaplain of Bumpus camp, Army of the Philippines. In addition to the ritualistic service there was a brief address by Hon. Everett C. Bumpus, who spoke of the duty of the regular army of the United States, and said that his son was the fourth generation who had served in the army. He also gave a brief history of the 9th regiment of which his son was a lieutenant.

William J. Leslie, of Worcester, a former resident of Quincy, and a member of John A. Boyd camp also spoke briefly. He spoke of the work of the Massachusetts troops in '61 and '98 and of the Mexican trouble and the reunion at Gettysburg in 1913. In closing he said "As a nation we have tried to show our appreciation for the services of the Grand Army and Spanish War veterans. You have lived to see freedom brought to others beyond our shores and offering freedom and liberty to those who wish to come within our borders. In the last few years we have seen our military forces called out to enforce the law. If our laws are wrong they should be changed and changed by the people and not by the mob. For as Lincoln described our nation, we are a nation of the people, by the people and for the people."

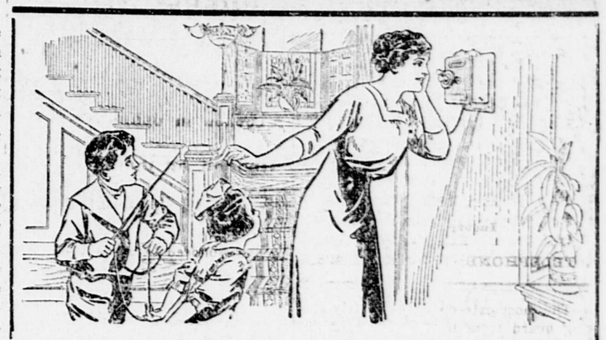

The exercises closed with three volleys by the regulars and taps by the buglers. The regulars and taps by the the Philippines were escorted back to the Quincy depot where a train was taken for Boston.

DAY AT MILTON.

One of the largest crowds that ever attended a Memorial Day service was present Saturday at the Town Hall, for the purpose of honoring and calling to memory the deeds and lives of those brave men who fought for "Old Glory." The program of the day was in charge of Huntington F. Wolcott Post 102 G. A. R., assisted by Huntington F. Wolcott W. R. C. 147; Col. Oliver W. Peabody camp 74, S. of V.; and Emma Forbes Ware tent, 57, D. of V. Commander N. S. Barry of the Grand Army presided at the Town Hall exercises and he made the opening address. The national orders and obituary reports of the year were read by Adjutant Alexander Hobbs. Following this the Page Male Quartet sang "The Vacant Chair." A ritual service was performed by the officers of the post, followed by Lincoln's Gettysburg address delivered by Palmer Holmes of the Vose school. Joseph Belcher of Randolph, a very able speaker, delivered the address of the day. His speech brought very clearly to the minds of the audience the noble and sacrificing deeds which the old veterans had performed. During the exercises beautiful selections were rendered by the quartet including: "To Thee, O Country" and "Lead Kindly Light." The exercises closed with the singing of "America" by the entire audience.

Immediately following the veterans and Sons of Veterans marched to the cemetery, music being given by Rollin's band. The usual services were obsevred including the ritual and taps at the grave of Col. Peabody. Delegations were sent to Mt. Auburn, Quincy and Dorchester cemeteries to decorate the graves of Milton soldiers. The committees in charge of the exercises from the various organizations were: Grand Army—N. S. Barry, chairman; Alexander Hobbs, J. Strangman, J. E. Blake, William F. Leavitt and W. Q. Baxter, Relief Corps—Alice L. Hockaday, chairman, Emma L. Littlefield, Annie L. Hunt, Nellie M. SPORT BRIEFS

Quincy is on the edge of a soccer revival, made possible through the generosity of President Joseph W. Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, who has given over a large field near the shipyard to the devotees of the game. Until the local aggregations were forced to disband two years ago on account of the lack of a good field, the city was represented by teams that established national reputation. Since then the game has been on the wane, locally at least, and it had its effect also on New England soccer because wherever Fore River played a rattling game was assured. In their line-up were some of the best in the country, many of them having been members of champion teams in Scotland. Arrangements are underway to bring the crack team of the Bethlehem Steel Works here for a series and other managers are commencing to request games for the fall.

Marceau took fifth place for Dartmouth in the intercollegiate games Saturday. He made his effort much too early and had little left to offer resistance in the last 150 yards. In the last 75, with his face distorted by his efforts he gamely fought for a place and crossed the wire after running the severest race in his career.

The little glooms have again taken possession of the camp of the Quincy High base ball team and Braintree beat them Friday 16 to 7. Loose playing was Quincy's feature.

The Holy Name team of St. John's parish beat the Clark class of the Presbyterian church Saturday, 7 to 3. Tite's playing for St. John's and Emery's for the losers were the features.

The Atlantic All Stars beat the Atlantic A. A. Saturday morning 11 to 9 and the City Point Blue Sox 9 to 6 in the afternoon.

The Wollaston Methodist Episcopal Church Boy's baseball team has been doing particularly good work, having won a number of games. The team is under the direction of Rev. George M. Bailey and Mr. Cornell. The members are Albert Baker, ss; Warren Cottrell, cf; Cecil Brown, p; Heber Bailey 1b; Ted. Taylor, 2b; Edward Hogland, 2b; Raymond MacKeel, lf; Elmer Atwood, c; Harold Ewertz, 2b; L. Moody, rf. Heber Bailey is captain and Ted Tailor manager. They played The Fenway Saturday in the Pines which was an interesting game as the teams are evenly matched.

PRES. POWELL STARTS GAME

Fore Rivers Open New Park by Defeating Brockton

(By Teri Bus.)

On Saturday forenoon Fore River football team opened their park by meeting a strong team from Brockton, Mr. Powell, president of the Fore River Corporation, having kindly granted permission to the club to play their games on the Washington street grounds. The Shipbuilders now having a park of their own will go steadily on and build up their team to the standard which it attained two seasons ago. In doing so the committee will have an arduous, but pleasant duty, to perform for they feel that their team now playing on the present ground will have the hearty support of all football followers in Quincy

The park was in the pink of condition, and the weather was good for football, while there was a good turnout of spectators, amongst whom were many ladies including Mrs. Powell. Brockton won the toss and decided to play with the wind, which blew right up the field, from the water end. The contest was started by Mr. Powell, president, of the Fore River Shipbuilding plant, who by a long kick sent on to Morrison. A nice piece of play by Duff took the ball into Fore River territory but Hendry sent Brockton back. Harrison had a shot for goal but it went wide. Play for a long period remained even although Brockton with a less determined defence would have been scored against. Both teams were giving and taking some hard knocks and the referee who showed all along that he would deal seriously with any misplay ordered Hendry, Fore River, and Brockton back to the pavilion. At the end of the first half there was no scoring. On the restart Brockton put new life into the game and the Fore River was called upon to save, the goal keeper clearing in fine style. After a period of fifteen minutes Alexander shot up the field and John Andersen getting possession raced off with the ball and after a nice piece of play centered to Harrison who scored a splendid goal. On resuming, Fore River forwards carried the ball right in to Brockton territory and Rennie scored. Completely taken by surprise by the turn of event Brockton's defence went to smash and the rout seemed complete when Harrison scored again. Ten minutes before the game finished the shipyard workers had Brockton completely run off their feet and Harrison getting away in fine fashion had nothing to do but beat Malcolm when Duff ran up and fouled him. A penalty kick was rightly given, and Harrison taking the kick registered his third goal for the afternoon. The game finished without further scoring, leaving Fore River winners by 4 goals to nothing. The following were the teams:

FORE RIVER	BROCKTON.

Where War Supplies For Huerta Were Shipped From

CLAIM OF GERMAN OFFICIALS

Manufacturers In Massachusetts Suspected of Furnishing Equipment—Terms of Armistice Believed by Some to Have Been Broken by Dictator In Receiving Shipments

Washington, May 29.—Administration circles were astonished by information emanating from German sources that the arms and ammunition, landed within the past few days at Puerto Mexico for Huerta, were made in the United States, shipped from Boston and New York to Hamburg and from there reshipped to Mexico.

This means that should mediation fail and the United States forces be compelled to march upon Mexico City they will be compelled to face guns manufactured in their own country.

While there has been no real embargo placed on arms for Mexico still there was an order isssued by the war department, prohibiting shipment across the northern border, which cut off the constitutionalists, and President Wilson ordered the seizure of the Vera Cruz customs house when it was learned that the Ypiranga was expected with this same consignment.

Under the mediation agreement the United States could not, some officials declare, stop the shipments, but, on the other hand, there are many who declare Huerta broke the spirit of the armistice when he allowed the shipments to arrive.

Administration officials declare there is nothing which can be done to American firms who have sold arms to Huerta or his agents, and maintain that in all probability the firms had no idea that their munitions of war were to be used.

While no direct information has been received regarding the identity of the manufacturers who made the shipments, the big Massachusetts centres of firearm production fall under suspicion.

In that case Boston would naturally be the port from which the arms would be sent, and inquiry into this matter is already under way.

The implication of American manufacturers came after the holding of the German steamer and the charge that German implements of war had been landed for Huerta.

German officials are said to have declared the charge that arms of German manufacture had been supplied was false, and pointed out that the munitions came from the United States. A partial verification came from Mexico, where it is said the shippers receiving the goods corroborated the Germans in their assertions.

In the senate the landing of the German implements of war at Puerto Mexico was the subject of short debate, started by Senator Reed during the debate on the naval appropriation bill.

"I do not mean to criticize the administration, but I cannot see why we could stop the landing of arms at Vera Cruz and not stop the landing at Puerto Mexico," declared Senator Poindexter.

Boys Start Blaze Which Burns Planing Mill and Five Houses

Medford, Mass., June 1.—Forty-two persons were made homeless and a planing mill and five houses on Shipp avenue were badly damaged by fire, causing a loss estimated at $13,000.

The fire is believed to have started when a number of small boys who, while swimming in the rear of the building, and who are supposed to have been smoking, threw a cigaret stub under the building.

Within three minutes the planing mill, owned by Herman A. Miles, was a mass of flames and more than twenty small boys who were in swimming and had left their clothing on the platform of the mill lost their clothing and had to borrow whatever clothing they could to reach their homes.

OPEN RACE AT SOUTH BOSTON

Dartwell Carries Off Honors in Class D. Iris Second

Ex-Commodore Whittemore in his prize winner Dartwell carried off the honors in class D at the first open race of the season Memorial Day under the auspices of the South Boston club.

The Iris of ex-Commodore Crane was a good second and the Clara of ex-Commodore Robbins third. Vice Commodore Emery was on deck with his Mudjekeewis but fourth position was the best he could get. There was considerable interest to see what the Almira, the new boat of H. A. Jones would do, but he did not have a good opportunity. In the first place he arrived at the starting point just as the gun was fired, with three reefs tucked in, as he had been informed by the weather bureau that a 90 mile gale was blowing off South Boston. This report proved to be somewhat exaggerated. Dr. Jones had a party of fourteen on board on his trip up from Quincy Bay and these had to be landed at the float before the race. Then as stated above he had in thtree reefs and no opportunity to shake them out. However he promised to be heard from at the next race.

The Harpoon of Charlie Adams was sailed in the sonder class by W. D. Lane but only finished third. In class I the Dorchen of A. W. Findlay won first position and in class S the Gaby of George W. Glover of the Squantum club was first.

The annual lobster tournament of the Quincy tennis club for members was held Saturday afternoon on the President Hill courts. The tournament was played down to finals which will be played between Davis and Merriam next Tuesday. In the semi finals Davis beat Barker, 6—3, 8—6. Merriam beat Simpson, 6—1, 6—2.

HANDICAP FOR DOUBLES

Wollaston Club Members Tournament Finished to Finals

A members handicap tournament for doubles was held on the courts of the Wollaston Tennis club Saturday and was played down to finals. The finals between Hoxie and Robertson and Barker and Favreau will be played sometime this week.

TWO MEN TEAM BOWLING.

Lee Brooks and Lester Sprague will line up tonight against Rupert MacFarlane and Henry Prescott to settle the Two Men Team Championship of the Y. M. C. A. Although the first team is considered to be the strongest the match will not be one-sided as Brooks is now in a slum. Both MacFarlane and Prescott have been hitting the "wood" for close 100 marks for the past two weeks and they promise to make things interesting for the "Big Two." Three strings will be rolled and the team scoring the highest pin-fall will be declared the winner.

WALNUTS' WIN TWO.

The Walnut A. C. won two games Saturday at Atlantic. They beat the fast Ceneca A. C. of Cambridge in the afternoon 9 to 3 in a spectacular game and the Crystal A. C. of Jamaica Plain 6 to 5 in the morning. Duggan's triple sent home the winning run. The score of the afternoon game by innings:

The Skeleton In the Closet

Thereby Hangs a Tale.

By F. A. MITCHEL

The city of New York was founded on the southernmost point of Manhattan Island and first grew to the eastward. Later it started up Broadway, and the east side, as it is called, fell into decadence. But till after the beginning of the nineteenth century the handsomest residences were in the neighborhood of the East river.

Some years ago workmen engaged in tearing down an old dwelling near Franklin square—in which Washington lived when first inaugurated president—came upon a closet built in a wall in which was a skeleton. How it got there was a mystery, for there was no opening to the closet, it being inclosed within four thick walls. The find was referred to a historical society, which appointed Heileger Bogardus, an antiquarian, to investigate the whole matter and report. The following is extracted from the papers filed with the society:

"The fact that the skeleton was found within four solid walls is easily explained. The house was repaired and altered during the last decade of the eighteenth century, and the wall wherein was the door to the closet was made whole. The apartment inclosed was of such size that workmen would not necessarily have seen what it contained, especially since there were no windows to admit light in that part of the house.

"As to there being such a closet at all, the story connected with it is a sufficient explanation, for the opening, which was walled up, was closed by a sliding panel. What has not been satisfactorily explained is the use for which the closet was designed. At the time the house was built such secret chambers were not unusual, especially in the homes of those who were in constant danger from some enemy. But in America when the country was first settled avenues of escape were rather tunnels through which the settlers might save themselves from besieging Indians. It seems probable that the house in Franklin square was thus provided by its builder, Meinheer Van Vranken, simply because he had a similar closet in his residence in Rotterdam, for it appears that his ancestors were prominent officials in the Netherlands during that period when the bloodthirsty Duke of Alva held the country in his grip."

But to the story I have unearthed concerning the skeleton found in the closet. Meinheer Van Vranken came to America in 1658, bringing with him what was in those days a fortune. Soon after landing he sent to Holland for brick with which to build his residence and completed it in 1662, modeling it after his home in Rotterdam, even to the secret closet. When it was completed the house was the finest in the city, which was then a Dutch town and called New Amsterdam.

Now, it was in 1664 that the city was captured by the English, the Dutchmen refusing to make an effort to defend it despite the protestations of their governor, Peter Stuyvesant, who stamped with his wooden leg and swore by St. Nicholas that they were an arrant set of cowards, unworthy of the protection of their patron saint.

This change in the government was also a bitter pill for Meinheer Van Vranken to swallow. He was Dutch from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, and his ancestors, who had been sailors, had fought the English when the Netherlands were a power on the sea. Now, meinheer had a very pretty daughter, Anneke by name, who much more readily adapted herself to the new country than her old father, who could be content in it only so long as it was Dutch. When the English landed many of the inhabitants of New Amsterdam went down to the Battery, where the aquarium now stands, to see them come ashore. Among them was Anneke Van Vranken, buxom and with eyes as blue as the heavens above and two ropes of flaxen hair hanging down her back.

One of the boats which brought supplies ashore was commanded by Ralph Eggleston, a midshipman, nineteen years old, three years Anneke's senior. Though six feet in his stockings, he wore the jacket of a middy, decorated with brass buttons, that shone resplendent in the sun and added to the attractions of his handsome person. His eye lighted upon Anneke, who stood among those looking on, and Anneke's eye lighted on him. To her this young man giving orders to a dozen stalwart men, who obeyed his slightest command, was little less than a god. But the young man was on duty and, having unloaded his boat, set off for his ship, lying out in the Hudson river.

Busy as he was, however, young Eggleston found time to give Anneke Van Vranken an admiring glance, and in return there was a rapture in her eyes at what was to her a heavenly vision. It was but a few days after this that while walking under the guns of the fort, whereon the English had replaced the Dutch flag, Anneke met the midshipman, who was on shore leave, strolling about with a brother officer.

This meeting seems to have resulted in an acquaintance between Ralph and Anneke, but how it was brought about is not known. First sight lovers are not apt to be kept apart through the want of an introduction. Be this as it may, the two went together down to the southernmost point of the island and passed the time there till sunset (when the midshipman's leave expired), sitting on a rock making love with that rapidity which can only be attained by persons in their teens.

Eggleston wished to visit Anneke in her home, but she told him that the sight of an Englishman was enough to throw her father into a fit, and if he knew that she had made the acquaintance of one of those who had taken the city and changed its name from New Amsterdam to New York he would sail back to Holland with her by the first vessel going there. Therefore, not being able to meet the girl who had charmed him in her own home, he made an appointment to meet her elsewhere.

The next meeting between the Englishman and the Dutch girl was in this wise: Anneke was standing on the shore of the East river just north of the wall that gave the present name to Wall street, not more than five or six minutes' walk from her home. A boat pulled by a single oarsman was coming round the southern end of the island and approaching the shore where Anneke stood. She went down to the water's edge, the boat's stern was swerved to the shore; she stepped in, and the boat continued its course in the direction of the islands lying to the eastward.

It is unnecessary to mention that the oarsman was Ralph Eggleston, who had pulled around from the Hudson river to meet his new found sweetheart to take her for a ride on the East river, where they could make love without being interrupted. Instead of pulling across the river and thence south on the opposite shore and returning by Governors island, they very foolishly went directly past Anneke's home. True, the house was some distance from the shore and perhaps she thought that she might not be seen from there. She did not reckon on the fact that the house was on a hill and that her father had brought to America the very spyglass with which his father, Captain Van Vranken, had discovered a British ship that he had attacked and sunk. Meinheer happened at the time of this boat ride to be strolling about his grounds. Unfortunately for the lovers the sunlight was reflected from the gold trimmings of the officer's uniform. Meinheer Van Vranken, wondering what one of these hated naval men was doing out on the water with a woman—who must be Dutch—went to the house, took down Captain Van Vranken's spyglass, brought it to bear on the occupants of the boat and, to his horror, discovered his daughter there in company with a British officer.

I know not what immediately followed the revelation. The next link in the chain of the story is that Meinheer Van Vranken determined to shake the dust of Manhattan Island off his shoes—since it had become English soil—and go back to Rotterdam with his family. By this move he intended to separate Anneke from the English midshipman who had crept into her affections while her father was drinking destruction to the English fleet in drafts of schnapps.

Anneke was put under a strict watch during the period in which the preparations were being made for the return to the Netherlands, for there was much to be accomplished. Even the heavy four post bedsteads required the strongest horses on the island to drag them to the landing and a lighter of extra size to take them to the ship. Anneke was in charge of Katrina Lemke, an old maid who had no sympathy for young lovers and hated the English. This woman was enjoined not to let her charge out of her sight for a single moment, and since the father feared the young midshipman might, under pretense of searching the house for arms, bring a party of men to take away his sweetheart a six pound cannon was mounted at the only gate in the high wall surrounding the place.

The day the family were to sail for Holland Katrina Lemke and Anneke were left in the house till the last minute, while Meinheer Van Vranken superintended the hauling of the last of the household goods to the landing. When he had finished his task and seen his family and goods put on board the ship he returned for his daughter and her duenna.

He found the house vacant.

From this point the story is vague. It does not appear that Katrina Lemke was ever found. The next heard of Anneke Van Vranken she was living in England, the wife of Captain Sir Ralph Eggleston of the British navy. The loss of the duenna and the escape of her charge are to be accounted for only by conjecture, though there is an unsubstantiated tradition that it was explained by Lady Eggleston. This explanation accords with the recent discovery of the skeleton in the closet.

The tradition is that while the two women were alone together in the Van Vranken home Anneke broke away from her jailer and hid in the closet. The duenna followed her and entered the closet, and Anneke slipped out and shut the door. Anneke, thinking only of flight, left the place and communicated with her lover, who came ashore, married her and took her to his ship.

Anneke did not know—what I now suppose to have been the case—that in closing the door of the closet it had been held by a spring lock. The panel closed automatically with the closing of the door. My theory is that Katrina Lemke was caught in the closet, could not release herself and perished. Doubtless the skeleton discovered there was hers. This theory is borne out by the fact that it is the skelcton of a woman.

SAFETY RULES FOR VACATION

Practical Advice on Camping. Don't Take Too Much.

WHAT YOU CAN'T DO WITHOUT

Personnel of the Party Is Important Consideration—Precautionary Measures to Guard Against Accidents In the Woods—How to Tow a Drowning Person by Using Various Holds.

With the approach of vacation season and the popularity of camping parties the appended advice and suggestions are of timely value:

The primary mistake of the novice at camping is that he takes too much. A cooking outfit for two should consist of a frying pan with detachable handle, coffeepot, enameled ware kettle, large spoon, hunting knife and fork For table service carry three enameled ware plates or dishes about an inch and a half deep, two large cups of the same material, two knives, two forks and two spoons. The plates are deep enough to hold soup or chowder.

The outfit should always include a small ditty bag, containing thread, needles, pins, court plaster, buttons, stout twine and a small pair of scissors.

In camp a doctor is seldom available, so take a medicine chest along.

Your Camping Friends.

The personnel of a camping party for the mountains is a most important consideration. They should all be thoroughly well acquainted and absolutely congenial in spirit. A camp far in the woods is no place to become acquainted with any one. If he develop unpleasant traits you can't get away from him.

No matter how good a friend a person may be of yours, don't take him in camp with you if he is a "kicker." A man who will shirk or grumble at any duty he is assigned to about a camp will set an entire party by the ears almost before the tent is up.

Don't have with you the fellow who is always on the watch for an opportunity to get the best of everything, from the brownest trout at breakfast to the most advantageous corner at bedtime. Then there is the man who is always in unseemly haste to get at the creek or lake first with his rod. Don't have too many in your party.

Four men, en rapport, make the ideal camp.

Here's a tip to the wise, the culinary wise—build a small fire for cooking. With a large fire the heat becomes unbearable when you get near enough to manage the pans and kettles. Food burns before it is properly cooked. The surface of the frying pan heats unevenly. But with your little fire, with its clear flame, you can do what you will. The pancakes brown to a nicety. The bacon sizzles merrily with no danger that the flame will leap into the pan.

To Tow Drowning Person.

To tow a drowning person to safety the easiest method is to hold the back of the head well down and swim on the back with a leg kick, keeping the subject in a horizontal position.

Should he begin to twist and turn change to a position so that you hold him around his chest with his head on your chest and you still continue to swim on your back. This is the hardest but safest method, as it is impossible for the subject to clutch the rescuer, a contingency that by every means must be prevented, as a frightened person is never to be trifled with. Sometimes he will sink not only the nails, but the fingers, into the flesh.

If the subject is amenable to reason one may, when tired of this position, turn on the side and try the side stroke, placing the upper arm under the subject's armpit, still keeping him on his back.

An easy way to save an educated swimmer who has become exhausted is to have the latter lie on his back. With stiff elbows he simply keeps his open hands on the rescuer's shoulders as the rescuer pushes him toward shore. It should not be tried if the subject himself has not confidence in the water.

Safety First For Hunters.

Always keep the gun pointed from yourself and other persons.

In getting over logs and fences always see that the gun is first put over and in a solid position where it will not fall. Then go to another place to climb over.

Do not shoot into moving bushes or in the direction of a noise without being sure the desired game is there and seeing it for a certainty.

If you are going for fun only, it is all right to take inexperienced friends, a well filled lunch basket, literature and a target and go to the nearest grove. If you are going for game go alone or with experienced hunters only; carry what is essential; hunt with the back to the sun.

School For Foreign Employees.

The Bayonne (N. J.) board of education and the officials of the Standard Oil and General Chemical companies, which have large plants in Bayonne, are co-operating to teach English to their foreign employees. The companies will furnish the classrooms and the city the instructors. The men will be allowed to attend the classes in the daytime.

QUINCY ADAMS SOCIAL CLUB

Second Annual Dance Largely Attended

The Quincy Adams Social Club held its second annual dance in Alpha hall on Memorial Day eve and entertained the younger set of this city and the South Shore. POSTAGE STAMPS OF EVERY DENOMINATION FOR EXHIBIT

Washington Collection Finest In the World With One Exception.

The $100,000 collection of postage stamps that for years has been gathering dust in the archives of the postoffice department is being arranged and classified for exhibition at the National museum. J. B. Leavey, government philatelist, and T. T. Belote, head of the museum's division of history, expect to have the exhibit in permanent shape within about a year.

Officials of the museum and the postoffice department say the only collection of stamps which excels in completeness the one now being arranged is that owned by the British museum.

There are specimens of every variety and denomination of stamps ever issued by this government, as well as a collection of practically all the stamps ever used by any government since the use of postage stamps began. Included in the collection are specimens of the original British stamp of the forties, which was as large as an ordinary envelope of today, as well as the sizes issued in later years.

So far only nineteenth century issues and about $10,000 worth have been put on exhibit. A novel case, consisting of scores of sliding vertical sections, all locked with one key and absolutely air tight, contains the stamps. The idea was taken from the British museum, but the cases are a great improvement on those there employed.

Among the most valuable stamps in the collection are the Franklin carrier stamp of the forties, which brings $100; the "Type I" of 1851, whose faded square inch of paper is valued at $200, and the one cent type of the same year and like value.

"The value that attaches to a stamp," said Mr. Leavey, "is determined very queerly sometimes. A misprint, a recalled issue and historic association bring up the worth of a stamp to amazing figures in a few years. Intrinsically they have no value. If stamp collecting fell into disfavor all over the world a good many paper fortunes would vanish at a blow."

COULDN'T BOSS BRADLEY.

Kentucky Senator Told Hanna One Way Was as Far as Another.

Work and persistency marked the life of the late United States Senator William O. Bradley of Kentucky from the time he first began to rise.

There was a time in his early struggles when he slept in his law office and had only one suit of clothes. When he was laughed at for his aspiration to be the Republican governor of his state his answer was to "Work and persevere," and he was elected—elected as the first Republican governor that Kentucky had ever had.

When he left Louisville to go to Washington to take the oath as senator he said that he was going to have the tariff schedule on hemp increased and he was going to have the tax removed from leaf tobacco. Again every one laughed. But he made good his assertion.

Once when Mark Hanna wanted Bradley to come to Washington for a conference because the national administration did not think he was running things right he wired Mr. Hanna that it was as far from Frankfort to Washington as it was from Washington to Frankfort.

Protocol Outlining Terms of Settlement of Mexican Affairs Will Be Held Up Meanwhile—Rebel Chief Said to Have Virtually Assumed Position of Provisional President

Washington, June 1.—While Mexican mediation at Niagara Falls awaited word from the Washington and Huerta governments as to proposed terms of settlement of the recent international differences and composition of the internal Mexican situation, prominent agents of the constitutionalist movement in Mexico conferred in Washington with Luis Cabrera as the centre of interest.

Officials of the Washington government, though in communication with American representatives at the peace conference, declined to discuss their attitude as to reception of representatives of Carranza in the mediation negotiations, but it was again declared that this government still was firmly of the mind that no protocol which would outline terms of settlement of the general political affairs of Mexico should be signed until agents of General Carranza had been given an opportunity to participate in the deliberations.

The belief in Washington official circles is that the publication of the Carranza note to the South American mediators and the answer of the mediators thereto may be delayed for some days, pending further efforts on the part of this government to bring influence to bear which would assure some sort of representation at Niagara Falls of the constitutionalist movement.

Advices from Durango say Carranza virtually has assumed the position of provisional president of Mexico, an action he has persistently refused to take heretofore, although urged to do so by his political advisers.

Carranza, it is announced in a dispatch to El Paso, Tex., will immediately establish the provisional government in the city of Saltillo and will demand of the Niagara Falls mediators that they give into the hands of the constitutionalist provisional government the work of establishing a permanent government in Mexico.

Rebels generally have believed that ultimately Carranza would be willing to brave Villa, set aside the title of "first chief of the constitutionalists" and assume the position of provisional president. It long has been known that an understanding has existed between Villa and Carranza that neither was to push himself forward as president, but it now is said that Villa has been made to see that he lacks the education and world knowledge to make him suitable for a president, while he specially is fitted to lead the army of Mexico as its commander-in-chief.

CUT OFF HER CHILDREN

Mrs. Rogers Asked Executors to Destroy All Their Pictures

New York, June 1.—Through the appraisal of the estate of Mrs. Emilie R. Rogers, widow of H. H. Rogers, the oil magnate, who died on Aug. 30, 1912, just filed here, it became known that in her will she directed her executors "to destroy all pictures of my children and the pastel portrait of myself made for my mother."

Mrs. Rogers referred to the children of her former husband, Lucius R. Hart, from whom she obtained a divorce. The executors reported that they had complied with the instructions.

There was no further mention of her own children in Mrs. Rogers' will, and the document failed to devise any of her $1,098,125 estate to them.

J. C. W. Beckham, Bennett H. Young and David H. Smith also will be candidates.

HAS FITS OF DEPRESSION

Becker, Once Good Natured Prisoner, Now Said to Fear the Worst

Ossining, N. Y., June 1.—Charles Becker, for the second time found guilty of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, is not the same good-natured prisoner he was when in the death house before. Instead he mopes in his cell and is gloomy.

Becker's gloom is increased by the fact that he entered the cell, No. 17, on a Friday, and, being superstitious, looks upon that as an omen of ill-luck.

Becker seems to feel keenly his sudden seclusion from his friends after his months of free converse with them during his stay in the Tombs. He talks more with the keepers in the death house than he ever did, and asks each one his view of the prospects of reversal of the verdict. When his guards fail to encourage him Becker has long fits of gloomy depression.

INTERCOLLEGIATE TROPHY TO CORNELL

Far Ahead of Competitors In Annual Track Meet

Cambridge, Mass., June 1.—A big silver cup, emblematic of an intercollegiate championship, will be soon placed in the Cornell trophy room at Ithaca. A wonderfully well balanced team of college athletes won it in the annual track meet full of thrills at the Harvard Stadium.

In vain the starts from Pennsylvania, Yale, Harvard and a score of other colleges tried to stop the victorious onrush of the Cornell hosts.

The winners rolled up 43 points, while Pennsylvania, one-time favorite, was back in the ruck with 31. Michigan, aided by as wonderful a group of sprinters as ever represented one institution at one time, followed with 29½. Then came Dartmouth, 23; Yale, 22; California, 18, and Harvard, 11. The other points were scattered among a half dozen teams.

The Committee on Licenses reported a large number of orders granting minor licenses of various kinds which were adopted.

The same committee reported ought not to pass on the order amending the Building ordinance. Report accepted.

The same committee reported ought to pass on the order granting James Cozzaylo a Sunday fruit license. A minority report signed by Councilman Beeman and Richards reported ought not to pass. The minority report was rejected and the report of the committee accepted and the order adopted.

STREET HEARINGS.

At 8 o'clock public hearings were held on the following streets: Roselin avenue; steps on Saville street; Park Lane; Glendale road; Dysart street; Federal avenue; Phillips street Davis street; Hamilton street; Greene street; Apthorp street; Montclair avenue; Huckins avenue; Bellevue road Ocean street; Winthrop street; Goffe street and Columbia street.The order was then recommitted.

Those to appear in favor of the several streets were:

On Roselin avenue Park lane and Glendale road no one appeared for or against.

HOUSE STRUCK BY LIGHTENING

Fortunately No One Was At Home at the Time

During the storm of Monday afternoon, lightning struck the Wrisley house at 42 Edison Park and badly damaged the upper structure. The bolt entered near the chimney, followed along into the bathroom, and passed out through the side of the house.

Miss Martha Wrisley, who went to the house of a friend when the clouds gathered made the discovery on her return. The ceiling of the bathroom was distributed on the floor and in the bathtub and the walls were badly strained. A small hole about one inch in diameter, remained to show how the lightning left the house.

BOY SCOUTS WIN FAVOR

An Appreciation of Their Work on Memorial Day

Editor Daily Ledger:

On Memorial Day, it was my privilege to witness the work of the Boy Scouts of Quincy under the efficient leadership of their drillmaster, Mr. Hodgkinson.

Great credit is due both to the boys and their leader. The work, real helpful work, they did at Faxon hall during the preparation of the dinner for the G. A. R. and other organizations, was greatly appreciated by those in charge of affairs, and will long be gratefully remembered by them.

Not the work alone but the gentlemanly manner; the eager willingness to help; and the cheerful, smiling faces of the boys added very materially to the comfort of all present.

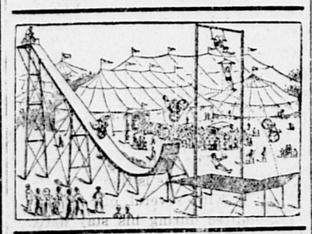

Then, at the exercises at Adams Academy was shown, in a number of cases, the perfect training of the Scouts. When one of their number fell overcome by heat, promptly, with no confusion, and in a most soldierly manner, was he taken from the field to the relief tent.

Later one of the members of the W. R. C. was attended in the same manner. Several of the members of that organization, who witnessed the gentle care given Mrs. Fox will always respect and honor the Boy Scouts of Quincy.

I am proud to number several of the boys as personal friends.

Speaks In Favor of Developing the Merrimac

(Special from State House.)

Representative Edward J. Sandberg of Quincy was one of the principal spokesmen in the House of Representatives Monday for the bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the development of the Merrimac river. At the conclusion of his speech, the House of Representatives passed the bill by an overwhelming majority.

The bill provides an appropriation of $1,000,000 conditional upon the federal government's attitude, which must be a guarantee that the national government will carry on the work to completion. As the plan as outlined will cost $7,000,000, the federal government will be called upin to expend at least $6,000,000.

The bill drew very little opposition. The opposition was so remote that the bill was passed on a voice vote, not even a divisional vote or a rollcall being demanded.

Representative Sandberg, who is a member of the committee on harbors and public lands, the first committee that handled the proposition and the only committee to make a tour of inspection, treated the matter from an economic viewpoint, contending that it is false economy to save money at the expense of the State's natural resources which are in need of development.

During the course of the debate, Representative Sandberg said:—

"As a member of the legislative committee on harbors and public lands, I regard this bill as one of the most meritorious that has been presented to this legislature this year. It is teeming with merit and, as a matter of fact, it is the one big proposition of the year that was not opposed before either the committee on harbors and public lands or the committee on ways and means.

"If there is to be any opposition in this body, that opposition will be based on one or two purposes: First, to secure the antagonism of western members by the statement that the eastern section of the state is securing all the appropriations for river and harbor development, and, secondly on the ground of economy. The first question can be successfully met by saying that every section of the state will be benefited by this proposition. In answer to the second statement, it may well be said that it is false economy not to develop the natural resources and to allow commerce and business to creep away from this state into the other states that realize how essential river development is and that are appropriating millions of dollars for their rivers.

The committee learned that the state of New York has expended $500,000,000 of dollars for the development of its inland waterways in seventy years, the state of Illinois and the state of Pennsylvania approximately $50,000,000 in that time, and that the state of Massachusetts has expended but $16,000,000 in over 200 years while $12,009,000 of that amount was expended in Boston harbor.

"If the Merrimac river was in Great Britain, Germany or even in South America, it would be developed without a word of comment. Massachusetts must look alive to the situation that confronts it. The industries demand cheaper rates of transportation and these rates will result only in harbor and river development. Otherwise the industries will move elsewhere and the state of Massachusetts will be the sufferer."

BURIAL AT MARLBOROUGH.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Hennessey was held Monday from the home of her daugher, Mrs. Neil Regan of 1253 Sea street, Houghs Neck, and was well attended. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at the church of St. Frances-by-the-Sea by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, and the body was sent to Marlborough for burial. Besides Mrs. Regan, another daughter survives, Mrs. Archie Baird.

CITY AUDITORS COMPARISONS

Tax Receipts Much Less Than to June 1, 1913

The June 1 report of City Auditor Fairbanks shows a big drop in tax receipts for the first five months of 1914 as compared with the same months in 1913, although the city is annually raising by taxation a larger and larger sum. The tax receipts of 1914 are $188,476.54 which is $26,343.28 less than in 1913.

The water receipts were about $2,000 more than in the first five months of 1913, but over $2,000 less than in 1912.

The payment of sewer assessments has been better than in 1913 or 1912.

The figures of the City Auditor follow:

TAX RECEIPTS.

1914 to June 1,	$188,476.54
1913 to June 1,	215,819.82
1912 to June 1	162,267.72

WATER RECEIPTS.

1914 to June 1	$53,292.49
1913 to June 1,	51,189.77
1912 to June 1	55,536.83

SEWER ASSESSMENTS

1914 to June 1,	$9,769.94
1913 to June 1,	6,741.02
1912 to June 1,	8,756.09

SEWER CONNECTIONS.

1914 to June 1,	$3,372.89
1913 to June 1,	2,807.15
1912 to June 1,	2,213.73

The report of the City Auditor shows quite a reduction in the debt of the city, as bonds to the amount of $120,225.00 have been paid and no new bonds have been issued. It might be added however that some loans have been authorized but not negotiated.

The bond payments and the net debt to date are:

	Paid	Net Debt
City Debt	$62,425.00	$540,020.00
Parks		20,000.00
St. Improvement	4,800.00	66,300.00
Sewer	22,500.00	612,000.00
Water	30,500.00	691,500.00
Refunding		135,000.00
	$120,225.00	$2,064,820.00

The borrowing capacity is larger than for several years being now $342,422.00.

PLEADS GUILTY TO LARCENY

Sent to House of Correction for Stealing Hens

Edward Clexton of East Milton, wanted in this city for the larceny of hens from Charles O. Rehnback of Morton street on April 1, was arrested in East Milton at 2.30 this morning by Patrolman Norman Bowman of the Milton police for a similar offense. When taken into custody he had four dead hens in his possession. In court this morning they were claimed by Mrs. John Keefe of Pleasant street.

Clexton pleaded guilty to a charge of drunkenness, and to both larceny complaints. He was fined $15 on the first and sentenced to one year in the house of correction on the other charges.

Clexton, although a resident of East Milton, is known in this city and during the time the hens of Rehnback disappeared was living in West Quincy. The police are elated with his capture as he is thought to be connected with several other larcenies committed during his stay here.

WELLINGTON RESIGNS

Has Been With Shipyard Since the Start

F. O. Wellington has severed his connections with the Fore River shipyard, his resignation having been tendered and accepted. His successor has not been chosen.

Mr. Wellington has been connected with the shipyard since it located at Quincy Point. Originally he was general manager and later assistant to the president. When he resigned he was in charge of the work on the battleship Rivadavia which sails for Argentina in a few weeks. He has been in charge of many of the trial trips of warships built here.

SAW DAYLIGHT UNDER WHEELS

James Miller of Plymouth, who was placed under arrest in Milton on Monday after Officer Fallon of that town saw "daylight under his rear wheels while he rounded the corner at Brook road and Adams street," pleaded guilty in the district court this morning to a violation of the speed laws, but denied that he was traveling at a rapid rate. He told the court that he was the owner of a speedy machine but had committed no violation. He concluded a lengthy explanation of the circumstances of his presence by saying he was not a college man and was therefore hardly competent to present his case as he would like to. Chief Maurice Pierce commenced an examination but Judge Avery intimated that enough circumstances had been placed before the court and imposed the fine which was immediately paid.

WHIST PARTY.

Mrs. Mary L. Thomas and Charles Hersey were tied for first place with a high score at the weekly whist party of Quincy band, Companions of the Prairie in Protection hall Monday evening. Twelve tables were in play and the committee was headed by Mrs. Catherine Cotter.

ORDERED TO PAY WEEKLY

Howard Cited into Quincy Court This Morning

Caleb W. Howard, who frequently appears as counsel for the members of the I. W. W. in the district court, was himself cited in this morning as judgment debtor under the act known as the Dubuque law, a judgment having been obtained against him by a physician for services rendered.

During his examination Howard testified that he was thrown out of work on account of the severe depression in business, and thereafter became an organizer for the I. W. W. at a salary of $18 per week. He told the court, however, that since last March he has received but $600 for services and that there is $150 due him. He said his wages were sent from the Chicago office of the organization and when asked if the body was incoporated he said he did not know.

A close examination of his household affairs revealed that his rent was $8.50 per month and that his family consists of three children and a wife who is at present ill. The court issued a decree ordering him to pay a small sum each week, after a certain period.

Howard by trade is a machinist, and said he intended to take up that line of work again. In a general way he recounted his duties as an organizer of the I. W. W. and said he was considered an "active worker" for that association.

LOYAL LEGION IN ATTENDANCE

Arthur Sibley, a prominent Wollaston citizen and a medal of honor veteran of the Civil War, was given a soldier's burial in Forest Hills cemetery Monday. The funeral services were held in the chapel of the Massachusetts crematory and were conducted by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson of Quincy. A delegation from the Order of the Loyal Legion was present.

It is generally felt, unless a $2.00 a day man helps the railroad magnates pay the wages of their porters and waiters by tips, that he is a pretty stingy sort of a fellow.

Every one is helping on the demand for lower taxes by promoting efforts for more costly roads, schools, and public buildings.

When the statement is made that a Mexican industry pays six per cent, it usually means that after taking all the rest of the property, the Mexicans allow the stockholders to keep six per cent.

If the A. B. C. mediators had picked out a town where there was a good ball team, it might have been worth while for them to meet.

THE HUNT FOR TEACHERS.

Mose of the school boards are now in pursuit of teachers. Low salaries and marriage make rapid changes in this profession. Probably the average school committee has to deal with vacancies in a quarter of the force every year.

One girl writes, that after taking a college course, she gets $4.00 a day less than her brother is able to earn as a plasterer. She does not quite see how the higher education pays from the point of view of self support. Another writes that she earns $100 a year less than does the office boy at City Hall in her home city.

Probably the average teacher not living at home must pay a third higher board than ten years ago. Also other items of expense have increased. Parents expect a girl to be neat and crisp in dress if not stylish.

The school boards all recognize these facts. But they are up against many demands. School buildings constructed according to modern ideas of sanitation and ventilation cost nearly double the amounts paid a few years ago. The school authorities tremble before the taxpayer. Keeping down the teacher's salary seems the line of least resistance.

In selecting teachers, enthusiasm, spontaneity, and affection for children should count quite as much as book knowledge. A girl may pass an excellent scholastic examination. Yet her attitude on life may be so apathetic, she may present so cold a face to her little flock, that they remain phlegmatic and lifeless.

One sometimes questions if too severe requirements are not made of teachers in respect to education. Perhaps the girl who has had professional training in a normal school may be quite as effective as the one who has had the expensive college course in the higher culture. At any rate, either salaries will have to go higher, or the bars of preparation be lowered, if bright and ambitious girls are to continue to enter this field.

LOOKING FOR NEW SUSPECT

Henniker Selectmen Still Probing the Peaslee Murder

CASE AGAINST WOOD IS WEAK

Those Who Caused Arrest of Farmhand Unable to Find Anything to Break Down His Alibi—Investigations Have Taken Another Turn In Consequence of the Fact

Henniker, N. H., June 2.—Joseph Donegan, attorney for Eugene Wood, the farmhand held for the murder of Howard W. Peaslee, has completed an alibi for his client which he declares is unbreakable.

While he worked, however, Detective Hildreth, representing the state, has worked incessantly in an effort to prove the state and Attorney General Tuttle, who ordered Wood's arrest, have made no mistake.

Though he and the selectmen have canvassed the town and have had interviews with dozens of people, they are compelled to admit that they have been unable to find one thing that will break down the alibi that has been built up for "Silent Gene."

In consequence their investigations last night took another turn, and until a late hour man after man was escorted into the inquiry room at the Henniker hotel, where another mysterious meeting was held, and questioned about the affairs of the Peaslees, the relations between father and son, the actions of the most prominent suspect in the case since Wood was held.

That another arrest is to be made becomes more and more certain, but the delay has been explained by one of the authorities by saying that if one mistake has been made, it is certain another is not wanted.

BANDIT CHIEF CAUGHT

Quevado, Who Threatened American Property, Taken at El Paso

Washington, June 2.—Brigadier General Bliss reported to the war department the arrest of Quevado, the notorious bandit, and several of his followers at El Paso, Tex. He will be sent to Fort Wingate, N. M., with other Mexican refugees.

Quevado has for the past month been threatening Americans and American property in northern Mexico. Two weeks ago a special force of men was sent out by Villa to kill or capture the bandit leader, and his band was routed and scattered in a skirmish near Casas Grandes.

Quevado, however, with several of his men, escaped to the United States, where he has just been located by the American federal authorities.

INVESTIGATION CHECKED

Senate Acts on Resolution Relating to New York Central

Washington, June 2.—By a vote of 33 to 20, the senate referred to the interstate commerce committee the Norris resolution asking the attorney general to state if the New York Central lines constitute a combination in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and if he intends to proceeed against it.

The effect of sending the Norris resolution to the interstate commerce committee is to delay action. Senator Norris objected to that course. Other senators, some of them Democratic leaders, objected to calling upon the attorney general to disclose his intentions in a matter which might be the subject of litigation.

FRENCH CABINET TO QUIT

Ministers Uncertain of Power as Result of Recent Elections

Paris, June 2.—The French cabinet, under the premiership of Gaston Doumergue, has decided to resign. The cabinet will draft a statement explaining the reasons for its retirement from office.

The chief factor in bringing about the resignation of the government is understood to be the uncertainty of its ability to control a majority in the chamber of deputies, where some changes were brought about in the composition of the numerous groups at the recent general elections.

GASOLENE IN SEWERS

Cause of Explosion at Boston In Which Three Men Are Killed

Boston, June 2.—Gasolene dumped into the sewers of Greater Boston was the direct cause of an explosion which completely demolished the "screen house" of the metropolitan sewage pumping station in East Boston, killing three employes and injuring more than a dozen others, according to authorities of the state and city sewerage departments.

The dead are Michael Devereaux, Thomas Butler and James Groark. Cornelius Sullivan and James McGovern are believed to be dying.

The great pumps which carry away the millions of gallons of sewage from the entire Mystic valley districts were all damaged and three of them were placed out of commission. All other inquests will probably be postponed in order that the courts can investigate the deaths of the three men and ascertain whether or not there was any criminal responsibility.

WORLD-WIDE CHAIN NEAR COMPLETION

United States Naval Vessels Now In Touch by Wireless

Washington, June 2.—Captain Bullard, U. S. N., who is in charge of the naval radio service, and who has his headquarters at the naval wireless station at Arlington, Va., seven miles from Washington, presented to the naval institute an interesting review of the development of naval wireless telegraphy.

Today practically every vessel in the United States navy is equipped with apparatus for aerial communication, and it is so successfully operated that there is scarcely a point in the seven seas at which the bigger battleships would be out of touch, through relay, with the three great masts towering over Bullard's headquarters at Arlington.

Some of the later extensions of wireless were the establishment of the station on the grounds of the American legation at Pekin for communication between officials of the Asiatic fleet and the Panama canal station. The latter is to be unusually powerful. It is erected half way across the isthmus.

SHOT BY POLICEMAN

Gunman Succumbs to Wound Received In a Running Fight

Beverly, Mass., June 2.—Alsaro Dacinto, a laborer from the Italian colony of this city, died from a bullet wound inflicted by Policeman Merrill. The policeman shot Dacinto after Dacinto had shot Tony Citioni in a quarrel.

Dacinto, after a long chase, opened fire on the policeman with an automatic revolver. His shots went wild and a running gunfight followed. Bullets whistled by the policeman's head until a shot from Merrill stretched Dacinto in the road. Citioni will recover.

MEDIATORS ARE UNDER CRITICISM

Carranza Issues Statement to Press of United States

CALLS REBELS CONQUERERS

Will Not Allow Terms to Be Dictated by Conquered—Asks Who Is Going to Crush Rebels and Says He Is Logical Provisional President of Mexico—His Opinion of Huerta

El Paso, Tex., June 2.—A semi-official statement from General Carranza at Durango, criticising the actions of the A. B. C. meditors at Niagara Falls, and an announcement from General Villa reiterating his allegiance as a military leader to Carranza, are the developments of the Mexican situation here.

The statement from Durango, where Carranza's provisional government was established several days ago, was addressed to the press of the United States, with a note to the effect that it had official sanction, although it was not a formal declaration. The telegram, in English, is in part as follows:

"The dominant sentiment of the constitutionalists regarding the proceedings of the mediation commission at Niagara Falls is one of astonishment that there should be such an apparent lack of understanding on the part of that body, not only with regard to conditions in Mexico, but as to the attitude of the constitutionalists regarding the mediators.

"This lack of understanding is not confined to the commissioners themselves, but seems to be shared by a large portion of the American press as well as by the Washington government.

"Judging from what has been published from day to day, the mediators appear to consider General Carranza and his followers as a negligible quantity, scarcely worthy of attention.

"They do not seem to be aware of the fact that the constitutionalists are conquerers, that they have inaugurated and carried almost to successful completion a revolution, and that this means the establishment of a government entitled to recognition by the rest of the world.

"All that prevents the constitutionalists from entering Mexico City today is the physical obstacle of the destruction of the railroads. With communication restored, which is being accomplished with rapidity, the army would be in Mexico City in less than a week.

"Yet the constitutionalist leaders point to the deliberations of the commission and the statement of the press as absolutely ignoring this situation. The peace commission even goes so far as to propose that the constitutionalists must recognize whatever prvoincial government they decide to set up and to declare that they must be forced to recognize that government or be crushed.

"The constitutionalist leaders are wondering how they are to be forced to do this, in view of their present accomplishments, and by whom they are to be crushed if they decline to obey the commission.

"Calmly, too, the commission proposes that Huerta shall be permitted to be a candidate for the presidency, in order to save his face. Do they think the constitutionalists will consent to that, any more than they will consent to recognize a provisional government constituted, as the commission proposes, of one person selected by Huerta, one by themselves and one, perhaps, but not at all likely, by the constitutionalists?

"No one, the constitutionalist leaders point out, who has any acquaintance with the objects and purposes of their movements, would fancy for a single moment that they would ever consent that they would have anything whatever to do with anyone friendly to, or heretofore connected with Huerta.

"The constitutionalists made it plain beyond question that they will recognize a government established under the plan of Guadalupe at the triumph of the revolution. According to this plan the commander-in-chief of the constitutionalist army will be the provisional president of the Mexican republic while the elections are being verified and constitutional order is restored to the country.

"They point out the fact that conquerers are not usually wont to permit the conquered to dictate the terms of peace, which is practically what is to be asked of them by the commission.

"Constitutionalists are especially caustic in their comment on the proposal of the commission to take up the agrarian question and propose some form of settlement. They declare that this is a purely internal problem and that they will tolerate no outside interference. Indeed, this is their attitude with regard to the entire proceedings of the mediation commission.

"The inference that Huerta might become a candidate for president at a future election is regarded as impossible. He is regarded as a criminal by the constitutionalists and that he should be a candidate for anything except the guillotine or the electric chair is not considered seriously by them."

Young and Mr Cain all told of the wretched conditions. At high tide especially during the high course of tides, people in order to get across the foot bridge had to wade in deep water. Instances were also told of doctors being obliged to wade across to reach patients and of children being washed over the bridge and rescued with difficulty. That the fire department could not reach the island unless by a roundabout way. One gentleman said he had personally put on a bathing suit and carried a dozen children across.

Unless the foot bridge was used it was necessary to walk a mile or more to get to the main land. Other instances were cited where it was necessary to secure a boat in order to ferry people across. Once on the island it was a beautiful spot with invigorating salt water air.

TO MANAGE PARK.

Owing to the unsettled politcal conditions in Ireland, Chester I. Campbell, of Wollaston, who was to have sailed from New York Saturday for Dublin, Ireland, where he was to be manager of a civil civic exhibition for the Countess of Aberdeen, cancelled his reservations and announcement is made in Boston that Mr. Campbell has been selected as general manager of Rockingham Park, Salem, N. H. He will personally conduct the Rockingham Fair which will open Labor day and continue for a week.

Rockingham Park is now owned by a group of Massachusetts capitalists who will provide Mr. Campbell with ample backing for any event he may decide to put on. He states, however, that this season he will devote all his time in arranging the Rockingham Fair and promises to stage the greatest outdoor show that the New England public has ever seen.

This is Mr. Campbell's first venture in the otudoor show business, yet the capitalists who are supplying the funds believe that he will produce a show that will earn big dividends for them. Mr. Campbell believes that Rockingham Park is the playground for New England. He says it has everything that is needed for a country fair and with the ample backing that I have at my command it is up to me to produce a show that will be better and more novel than anything ever seen in New England."

ROBBINS SHOW IS COMING

Following the policy established thirty-four years ago, when he first put a show on the road, Frank A. Robbins, the veteran circus man, who brings his show to Quincy on Monday June 15, has among his star acts many which are not seen with any other circus on the road this year. Mr. Robbins spends all of the winter months scouring the country for the kind of features which are "different" and the show this season retains but few of the old features. In addition to the improvements in the performances there has been a substantial increase made in the parade, menagerie and other equipment, so that the show, which has been at the Inter-State Fair Grounds, Trenton, all winter, comes so changed and improved that there is little that is old about it.

The great features of the show if last year is retained, and in the act the Robbins circus has one which is not to be seen with any other circus on the road today. That is one which draws applause from the lovers of animals, being an exhibition in which eight handsome, coal-black Belgian stallions, imported at a cost of $16,000, go through graceful evolutions, indicating intelligence seldom seen in animals. The Great Charbino, who slides from tent top to the ground, balanced on top of his head on a narrow pole, defies death at every performance.

HORROR TALES OF RIVAL THOSE OF SEA CASTAWAYS FICTION'S FANCY

Survivors Describe Awful Fate of Men Who Died Insane From Thirst.

Those Left on Drifting Boat Ate Boots of Sailors Who Perished.

A THRILLING story of hardship in an open boat in midocean, a tale of heroic toilers of the sea facing the torments of hunger, thirst, bitter cold and dire peril of winds and waves was brought to Halifax, N. S., by Captain E. J. Johnston of the American revenue cutter Seneca, which rescued the four remaining surviving members of the crew of the Leyland liner Columbian, burned at sea on May 5.

The fifteen men in the lifeboat subsisted on ship's biscuits, shoe laces and leather and salt water.

They saw three liners pass, but their efforts to hail the ships were futile.

Chief Officer Robert Tiere, who is only twenty-two years old, gave the following account of the castaways' adventures:

"When we abandoned the Columbian we had a cask of water and the boat's bread tank was three-quarters full. I put the boat's crew on rations, one biscuit and half a cupful of water three times a day for each man. When it rained we caught water in the sail, and in that way kept up our supply until we were rescued. The biscuits rapidly ran low, and at the end of the first week the allowance was cut down by one-third.

Drinking Sea Water Fatal.

"On Saturday, May 9, Oiler George Hull complained that he could not stand short rations of water, and despite all the advice of the boat's company began drinking sea water. That night he became delirious. We tried to revive him with a little water, but it was too late, and after making sure that he was beyond all help we put his body over the side, and I said what I could remember of the burial service over him.

"Then Richmer, a fireman, died about 2 o'clock in the morning. Anderson, another fireman, died the next day, and so did the cook, Schrimberger. Gustafsen was the next to die.

"All these men went pretty much the same way. They began to drink sea water, and their sufferings were frightful. The more they drank the more they wanted. There was one tin dipper in the boat, and I tried to keep this in my possession. But if I was asleep they would get it away from me. It was pretty much one continuous nightmare about this time. I would get the dipper away from men who were swilling salt water, but the next minute they would be leaning out over the gunwale of the boat, lapping it up like cows at a brook. Soon they would go crazy. All of them died singing, completely insane. I think it was the salt water more than anything else that killed them. The men who kept to the scanty portion of fresh water stood the exposure better.

Fight With Giant Madman.

"Margetts, the chief engineer, was the next to die. He perished from exposure. Then one of the worst of all our trials happened, Jakob, a big oiler, a Russian, who stood over six feet, started to drink salt water, went insane and tried to kill the whole boat crew. There were only five of us alive then, and poor Dyckman, the mess boy, was so weak he could not stand.

"I was sleeping when Ballanger woke me up and said that Jakob had gone crazy. He was sitting in the boat with an ax and swearing he would go ashore for a drink. I talked to him a bit, coaxed the ax away from him and got him to lie down. I took everything I thought he could use for a weapon away from him, but I had hardly fallen asleep when he got a boat stretcher and came aft, threatening to kill us all. There was nothing for it but to tie him up.

"Jakob was ordinarily a very powerful man, about forty years of age, and Kendal, Ballanger, Ludwigsen and myself had all we could do to handle him. He was screaming at the top of his voice that we were trying to keep his money from him so he could not go on a spree. He shouted out that I had his passbook and would not give him his pay and he was going to lay for me particularly.

"We had a pretty hard fight to get him under control. But we finally tied him down in the bottom of the boat and lashed him to a thwart. He lived for five or six hours, screaming at the top of his voice. Then he became exhausted. We forced a little water between his lips, but it was no use. He had gone.

Dreamed of Rescue.

"Prieve, the mess boy, was the last to go. Before he went he told us that he had dreamed he would be on a burning ship at sea and that he would be for fourteen days in an open boat without food, but would be rescued on the fourteenth day. He fought hard to live until that time, but he was too weak.

"From that moment we sat in the most despairing and hopeless lethargy. Even the sight of the Seneca did little to revive us. We had so often vainly shouted for help from passing boats that we could not believe rescue was near. I never thought I would live to see today. In fact, I wanted to die, as did we all. It seemed a terrible dream.

"When there were only five biscuits and less than a pint of water left for the four survivors we cut up the boots of dead men and tried to mix a sort of paste with the leather and the crumbs, but it was not palatable."

Unselfish Sufferers.

Tiere's story was supplemented by Peter Ballanger, the only other member of the quartet who spoke English.

"It was bad enough when we had only one pint of water a day," he said, "but the last four or five days, when once a day Mr. Tiere would dip up half a pint of water in the tincup and say three would have to share this, it was pretty tough to just take one little sip and leave enough for the next two men. But I'll say that for them, no man tried to take more than his share. When Jakob, the Russian oiler, went crazy Mr. Tiere gave him some of his own share of the water. Poor fellow! He was a good man, but he took to drinking the salt water, and then his head went like the others.

"I was the only one awake when Jakob went crazy. Mr. Tiere, Ludwigsen, Kendall and Prieve, the Belgian cabin boy, were all sleeping. The first thing I knew Jakob began to cry out for rum. Then he said he wanted to go ashore and get drunk, but that Tiere had stolen his money. He got the ax, and then I woke Mr. Tiere, and I went forward and talked Jakob around a bit, coaxed the ax away from him and covered him over with his own overcoat. Jakob lay down a bit. Then he got up again, picked a stretcher up off the cleats on the bottom and came for Mr. Tiere.

"Prieve was so weak he could not help us, so we four had to handle Jakob, and he gave us an awful fight. He was a great big fellow, bigger than any of us, and rage made him stronger. I don't know how long it took us to down him. He might have beaten us all and killed us with an ax, but Ludwigsen managed to hit him on the jaw with an oar. While he was unconscious we tied him up to the forward thwart. We gave him all the water we could spare, but he was too far gone. He kept shrieking for rum at the top of his voice and threatening to kill every one of us.

Rowed For Their Lives.

"I was awful weak and didn't think I could get on my feet when Kendall called out that he saw smoke. The Seneca wasn't moving when we first saw her. She was taking some soundings, and we started to row toward her. Once I got my oar going I just kept it going because I knew if ever I stopped I would keel right in. They had to carry us all up on the Seneca.

"It was pretty bad when Hull got crazy through drinking the sea water. After that it wasn't so bad, except that you couldn't tell who was going to give in next and start to drink the salt water. I guess it must have burned their insides all up, for the more they drank the more they wanted.

"I knew myself that it would kill me, so I stood the little fresh water as best I could. It was awful to see Hull leaning out over the gunwale drinking out of the ocean—clean crazy. But after he went that way it didn't seem so bad when the next man, Richmer, died. After that we seemed to get used to it.

"Little Priève, the Belgian cabin boy, died calling for his mother. Poor boy! He was so brave he deserved to live."

ON THE WRONG SHIP.

Discipline Led Officer of the Day to Obey Orders of a Strange Captain.

Late one night when the fleet was off Vera Cruz a certain captain stepped into his launch and started for his ship. His thoughts were on the day's work and the plans for the next, and as his boat came to a stop off a gangway he stepped out on the landing and mounted to the battleship's deck.

"Tell the boat to cast off," he said to the officer who saluted him.

The officer of the day did so. He knew it was not his captain, but discipline laid down its rules. The captain strolled across the afterdeck.

The commander—a commander is next in rank to a captain on a battleship, is on duty twenty-four hours a day and ranks with a major in the army—met him, saluted and passed on. That seemed strange to the captain.

"What ship is this?" he asked.

"The ——, sir," said the commander.

"I thought it was my ship," said the captain.

"Drat that coxswain, why did he put me off at this ship?" demanded the captain from the officer of the day.

The captain descended the gangway. The ship's boat drew up to receive him. The coxswain looked up to the deck for his orders.

"Proceed to the —— with a passenger and return to ship," ordered the officer of the day.

"Aye, aye, sir," replied the coxswain.

That ended the incident—not the story.

969 ARE DEAD; 418 RESCUED

Terrible Toll In Wreck of the Empress of Ireland

INQUIRY WILL BEGIN JUNE 8

British and Canadian Governments to Co-operate In Most Thorough Investigation—Attention Focussed on Conflicting Statements of Captains of Ships In Collision—Point of Anchor Projects From Twisted Bow of the Storstad—High Military Honor to Be Paid the Dead

Quebec, June 2.—Material for the announced investigation on June 8 of the disaster by which 969 lives were lost in the St. Lawrence river is already provided by the conflicting statements of the captains of the sunken liner Empress of Ireland and the collier Storstad.

Canada and the British government will co-operate in this investigation which, it is promised, will be "as thorough as possible." Two Canadian commissioners and one from England will constitute the board to make the investigation.

Before this high investigating body will come, besides the sworn testimony of passengers, officers and seamen of the two ships, the conflicting statements of the two captains, on which attention is focussed today.

Captain Kendall of the Empress makes the serious charge that, notwithstanding his whistled signals and shouting through his megaphone, the collier came on unheeding and "cut him down between the funnels," though his ship was without way. Also he charges that, although he called to the Storstad to keep its bow in the hole it had made in the fated ship and thus prevent inflow of the sea, the collier backed away and lay a mile and a half off when boats began to pick up the survivors.

Anderson's Side

Captain Anderson, on the other hand, denies he backed his ship, but asserts that the movement of the rammed vessel twisted it away from the Storstad, although he did keep the Storstad going ahead. He put over every boat he had, despite his own ship's precarious condition, he further asserts, and says he thus saved most of those who came ashore alive. Kendall, contrary to this, is quoted as saying that only a few boats from the Storstad took people from the wreckage to which they clung.

While the commission is organizing Captain Lindsay, the wreck commissioner of the government, is carrying on a preliminary investigation, preparing evidence and getting the case ready as far as possible. All the passengers who were saved will be summoned to give evidence under oath before Lindsay, and officers and members of the Empress and the collier which sent her to the bottom will be examined.

The royal commission will report upon what measures should be taken to make navigation in the narrow waters of the St. Lawrence more secure and whether there should be a revision of the rules which now govern shipping traffic in that river. It is expected that a set of drastic rules will be prepared and that they will be thoroughly enforced.

Dead Number 969

There is no change in the official lists of saved and dead, which show that 418 persons escaped and 969 were killed or drowned. The tabulation follows:

First Cabin

Passengers carried	87
Passengers saved	32
Passengers lost	55

Second and Third Class
(of whom 153 were second class

Passengers carried	868
Passengers saved	180
Passengers lost	688

Anchor Ripped Through Hull

The sharp point of an anchor projecting from the twisted bow of the Storstad may explain why that vessel did such terrible execution when she rammed the Empress of Ireland.

An examination of the collier's shattered plates revealed the anchor jammed in a position where it could press like a great can-opener. The anchor point and portions of the battered steel surrounding it bore stains of blood.

Honors to the Dead

Bowed beneath the greatest tragedy in its history, Canada will honor the lost crew and the passengers of the Empress of Ireland on Wednesday with a military funeral such as Canada has never known.

The government of the dominion and Great Britain have joined in their tribute to the dead, and in conjunction with the Candian Pacific railroad, owner of the ill-fated steamship, have planned for a public service to the men and women and children whose lives were lost in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

On Wednesday all business in Quebec will be suspended, the city's schools will be closed, and hundreds will follow nine bodies of the Empress' crew to their graves in Mt. Hermon cemetery. The civic and military authorities of the city, acting together, have arranged for the funeral.

All of the redcoats in the citadel and the men of the Essex, her companies of bluejackets and marines, will turn out and march in the funeral procession, while hundreds of Quebec citizens will participate in the services, which will be held in the old Christ Church cathedral and St. Matthew's church of the Church of England, and the Catholic churches of Bassilica and Notre Dame des Victoires.

MILITANTS BURN ANCIENT CHURCH

Rare Treasures of Great Value Are Destroyed by Fire

Henley, Eng., June 28.—An "arson squad" of militant suffragettes destroyed by fire the historic parish church of St. Mary's, Wargrave.

All that remains of the church, which was built in 1538, is a portion of the tower and the scorched stone walls.

The only property saved consisted of an ancient register and a few church ornaments. The church contained many priceless treasures, including some bells four centuries old, which melted in the flames.

MUSICAL COMEDY AT KINCAIDE'S.

"7 Reasons Y" one of the many merry musical comedies written by Wollaston's prominent playwright, Matthew Ott, is the attraction now at Kincaide Theatre. And it's "Some attraction" too, as last night every seat in the big playhouse was filled, and many were standing.

J. W. Gorman's Company of twenty fun-makers present the "Reasons" that cause continuous uproar of laughter for nearly two hours. The comedy, in two acts, is replete with bright sparkling music and the songs are of the very latest. The Tango and Hesitation dances by the Misses Hill and Hunter made a great hit. In fact, each feature of the show was received with great applause.

"The Perils of Pauline" sixth episode in two parts was also a part of the evening's program. As usual this great continued photo play was watched with breathless interest.

This show will continue afternoon and evening Tuesday and Wednesday. Beginning Thursday matinee another of Gorman's Comedy Companies will present a New Musical Surprise entitled "Let George Do It," founded on the famous cartoons by George McManus.

A Southern Spy

A Memorial Day Story

By CAPTAIN F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.]

IN our regiment in Virginia in 1863 was a soldier in the ranks who was a thoroughbred. No one even of his own company seemed to know exactly when or where he enlisted, where was his home or anything else about him except that he said he was a Marylander. Maryland was a border state, the inhabitants being part northern and part southern in their sympathies.

There was nothing unusual about Davis' fighting on the Union side, for in the border states whole Federal regiments were made up of their citizens. But it was singular to hear him abusing Confederates with the accent of a southern man.

Davis in other respects was a good natured fellow, perfectly fearless and seemed to have no selfishness in his nature—indeed, was a type of the real southern gentleman. We wondered why he had not been able to obtain a commission, but he reminded us that the flower of the Maryland population was on the southern side. Maryland was not a good state for northerners.

We were cavalry, and Davis was one of the best of us so far as horsemanship was concerned. He was constantly being punished for roaming about wherever he liked. He rode all over our camps and, whenever he took a fancy to do so, sallied forth single handed against the Confederate pickets. That he was a good fighter was evident whenever there was trouble on the picket lines. On such occasions he would ride right up under the enemy's rifles. He always came back unhurt, and we could never understand how he managed to escape.

One night while out on vedette duty Davis disappeared. Shooting was heard in the direction of the point where he was stationed, and it was believed that at last he had reaped the payment of his recklessness. A party was sent out next morning to look for his body, but it was not found.

Six months passed, during which everything was changed with us. Armies are like packs of cards—they are constantly being shuffled. One day while on picket duty I saw a man running from the Confederate lines toward ours, while men on that side were firing at him. "There comes a deserter," I remarked. The man stumbled two or three times, fell, got up and came on, reaching us in safety. I was at the time a sergeant in command of the picket post into which he ran, and he came right up to me.

What was my astonishment to see Davis!

Davis' astonishment at seeing me was equally great. Besides astonishment, I noticed chagrin. His face fell momentarily; then, grasping my hand, he shook it heartily, exclaiming:

"How are you, Charlie? What luck to come in right among my own boys!"

I withdrew my hand, saying to him, "I don't shake with deserters."

"Deserter! I reckon I am a deserter. I had to be or fight with those cursed southerners."

"I mean deserter from our side."

Davis looked hurt. He told a story of having ridden on the night of his disappearance right in behind a Confederate camp. The opening was closed behind him. There was nothing for him to do but surrender. Being a southerner, as was proved by his accent, he had told his captors, he said, that he had been forced into the northern service and had long been watching for an opportunity to desert.

Notwithstanding this story, I marched Mr. Davis up to headquarters, where the general commanding interviewed him. The general, not being satisfied with this passing from one side to another and weighing against him the fact that he was a southerner, ordered that he be held under arrest and charges of desertion be made against him.

Davis laughed at the idea of charges against a man who hated Confederates as he hated poison, and if he felt the least doubt about his being able to clear himself none of us could detect it.

DAVIS' ASTONISHMENT AT SEEING ME WAS GREAT.

Evidence came in heavy against him. He was recognized as having belonged to an entirely different corps from ours and as having played the same game before, doubtless serving as a Federal soldier and carrying information to Confederate generals. Before the court finished the case it came out that Davis belonged to an old Maryland family, that he held a commission as lieutenant colonel in the Confederate army and was high in favor with several Confederate generals, whom he had furnished with enough information to enable any army to defeat twice its numbers.

Davis was sentenced to be hanged. His family might have saved his life had he been convicted of desertion. Indeed, they were handicapped, knowing that he was a spy—in fact, an officer of high rank in the Confederate army. The best they could do for him was to obtain a change in the mode of his death. The sentence was made shooting instead of hanging.

Davis maintained the same coolness of outward appearance to the moment of his death. Before he was a spy of the enemy; now he was one of nature's princes.

AN OLD BATTLEFIELD.

The softest whisperings of the scented south,
And rust and roses in the cannon's mouth,

And where the thunders of the fight were born
The wind's sweet tenor in the standing corn,

With songs of larks, low lingering in the loam,
And low skies bending over love and home,

But still the thought: Somewhere upon the hills
Or where the vales ring with the whippoorwills,

Sad, wistful eyes and broken hearts that beat
For the loved sound of unreturning feet,

And when the oaks their leafy banners wave
Dream of the battle and an unmarked grave!

WHIST PARTY AT SQUANTUM

Beautiful Souvenirs Awarded for Best Scores

Another successful affair both socially and financially was given for the benefit of the Squantum Women's club Saturday evening at the home of Mrs. Helen McGowan when twelve tables of whist were played.It was a military whist and the gayly colored flags added a pretty decorative scheme to the large and attractive living room. Much credit is due Mrs. Henrietta Black of Fitchburg who had charge of the tables and otherwise assisted Mrs. McGowan.

Beautiful souvenirs were awarded those playing at the two tables holding the highest scores. They succeeded in capturing the most flags for their home fort. Those playing at the fort who had the most flags were: Mrs. William A. Reed Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Read and Mrs. Frank Anderson. The ladies received leather and moire wrist bags and a cut glass dish, and the gentleman a gold stick pin. At the second table Mr. and Mrs. S. Zottoli, Lettie McCarty and Roger Mason played. Mr. Zottoli won a gold stick pin, Mrs. Zottoli, hand embroidered towels, Miss McCarty hand embroidered doily and Mr. Mason a desk set.

Mrs. McGowan served punch and cake assisted by Mrs. Stuart Knight, Mrs. Louise Holt, Mrs. Charles Bostwick and Mrs. Black.

Those present were: Mrs. Eva Eaton, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ramsdell, Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Read of Somerville, Mrs. F. E. Morse, Mr and Mrs Mark Redmond, Roxbury; Mrs. James Foster, John Johnon, Mrs. F. SPORT BRIEFS

The Quincy High and Weymouth High base ball teams did not play their scheduled game at Merrymount Park Monday afternon on account of the heavy rain. It is doubtful if one will be arranged in its place. The game on June 12 with Milton has been cancelled by Milton on account of that team being crippled with mumps. South Boston High plays here Wednesday, and Braintree High on June 16, the final game of the season.

Richard Z. Crane, '17, and G. E. Gale, '17, won the final match in the Harvard tennis tournament Monday by defeating E. B. Starbuck, '14, and K. W. Snyder, '14, in straight sets, 6-2, 6-1, 6-2. The winning pair will now play Capt. E. H. Whitney and a team mate for the college doubles title. Mr. Crane is the son of Emery L. Crane, city clerk, and first became prominent in tennis when he organized and captained the team of Quincy High school. Since entering Harvard he has participated generally in the sport, has been a consistent point getter and has secured his laurels.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

Avoid White Paper.

White paper is not as good as blue or brown for wrapping up things that are to be put away for a long while as the chloride of lime in the paper will fade fabrics.

Eternal Feminine.

Margaret, aged seven years, was playing housekeeper. As she pretended to wipe the perspiration from her face she turned from the toy washboard upon which was rinsing out a handkerchief, and, addressing her brother, a year younger, said: "There you are sitting at your ease and me breaking my bones doing your washing."

ASKS FOR "DIVORCE"

Walsh Sends Railroad Message to Bay State Legislature

Boston, June 2.—In Governor Walsh's long-expected railroad message to the legislature he urges absolute divorcing of the Boston and Maine from the New Haven through the adoption of the dissolution agreement reached between the New Haven and the federal government at Washington.

The governor also urges a thorough financial reorganization of the Boston and Maine by consolidating the road's leased lines.

The governor recommends that the question of whether or not the state should acquire the Boston and Maine stock now held by the Boston Holding company be submitted to the voters at the next state election.

New Health Rules In Effect

ROOSEVELT'S MEETING WITH RIIS, HIS BIOGRAPHER.

"How the Other Half Lives" Stirred the Colonel to Hunt Up Author.

Surely one man could have said no more in praise of another than was spoken in 1903 by President Roosevelt of his friend, Jacob A. Riis, who later became Roosevelt's biographer. The presidential car had stopped at Richmond Hill, N. Y., home of the "friend of the president," and from the rear platform was spoken that tribute which caused the country to inquire, "What is this man like?" of the writer and reformer whose illness at Barre, Mass., attracted the nation's attention anew.

The chief executive said that when he preached of good citizenship he pointed to Jacob A. Riis as an example of what he meant. He described him as a man who acted squarely, worked hard, wore no sour visage, and not only held high ideals, but fought for them.

No better description of the man could be given. Jacob A. Riis has been a fighter, a hard worker, and again a man who carries on no "rosewater revolutions," as the president put it.

Although Jacob A. Riis has been a fighter all his life, even before he came to America from Denmark, his battles have always been for somebody else. He fought for small parks for the people and got them. He insisted that foul tenements should be torn down, and he would not be still until the old rookeries which breed disease and crime were pulled down almost over the ears of their landlords. As secretary of the small parks commission and as executive agent of the good government clubs he attacked filth and crime like a man leading a cavalry charge. His energy and his determination when, as a police reporter for a morning paper and as a writer in the magazines, he took up the battle for decency and cleanliness and for sunlight for the poor brought him the friendship of Theodore Roosevelt.

His book, "How the Other Half Lives," which contained revelations about the awful conditions prevailing in the tenements of New York, aroused the better element and set the whole country by the ears in 1890.

It was then that Theodore Roosevelt, then civil service commissioner, climbed a greasy circular staircase to a dingy newspaper office and inquired for Jacob A. Riis, whom he had never seen. Mr. Riis was out, and when he returned he found a card, on the back of which was written, "Have read your book, and I have come to help."

Theodore Roosevelt did help, and he and Jacob A. Riis stood shoulder to shoulder in "The Battle With the Slums" and in "The Ten Years' War."

500,000 CIVIL WAR VETERANS

Estimated Number of Survivors Forty-nine Years After Close of Conflict.

There are still some 400,000 survivors of the civil war who fought for the north. A conservative estimate of the Confederate survivors is 100,000. This is based on their statement that their numbers never exceeded 600,000. Since Memorial day, 1913, a number of prominent veterans on both sides have passed away, the most prominent of whom were General Daniel E. Sickles of the north and General Simon Bolivar Buckner of the south. General Sickles was one of two surviving corps commanders. General Grenville M. Dodge, the other, is still living.

As usual, this year's big Memorial day celebrations were planned in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and at the Arlington National cemetery. On June 4 a monument to the Confederate dead is to be unveiled at Arlington cemetery.

MEXICAN WOMEN IN BATTLE.

Aided Federals In Firing Line During Fighting at Zartuche.

The women who follow every Mexican army took a prominent part in the recent fighting at Zartuche. As the federal soldiers swarmed from the cars some of the women dragged out and broke open boxes of ammunition, carrying the cartridges to the federal soldiers in the face of the Constitutionalist fire. Others crouched on the iron roofs of the cars, took up the rifles of the wounded and loaded and fired with all the coolness and determination of veterans.

A half dozen of the women made a desperate effort to bring a machine gun on one of the flat cars to bear on the Constitutionalist troops, but they could not get it in position, as the male soldiers had surrendered.

A Fish Story.

There was a fish
Who grew too fat.
He worried much
And grieved thereat.

A single bite
He had to give.
He ate one fly.
Though strange it sounds,
His weight at once
Increased two pounds.

DELIGHTS OF CANOEING.

In the way of small water craft there is nothing quite so alive as the canoe. It has the spring of a bird over the water, the silence of a water sprite stealing through mysteries of shadow and the swiftness of a fish darting on its prey.

The canoe seems to form part of the being who propels it and lends itself to a diversity of sports not surpassed by any other craft.

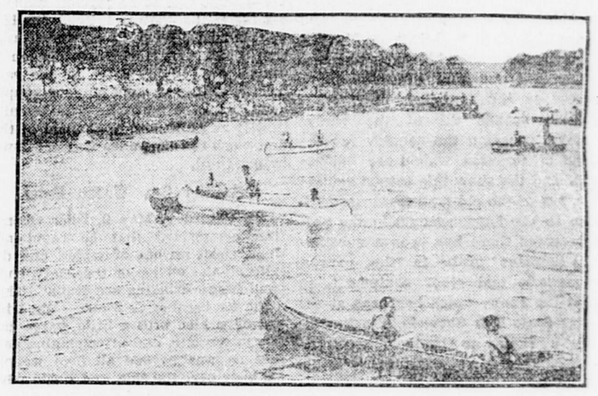

One of these is tilting. At a given signal pairs of canoes dart out upon a lake into deep water, and the tournament begins. In each canoe are a skilled oarsman and a man with a lance. The lances are long and wadded at the end and require agile and experienced handling. With poised lances the canoes rush at each other, and then it is a wild struggle to keep the slender boats afloat while lances are plunged with powerful impact against contending knights.

The knight who is forced into the water loses the tourney, but before that happens canoes dart forward and rush back for a stronger spring. They rise like a living thing to the fray and, with water churning against their frail sides, quiver in the endeavor to preserve equilibrium against the odds of war.

If tilting is exciting sport, the "upset race" is even more so, for the reason that it requires skill of a different sort and wonderful rapidity and dexterity of movement. There is, too, an added element of danger, for the way of safety in the water never lies beneath a capsized boat.

An ideal canoe is fifteen to eighteen feet long and thirty to thirty-six inches broad. It is so light—weighing about sixty-five to seventy odd pounds—that one man can tote it through canoe "carries" and over log jams.

The price is such that the canoe is often called "the poor man's yacht," because he may buy one for from $6 to $25, according to the materials of which it is constructed and with reference to its size.

CANOE SPORTS ON MOUNTAIN LAKE.

RELIABLE CAMP FOOD.

You Had Better Stick to the Old Standbys.

Raw materials which have been brought by great labor at the paddle and under the pack to a country where fresh supplies are unobtainable are far too valuable to be wasted in unsuccessful cooking experiments.

Cornmeal, wild rice, beans, flour, bacon, sugar, tea and salt, with a bit of soda and pepper to enliven the same, and some prunes and tobacco to aid digestion, have been from the beginning and will be until the end of time all that man requires to keep him alive and working.

But man, particularly city broke man, needs more to make him really happy—his palate and his health demand something more of variety.

So, when one reads in the catalogues of dehydrated vegetables so reduced that a single pound is the equivalent of a dozen pounds of the fresh garden product; of a pound of porterhouse stewed down to a thimbleful of goo, and of a quart of turtle soup dried into an inch cube, his mouth begins to water.

But between the patent fodder in the sporting goods store and your grub sack in the wilderness should intervene the cool, dispassionate third degree of your experience, because some of 'em are good and some of 'em are not, and all of 'em must be handled right to give the best results.

Washing the Camp Dishes.

Never believe the man who tells you that sand and water are all you need to wash your dishes. Camp fare entails greasy dishes, and good soap with hot water is the only combination that will keep the dishes fit to eat out of. Neatness in camp is as essential as in the home.

KEEPING THE CAMP DRY.

Useful Hint For One Night Camps In the Rain.

In selecting a camp site choose, if choice be granted you, ground that will have a slight slope away from the tent on all sides. Never pitch in a hollow or on flat ground, which catches the drainings from a watershed, however small. If your camp is to be permanent dig a trench around the tent.

To obviate the necessity of this in one night camps and still insure a dry camp in wet weather have a four inch flap of heavy canvas added to the bottom of your shelter tent. This folds under and lies flat on the ground inside the tent. The rubber blankets are then spread so as to come well over the edges of the flap, making it impossible for any water to get inside by running under.

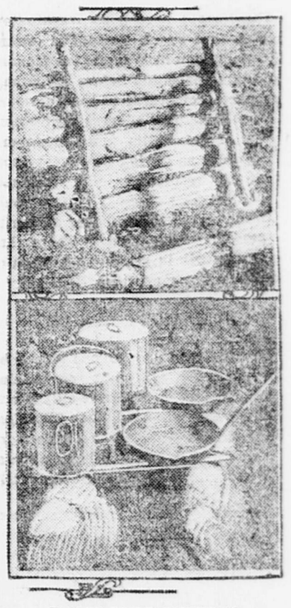

HOW TO BUILD CAMPFIRES.

Most campers do not know how to build a cook fire right. The lower picture in the accompanying cut shows the correct way.

Locate your fire to leeward of your tent in cool weather and to the windward when mosquitoes or other pests are about. Cut two logs about six inches in diameter and four feet long from a green or live tree. Lay them parallel to each other, about twelve inches apart at one end and six inches apart at the other, the wider end toward the wind. Bed these logs into the ground a bit or pack sand or earth next the logs on the inside and against them on the outside to prevent the fire getting under them.

Arranged in this way the wind blows the fire along between the logs. You can have a good fire, and yet you can get right up to the sides of it, having no smoke or heat to bother you.

HOW TO BUILD CAMPFIRES.

Before you begin to cook gather a big supply of dry wood. For this fire use small pieces from the size of a lead pencil to an inch in thickness—rarely anything larger. Cut it all into short lengths, say six to ten inches long. Begin "laying" your fire from the small end of the range, being careful to cross the sticks so as to let in the air. Light it from the wide end, and the wind will do the rest.

The only thing to use in the way of a device about a cook fire, besides the cooking utensils, is what is called a "grate." It is simply three pieces of steel eighteen inches long, one inch wide and three-sixteenths of an inch thick, loosely riveted together at two places. It folds up, can be extended as desired and is a very practical thing.

The heating fire illustrated in the upper portion of the cut is intended for cold weather to reflect heat into the open tent, which should be set eight to twelve feet away.

A Siren

She Proved a Lure In the Right Direction

By F. A. MITCHEL

Indirectly the small salary was the cause of the trouble. It was but $600 a year, and no man could be found to accept it except some recent graduate just beginning his life work. These young men were all bachelors. There was a girl in the congregation, Miss Beatrix Severance, daughter of the managing deacon, who as soon as a young man fresh from a theological seminary took up the duties of pastor began to weave about him a spell. He would gradually become devoted, then on one pretext or another would hand in his resignation and leave for another field.

A few of the parishioners who were in the secret advocated securing a married man for pastor. Acting on the suggestion, they "called" a man with a wife and six children. But the salary was so small that the more prosperous members of the congregation were continually compelled to put their hands in their pockets to help the family out. Fairs and donation parties were resorted to till at last the congregation became weary of the business. The pastor secured a call with a higher salary, and the First church returned to the old system of having a bachelor to fill the pulpit.

When the Rev. Thomas Ridgely, unmarried, stepped into the pulpit vacated by the pastor with a family, none of the congregation except a committee who had been sent to hear him preach had seen him. As he stepped forward to begin the service a few of those who understood the cause of the frequent resignations of the church's pastors looked at one another meaningly. He had fiery red hair and enormous joints, while his complexion was a freckled brown. If these persons had spoken their thoughts they would have said, "At last we have a man whom Trix Severance will let alone."

Beatrix, who was in her accustomed seat in her father's pew looking up at the minister, was of the same opinion. However, when he sent his first word rolling over the congregation it was like the lower notes of the organ. There was scarcely a member of the congregation but admitted that Mr. Ridgely possessed a resonant voice. It seemed not to make any difference whether he raised it or lowered it, the effect was the same. When he spoke in those tones that are intended to be impressive, but are usually inaudible, his most subdued note could be distinctly heard in every part of the house.

But when Mr. Ridgely began his sermon it was evident that his voice was not his principal attraction. There was a depth as well as a fervor in everything he said that went both to the understanding and the heart. For the first time in years the congregation of the First church realized that they were under a powerful influence. They listened, every eye and ear intent upon him, till he had finished; then a murmur of satisfaction broke the stillness.

When the sermon was over and the congregation were passing out of the church the hum of conversation was entirely about the new pastor. "Where did the committee pick him up?" "What does it mean that such a man will accept our little salary?" "He'll be called somewhere else within a few months." These were some of the comments made, and all were encomiums on Mr. Ridgely. But there were a few, a select few, who looked at the matter from a different point of view. With them the question was, How would Beatrix Severance stand in the matter, or would the clergyman be driven away by her as the other bachelors had been?

What were Miss Severance's thoughts or intentions no one knew, for she kept them to her own sweet self. Every Sunday she attended service, at least once, and sat listening to the clergyman's words without betraying by her expression an interest in him personally. Nevertheless the congregations soon noticed that she was weaving the same spell over him she had thrown about the others.

Then a low murmuring began to be heard against the girl, who, it was to be inferred, would drive out this gifted man. They had failed to find fault with her in the other cases, for the men were not talented and could easily be replaced. But here was a wonder who, when they lost him, could not be replaced. Indeed, there was not a member of the congregation but feared that at any moment he would receive a call elsewhere at a far higher salary than they were paying or could afford to pay him. Should Trixie Severance be allowed to deprive them of their prize?

An informal meeting of those who understood the matter was held at the house of Mrs. Deacon Stoneman, wherein it was discussed, and the result of the conference was that the deaconess should request her husband to go to Deacon Severance and ask him to warn his daughter to keep hands off the new minister. Deacon Stoneman called on Deacon Severance, and the two were closeted together for the space of half an hour. Then the visitor withdrew, and Deacon Stoneman called Beatrix into the room, closed the door and informed her of the subject of the recent interview.

"Papa," said Trixie, "what do you wish me to do?"

"Nothing so far as Mr. Ridgely is concerned."

"What does the congregation wish me to do? Have they mentioned any especial act I have committed with reference to Mr. Ridgely that they object to?"

"I don't know that they have."

"Well, you may tell them for me that Mr. Ridgely had best be let alone with reference to his treatment of me and I had best be let alone with reference to my treatment of him."

This ended the conference between father and daughter. What report he made to those who had taken it upon themselves to admonish Beatrix through him was not known, but it was probably not very satisfactory, for the feeling against the siren increased, and it was not long before she began to get the cold shoulder from certain members of the congregation. One thing was noticeable—the relations, so far as they appeared between her and Mr. Ridgely, were by no means changed by the fact of her admonition.

One day Mrs. Harkness met Mrs. Gooding on the street, and the two ladies stopped for a chat.

"Have you heard the news about our pastor?" asked the former.

"No. What is it?"

"He's had a call."

"I knew it! It's all that minx Trixie Severance's fault. She's driven him out as she has driven out the others."

"He hasn't accepted it yet."

"But he will. Do you know what salary goes with it?"

"They say it is double what we are paying."

"Then he's sure to go."

The news spread that the church's idol had received a call, and it was generally conceded that it was preliminary to his leaving the place on account of having received a refusal from Beatrix Severance. Then it began to be known that in his new field he would receive double the salary he was paid by the First church. Meanwhile the feeling of antagonism toward Trixie was growing like a rolling snowball. Some even suggested that in the event of their losing their pastor she be brought up before the church and tried for unseemly conduct. But the absurdity of such a course was apparent when some one asked in what form the charges would be made.

One Sunday, after reading the usual notices, Mr. Ridgely said that since it had become generally known that he had received a call he would say that he had declined it and would remain with the First church.

Great was the astonishment at this announcement. What did it mean? Was the man crazy to refuse a salary of $1,200 when he was getting only $600? Those who understood Miss Severance's part, or her supposed part, in these pastoral affairs looked at her inquiringly. Her face was as passive, as unintelligible as usual.

The only person in the congregation who could give a satisfactory explanation of the matter was Mrs. Gooding, who said it was so plain she couldn't understand why everybody couldn't see it. Trixie had so bewitched the pastor that rather than leave her he had given up an additional $600 a year. This view commended itself to others, and the impression gained ground that the minister's departure was only deferred. Miss Severance was playing him as a cat would play a mouse. Before long he would depart, call or no call.

Meanwhile the power of the young clergyman for good was becoming known elsewhere, and calls began to pour in thick and fast. Mr. Ridgely did not speak of them himself; they leaked out through those who gave them. He declined them all.

Then the congregation of the First church began to think that it was his love for them that kept him. After all the First church was composed of an exceptional class of people. Quite likely Mr. Ridgely appreciated the social advantages of such a church. This view was poohpoohed by a few, but gained ground generally.

Finally an announcement was made by Mrs. Deacon Severance that was like a bomb dropped among the congregation. Her daughter, Beatrix, was engaged to Mr. Ridgely. All were made happy by the news. Their beloved pastor would now be a fixture in the First church. From being the most unpopular member of the congregation Trixie became the most popular. All flocked about her with congratulations, saying that they were "so glad;" that doubtless it had been through her influence that Mr. Ridgely had declined the calls he had received and now they would have him always.

Miss Severance received their congratulations with the same imperturbability that she had borne their reproaches. In due time the wedding was celebrated, and all were settling down with a feeling that they were to retain a minister who had been offered several thousand dollars a year in place of the paltry sum of $600 when the tranquil waters were again disturbed. The minister announced from his pulpit that he had determined to give up all regular pastoral work and preach the gospel to the poor wherever and whenever he found an opportunity. He further stated that he was happy in having gained a wife who sympathized with him in this course and who would assist him in his efforts to ameliorate the spiritual and physical condition of those who most needed him.

30,000 MEN TO HOLD VERA CRUZ

Funston Needs That Number, Declares Correspondent.

HUERTA'S MESSAGE TO ARMY

Will Never Resign and Bids His Soldiers Prepare For the Struggle to Come—Fortifying Route to Capital and Planning to Attack Vera Cruz, Now Surrounded by 17,000 Mexicans.

Harry H. Dunn, a New Orleans newspaper man, arrived at New Orleans from Mexico and has a copy of a circular which he says General Huerta caused to be distributed among his soldiers around Vera Cruz a short time ago. It follows:

"If you hear that I have been captured by the Americans you may believe it; if you hear that I have been slain, murdered under the guise of an execution by those of the north, you, my brave soldiers, also may believe that, but if you hear that I have resigned tell all the world on the sacred oaths of your swords that it is a lie.

"I have entered into no arbitration agreement which includes my resignation, nor will I resign under any consideration. Meanwhile I bid you prepare yourselves. I bid you make ready with all patriotic zeal for the struggle which is to come."

"That circular," said Mr. Dunn to a New York Times correspondent, "was distributed to the rank and file of Huerta's forces on the very day the Niagara Falls peace conference was decided upon. I have ridden the Mexican lines from outpost to outpost, talked with their commanders and have found that they are fortifying every desirable point along the route from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico. Not only that, but there are now 17,000 Mexican soldiers surrounding Vera Cruz on three sides.

Sinister Preparations.

"I am confident they will attempt to recapture Vera Cruz, despite any mediation that may be effected, and I have derived my opinion from talks with high officials of the United States that are now in Vera Cruz as well as from personal observations of Mexican forces and talks with their officers.

"Few persons know that only very recently 4,000 well mounted, armed and hard trained rebels have deserted their cause to join the federal forces surrounding Vera Cruz and constantly moving nearer to the port held by American arms. Few realize that more rebels are joining them daily and that every preparation is being made by the Mexicans to attack Vera Cruz. Huerta realizes that he can avoid death at the hands of Villa and Zapata only by having the United States capture him, and he is determined this shall be done at no matter what cost. General Funston and his officers realize that this move is being made on the town. They need at least 30,000 more American soldiers there today, so that when this attack does come they will be prepared.

"A little north of Jalapa, at Paso del Macho, a narrow rift in the mountain wall, is General Garcia Pena, in supreme command of all the Huerta forces in the state of Vera Cruz. Pena recently succeeded General Gustavo Maas, who evacuated Vera Cruz before the landing of American marines. With him are 2,000 federals made up of tried and trusted men.

Huerta's Best Soldiers.

"Following the line around to the north and east toward the coast one comes upon the little station of Tembladeras on the Mexican railway. There is Candelario Fugarte, formerly a lieutenant of Zapata. Just back of Tembladeras, so as to be well out of sight and hearing of the American outposts, there are encamped 2,000 rebel cavalry, the best of the horde of 20,000 fighters which Zapata's four years in the field have produced. These men have no artillery, and I do not know how many guns are in possession of Garcia Pena at Paso del Macho, but Fugarte's rebels are all mounted, finely armed and abundantly supplied with ammunition, all sent down from Huerta's store in Mexico City. They form probably the best fighting force of all Huerta's Vera Cruz army.

"Turning abruptly to the east, toward the gulf coast, one finds about seven miles north of Vera Cruz the celebrated leader, Rafael Ruiz, with nearly 2,000 men, mostly infantry.

"There remains still another post. Almost due south of Vera Cruz, at Tejar, the waterworks which supply the port city, is Lieutenant Borrega, with 2,500 mixed federals and rebels.

"Linking these heavy posts all the way around Vera Cruz are the nominal outposts of the Mexicans, placed face to face with the American outposts, often only a few yards from them. In these Mexican outposts appear only a few ragged peon soldiers, always in lower number than the Americans in the opposing outpost. Yet not a night passes around Vera Cruz in which a body of from 200 to 500 mounted Mexicans fails to appear where some American outpost can see them plainly.

"Some night, mediation or no mediation, there will be an attack, and it will not be by 500 or by 5,000, but by the whole force of the brown skinned army."

The KITCHEN CABINET

The art of cooking when not allied with a degenerate taste or with gluttony, is one of the criteria of a people's civilization.

THE KITCHEN SHEARS.

A pair of scissors or shears is the greatest convenience imaginable in the kitchen. They will cut up much quicker than a knife, vegetables, such as celery, lettuce, beans and any number of other things.

To hollow out a tomato to be stuffed a pair of shears is much better to use than a knife, for it may be done much more evenly. The cutting of a grapefruit to prepare it for the table may be done entirely by the use of shears. First cut out the center pulp, then clip the sections along the edge and the grapefruit is ready. When dicing green peppers cut them in long slivers, then take a few in the hand and clip through the entire bunch. When preparing fruit for salads the sections of orange and grapefruit may be easily cut away with the shears.

The more often the shears are used the more ways will occur to use them. We need not limit scissors to fruit and vegetables, however, as they work equally as well on chicken, fish of various kinds, cutting the joints of game and lobster shells.

The hard parts of oysters and clams are neatly removed by a pair of shears, while slices of cold boiled tongue and ham are often much improved by trimming with scissors.

Cabbage Salad. — Shred cabbage very fine and mix with one or more finely cut green peppers and a small bunch of celery, finely chopped. Add a boiled dressing made as follows: Cook together equal parts of egg and mild vinegar. When smooth and thick add equal parts of whipped cream, sugar, and a bit of cayenne pepper, a little mustard, if liked, and a seasoning of salt. This dressing may be kept indefinitely and the cream and seasoning are added just as it is ready to use.

Canned Beans.—For a change of vegetables, use the little tender green beans. Scald them and season with butter and a little vinegar, pepper and salt. Taste them to see that there is butter and vinegar enough to season well, and serve very hot.

SAYS NOTES WERE RAISED.

Judge Waite in the Superior Court Boston, on Monday, conducted the hearing in the suit of John F. Sherman of Weymouth against Henry H. Stanley, executor of the will of Sumner C. Stanley.

Sherman borrowed $1000 from Williams, giving him two notes for $500 each and insurance policy as collateral. He alleges an insurance agent, George E. Williams, raised the notes, one to $3000, the other to $1500, and that the former note was received by Sumner Stanley. Sherman asks the cancellation of the note and the return of the policy.

CITY HALL HAPPENINGS

City Officials at State House Hearing Today

City Solicitor Pinkham and City Engineer Sargent attended the hearing at the State House this morning on the bill to authorize the City of Quincy to establish a Board of Survey. The City Solicitor recommended a few slight amendments in the bill as reported. In the main however they do not effect the bill.

The ladder truck at the Central station was called out Monday to take down the flag on the Adams Academy building and to repair the halliards on the Grand Army building.

That the summer season is at hand is evident by the police department, the members appearing out Memorial Day with their white helmets.

Mayor Miller has recovered somewhat from his illness of last week and is at his desk in City Hall every day as usual.

The Assessors are still at work in Ward One, but they hope to finish up this week. With the completion of Ward One the field work will be ended A large force of clerks are busily at work making out the poll tax bills which will go out by mail in a few days. It will be October or later however before the real and personal estate tax bills will go out.

City Clerk Crane says that there has been quite a demand for marriage licenses this month, and that the indications are that the crop of June weddings will be fully as large as usual.

NEW ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER

Martin P. Heaney, provisional first assistant to the Commissioner of Public Works, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Heaney, former residents of Quincy street, who recently moved to Hancock street, near Merrymount Park, and makes his home with them.

Mr. Heaney is one of the most popular younger men of the city and for several years has been actively engaged in work of such a nature that he is well qualified to fill the position to which he was appointed.

He gained his first experience in contracting work as chief clerk to Minor E. Jameson, who had charge of the abolition of grade crossings in Worcester. This among other things, included the erection of a new Union passenger station, track elevation and its inumerable details. His promotion was rapid.

He resigned in March 1913, after a service of four years to enter the employ of Dunn and McCarthy, general contractors and while with them superintended the building of concrete bridges and abutments in that city. In May of that year he was transferred to Aurora, Ill., where that company expended a street appropriation of $165,00 under his direction.

Mr. Heaney, several months ago, returned to this city to visit his parents. While here Mayor Miller created the office and Mr. Heaney was one of three that qualified in a civil service examination.

FOLK WINS HIS POINT

Morgan Did Not Want to Give All Books Asked For

New York, May 28.—Solicitor Folk of the interstate commerce commission ran up against a snag when he arrived here to accept J. P. Morgan's offer of examination of the Morgan books relating to the New Haven railroad's financing.

An hour and a half conference between Folk and Francis L. Stetson, Morgan's counsel, developed the fact that Morgan merely wished to turn over to the commission's examiners such books as he said related to the New Haven. Stetson went back to Morgan with Folk's ultimatum that the commission must have free access to all books.

Late yesterday afternoon Stetson capitulated. The arrangements were satisfactorily completed and Folk made plans to return to Washington.

THE REFERENDUM IS SUGGESTED

At State House Hearing on Quincy Board of Survey Bill

Mayor Miller Not Anxious to Appoint the Board

(Special from State House.)

The legislative committee on cities conducted a hearing Tuesday on the petition to establish a board of survey for the city of Quincy.

As the petition was uncontested and as the committee ascertained from City solicitor Walter S. Pinkham that the plan is generally endorsed by the residents of Quincy, it is most probable that the committee will report the project favorably.

If the petition is amended the new provisions will be unimportant. Among the changes suggested by the committee, but which was not acted upon today was that the referendum be attached to the measure.

In addition to the city solicitor, City Engineer Ezekiel C. Sargent, Councilman Ernest E. Sodergren and Representatives Edward J. Sandberg and Michael T. Sullivan spoke in behalf of the bill.

"This is a bill," said Mr. Pinkham, "under which the mayor of Quincy shall appoint, subject to the confirmation of the city council, three citizens of the city, who shall serve unpaid, as a board of survey for the city. The terms of the members would be for one, two and three years, and at the expiration of each term, the new appointee would be appointed for three years. This provision guarantees the presence on the board of members who are familiar with the policy of the board. The city engineer would serve as clerk of the board.

"With the act in operation any person or corporation desirous of laying out or constructing a street or way in Quincy, would be obliged to submit plans to the board to show the profile of the new street, the method of draining the contiguous territory and such other facts as the board would desire. Upon the receipt of these plans accompanied by a petition for their approval, the board would conduct a public hearing, after the hearing had been sufficiently advertised for the benefit of all parties interested and the board, at the conclusion of the hearing, could alter the plans in the interest of the city and the citizens. The plan then could be approved by the members of the board but the Mayor would retain the veto power.

"While these are the salient principles involved in the bill, there are further provisions that the city engineer could make general plans of the city from time to time and that the future development of the city should be in accordance with these plans. The purpose of the bill is to establish a symmetrical laying-out of the city, which will conserve the rights of private and of public property and which will relieve the city of the expense of re-establishing the grades of the streets that have been laid out with reckless abandon."

In reply to questions propounded by members of the committee, City Solicitor Pinkham said that he believed that the confirmation of the Mayor's appointees should be left in the hands of the City Council. He said that the city had not appointed a planning board, as provided by the law, and did not intend to so long as a penalty is not provided for failure to comply with this law. He recommended that the survey board should not become operative thirty days after the law is enacted, but should become operative next January. "The present mayor has no desire to appoint the board," said the city solicitor, "and is willing to leave that matter in the hands of his successor."

Citing the necessity for a survey board, City Solicitor Pinkham said that under the present charter the laying-out of new streets is first in the hands of the Council Committee on Streets. This committee listens with some concern to the pet schemes of the various ward members of the city government and then passes along the proposition to the Finance committee. The final result of the matter is that the various wards get the improvements in which the ward representatives in the city government are interested.

Representative Michael H. Cotter of Lynn advised the City Solicitor that unpaid boards are a failure, for the most part. He recommended that the city of Quincy establish a survey board which would consist of the Mayor, the City Engineer and the Why Reduction in Water Receipts?

Less in Year 1912 Than in Year 1911 and Less in Year 1913 Than in Year 1912

Before the Mayor and City Council decide to charge the various city departments for water used, it would be well to study in detail the Quincy water acts passed by the Legislature. It is provided there how all receipts from water shall be applied, and they can be used for no other purpose. If departments are to pay for water, it may be found necessary to provide for the same within the $12 limit which is already overburdened. This would make it necessary to reduce other annual appropriations, perhaps for schools, or for streets, or street lighting, or fire department or police. Or else the departments would be required to pay for water without any increase in their total appropriations which is hardly reasonable.

It should always be remembered that there is a limit which the city can raise annually for current city expenses. There is much talk this year about "supplementary budgets." which seem to overlook this limit. The annual appropriations in March were well up to the limit.

Water receipts and sewer receipts are different from general city receipts, for they cannot be used for general purposes. Rather than charge up the city departments with water rates, there should be an investigation to ascertain WHY the water receipts do not increase more rapidly. It is a well known fact that thousands of dollars have been expended each year for water extensions and that the house connections have increased rapidly; yet somehow the total receipts do not keep pace. It was argued that when meters were installed the Metropolitan assessment would be reduced but this has not proved to be a fact.

Each year there has been included in the tax levy a large sum as a water tax, all of which has been raised outside the $12 limit. In 1913 it was $35,061.68 and in 1912 it was $21,716.00

The Water account for 1913 was:

QUINCY MEN PROTESTING

Against Bill to Enlarge Boston City Council

Quite a number of Quincy people are interested in the so-called Lomasney-Robinson bill now before the legislature for an enlarged City Council for Boston. The bill destroys the small City Council elected at large, which has proved such an improvement over the old ward and district system.

While the bill does not directly interest Quincy it does in a measure interest every citizen of the Commonwealth. Rupert F. Claflin, treasurer of the Granite Trust Co., and several other influential citizens, have addressed personal letters to the Governor and the senator and representatives from this district, protesting against the bill.

Charter tinkering even in a small city like Quincy is something that should be done with the greatest care. It is especially so in a city like Boston, and it is the open boast of the supporters of the bill that, if passed, it will serve as an entering wedge for further reactionary attacks upon the present charter.

MRS. THOMAS MAGEE.

The funeral of Mrs. Caroline, widow of Thomas Magee, was held Tuesday afternoon from her late home, 24 Merrymount road. The services were largely attended. They were of a simple nature in accordance with the wish of the family and were conducted by Rev. R. Perry Bush of Chelsea a long time family friend. The burial was private, Rev. Mr. Bush also officiating at the committal service. The flowers were many and beautiful, mutely testifying to the high esteem in which Mrs. Magee was held.

A cool wind Tuesday evening made outer garments feel anything but uncomfortable. There were a few sprinklings of rain during the afternoon in Quincy but hardly enough to wet the ground.

ADAMS SCHOOL ASSOCIATION

Regret That School Grounds Have Not Been Graded

The poor condition of Madison avenue, built so the children of the Adams school could have a good highway to the school, and the delay in grading of the school grounds, were the subjects of an animated discussion at the annual meeting of the Parent-Teachers association in the school hall Tuesday night.

Madison avenue, acording to the speakers, was not built solidly enough to withstand heavy storms, and in consequence of the few cloudbursts that have visited that section the top has been washed away and fair sized boulders are exposed.

During the discussion of the delay in the grading of the school lot, several members indulged in personalities and strongly intimated that the responsibility rested on a public official.

Albert L. Barbour, superintendent of schools, spoke on "What the Quincy schools have to offer," and answered many inquiries at the close of his talk.

It was reported that the Art committee had raised $115 at the recent May festival and that the money will be used to purchase pictures for the lower corridors of the building.

The music for the evening was furnished by David Sheckner the talented violinist of the Washington school, accompanied by Miss Isaacs of the Adams. The applause was spontaneous.

Alfred E. Pinel was reelected president of the association, and Miss Bessie Roberts, secretary. The new vice president is John Higgins. The executive board chosen includes Richard Bishop, Eliza Sheehan, William Westland, C. Tallackston and Principal Alfred O. Townsend.

Refreshments were served by Miss Euphrasia Hernan, Mrs. E. Marnock, Mrs. Edgar Tirrell, Mrs. C. A. Ross, Mrs. Fred Van Strey.

SENIOR CLASS WERE EASY WINNERS

The Sophomores Unable to Score a Point

The Senior class of the Quincy High school was an easy winner in the annual interclass athletic meet at the Merrymount oval Tuesday afternoon before a small but interested crowd of spectators. The men winning first and second places wil be awarded the school track team letters.

Leon White was the best individual point getter finishing first in four events and once in second place.

The best race of the day was the 440 dash won by Whet Brown a dark horse who competed in street clothes. He left the mark with the gun and straightway commenced to open up a gap which Johnson his classmate and Sturgis Hunt could not close up. Paul Larkin took the 220 over Leon White much to the surprise of the spectators. Larkin also wore street clothes.

The best exhibitions of distance running ever seen on the oval was given in the 880 when Safford of the Juniors circled the track in 2m 29s and finished in one of the fastest sprints imaginable. Sutermeister in the mile surprised his friends by suddenly opening up in the last 50 yards and sprinting in century dash style.

The judges were Messrs. Fenner Mansur and Paulson of the faculty and Everett Harkins. The summary:

100 yard dash—won by Leon White '14, Paul Larkin '15, second; Higgins '17, third. Time 12 1-5s.

220 yard dash—won by Larkin '15, Leon White, 74, second; Sears '17, third. Time 29s.

440 yard dash—won by Whet Brown '15, Johnson '15, second; Hunt '15, third. Time 65s.

880 yard run—won by Safford '15, Knapp '17, second; Anderson '14, third Time 2m, 23s.

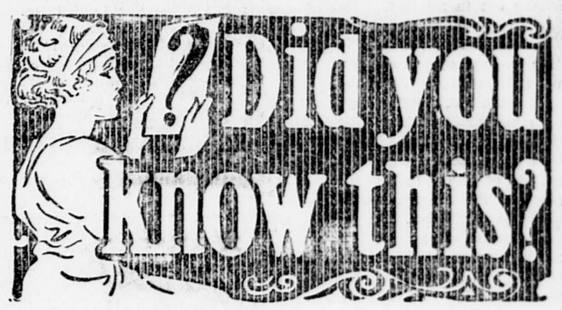

Mile run—won by Suteremister '14, Knapp '17, second; Stearns '15, third. Time 5m, 46s.

THE SMALL STOCKHOLDER.

Recent developments in the railroad world emphasize the insignificance of the small stockholder. He is a pawn in the chess play of giant forces. Nevertheless he has a weapon of which even the Morgans and the Mellens and the Harrimans are fearful, and that is his tongue.

The ideal of the magnate is a meeting where the directors appear with a sheaf of about 437,542 proxies in their pocket, all for the old management. In the old days there were many stockholders from Missouri. The man with five shares and an inquiring turn of mind could make more trouble than the railroad presidents could oil over in a year.

In these later days of vast combinations, it has seemed useless for the average small stockholder to attend the meetings of his company. In the majority of cases he lived too far away. If he did take trouble to be present, everything was slated, greased, and expedited. The reports were bewildering arrays of big booming figures, not particularly lucid or comprehensible. They made his head ache. By the time he had his spectacles wiped, and had begun to peruse the report the business was done, and the meeting adjourned.

Railroad magnates are much like other people. With all their sagacity, they make mistakes. They lay Napoleonic plans, which run counter to some plain fact of human nature. Average untrained shrewdness can offer pertinent comment, to which the most competent director may well listen.

The small stockholder then serves his own interest well when he spends some time in perusing the reports of his company, and studying the plans and methods of the management. Even though he may be ridiculed as the mere owner of five or ten shares, he can be sure that a host of other and larger stockholders are glad if he speaks out in meeting.

COLLEGE DEGREES.

The college commencements bring on the stage a troop of young fellows, bright faced and ambitious, yet apt to be more distinguished by their muscular development and social graces than by scholastic achievement. This product of the educational mill is ground alike through the hopper of academic distinction.

The degree of Bachelor of Arts may not signify any very large achievement. But it ought to indicate that the owner of it was at least an apprentice who had made good in the tests of scholarship.

Probably most college authorities would admit that the distinction has become so common that it means nothing. One fellow has given for four years his first attention and his heart's desire to the pitching of curve balls, and the making of base hits. He is made a bachelor of arts, just as much as the proficient experimenter at chemistry, or the affectionate student of Virgil.

If this degree was awarded only to a minority of a graduating class, to those who had shown special interest in scholarship and a gift for literary and scientific work, it would mean something. The ball player who had taken little interest in scholarship would at least be no worse off without the degree. On the other hand, the fellow who had really worked for scholastic achievement would get something that would have meaning. He would be fairly rewarded for work that he had done.

The way the Master of Arts degree has been awarded in the past has been condemned by all college authorities. There was a time when any graduate of a few years standing who had $10.00 could get it. Now it is usually given only to those who have done a year or more of post graduate study. Even at that, it still often signifies a mere desire to get an ornamental decoration that will impress school boards.

Formerly there were not many college graduates, and the degrees seemed a real distinction. The graduate community is such an enormous one today, that degrees have become meaningless from the great number who are entitled to use them.

'TURNED OVER TO UNDERWRITERS

Empress of Ireland In Hands of Lloyds Company

STORSTAD TO SEEK RELEASE

Owners of Collier Contend She Was Not to Blame For Disaster—Part of Crews to Be Detained Pending Inquiry by Wreck Commissioner—England Names Representative

Montreal, June 3.—Lloyds, the insurance underwriters, will decide whether it will be feasible to raise the foundered Empress of Ireland from the bottom of the St. Lawrence river. The Canadian Pacific Railway company, owners of the ill-fated vessel, automatically relinquished all claim to her when she sank.

In support of their contention that the Storstad was not to blame for the collision her owners, through counsel, prepared an application to Justice Dunlop of the admiralty court, demanding the release of the collier from arrest. In the application the owners deny all liability for the accident and urge that the collier be released when a bond of $234,000 is filed.

The application will be vigorously opposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway company. It is the intention of the owners of the Storstad, should she be released, to place the ship in drydock in Montreal or Quebec.

Identifications of the dead brought to Quebec from Rimouski progresses only very slowly.

A private investigation into the collision is being conducted by Captain Lindsay the Dominion wreck commissioner. Orders have been issued that the members of the crew who were on watch at the time the vessels collided must be held here until the inquiry is over.

Acting under cable advices from relatives in England, the Canadian Pacific railway will bury the body of Sir Henry Seton-Karr, the noted big game hunter, at Quebec.

At the invitation of the Canadian government, the British board of trade in London appointed Baron Mersey of Toxteth a member of the court of inquiry into the disaster which caused the loss of the Empress of Ireland and over 900 lives.

Lord Mersey was president of the British commission which investigated the Titanic tragedy. He will sail for Canada in a few days.

The first public funeral of victims of the collision between the Empress of Ireland and the collier Storstad was held today when the bodies of nine of the crew were buried.

Mayor Druin, aided by Canadian Pacific officials and prominent citizens, arranged for the ceremony, which was an imposing one. There a public procession headed by the Royal Canadian Garrison Artillery band, and detachments from the warship Essex and the local military forces were in line. The schools were closed and for a time business was suspended.

AGAINST AMALGAMATION

Bay State Progressives Won't Double Up With Republicans

Boston, June 3.—Close to 600 members of the Progressive party in Massachusetts in Mechanics' hall last night voiced protest against amalgamation with the Republican party under any terms whatsoever.

This demonstration came at the wind up of the big meeting called for the purpose of inaugurating an eight-days' campaign to raise a campaign fund of $50,000.

Chairman Hale had asked for an expression of opinion on the matter of amalgamating with the Republican party. The response was almost violent in its earnestness.

SULZER'S REMOVAL UPHELD

Deposed Governor's Case to Be Carried to the Highest Court

Albany, June 3.—The court of appeals upheld the validity of the removal of William Sulzer as governor of New York by the court of impeachment held last year.

Counsel of Sulzer announced their intention to take the case to the United States supreme court.

Mandamus proceedings were brought by Sulzer's counsel to compel Comptroller Sohmer to pay Sulzer his salary from the time of his removal from office, Oct. 17, 1913, to the date his term would have expired, Dec. 31, of this year.

The court held that Sulzer was not entitled to to his salary, because the office of governor now is held by another person, not a party to the present action, and also because he has accepted the office of assemblyman since being removed as governor.

FINDS NEW YORK IS NO PLACE FOR HIM

Schepps Will Feel Much Safer In the Far Northwest

New York, June 3.—Sam Schepps, still wearing an air of disappointment because he was not allowed to testify at the second Becker trial, called on District Attorney Whitman, carrying a heavy paving block in one hand.

"I want my witness fees and transportation back to Calgary," he said. "New York's no place for me. I was walking under the Elevated structure when someone dropped this block onto my head. When they start trying to kill me in daylight it's time for me to get out."

This is the second fire of mysterious origin at the church, used as a place of worship by French Canadians, within twenty-four hours. A loss of $1500 was sustained in a blaze still unexplained, and three years ago, in another fire, the cause of which was never learned, the loss was $125,000.

Boston, June 3.—The much talked of Spanish war veterans' preference bill, which went through the house, came to a quick death in the senate on a voice vote.

The bill had been amended in the house by the addition of a state-wide referendum.

HUERTA READY TO ABDICATE

Formal Announcement Is Made by Mexican Envoys

HE WANTS COUNTRY PACIFIED

Will Not Become Obstacle to Settlement of Internal Affairs—Deadlock In Mediation Proceedings Broken After Mailing Important Message to Representative of Head of Rebels

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 3.—General Huerta is preparing to resign. He authorized his representatives at the mediation conference to announce to the world that "neither mistaken pride nor personal interests" would prevent his withdrawal when once Mexico is "politically pacified," and the government succeeding his is so constituted that it can count on the support of public opinion in Mexico.

The Mexican delegates in their formal statement revealed that they had been instructed from the first to inform the mediators that Huerta's personality would not be an obstacle toward reaching a peaceful settlement.

They also stated in unequivocal terms that the internal situation in Mexico was "necessarily bound up with the international questions," and that this spirit had actuated them in coming to the mediation conference.

Coincident with the announcement by the Mexican delegates of their position, the mediators sent a note by mail to Rafael Zubaran, representative of General Carranza, in Washington, replying to the communication brought to the mediators by Juan F. Urquidi.

The mediators in effect asked Carranza, through Zubaran, if the constitutionalists were now willing to discuss internal as well as international questions, now considered inseparable not only by the mediators, but by the American and Huerta delegates as well, and if they were ready to declare an armistice with the Huerta forces so that the "political pacification" to which the Huerta delegates referred in their statement might be speedily brought about.

These acts—the issuance of the statement by the Mexicans and the mailing of a reply to Zubaran—broke the deadlock in the negotiations. Not until the mediators withdrew their original intention of ignoring the Zubaran note did the American delegates consent to go ahead with a discussion of the general peace plan, on which substantial progress was made.

The statement by the Mexicans, prepared two days ago, but not issued until Huerta had telegraphed his complete approval of the tentative plan for a new provisional government, also carried the negotiations a long step forward and an atmosphere of optimism prevails in the mediation colony.

During the past thirty years Mrs. Cheney has been one of the most active workers for temperance in the state, and has delivered hundreds of lectures on the subject. She was born in Boston fifty-nine years ago and has always lived here. She was the wife of L. L. Cheney.

"LET GEORGE DO IT"

The musical play "Let George Do It" which comes to the Kincaide Theatre tomorrow is spoken of as a "musical comedy surprise" and contemporaneous criticism is unanimous in saying that it is brimful of unexpected humorous happenings. No great claim is put forth for an engrossing story in this new musical creation but it is said that Aaron Hoffman, the author of the book, has crowded more good wholesome laughs into the swiftly moving dialogue than has often been accomplished.

MAIN STREET ASSAULT CASE

Three Syrians Arrested and Arraigned in Court

Elias Shahane, Marsuri Arcene and Nornie Arcene, Syrians residents were arrested Tuesday evening by Inspector Goodhue on warrants charging them with assault on Mari Thomas of Main street. They pleaded not guilty in court this morning and their cases were continued for hearing on June 10.

Thomas appeared in court with his head swathed in bandages. His injuries are said to have been inflicted with a club, welded by Mansuri Arcene while the other defendants held him.

The assault is said to have been a brutal one, and according to Dr. Bushnell who dressed the wounds. Thomas had a close call. A deep cut on the head could not be sewed because of the many bruises surrounding it.

The police say that the complainant is a brother of John Thomas, a baker who lives on Sumner street, who forced Mansuri from his house on Monday evening after he had attempted an assault on his wife, and that the only possible provocation found for the assault was the relationship between complainant and the baker.

While the three men are alleged to have been assaulting Thomas, a riot call was received at the police station. Thomas strolled into the police station shortly after with the blood streaming from his wound.

Acting on the advice of officers he secured warrants and this morning was ready to prosecute the case. His brother, the baker, who withdrew his complaint on Mansuri Arcene for assault, will now press that charge.

THE NOON FIRE AT ATLANTIC

Loss of $100 at Murphy Home on Hancock Street

The alarm from Box 61 at 12.56 this noon was for a fire in the Rose Murphy house on Hancock street opposite the Sacred Heart church. The house has been vacant for some time but it is said that Mrs. Murphy was again moving in. The fire evidently started on the top of the back porch among some old rags and burnt down through the roof filling the house with smoke. It looked like a bad fire at the start, but the fire department made short work of it. Chief Billings says the loss will not exceed $100. Officer John P. Duffy, who lives near the scene, while assisting the firemen, received a bad cut on his hand.

OVER 20,000,000 persons in America enjoy vacations annually This means that practically everybody who can afford it takes a summer outing for health and recreation.

Fifty years ago nobody did.

The vacation habit grew out of the old time camp meeting after the civil war and became a fixed custom with the Philadelphia centennial.

We have no right to live only to do business. Rest, different environment and a change from the daily grind of life result in happier, healthier people.

TAKE A VACATION!

BIRDSEYE VACATION VIEW.

How the People of the United States Play In Summer Time.

Among the agricultural population, after haying and reaping the early grain, there is a lull in the press of farm work, which gives time for the August excursion to the seashore. The dwellers in the seashore cities take their vacations on the farms and the mountains of the back country.

The people of the south move to their own springs in the Alleghenies and to the seaside resorts of New Jersey and New England. The great lakes furnish resting spots for the middle west, and the farther west has its cool summer dwelling places in the Rocky mountains and their foothills. This annual summer transfer of millions of people is a strong factor in welding together the different sections of the United States.

TO LEARN CRAWL STROKE.

One is but half a swimmer if he has not learned the crawl stroke. The general stroke may be acquired by a land drill. Begin with right foot advanced, knees stiff, leaning forward to imaginary water level; face turned toward left elevated shoulder, with top of head down and mouth up. Move the arms regularly and continuously, after the fashion of a windmill, but more slowly, always maintaining the same relative distance apart. Left arm swings upward and forward, with palm of hand upward. Right wrist bends so as to hook and grip the water. Right arm swings downward and backward.

In the next position the right shoulder is depressed, right elbow up, right thumb down, hands flat, left elbow up, left palm up, little finger in advance. Swing the right arm back, the left forward. In the third position the right shoulder and elbow are elevated, face turned to the upper shoulder. Swing the left arm back, the right forward. On the extreme right the right arm relaxes and springs forward. Left arm moves back.

There is no system of motion so powerful for correcting round shoulders as the crawl stroke. This is because the crawl is chiefly deep breathing and shoulder action.

TWO POSITIONS IN THE FAMOUS CRAWL STROKE.

USING THE SHOTGUN.

Proper Way to Pull Trigger Is First Essential.

An axiom of shotgun shooting is that the arm is never to be held still upon anything—in this differing radically from the rifle. The trigger should be pressed, therefore, without checking the regular rising movement of the barrels, the pulling and upward movement of the sight being so well timed that the discharge will take place just before the center is covered.

Press the trigger, not by any conscious crooking of the forefinger, but by tightening the grip of both hands, the one pushing forward and the other drawing back. This is not only the right manner of pulling trigger on a shotgun, but tightening the grip of the hands enables the gunner to catch the recoil just as the blow of a fist is warded off before it gathers momentum.

"YOU LOOKED UP TOO SOON."

Here's a Tip For the New Man on the Golf Links.

If the golf player will direct his attention when making his swing upon applying his greatest effort after his club head reaches the ball he will find a tremendous increase in the distance he gets as well as a much smoother finish throughout the swing.

If the player will just try hard to see how long he can keep his club head against the ball he will find that he has no inclination to look up too soon or to apply the power at the wrong time.

You will hear the criticism, "You looked up too soon," more often on the links than any other thing, and this fault can be quickly and positively cured if the player will make this experiment.

FOOD FOR CAMPERS.

Don't Forget to Take Right Kind of Salt Pork.

In these days of canned meats, vegetables and fruits the camper is saved the necessity of carrying bulky supplies. Canned meats, though, do not displace salt pork.

Nothing can take the place of that. It fries the fish and flavors the stew and is good for itself alone. Buy pork that is hard and of a pink color. White, lardy looking pork avoid at any price.

Twenty pounds of good pork is little enough for a party of four to use in two weeks under ordinary circumstances.

LET THE FROG TEACH YOU.

The frog, a champion swimmer, the model of man, has his mouth on top of his head. Man uses the mouth, not the nose, in breathing while swimming. The nose is usually choked with water.

When dogs begin to swim they try to keep their heads away up. When they learn how to swim they keep only the nose above water. So it is with all other animals.

But their heads, being light, do not drag them under, as man's head does him. So they survive to learn better.

The chief effort of every beginner in swimming is to keep his body from the waist up out of water. The higher his head is above it the better he is pleased.

Not even a champion could swim very far that way. He would tire and drown.

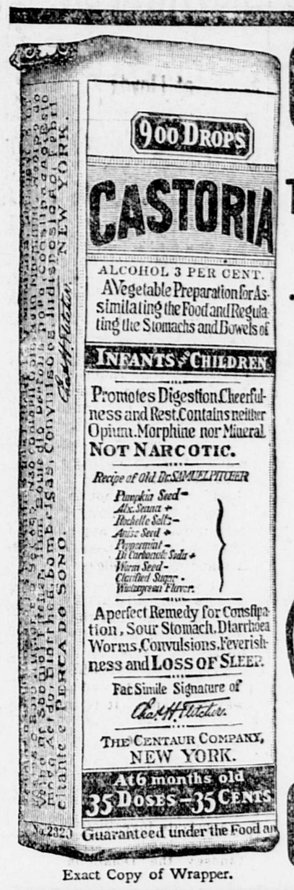

Man's swimming motions are as natural as any animal's. He can learn to swim in a day if he will only go about it right.

SPORT BRIEFS

Harry will not be compelled to join the Lowell team of the New England league, his difficulties between Manager James Gray of that team and himself having been adjusted satisfactorily to all parties. He will remain with the Taunton team in the Colonial league where he is cutting a wide base ball swath. The Taunton Herald News report of the holiday games are to the effect that "the fans were greatly impressed with the work of Barry, the midget Taunton backstop, who starred with the willow, getting two doubles and a triple." He has played every game since joining the contingent and has no errors against his name.

Merriam won the finals of the lobster tournament of the Quincy Tennis Club, started on Memorial Day, when he defeated Davis in the finals Tuesday afternoon, 6-1, 6-1, 6-4.

Charles Knight, mound artist for the Fore River team, leaders in the Manufacturers league, has decided to remain in this city throughout the summer. He has turned down four different opportunities to join other leagues. A week ago he was favorably considering jumping to the Taunton team of the Colonial league.

The base ball team of the Adams Market is playing at Garfield park this afternoon, their opponents being a team of Weymouth grocery clerks. The local battery is McCrane and Taylor. Walter Ogle of West Quincy is doing the box work for Weymouth.

The base ball team of the Quincy police received another set back Tuesday when the Boston patrolmen administered a 15 to 1 defeat at the Fenway Park grounds. Ferguson, the local pitcher who started the game was hit heavy, and Canavan went in the sixth inning. Conroy, the former Montreal star, pitched Boston to victory.

The protested game between the Washington and Cranch schools to decide the leaders of the American grammar school league will be played at Merrymount Park today. It is the intention of Dr. J. Gardner Smith, physical director in charge of the league, to start the all-city championship Thursday afternoon.

The freshmen class of the High school defeated the Willard grammar school 11 to 8 in a game filled with errors at Merrymount Park on Tuesday afternoon. The first two innings was snappy. Both teams went into the air during the third and remained there the balance of the game. Koegler and Hervamaki was the losing battery while the freshmen used four pitchers and three catchers.

FIRST RACE TO VANITIE

Beats the Resolute In Twenty-Nine-Mile Contest In Fluky Weather

Rye, N. Y., June 3.—Heeled under a stiff northwest breeze Alexander S. Cochran's Vanitie flashed across the finish line a winner over the Resolute by 16 minutes 48 seconds in the first race for the America's cup defense candidate yachts on Long Island sound.

Although the official time allowance given the Resolute by the Vanitie is known only to the cup committee, it is estimated that the Resolute is in receipt of approximately 3½ minutes time allowance, so that the approximate corrected time advantage of the winner over the loser was close to 13 minutes 13 seconds.

Yachting experts are not inclined to concede a repetition of this victory of the Vanitie over the Resolute, for the twenty-nine-mile race over a triangular course was sailed under extremely fluky weahter conditions.

MARCH BACK TO WORK

Great Celebration as Strikers Return to Places In Rattan Factory

Wakefield, Mass., June 3.—The return to work of the operatives who have been on strike at the rattan factory of the Heywood Bros. and Wakefield company for the past six weeks occasioned a celebration.

From the different headquarters the members of the American Federation of Labor and the Industrial Workers of the World marched to the factory. Along the streets the townspeople cheered the men as they passed. The selectmen reviewed the returning workers.

Church bells were rung and flags were flying from business houses and private residences as more than 1000 men, about 850 of whom had been out, marched to work.

The strike was settled by a compromise agreement.

FIRE ON THE NOMA

Vincent Astor and His Bride Change Their Honeymoon Plans

Hamilton, Bermuda, June 3.—Fire in the coal bunkers of the yacht Noma has dislocated the honeymoon schedule of Vincent Astor and his wife.

The yacht has caused the owner much anxiety, notwithstanding her expensive overhauling and refitting before leaving New York. The boilers do not make steam easily, and she will go into drydock at New York.

According to present plans the Astors will carry out the European stage of their honeymoon on a trans-Atlantic liner, leaving the yacht to follow later.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

THE HONOR MAN

How He Made Good.

By VINGIE E. ROE

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

The great, pine shaggy shoulders of the Cascades reared against the turquoise summer sky. Far down below the turbulent white waters of the Rogue river foamed in their wild bed, and their murmur rose to the mountain crests.

Halfway between the two extremes a fine roadway climbed by steady grades along the giant hills.

Along this road for a matter of a mile were scattered little groups of men still at work upon it. They wore overalls and sateen shirts, and there was nothing in their appearance to differentiate them from other men, yet they were convicts.

Farther on the pine shanties and tents of the honor camp straggled along the road, hugging it close by reason of the steepness of the hills.

Here there was a cook shack where the life of the camp centered. There was no sign of authority anywhere, and McConnel, the superintendent, went about unarmed as far as any one knew.

A quarter mile from the camp, just below the roadbed, a single man worked alone with pick and shovel deepening a wash from a culvert pipe.

He was about thirty, dark eyed and haired, though the short curls at his temples were dusted with gray. He was slim and agile, with the suggestion of football and the track meet in every line of his body.

He looked out of place as he labored, stopping from time to time to gaze off over the feathery, whispering slopes dropping so swiftly to the river below.

"Heavens," he said aloud—"the good green earth!"

Presently, as he worked, holding his eyes to the prosaic task under his hand with an effort, a girl came along around the bend on the road above him.

"Hello, impostor!" she called in a strong contralto voice that carried splendidly in the clear air.

"Not on your life!" he said. "Haven't I told you I'm where I belong?"

"Nix!" said the girl shortly, and, sitting down on the fill, she dropped her length to the sloping surface a little above him, where she sat down, drew up her knees, clasped them in her arms and smiled at him with clear, womanly gray eyes.

"You're an impostor. You're not one of the boys at heart."

"No?" he said courteously at this blunt opening of the tacitly shunned subject of the camp. "You're wide astray."

She shook her brown head.

"I know a man," she said simply, "from a criminal."

He smiled a trifle grimly.

"Not in this case," he said. "You don't know what's in my heart."

She did not speak, but under her breath she said to herself sharply:

"Pity I don't!"

She was McConnel's daughter, and her parole was more important than the governor's in the honor camp.

"I might be meditating escape right now," he said, flicking his eyes upward at her face as he bent to his interrupted work again.

"It's a mighty call—a mighty call—that of the open woods and the streams."

He stopped again and looked down over the whispering pine tops to the roaring river.

"To you more than to those others," she said, nodding her head toward the bend ahead which hid the scattered groups, "and a common man might answer it. You are of better fiber."

They both fell silent, while the river roared and the little winds played in the pine tops.

He did not look up again, and she watched his broad shoulders and lithe hips give and take with the motion of the pick for a long time.

Her gray eyes were speculative and very tender, while a tense line of anxiety drew in around her lips. Presently she shifted her position a trifle. As she did so a tiny stone under her foot became dislodged, starting to roll down the sharp decline. Watching, she saw it suddenly disappear in a narrow crack in the worn rock of the hillside.

A moment later there came a tiny thud as it struck bottom, a thud that reverberated with a strangely hollow sound.

The man did not seem to notice it and looked up as she rose after awhile to go on her way.

"Goodby," he said gently, but she did not speak.

At supper time the men came straggling in, some weary and hopeless, others singing, a pathetic file in the high blue shadow of the mountains, and crowded about the basins and the bowels.

And she knew—long before her father stood at the cook shack door and checked them off by number as they filed in to the evening meal—she knew.

She did not need the sudden halt in the roll call, the repetition of his number, its iteration, the glances of inquiry, the questions, to tell her that it had happened.

There was sudden confusion. The supper sat untasted on the tables while a search was made of the shacks and tents.

Then there was order, and squads were made up and details given, and she saw a gun suddenly spring into sight on her father's hip.

In ten minutes the honor camp was out on the hillsides starting the first man hunt, for this was the first time a man had broken his parole.

The girl ran at her father's side, lithe and strong in her short skirt and trim mountain boots, silent, listening to the buzz of comment and speculation.

Like bloodhounds the squads went first to the wash below the high arched culvert which carried off the most threatening of the big mountain's rushing rivulets in the rains. Here lay his tools, but of himself or the way he had gone there was no sign.

"Skipped," said her father disdainfully, "and him a 'trusty'—the first man to play the infernal fool, for it'll mean a long addition to his term when he's caught. And he'll be caught. Now we'll spread out from here."

But here the girl pushed through and stood just over the long crack in the slanting rock. She leaned forward a bit, as if she wished her ringing young voice to carry downward.

"You're wrong, dad!" she cried strongly. "I tell you you're wrong! The man's been a hunter—a fisher. He's the putteed, gauntleted, tailored khaki kind, and the pull of the hills and woods has been too strong! He's gone for a time, but he'll come back. The freedom and the wild have waked the old longings in him, and he's flung out to the woods, but he'll come back. I know, for my rifle and my steel fly rod are gone."

"Rosie," said her father gravely, "you've never been a fool before. Go on back to your mother."

Obediently, having fallen contentedly silent, she went, and the squads spread up and down the great watershed in grim and orderly fashion.

When the midnight stars stood overhead there was a tiny, whispering sound at the culvert, and a man came crawling cautiously out of it, having merely raised the mat of drooping ferns that concealed the mouth of as fine a natural underground cavern that gave at the upper end as one might need for such a purpose as his.

Now he straightened cautiously and listened. Far up on the ridge he could hear occasional scattered shouts where his fellows searched for him. He smiled grimly.

His dark eyes were full of fire and grim determination, and the excitement of great hazard marked his clean lined face. He was starting for freedom. But the first careful step appalled him by its consequence. He put his foot on something that rolled and sent him rattling down the wash, while the object of the disaster slid with him.

With his heart stopped still he put out his hands and felt of it. It was a steel fishing rod, its joints tied together. Dangling from it he found, as his fingers slipped along it, a reel full of line and a fly book.

It had been placed directly across the culvert's mouth.

With his face a study in the darkness he crept slowly back, reaching with his sensitive hands along the rocky bed. They came upon the cold metal of a gun—a neat, light rifle.

"Lord!" he said under his breath. Then he sat back up on his heels, motionless in the darkness.

The men came straggling back at dawn for food, ate, talked, compared notes and went out again. All day they hunted the hills and the gorges, slept a bit by turns and returned to the search.

McConnel was grim and angry. He hated to send word to the authorities until he had satisfied himself that he could do nothing himself.

The girl watched slyly from her gray eyes and said nothing, though she was as tense as a drawn string.

The next morning they were a haggard bunch that clustered around the long tables in the cook shack, and McConnel stood at the telephone calling for the valley town. He was sending for help.

The voices of the men were hushed for his benefit, and there was only the clatter of knives against heavy plates.

Suddenly there was an exclamation, the rasp of a chair pushed back on the rough floor, and a man sprang up with a tragic finger pointed to a window that commanded the road.

"Heavens!" he cried shrilly. "There he comes!"

In one hand he carried the lengths of a steel rod and a string of trout fresh from the cool shadows of the spray dashed rocks. In the other he bore a light hunting rifle, while on his back, properly slung with the trick of the true hunter, its slender feet tied on his breast and its weight on his shoulders, there rode a young spike buck.

"Good morning!" he smiled. "By George, I'm hungry!"

McConnel walked up to him, and for a long moment the two men looked each other between the eyes with glances sharp as steel. Then:

"Wash up," said the former shortly. "You're just in time."

As he turned to obey his dark eyes traveled to where the girl stood at the far side of the tables with a dish in her hands, and they were full of a smiling light. Her lips were trembling and her lashes wet with tears.

He nodded ever so slightly.

Presently as he washed at the basins she passed him, and her hand rested for a moment on his muscled arm under its torn sleeve with an eloquent caressing touch.

"Man," she laughed tremulously, "oh, man!"

EXPRESSION OF REBELS' VIEWS

Carranza's Attitude Does Not Surprise Keen Observers

CABINET MEMBERS ARE MUM

Refuse to Comment on Statement of Head of Constitutionalists or Discuss Communications With American Delegates to Niagara Falls Conference—Bryan Says Parley Is "Progressing Satisfactorily"

Washington June 3.—General Carranza's statement of the attitude of the constitutionalists was expected by those who have followed the Mexican situation closely. It has been apparent from the start of the attempt at mediation that any discussion of Mexican matters outside of the "Tampico incident" would not meet with any sympathy from rebels.

So long as the United States only embarrassed and weakened Huerta they were content. Carranza's demand that the Americans evacuate Vera Cruz some weeks ago showed how the wind was blowing.

The statement in which he tells the mediators that he will not tolerate any interference in the internal affairs of Mexico and says that it is for the conquerers to dictate the terms of peace probably expresses the attitude of the vast majority of the constitutionalists.

When the cabinet meeting broke up it was said none of the members would express any views on Carranza's latest pronouncement, as it had not been before them officially. The latest communications from the American delegates at the Niagara conference were discussed without announcement.

After the cabinet meeting another communication was telegraphed to the American delegates at Niagara Falls. Its nature, like that of the other, was carefully guarded. It was generally understood that it continued to deal with the participation of the constitutionalists.

Those who discussed the matter pointed out that Carranza from the first had absolutely declined to admit the right of the mediators to deal with Mexico's internal problems, and had protested against efforts to settle the international difficulty between the United States and Mexico in the absence of representatives of the constitutionalists.

While administration leaders still looked to Niagara Falls for the decision of the mediators over the question of constitutionalist representation at the mediation conference, the semi-official statement from Carranza's headquarters attracted widespread attention.

Hope was not lacking that differences between the mediators and the constitutionalists could be dissipated by exchanges which recently were initiated by the delivery of the Carranza note at Niagara Falls.

There were indications that the envoys might look to the Washington government for additional information over the specific attitude that Carranza finally will take. They still sought word as to whether he would agree to a brief truce and whether he would authorize his representatives to discuss the broad subject of the republic's pacification. Up to this time Carranza has turned a deaf ear to such propositions.

Secretary Bryan was in frequent communication with the members of the American mission at Niagara Falls, but beyond his statement that the conference was "progressing satisfactorily" no intimation of the trend of the exchanges was forthcoming. It was believed, however, that the American delegates had not ceased their efforts for admittance of a constitutionalist representative to the conference.

In unofficial circles in Washington speculation was renewed as to the outcome of the mediation preliminaries if the three envoys and the chief of the northern faction failed to agree on a basis for constitutionalist participation.

Many observers took the position that even if mediation were confined to differences between Huerta and the United States, and the northern faction continued their campaign to Mexico City, there still would be need of outside help to restore normal conditions in the republic.

Decision on the Carranza question is not expected for several days. The Huerta delegates, it is believed, will abide by the envoys' will in that matter.

THE REFERENDUM

Commissioner of Streets. Each one of those officials would be under salary and would be directly responsible to the city.

Mr. Pinkham answered that the city of Quincy has suffered no ill results from the administration of unpaid boards. He cited the City Council with its membership of twenty-three unpaid citizens as evidence of that statement. He admitted that he would not object to the attachment of a referendum to the people.

Representative Sandberg, who was for six years a member of the City Council committee on streets spoke briefly in favor of the bill.

Representative Sullivan inquired, if under the provisions of the bill the survey board could lay out a farming property in lots and then could assess the property as houselots. He was advised that the board would not have this power.

As there was no opposition the hearing closed.

The committee went into executive session after the hearing and this morning reported favorably on the bill.

If the bill does not contain the referendum it would seem wise to include it, as the measure has not received much consideration.

WOMEN MAY BE APPOINTED

New Law Provides For Women As Police Officers

Will Quincy in the near future boast of woman special police officers? Many of the larger cities throughout the country are appointing women as police officers, and from reports received they are doing good work. One of the recent acts of the legislature is a bill which authorizes the Mayor of a city and the selectmen of a town to appoint one or more women as special police officers, who shall have within the limits of such city or town all the powers conferred by law upon constables, except in relation to the service of civil process, and all the powers conferred upon the police as watchmen. All appointments made under the act shall be subect to the rules and regulations of the civil service. This act has been signed by the Governor and is now in force.

As far as known no Quincy woman has as yet aspired to serve as a policewoman and carry a club. However it might not be a bad idea to have a few women policewomen, to look after the host of young girls that can nightly be seen in attendance at dances during the winter months and who frequent the public restaurants of the city late at night.

CHURCH WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. Frances Henry Corey of Wollaston have issued cards for the wedding of their daughter, Marion Estelle, and Otis Chester Wheeler of Berlin, Mass., to take place Saturday evening, June 20, in the Wollaston Baptist Chuch, Wollaston. H., will be bridesmaids. Theodore E. Corey, brother of the bride-elect, will be best man. Following the ceremony a reception will be held in the parlors of the church.

MOISTURE AND HEAT.

Why a Person May Feel Cold In a Room That Is Well Heated.

It often happens in winter that a person living in a steam heated apartment feels cold even when the thermometer shows the necessary degree of warmth in the room. Of course there is a reason for this and also a very simple remedy. The reason is that the air in the room is too dry—it does not contain enough moisture—and the remedy is, of course, to keep some water in the room all the time, so that it can evaporate into the air.

Our bodies, you see, are at all times exuding moisture in the form of perspiration. Now, this perspiration, even in winter, amounts to a great deal more than one would think, being measured in the pints. To evaporate water heat has to be used up, and, as the body is warmer than the air, the heat to evaporate this perspiration is taken from the body. Of course then the body feels cold.

Here is still another illustration of this fact: It has been shown by actual experiment that a man can stay in an oven heated to the boiling temperature of water and not get uncomfortably hot—that is, painfully hot. The heat makes him perspire, and the heat taken up by evaporation from the body keeps the body from getting hot. But suppose that the oven already contained in its atmosphere all the water vapor that it could hold. Then, as none could evaporate from the body, the drops on the body would soon get near the boiling point. So in the room referred to above, if it contains a good bit of moisture the evaporation from the body will not be so fast, and consequently the body will not feel cold.—New York American.

PLACID CHINESE WOMEN.

An Illustration of How Well Their Emotions Are Hidden.

"Chinese women are trained to show no emotion, to appear absolutely placid under all circumstances," says Elizabeth Cooper, author of "My Lady of the Chinese Courtyard." "I saw it illustrated at a reception given to the wife of one of the high Chinese officials. All the women of the foreign official colony were at my home, about forty in number, and the great lady was announced. Every one rose. The room was a very long one, about seventy-five feet, and had a very highly polished floor covered with Persian rugs.

"The Chinese lady came to the doorway, with a servant on each side of her to help her walk upon her tiny bound feet. At the entrance they left her, and she started to come to me; but, being almost helpless upon her 'golden lilies,' she stepped upon a rug, which slid upon the polished floor, and instead of swaying 'like the bamboo in the breeze' as she came to me she sat down suddenly and slid to my feet to the consternation and horror of the assembled guests.

"She was raised to her feet, and, although she must have been covered with confusion and embarrassment thus to make her first entrance into a foreign home, she gave her hand to me without a trace of emotion visible in her face or manner, nor did she apologize. One would think by her appearance that it was the usual mode of entrance into a room."

Married the Day They Met.

Horace Greeley and Mary Young Cheney were married the first day they met. They had corresponded for some time, a common friend who was something of a matchmaker having brought this about. She was all his fancy painted her, but she was much disappointed in his appearance, so much so that when he appeared before her, having proposed and been accepted by letter, she frankly told him that, although she married him, she was not in love with him. Their married life was long and happy, and the loss of his wife was a blow which Greeley did not long survive.

An Expensive Lesson.

"Now, Thomas," said the teacher severely, "how many times must I tell you not to snap your fingers? Put your hand down and presently I'll hear from you."

Five minutes later she said, "Now, then, Thomas, what was it you wanted to say?"

"There was a man in the entry awhile ago," said Thomas serenely, "and he went out with your new silk umbrella."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Speaking of Dogs.

A dog fancier is a person who will give $1,000 for a dog with a long pedigree. A dog lover will divide his living and lodging with a dog that could not be sold for a quarter, but chances to be his friend.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

All Her Fault.

"There goes Bertha, the innkeeper's pretty daughter. She's broken many hearts, mine among them."

"Yes; my red nose lies on her conscience too."—Fliegende Blatter.

QUINCY AS SEEN BY A VISITOR

Found Houghs Neck a Very Enjoyable Resort

Some months ago H. R. Benn of Houghs Neck entertained his father from Debec, New Brunswick, a gentleman 74 years of age. While here he was observant and became quite attached to Quincy, and particularly to Houghs Neck. He wrote a sketch for the local paper at Debec, which will be of interest to many Quincy people, and is reproduced in full:

Quincy is a suburban city of Boston in Norfolk County, Mass. It is the seat of the famous Quincy granite quarries. It was here the first incorporated railway in the United States was built a line about four miles in length, for the conveyance of granite from the quarries at Quincy to Boston harbor; opened for traffic in 1827. The cars had a primitive appearance as shown by some early pictures, having a great contrast to the appearance of the railway cars of today.

Thomas Crane Public Library, Adams Academy, Woodward Institute, Norfolk County Court House, Federal Building and Y. M. C. A. are some of the public buildings of note in Quincy. John Hancock was born here and was the only one who signed the declaration of Independence as first published. The second and sixth Presidents of the United States were born here.

The population of Quincy in 1910 was 32,000 and is now nearly 40,000.

John Adams, second President was born in that part of Braintree, now called Quincy, October 19 1735. He was the son of John and Susannah Boylston Adams, the fourth in descent from Henry Adams, who came from England to America in 1630. John Adams early gave proof of superior abilities. He entered Harvard College in 1751 from which he was graduated four years afterward; he was considered one of the ablest diplomats of his time and served his country well in every official capacity, until at length he was presented with the people's highest gift, that of President. Thomas Jefferson said of him that he was "the Colossus of Independence."

John Quincy Adams, sixth President and son of John Adams was born in Quincy, July 11, 1767.

The above named Presidents are buried under the Unitarian church in City Square Quincy, the oldest church in the city, dating back to 1639. It is somewhat plain in appearance, but has a large recess in front supported by four large round pillars which reminds one of old time architecture.

There are 31 churches in Quincy:—Congregational 7, Unitarian 2, Episcopal 2, Methodist Episcopal 4; Baptist 2, Lutheran 1, Presbyterian 2, Roman Catholic 4, Scientist 1 People's Union at Houghs Neck 1, Salvation Army 1, Memorial 1, Universalist 1 and Swedish Evangelical 1.

There are 13 grammar schools in Quincy and one High school, having an average attendance of 328 to 744 each. There is one industrial school established one year ago, and also evening school. Approximate value of the property of the 14 schools with industrial school $1,127,000.

Hough's Neck a part of Quincy is a point of land running into Quincy bay toward southeast forming a peninsula, two and a half miles long, and one mile wide at the Neck. It is a summer resort, and is fast becoming a residential place, having a population of 1,500 in winter and 12,000 in summer. The situation is beautiful, and the climate very desirable, and is not subject to extremes.

From Hough's Neck as you look up the river (about one mile wide at this point,) may be seen the Fore River ship building plant employing 3,500 men at the present time. The large battleship Rivadavia, (built here for Argentine Republic) is nearing completion.

The Nevada a battleship of similar size is on the stocks, and is being built for U. S. fleet. At present there are nine submarines, one torpedo destroyer, two merchant boats, and four fishing boats under construction. One of the largest telescopes is being built here for the observatory at California.

Next in view as you look southeast from the Fore River is the Bradley Fertilizing plant with its own village covering five acres in full view across the bay. The following places are to be seen: Wollaston, Atlantic, Squantum (where the famous Harvard aviation fields are,) North Weymouth, Hull and Nantasket, also Peddocks Island which is inhabited by Portugese fishermen, engaged in lobster and cod fishing.

The electric car service from Hough's Neck to Quincy Square (and to the different points in Boston and suburbs) is good, being operated in winter on the half hour system, from 5.15 A. M. to 12.10 midnight, it takes 45 minutes to reach Boston from Hough's Neck, by electric car to Quincy Square, then by steam train to Boston a distance of about 12 miles. Travelling by electric cars same distance will take 1 hour and 15 minutes. To the visitor of Houghs Neck is a place of much interest, as one looks out over the bay may be seen boats scattered here and there moving in nearly every direction; some fishing, some pleasuring, all helping to break the monotony of the scene. At the time of writing this article (middle of November) the lawns and fields are quite green, having a richness of color that may be admired, most of the hedges are quite green.

The place is quiet now owing to the fact that so many have gone away for the winter, but in summer the Neck with its 12,000 inhabitants presents a very busy aspect pleasuring, fishing and swimming and bathing is then the order of the day. Electric cars run frequently and are filled to the utmost with passengers from early morning until late at night. Autos are so plentiful that sometimes they can hardly pass others in the streets. The roads are well cared for here, and most of them in excellent condition. The rock crusher and steam roller are here at present at work.

On the whole the Neck seems to be a desirable place to live.

WILLIAM H. CAVANAGH.

William H. Cavanagh of the John Cavanagh & Son Building Moving Co., died Tuesday in Dorchester in his 56th year. He leaves his wife one son, John T. Cavanagh, 2nd, and five sisters, Annie J., Mary W. Winifred R. R. Esther B. and Alice B. Cavanagh. He was born in Chelsea and lived in Braintree for many years, receiving his education in that town. After his marriage he moved to Dorchester.

ENGLISHMEN INVITED.

Louis E. Cook, who represented Weymouth, Mass., at the unveiling of the memorial to John Endicott, one of the earliest of the colonists, in Weymouth, England, on Tuesday, invited officials of that town to visit his town at the tercentenary of the founding of New England.

A local wireless operator, who has a receiving set in his home, reports that he picked up a message Tuesday night from a steamship 600 miles at sea reporting. Under good weather conditions he says that he can receive messages sent from stations 1000 miles away.

Here Is Good News for Stomach Victims

Some very remarkable results are being obtained by treating stomach, liver and intestinal troubles with pure vegetable oils, which exert a cleansing, soothing and purifying action upon the lower bowels, removing the obstructions of poisonous fecal matter and gases and preventing their absorption by the blood. This done, the food is allowed free passage from the stomach, fermentation ceases and stomach troubles quickly disappear.

George H. Mayr, for twenty years a leading Chicago druggist, cured himself and many of his friends of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles of years' standing by this treatment, and so successful was the remedy he devised that it has since been placed in the hands of druggists all over the country, who have sold thousands of bottles.

Though absolutely harmless, the effect of the medicine is sufficient to convince any one of its remarkable effectiveness, and within 24 hours the sufferer feels like a new person. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold here by Clyde T. Cox and druggists everywhere.

BIGGEST ELEMENT IN GROWTH OF CITY

William C. Wakefield Tells Board of Trade It Is the Local Newspaper

Get Busy and You will Find You Can Do Things

"The biggest element toward the growth of your city is the local newspaper. They are the things you must have to make your organization a success. They are a great element for the growth of any municipality, and they can do you merchants a lot of good." This was one of forcible statements made by William C. Wakefield, Wednesday evening, in his talk to the Quincy Board of Trade on municipal promotion and the efficiency of Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce, It was a statement that every merchant should take home with him and ponder over.

The meeting was well attended and was held in the rooms of the Granite Manufacturers' Association.

NEW MEMBERS.

A short business session was held previous to the address, during which the following were elected to membership: P. W. Lovell, Howard S. Reynolds, C. E. Sherman, C. E. Cook, Thomas Johnson, John F. Anderson and James E. Wall.

Walter E. Piper, reporting for the Public Service Committee endorsed the general provisions of the so-called Hamell bill for the pensioning of post office employees.

WATER DEVELOPMENT.

Frank Fessenden Crane of the Waterways committee said that John Swithin had a theory for the development of Quincy's water front and he moved that Mr. Swithin be invited to tell the Board of Trade his theory at the next meeting, and it was so voted.

Mr. Crane also spoke of the lecture on "Inland waterway development" by Hon. Wilfred H. Schoof at Faneuil hall, Boston, June 8, for which he had tickets which were later given to those present who desired to attend. He also spoke of the visit to the Cape Cod canal by the Real Estate Exchange, June 9, and said that all who desired to take this trip should get their tickets at once.

SCOUT COMMITEE.

The president appointed Charles H. Johnson, J. S. Swingle and Alfred O. Diack as the Scout Committee of the Board of Trade to co-operate with the Boy Scouts.

TRAIN SERVICE.

William H. Teasdale reported having had several conferences with A. B. Smith relative to changes in the train service desired when the new time table goes into effect. While he would not get probably all he asked he would get some of the changes desired, relative to trains from Quincy Adams.

It was voted to omit, as is the usual custom, the meetings of July and August

INDUSTRIAL VISIT.

It was the sentiment of the Board that the summer visit to the industries of the city should be held the middle of July and notice of this outing will be forwarded to members when arrangements are completed.

BOARD OF TRADE WORK.

Mr. Wakefield was then introduced and he spoke interestingly for about an hour on the efficiency of Boards of Trade. In opening he said that there were three elements that entered into the development of any community—Construction, Destruction and Parasite.

The constructive element is the one who is self-reliant. Who takes advantage of opportunities for the elevation of things. Who lives for the future as well as for the development of his own city.

The destructive element is the fault finder. He is weak and changeable. He has no interest in anything but himself.

The parasite is the man who hangs on. He would be constructive if he had the back bone. He simply sits on the fence.

In Boards of Trade the work must be constructive. To get in line with progress. The constructive element is the one of the Boards of Trade must get in touch with. It is the one to look to for support. Some towns are dead simply because the majority of the citizens are of the destructive el-

QUINCY HIGH VICTORY

Gives South Boston School a Surprise at Merrymount

Quincy High school won its second victory this season when South Boston High was defeated at Merrymount Park on Wednesday afternoon 8 to 6. An ability to hit at the right time gave them the victory.

Quincy sent over one run on the squeeze play, and two of the eight hits were bunts beaten out at first. Of the 20 visitors that reached first, eight by hits, eight by passes and two by being hit, only six completed the circuit.

Whet Brown, who is batting for 526, pulled Quincy out of a bad hole in the eighth when he made a wonderful one hand catch in right field and prevented South Boston from tieing the score.

Hamlin pitched the second game of his career and did not have the control exhibited in the first game. He received the unqualified support of the infield although two immaterial errors were made.

The heavy hitting of the visitors was done by Ware, who opened the seventh with a homer and got a pretty single. Holub, the visiting third sacker, got three scratch hits.

Stedman worked well behind the bat Ware being the only man who stole second. Ford at third played his corner without any semblance of an error and Creedon at second took his chances in good shape.

The hopes of the rooters revived during the game and in the last two innings a cheering section was organized. Although but few were in it the encouragement urged Quincy to still greater efforts with fine results. The score:

CARNIVAL FOR SCHOOL BOYS

Relay Races to be Feature on Fourth of July

The Athletic committee of the Fourth of July Association has decided to conduct a Relay Carnival for the Quincy High school and the Grammar school relay teams, instead of the closed athletic meet such as has been held in past years.

It has ben found impossible for the local committee to secure a sufficiently large number of entries either from our local athletes or from out-of-town clubs to make the meet interesting unless a large amount of money was expended on the prizes.

Another objection has been made also and that was to the effect that it was generally about 1.30 or 2.00 o'clock before the meet was finished and as a result the great majority of the spectators had left the field long before the meet was over.

This year it is planned to enter teams from each one of the High school classes, running the Senior against the Juniors and the Sophomores against the Freshmen, or possibly some other combination.

The Grammar schools are each to enter teams, and drawings will then be made and three or four schools will race at a time. If possible a special race for the Boy Scouts will also be arranged.

Individual prizes will be given to each member of the winning relay teams and a suitable trophy will also be given to the winning schools.

The following men have been appointed to serve on the Athletic committee: Dr. J. Gardner Smith, George E. Sullivan, Frank Avery, Philip Wood John Wilson and Arthur Robertson.

ALBEE-GURNEY WEDDING

At Wollaston Baptist Church Wednesday

Miss Alice Stanton Gurney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Gurney of East Weymouth, and Kenneth Field Albee of 80 Prospect avenue, Wollaston, were united in marriage Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock at the Wollaston Baptist church. There was a large attendance of friends. Green foliage and spring flowers made the church very attractive.

Mrs. George K. Drew, organist of the church, presided at the organ, playing Lohengrin's wedding march for the entrance of the bridal party, and after the ceremony Mendelssohn's The pastor of the church Rev. Joseph Walther solemnized the marriage, the double ring service being used, and the bride was given in marriage by her father.

Mrs. Leon E. Parcher of Lynn was matron of honor, and Harold Thomas of Wollaston best man. The ushers were Max O. Pinkham and Chester R. Gurney.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the groom's brother. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Albee of Highland avenue, which was attended by many relatives and friends.

Mr. Albee was graduated from Brown, Class 1910, and received his degree in medicine at Harvard this month and enters as interne at the Newton Hospital July 1st.

MILKMAN FINED.

Morris Gordon of 28 Newbury street Atlantic was arraigned in the second session of the Boston police court Wednesday and fined $50 for two violations of the laws regarding the possession and sale of milk. Chief Justice Bolster was on the bench. It was alleged by State Inspector Jordan that Gordon had milk that was below the standard and also milk from which the cream had been removed. Other cases were also tried and in all fines were imposed.

C. E. TRIP AROUND WORLD

Wollaston Young People Travel By Auto

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Wollaston Congregational church conducted an unique and enjoyable trip around the world on Wednesday evening, and many tourists were pleased to go on the excursion. Assembling at the church they found it had been transformed into a railroad station representing the Grand Central at New York, Mrs. I. W. Sneath being in charge with several assistants. Magazines, newspapers, ice cream and candy were on sale.

Eight automobiles were busy throughout the evening making several round trips to London, Berlin, Pekin and California, allowing passengers to stop over.

London was at the home of Mrs. Bessie D. Ducey on Arlington street, where English maidens served English tarts, welsh rarebit, etc.

Pekin was at the home of Miss Marion Farwell on Briggs street where Chinese girls exhibited curios of their country and sold chop suey, tea and Chinese nuts.

The return to the United States was via the Pacific, and San Francisco was at the home of Mrs. Dewitt Taylor on South Central avenue, where fruit, salads and soda water were served. Music and other entertainment was provided in the different cities, and it was an enjoyable evening.

COL. ANDERSON AS SPEAKER

Quincy lodge, N. E. O. P., has completed arrangements for its patriotic observance in Electa hall on Friday evening at which time the invited guests will be the Women's Relief Corp. Paul Revere post, G. A. R., Col. Abner Packard camp, Sons of Veterans and its auxiliary and Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans.

Col. Edward A. Anderson, one of the most forceful and entertaining speakers of the time on Civil War topics and current events, who retired from the lecture platform on his 80th birthday, has consented to deliver the address of the evening. Among the guests will be George W. Penniman, grand warden of Massachusetts.

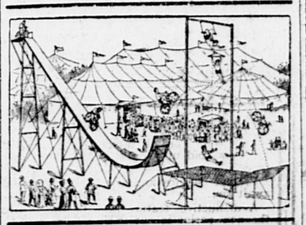

The Misses Pollard, daughters of the pastor of Atlantic Methodist church, gave a very interesting recital of their pupils on violin at the church recently.

SERVICES INCREASE RECEIPTS DECREASE

First Time In History of Water Department of Losses in Sucessive Years

Practically All the Services Now Have Meters

Although the Water department of the city added 404 services as water takers during the year 1913, which should bring in upwards of $5,000 additional receipts, the total receipts were $3,618.85 less than in 1912.

Although the Water department added 436 services in 1912, which should bring in $5,000 additional receipts, the total receipts, of the year 1912 were $2,841.19 less than in 1911.

In 1911 it was necessary to raise by taxation $19,330.30 to balance accounts of the Water department. In 1912 it was necessary to raise $21,716.00; and in 1913 the sum of $35,061.68 was included in the tax levy. How much higher will it be in 1914?

The only other years to show a loss in water receipts were 1905 and 1908. In the five years from 1899 to 1904 there were annual increases of $7,000 to $10,000; in 1906 the increase was over $11,000; and in 1907 over $6,500. After the loss in 1908, there was a gain the next year of $5,200, and then a gain of less than $2,000. The year 1911 was the banner year with a gain of $12,720, but since then there have been losses each year.

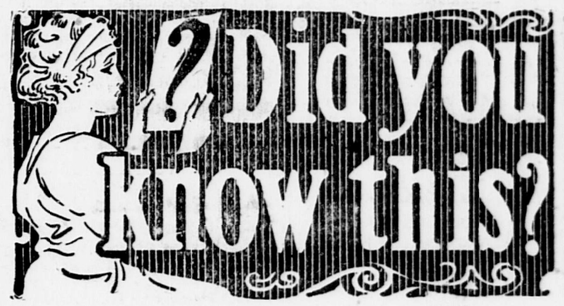

SERVICES AND RECEIPTS.

The following summary shows the receipts each year since 1899 when Quincy entered the Metropolitan system, also the number of new services each year, and the total number of services at the end of the year. It was in 1906 that Quincy began to meter its water system, and on January 1, 1914, there were 8,580 services, of which 7,281 were metered:

PUBLICITY FOR WAR NEWS.

War correspondents are held down more closely than formerly. Villa and the other Constitutionalist generals put the lid on tight at Saltillo and Torreon. The newspaper boys at Vera Cruz have been warned to keep within American lines.

In view of the ticklish relations with the Mexican Federals, the correspondents may well avoid occasions of international rupture. But Villa and his associate generals should be made to realize what American sentiment will demand.

It is true that almost all fighting forces of recent years have maintained strict military censorships. In 1898 the correspondents sent home a faithful picture of the spread of fever before Santiago, and the lack of medical supplies. This news was censored out, on the ground that it would encourage the enemy.

But a horde of spies had transmitted the exact conditions to the Spaniards just as quickly as the newspaper men got hold of it. Could the news have gone through, feeling in this country might have compelled Washington to act more efficiently and promptly.

Military censorship in the Boer war, the Russo-Japanese war, the Philippines, and in the Balkans, was apt to be stupid. The excuse was given that information should not be offered to the enemy. But no intelligent enemy would base his strategy on a newspaper story. Actual happenings are seen by the enemy quite as soon as the correspondents could get it. The actual reason for the censorship is more frequently a desire to cover up inhumanities, mistakes, and inefficiency.

War is the fiercest and most sensational of all human dramas. Every intelligent man, interested in life and its conflict and suffering and passion, wants this story direct from eye witnesses. The time has gone by when any military power can draw a curtain, and fight out this drama unseen, giving out afterward such piece-meal information as it sees fit.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

REWEDS HER FIRST HUSBAND

Rear Admiral Eaton's Widow Is Again Mrs. Ainsworth

MURDER TRIAL IS RECALLED

Woman Once Tried For Alleged Poisoning of Sea Fighter and Found Guiltless by Jury—Said She Had Been Driven to Divorce by Ainsworth's Bad Habits

Boston, June 4.—Mrs. Jennie M. Eaton, widow of Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, who was tried and acquitted of the murder of the latter at Plymouth last fall, surprised her closest friends by her remarriage to her first husband, D. H. Ainsworth, in Washington.

Eight years ago the Ainsworths were divorced in Illinois. At the trial last fall Mrs. Eaton denied any knowledge of her former husband's whereabouts, but said he might be in Illinois or Arizona, for he had a ranch in the latter state. It was said the commonwealth wanted Ainsworth as a witness at the trial.

Mrs. Eaton testified that he was a habitual drunkard and that she was compelled to leave him and take up nursing because of his habits and his non-support. It was while she was engaged as a nurse that she met Eaton, nursing his invalid wife until she died. Within a few weeks after her death she married the admiral.

For some time prior to Oct. 1, 1912, Ainsworth was in the town of Norwell, near Assinippi, where Admiral and Mrs. Eaton lived. He was a book agent. On a number of occasions he was seen in company with his former wife.

It is rumored in Assinippi among neighbors that the marriage of the youngest daughter, Dorothy, will soon follow.

It is stated that the couple have engaged a cottage at Colonial Beach, a summer resort on Chesapeake bay, near Washington, for their second honeymoon.

About four years ago the Eatons figured prominently in the news through the death of an adopted baby which was followed by an investigation. In March, 1913, Eaton died from poisoning. Mrs. Eaton's arrest, charged with his murder, followed. She spent months in the Plymouth jail and last October, after a trial before a jury, was acquitted. Since the trial she has lived quietly at the Assinippi home with her two daughters, Mrs. Ralph Keyes and Dorothy Ainsworth. Two months ago the three women went south, supposedly for a visit to Mrs .Eaton's old home.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Chambers, who remarried the couple, said in Washington:

"I remarried them because they seemed so happy and because it is a renewal of an original marriage. I never saw either of them before. They selected me because I did not know them."

Asked whether the daughters Dorothy and June knew of the wedding Chambers appeared surprised and said: "I did not know there were any children."

Business Man a Suicide After Disposing of His Property

North Attleboro, Mass., June 4.—After making full arrangements for the disposition of his property and arraying himself in his best black suit fresh from the tailor's, Joseph Shaw, 34 years old, superintendent of a stocking company, took his life by taking poison at the home of his brother, John Shaw, with whom he lived here. He requested that he be buried in the black suit.

Shaw had threatened suicide recently, which caused the brother to take away his revolver. Following this, Shaw said he would find other means to accomplish the end.

His real property had been deeded to the brother and his personal property, including money in banks, to a young nephew the day before.

Shaw was unmarried and came from Elyria, O., a few years ago. He was an excellent business man.

RESOLUTE TAKES THE SECOND RACE

Does Not Need Time Allowance In Brush With Vanitie

Greenwich, Conn., June 4.—In one of the closest races ever sailed on Long Island sound the cup candidate Resolute, sailed by Charles F. Adams, beat the Cochran boat, Vanitie, by twenty-five seconds.

The Resolute's unofficial time for the thirty miles was 3:19:15; the Vanitie's, 3:19:40.

The Resolute beat the Vanitie boat for boat. She did not even neeed her time allowance of 3m, 20s. This makes the series a "split."

The finish was a heart-breaker for the Vanitie, for she could not gain an inch. The race was won at the start by Adams, and he held right on to it.

LONG IN POSTAL SERVICE

Old Employe at Boston Had an Interesting War Career

Boston, June 4.—Theodore C. Dennis, 71, superintendent of letter carriers at the central postoffice and an employe of the postoffice department for forty-five years, died last night after an illness of two months. He is survived by a wife and one son.

Dennis entered the postal service after serving in the Civil war. He enlisted at the age of 18 in the First Massachusetts infantry. He was in several engagements, was captured by the confederates and was imprisoned in Libby and Bell Island prisons. He was born in Boston and was educated in the public schools of this city.

SUCCESS OF PEACE PARLEY

Depends Largely Upon Decision to Be Made by Carranza

PROPOSAL OF THE MEDIATORS

Pressure on Rebels to Agree to Settlement of Mexico's Internal Affairs—Asked to Consent to Armistice If Only For a Few Days—President Says There Is No Crisis

Washington, June 4.—Re-establishment of peace in Mexico is "up to" General Carranza. This is the position of officials here, the result of important mediation developments at Niagara Falls.

Confidence that a solution will speedily result satisfactory to the constitutionalists, as a result of Huerta's notice to the A. B. C. envoys that he stands ready to resign upon the "political pacification" of Mexico, is generally expressed.

Huerta's open agreement to retire, known privately in official circles since his representatives to Niagara Falls received instructions at Mexico City, paved the way, it is believed, for a certain solution acceptable to Carranza.

Administration officials redoubled their efforts to influence the constitutionalists to accept the proposal of the mediators. The chief stumbling block, with Huerta practically eliminated as a personal factor, is the insistence of the mediators for settlement of Mexico's internal affairs. Some way will be found, officials stated, to overcome the objection of Carranza to this proposal.

The constitutionalists' junta was agog with excitement following receipt of the note from the mediators to Rafael Zubaran, Carranza's representative in Washington. Members of the junta admitted that "recognition" of Carranza's claims by the mediators had just put a more favorable aspect on the situation.

Renewed pressure was brought to bear by administration officials upon the constitutionalists to consent to an armistice, if only a brief one, until mediation could be tried out a few days longer.

One plan strongly suggested to the constitutionalists was the naming by the mediators of a provisional government composed entirely of "neutral Mexicans" who would be acceptable to Carranza.

Optimism over the outcome of mediation remains the administration keynote. But it is tempered with a grave apprehension that there is still a rocky road ahead over constitutionalist participation in the Niagara Falls program.

President Wilson told callers "there is no crisis in mediation," but at the same time he admittedly felt that there is prospect of further, although not necessarily serious, drawbacks at Niagara Falls.

Senor Riano, the Spanish ambassador, asked Secretary Bryan to appeal for the protection of Spanish citizens in Tampico.

According to the ambassador's advices, another forced loan of 137,000 pesos had been demanded by constitutionalists. The Spaniards had been singled out and persecuted as a class and the money demanded from them in a lump sum.

To all inquiries whether an embargo on the shipment of arms out of American ports to Mexico had been re-established, Secretary Bryan replied that he "has no announcement to make on that subject."

The killing of Weston Burwell of Washington and a companion, supposed to have also been an American, by Mexicans in the Tampico district about two weeks ago, was confirmed in dispatches to the state department. It was announced that the death of the two men had been "practically confirmed by an investigation undertaken under the direction of the state department at Ozuluama."

FALLS SIX STORIES

Hundreds Witness Death of Traveling Salesman at Boston

Boston, June 4.—Harry T. Quigley, a traveling salesman of Arlington, fell from the window of his room on the sixth floor of the Crawford House early last night and was instantly killed when he struck the pavement of Brattle street in full view of hundreds of people.

Medical Examiner Magrath could find nothing to show cause for suicide except that the floor of his room was littered with torn papers evidently of a business nature. It would be impossible for a man to fall out of the window of the room Quigley had been assigned to, he said, because of the width of the cornice outside.

"LANGLEY FOLLY" CAN REALLY FLY

Is Airship Whose Inventor Was Derided as a Darius Green.

BASIC POINTS UNTOUCHED.

Machine Hauled Out of Potomac River After Failure In 1903 Vindicates Langley, Who Died Broken Hearted. Now, Says Glenn Curtiss, His Name Antedates All Present Aviators.

"Langley's folly," the famous old tandem aeroplane that has been hanging in the Smithsonian institution in Washington for a decade, has been successfully flown by Glenn H. Curtiss over Lake Keuka, New York. This is the identical machine that was hauled out of the Potomac river after its second and last failure to fly on Dec. 8, 1903.

Professor Samuel P. Langley gave the best years of his life to this aeroplane and died in sorrow and disappointment His friends said his heart was broken by the ridicule heaped upon him as a modern Darius Green. Congress at the last, accepting the public's attitude, refused money for further experiments, and Professor Langley apparently lost his courage as an inventor.

It is thought, says the New York Sun, that this successful flight of a machine that was completely built before Orville and Wilbur Wright made their first flights may bring about more litigation over the basic patents granted to the Wright brothers. The Langley machine was built for the government and was not patented. It has been contended that the Wrights obtained ideas from Dr. Langley's experiments.

Turned Over to Glenn H. Curtiss.

Glenn H. Curtiss had the machine sent to his factory at Hammondsport, N. Y., at the request of Secretary Charles D. Walcott of the Smithsonian institution and fitted it with pontoons. The planes were recovered, and the engine was tuned, but otherwise the machine was left in its original state.

A puffy wind and the erratic performance of the old motor cut the trials short after the first demonstration of the machine's ability to raise itself from the water.

Mr. Curtiss was asked after the flight whether it was made primarily to assail the claim of the Wright brothers that they were the producers of the first successful heavier than air flying machine. He said:

"I acted under the direction of the Smithsonian institution, which has for some time desired to ascertain whether the Langley machine embodied principles making successful flight possible. The machine demonstrated that the principles embodied in its construction are correct.

"Although this flight proves that Dr. Langley antedated all present aviators, the Wrights have been awarded a court decision, which, so far as I see, stands. In making this flight I acted willingly, actuated by a veneration for the memory of Dr. Langley and his achievements."

Entirely Different, Says Wright.

Orville Wright says the performance of the Langley machine will have no bearing whatever on the Wrights' inventions. "There is nothing in common between the two machines," he says. "The Langley system of control is entirely different from that of the Wright machines. It is a very old system that enters into the Langley machine. That machine was tried out ten days before our successful flight in 1903 and failed, although it had four times the power of our machine."

PRAYER THAT SLANDERS DAD.

Telling Child to Petition to Make Father Better Held Reprehensible.

Mothers, do not teach your children to pray, "God, make papa a better man." That is slandering your husband and is actionable.

Wives, do not show your preference for your mothers over your husbands. That is treating your husband contemptuously.

Husbands, do not remove your wives from rooms by physical force. That will enable your wife to get a legal separation.

In granting Mrs. Tusi Bradley Barber a decree of separation from her husband and giving her the custody of her child Supreme Court Justice Mills, sitting at White Plains, N. Y., handed down a decision embodying the foregoing precepts.

NEW WIRELESS SIGNALS.

One of Those Proposed, "T T T," Is Warning Against Icebergs.

John Burns, president of the London board of trade, has drawn up a merchants' shipping bill for safety at sea, which will be introduced in parliament shortly. It provides, among other things, for a new wireless danger signal, "T T T," which is to be repeated ten times at full power.

This signal will warn vessels of imminent danger from icebergs, cyclones, etc. The "T T T" will not supersede the present "S O S." Other urgent signals are provided for, such as "You are standing into danger." "I want assistance." "Remain by." "I have encountered ice" and "Your lights are out."

Here is a little paradise for a bride and groom to move into after the ceremony. It is within reach of every ambitious man. The architect of this series would impress on every young man the importance of saving money to own a small home when he is twenty-one years old. It is really better than life insurance, even if built in a village, for there is always a market for a good house of this low cost. The size of this little home is 23 feet wide and 28 feet deep. Full basement. First story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. All low space ceiling cut off and made into closet space, a feature which appeals to every housewife. Three chambers, linen closet, large bath, abundance of light and ventilation. Maple or birch floors throughout both stories. Finish in first story red gum or southern cypress, pine to paint in second story. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $2,150.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

CHOOSING A CAREER.

The list for this month is on the choice of a career. We hope that it will prove of welcome assistance to many families who have the important decision to make in regard to a vocation for the son or daughter just entering or leaving preparatory school.

First are listed books on vocational guidance which will be especially useful to teachers and parents, as they include practical advice on the different careers. Vocational training or education is the next subject considered and here are listed the books answering what occupations will need special courses of study and call for practical training. Business ethics are given under the subject Character and Success.

And following these subjects are the books dealing with occupations, first the collective works and then those on one special career. The books taking up one special career are divided as follows:—Professions, Business, and other occupations. Professions include forestry journalistic work, music, art, and others of like character. Business includes Agriculture, the telephone girl, scientific selling, shop girls' work, and others, and other occupations such nondescript subjects as the army, the navy, firemen's work, waitress work, millinery trade, and mechanics' art.

SPELLING TESTS.

The series of spelling tests which have been conducted in the eighth grade for the past two weeks or more have been completed, and will be sent to Prof. H. W. Holmes of Harvard, who will use them in connection with similar returns from a few other cities in a study to determine the relative difficulty of words commonly used in spelling.

The school department was also requested to assist in a penmanship test carried on at the same time by the educational department of the University of Chicago, but owing to the pressure of work incident to graduation time was unable to do so.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

The American Institute of Instruction will hold its annual sessions this year in Cambridge, at the Harvard University buildings the first week in July. Supt. Barbour has been requested by the State Board of Education, to speak at this meeting, explaining the work that the city of Quincy is doing in Industrial education in co-operation with the manufacturing establishments of the city. This association is the oldest educational association in America.

MACHINERY INSTALLED.

High school election slips are being rapidly returned and the Freshman class of next fall will be about the same in size as that of the present year. That no gain in the entering class will be shown is due to the fact that 36 boys will enter the Industrial school. This latter school, by the way is being equipped with machinery, and the machinery is now being connected ready for work. The school has been offered all the belting necessary for making its connections by the firm of Grossman and Co., free of charge. The school has been fortunate in securing a large amount of its machinery second hand at rates that are scarceiy one-fourth of the real value of the equipment.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Visiting school officials have been numerous in the city the last few weeks seeking teachers. The salary scale in Quincy has been sufficient in most cases to hold teachers in the city and resignations are not so frequent as they were before the last advance.

In connection with the humane teachings of the public schools, the firm of Jordan Marsh Co. is sending out for distribution all over the state, quantities of attractive buttons, bearing the inscription "Be Kind to Animals."

The present week closes the grammar school base ball season, after a very successful series of games. The attendance has been large and the games cleanly played.

FOUNDER'S DAY.

Founders Day will be observed at Thayer Academy, Braintree, on Saturday. The exercises will be in charge of the class of 1915, of which Miss Marion A. Bradford is the president. There will be a special honor service for Rev. Dr. Jotham Bradbury Sewall, a former head master of the academy. The addresses will be by Hon. Asa P. French, United States district attorney and a graduate of the academy and Prof. George T. Little, a former teacher.

WADE—SMITH.

Miss Mary Lillian Smith and Joseph E. Wade of this city were married Wednesday evening at the Presbyterian manse, the Rev. James E. Matheson officiating. Miss Smith was born and educated in Quincy. Mr. Wade, C. M. M. o nthe Submarine, K. Q. now stationed at the Charlestown Navy Yard was born in Texas. They left on the evening train for a trip to Niagara Falls and Cleveland, Ohio and expect to be gone a month.

ACCIDENT ON SALEM.

A report received at the Navy department at Washington from Commander Christy of the scout cruiser Salem reports that a boiler tube blew out on his ship on Tuesday seriously injuring three of the men of the engineering force. The names of the men were not given.

NEPONSET BRIDGE BILL

Killed Tuesday But Restored to Calendar Wednesday

By a fervent appeal, Representative Michael T. Sullivan of Quincy on Wednesday persuaded the House of Representatives to reconsider the vote of Tuesday by which it defeated the bill for the construction of a bridge over the Neponset river between Boston and Quincy.

Acting in accordance with the appeal filed by Representative Sullivan, the House returned the matter to the calendar and the question of defeating the bill will again be an issue.

The bill was reported with the recommendation that it be referred to the next General Court. As it was read each day in the calendar of the House of Representatives, this adverse report of the committee was "passed" by either Representative Sullivan or Representative Edward J. Sandberg as a notification of their intention to fight for the bill when it finally was reached for disposal.

During the session of Wednesday Representatives Sullivan and Sandberg attended the hearing conducted by the committee on cities on the petition to establish a board of survey for the city of Quincy. While they were in that committee session, the bridge bill was read and as any of its proponents failed to "pass" it, the adverse report by the committee was accepted. Representative Sanford Bates arrived later and endeavored to persuade the House to reconsider its action but this effort was seriously opposed.

When the House resumed its session today Representative Sullivan moved reconsideration. He explained that he and Representative Sandberg were attending to legislative business at the time the report was accepted, and he insisted that the House should not finally defeat the measure until it was absolutely convinced that it contained no merit. The House then voted to reconsider.

The Empress of Ireland Disaster

THE greatest marine disaster since the sinking of the Titanic and rivaling it in extent occurred off Father Point, the landing place down from Rimouski, Que., when the Empress of Ireland, crack ship of the Canadian Pacific's Atlantic fleet, was in collision with the big cargo steamship Storstad, bound in, loaded with coal.

The Empress of Ireland sank in nineteen minutes after the collision, which occurred in a dense fog, and close to 1,000 lives were lost. In the Titanic disaster, April 14, 1912, the life loss was about 1,503.

Asleep When Crash Came.

A dense fog covered the gulf of St. Lawrence at the time of the collision. The point where the disaster occurred is slightly less than 200 miles from Quebec, from which port the Empress of Ireland sailed May 28.

At this time of the year accidents in the gulf of St. Lawrence are frequent and oftentimes serious.

This great disaster of the sea is remarkable in that it happened not in midocean, but so close to land that the operations of the government vessels, the Storstad and the lifeboats were plainly visible from the tower above the telegraph station at Father Point and from other elevated spots along shore. The coast along that part of the St. Lawrence is of volcanic rock formation, and it would have done Captain Kendall no good to try to run his vessel ashore. In fact, it is believed that his engine rooms were so quickly flooded that the vessel was powerless from the moment of the collision.

On account of the hour at which the vessels came together—2:30 o'clock in the morning—only those actually engaged in the navigation and operation of the steamers were awake. The others were in their berths asleep.

The collier ripped open a great hole in the liner, and there was but scant time for the launching and manning of lifeboats. The confusion aboard the vessel was of the wildest as the passengers were shaken out of their slumber into immediate contact with the gravest peril. A large majority of those who were saved were clad only in their night attire, with clothing in their hands, hastily seized as they fled to the deck.

The first authentic account of the cause of the collision was sent to Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the Canadian Pacific at Montreal. It was:

It was followed a little later by a dispatch from Captain H. G. Kendall of the wrecked ship to Captain Walsh, which contained the two words:

"Ship gone."

The Empress of Ireland was probably the fastest transatlantic liner plying between Canadian ports and Liverpool. She established a record in 1906 three years after her launching, when she made the voyage from Quebec to Liverpool in five days and ten hours.

At the time of her fatal crash with the collier she was bound for Liverpool with her 1,427 souls, a heavy mail and a valuable cargo.

Three hundred and fifty men and women were saved by miraculously rapid work with the lifeboats that had been summoned by the wireless telegraph on board the doomed liner.

The Canadian government steamer Eureka and the mail tender Evelyn were at Father Point when the wireless station at that point received at 2:30 in the morning quick, frantic "S O S" signals. Both vessels were under steam and went out at once at their highest speed.

The wireless calls weakened rapidly. Fifteen minutes after the first was received they ceased. The rescue vessels were without wireless, and until dawn there was no news from the wreck.

Whistles Echo In Fog.

Captain Kendall was on the bridge of the Empress of Ireland when at 2:30 o'clock he heard the siren of a vessel close at hand. The vessel was the collier Storstad, Captain Anderson, laden with 7,000 tons of coal and bound from Sydney, N. S., to Quebec.

With signals sounding the vessels approached each other in the fog. The boom of the siren of the Storstad grew louder with each repetition. Captain Kendall ordered the engines stopped, and the big passenger steamship lay to in the fog while the officers on the bridge peered anxiously into the fog to try to locate the ship so close at hand.

The whistle signals of the two vessels echoed in the fog. From the reports at hand it appears that the captain of the Storstad or whoever was in charge at the time had no idea that the other vessel was so close. The Storstad was wallowing along at a good rate of speed when she was sighted from the Empress of Ireland. The clumsy collier was headed for the liner, which presented a broadside target.

Deep laden, her decks almost awash, the Storstad blundered along. Her steel prow tore into the side of the Empress of Ireland. The force of the blow was exerted below the water line. The big liner keeled over and then settled back as the Storstad, after a minute or two, became disengaged and drifted away in the fog.

For only a moment the Empress remained on an even keel. Swiftly she began to sag toward the side that had been torn in the collision. Water was gushing into her hull in torrents, flooding her engine and boiler rooms and compartments. Steadily she keeled over, pulled by the weight of the water below.

The wireless operator sent out an "S O S" call, repeating it frantically. It was heard by the wireless operator at the big station at Father Point, a few miles away.

At the long steamship dock at Father Point were the Canadian government steamer Eureka, used for the transfer of pilots, and the government mail boat Lady Evelyn, tied up for the night. The wireless man at the shore station telegraphed the news that the Empress of Ireland was sinking to the land telegraph station a short distance away, and from the land telegraph station a messenger hurried to the Eureka and the Lady Evelyn.

By the time these vessels were ready to start the wireless operator had learned the position of the sinking Empress.

An Awesome Sight.

Waiting for light, without news and with only the least of hope after the sudden cessation of the steamship's wireless, the coming out of the misty dawn of the two rescue ships, surrounded by a score of lifeboats, caused gasps of relief to the watchers who had strained their eyes through the night.

With marine glasses the spot on the peaceful bosom of the river where the Empress of Ireland had gone down was clearly visible with the lifting of the fog after sunrise. Not even floating wreckage was to be made out on the surface of the water, rufiled by the morning breezes.

The fog lifted shortly after sunrise, and it was that which enabled those ashore to make out the scene with glasses and thus confirm the fears that the worst had happened to the Empress of Ireland.

Wireless Tells Story.

Brief wireless dispatches were sent from the Storstad, which gave thrilling and graphic details of the disaster. From the quickness of the time in which the Empress of Ireland sank some of the passengers were caught in their berths and drowned. Others, in their night clothing, rushed to the rail and flung themselves into the sea without waiting to put on life preservers.

Both men and women were picked up with children clasped in their arms. There was little opportunity for the officers of the ill fated steamer to put into effect the old rule of the sea—women and children first. The disaster came so quickly and was so overwhelming that it was a case of every person for himself. Captain Kendall was picked up after jumping overboard.

One survivor on the damaged ship gave a brief and graphic description of what had happened. Said he:

"Through the fog we could mistily make out the figure of the ship which had run us down. She was listing badly, and we did not know whether she was going to the bottom or not. This feeling of uncertainty and the likelihood that our neighbor might be sinking with all on board aroused us to a still higher tension of excitement.

"Both men and women dropped to their knees upon the decks. Some prayed aloud. Some buried their faces in their hands and sobbed with a frenzy born of despair and the presence of death."

Survivors Suffered Terribly.

The condition of the survivors was pitiful. Some had broken arms and legs, and all had suffered terribly. L. E. Gossetin, a lawyer from Montreal, saved himself by clinging to a raft.

When the rescue ships docked at Rimouski the station platform was converted into a hospital, and the townspeople, bringing food and clothing, united in a common effort to aid the sufferers. Twelve bodies, with faces covered, lay side by side on the wharf. They had made the lifeboats only to be fatally hurt. The vast majority of the saved were members of the ship's crew.

Besides Captain Kendall, the first and second engineers and the ship's surgeon were rescued. The captain was too overcome to give at first any extended account of the disaster. He had sent a wireless to his line after the vessel was struck saying, "Ship gone."

The residents of Rimouski, numbering only 3,000, came silently to the dock where the dead and exhausted living were being landed and, under the direction of the mayor, H. R. Fiset, gave aid wherever possible. Every doctor in the town was on the scene, and many of the injured were taken to private homes.

From cedar chests and closets the townspeople brought garments of all descriptions for those who had lost their belongings. Two headquarters were established—at the wharf and at the station of the Intercolonial railway. At the station those injured and not removed to homes were cared for.

The rescue boats Eureka and Lady Evelyn, found on reaching the point where the Empress sank a scene similar to that which greeted the liners which rushed to the Titanic's aid. They found the ship sunk and the surface of the water, fortunately calm, dotted with lifeboats and smeared with floating debris.

In the lifeboats were huddled the survivors, dazed and moaning, some of them dying of injuries sustained in the rush of leaving the sinking liner. Few could give anything but incoherent, almost hysterical, accounts of what had happened.

J. L. Black and Mrs. Black of Ottawa said they had jumped together into the river. They had been roused by the shock of the collision and, unable to get into a lifeboat, had risked the leap. They were picked up by a boat from the Lady Evelyn.

Of a party of 140 Salvation Army members only twenty were rescued. They had left Quebec, bound for the army's international conference in London. Among the Salvation Army passengers on the liner were the seventy members of the territorial staff band, one of the largest bands of the Salvation Army.

Description of the Ships.

The Empress of Ireland was a sister ship to the Empress of Britain. She was built at the Fairfield Shipbuilding company's works, Glasgow. She was 570 feet long and 63 feet 6 inches beam.

The disaster recalls the accident which happened to a sister ship of the ill fated vessel, the Empress of Britain, which two years ago rammed and sank the collier Helvetia in almost the same spot in which the Empress of Ireland collision took place.

She was built to accommodate 350 first cabin, 350 second cabin and 1,000 third class passengers. She was 14,500 tons register and about 20,000 tons displacement and was classed as an express steamship. There were five passenger decks, with a boat deck above. The upper deck was famous among travelers, affording a walk of about an eighth of a mile.

She had been plying in the service of her owners between St. John's and Quebec and Liverpool, and especially during the summer months carried large numbers of passengers.

The Storstad, a screw steamer, Captain Anderson, was built in 1910 at Newcastle, England, by Armstrong, Whitworth & Co., for A. F. Klaverness & Co. Her registered home port was Christiania, Norway, and she steamed under the Norwegian flag. She was 440 feet long, 58 feet 1 inch beam and had 24 feet 6 inches depth of hold. The Storstad was a craft of 3,561 tons, with triple expansion engines.

One of the features of the Empress of Ireland was the daily magazine published during the voyage, the news being received by Marconi wireless. Besides her wireless apparatus the Empress of Ireland was equipped with submarine signals to insure safety as far as possible. The big steamship was equipped throughout with electrical devices to add to the comfort of her passengers.

Kendall Captor of Crippen.

Captain Kendall, commander of the lost liner, the Empress of Ireland, gained prominence in world news at almost the very spot where his steamer sank. He is the man who procured the arrest of Dr. Hawley Harvey Crippen, murderer of his wife, Belle Elmore, the actress.

Captain Kendall, who holds the rank of lieutenant in the Royal Naval reserves, was in 1910 commander of the liner Montrose, on which Crippen fled from the continent with Ethel Clare Le Neve, love of whom inspired him to murder his wife.

The commander of the liner recognized the Le Neve girl from photographs in a London paper, which he had on board the ship. He flashed the news by wireless, and Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard met the Montrose at Father Point on the Canadian government ship Eureka—one of the two rescue boats that went to the aid of the Empress of Ireland. The inspector had made the trip across on a faster ship than the Montrose, passing that vessel on the way.

Captain Kendall, through the shrewdness and sagacity he displayed in assisting the police to take Crippen, became a hero of two continents. So carefully did he conceal his detective work aboard ship that not a soul besides himself and Llewellyn Jones, the wireless operator, even knew that a person suspected of being Dr. Crippen was among the passengers.

Laurence Sydney Brodribb Irving, one of the passengers on the Empress, was the second son of Sir Henry Irving and widely known in England as an actor, author and manager. He made his first appearance on the stage with F. R. Benson's Shakespearean company in Dundee in 1893.

Mr. Irving played in his father's company from 1900 to 1904 and then for two years toured with his wife, Mabel Lucy Hackney Irving. He was the original Crawshay in "Raffles."

Mr. Irving wrote many sketches for the stage and translated Sardou's "Robespierre," Maxim Gorki's "The Lower Depths" and other plays.

WASHINGTON BEATS CRANCH

And Will Meet Massachusetts Fields in Finals

The final game between the Washington and Cranch schools, tied for first place in the National grammar school league, to decide which team would play Massachusetts Fields, leaders of the American league for the all-City championship, was played at Merrymount Park Wednesday afternoon with Washington the winner, 8 to 6.

Washington opened up a lead in the first inning by getting four runs and although Cranch was always within striking distance they were unable to close up the gap.

The contest was witnessed by a large gallery of boys, girls, teachers, parents and hearty cheers were given both teams. The general opinion expressed by many of the adults who attended was that outside of the Wollaston-Adams world series game three years ago, no game outclassed it.

During the game Thomas B. Pollard, principal of the Washington, and Alfred B. Townsend, of the Adams, directed the play, and at the close of the game the latter was among the first to extend his congratulations to the Washington boys.

The ardor of the youthful fans occasioned much difficulty for Dr. J. Gardiner Smith, physical director of the public schools, who was obliged to assume the duties of patrolman in order to prevent a crowding of the base lines.

The feature play of the game was contributed by Joe Dasha of the Washington school, who made a spectacular one hand catch behind second in the third inning.

The score by innings:

Washington	4	0	0	1	1	2	—8
Cranch	1	2	1	0	2	0	—6

Batteries—Gamble—Thayer; Tapper, Isaacson and Nelson.

The first game of the world's series will be played at Merrymount Park upper field Friday afternoon and the fans of the city have picked Washington to win over Massachusetts Fields. The later however promises to produce an article of base ball which will be a revelation in grammar school circles and all in all the contest promises to be a merry one.

DIVORCE LIBEL.

Mary E. Filler of this city has filed a libel for a separation from her husband Charles H. Fuller at Dedham, after 18 years of married life, on the grounds of failure to provide. She asks for the custody of her minor child Theodore M. Fuller and alimony. They were married in this city in August 1896, and now live here. They have also lived in Topsfield.

SPORT BRIEFS

In a special challenge team match, Blanchards Bowl Loons defeated LaRose's Lobsters on the Y. M. C. A. alleys Wednesday evening by a margin of 100 pins, the totals being 1255 to 1155. The Bowl Loons scored as follows: Prescott—248, Smith—227, Blanchard—252, R. McFarlane—244, Brooks—284. The Lobsters hit the pins in this wise: Ward—199, Sprague—226, Lindberg—215, Nicoll—270, LaRose—245.

The tennis team of the Quincy High school anxiously awaited the coming of the Brookline High representation Wednesday afternoon but it was in vain for they were disappointed for the second time this season.

The team has rapidly forged to the front in High school tennis and its place in the suburban school league will be decided Friday when it plays Newton High for the championship.

The promoters of the West Quincy league have voted to play two games each Saturday during June, and if the scheme is success to continue it all season. This is a new departure in the history of local base ball. The games will go seven innings. This week Saturday the Copelands and St. Mary's will take the field at 2.45, and at 4 o'clock Div. 22 and Ave Maria will start their game. The two snappy contests on Memorial Day demonstrated the teams were evenly matched.

Injunction In Favor of Nationals Made Permanent by Chicago Judge

Chicago, June 4.—The injunction preventing George H. Johnson, former Cincinnati pitcher, from playing with the Kansas City Federal league team, stands, according to a decision of Judge Foell in the superior court of Cook county.

The temporary injunction was obtained by Garry Herrmann, president of the Cincinnati team. It enjoined Johnson from playing with any team other than Cincinnati. By Foell's decision denying Kansas City's motion to dissolve the injunction, it becomes permanent.

Johnson had signed a Kansas City contract, but must now play with the Cincinnati team, if at all.

STORSTAD'S STEM IS TWISTED

Could Not Have Remained In Hole Punched In Side of Liner—Captains and Crews Assailed More or Less Equally—Collier's Owners Claim She Cared For 350 Survivors

Montreal, June 4.—Latest figures on the loss of life by the sinking of the steamer Empress of Ireland off Father Point, May 29, given out in an official statement by the Canadian Pacific Railway company, show that 1024 persons perished.

The company has learned that there were 1476 persons aboard the Empress instead of 1387 as heretofore stated, hence the increase in the death list.

The total saved is now given as 452. These include 36 first cabin, 47 second cabin, 136 steerage and 233 officers and crew. Of the four classes, the figures show the greatest percentage of survivors among the officers and crew.

Of the 1024 who died the bodies of a few more than 200 have been recovered and only 103 identified.

The names of twenty-one American passengers who were on the Empress of Ireland when she went down are contained in an official report sent by Gebhard Willrich, American consul at Montreal, to the state department in Washington. Of these only six were saved.

The Storstad has completed unloading her cargo and a thorough inspection shows that her stem was twisted so much to starboard that it almost formed a half circle. Some of the lowermost plates in the bow were also twisted to starboard and torn away. There is a large indentation on either side of the stem and the rivets are torn clear.

The condition of the Storstad's stem is pointed to in connection with Captain Anderson's claim that when the collision with the Empress of Ireland occurred it was impossible for the collier's stem to remain in the hole because it was twisted by the forward movement of the Empress.

The steward of the Storstad in a statement indorsed the declaration of Mrs. Anderson, the captain's wife, that members of the crew of the Empress who had been brought aboard the Storstad refused to aid the rescue work in lifeboats. Passengers rescued from the Empress say that the crews of both steamers did splendid work.

Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the Canadian Pacific railway, issued a denial of all derogatory statements regarding the Empress of Ireland's crew. The assertion of Mr. Gosselin of Montreal that the Storstad did not launch any boats or do any rescue work is contradicted by the testimony of survivors and of the Empress of Ireland's officers themselves.

Captain Lange, Montreal agent of the Maritime Steamship company, owners of the Storstad, declared that of about 450 persons who survived the Empress of Ireland disaster, 350 were sheltered and cared for on the Storstad. Of these 225 were rescued by the crew and boats of the Storstad, while thirty others rescued by the Storstad's men were placed on board the government steamship Eureka, the statement adds. The lifeboats of the Empress of Ireland are credited with saving 125 and bringing them on board the Storstad.

Henry Freeman and his wife, who were saved, criticise the crew of the liner and the Storstad.

"Men of the crew of the wrecked ship were at least partially responsible for the great loss of life," said Freeman. "I did not see a single member of the crew among the passengers from the time the ship was struck by the Storstad until it sank. They did nothing to save life.

"Captain Kendall is free from fault in the matter of the collision, for he had taken the precaution of totally stopping in the fog bank five minutes before the Storstad loomed from the mist and crashed into the liner. The officers of the collier did not stop to pick up survivors, and when I climbed aboard a collapsible boat, three minutes after the Empress of Ireland sank, I saw the Storstad a mile and a half away from the wreck."

From England there have come to the government at Ottawa many demands that the Empress be raised. It is believed there will be great indignation if there is no attempt made to recover the bodies and to meet this demand, if possible, the government is understood to be anxious to have the liner brought again to the surface if only long enough to extract the bodies from her berths.

TOO MANY INQUIRIES

Spoiled Plan of New Haven Road, According to Director Skinner

Washington, June 4.—James S. Elton and William Skinner, directors of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, testifying before the interstate commerce commission at its investigation into the affairs of the road, said the acquisition of trolleys, steamship lines and other properties constituted a part of the New Haven's comprehensive plan to increase its facilities.

Many of the properties thus acquired, it was stated, had only a prospective value, the natural growth of New England being taken into consideration by the directors.

Skinner said it was his belief that "if things had been allowed to go on, and the New Haven and its officials had not been subjected to inimical inquiries and action, the property would have pulled out all right perhaps in five years."

"I don't know anything about railroading and when such men as Mellen and Morgan said a thing was all right, I voted for it," said Elton, at the conclusion of a long series of questions.

DOCTOR IS THRASHED

Militants Use Horsewhip on Official of Holloway Jail

London, June 4.—Militant suffragettes again wreaked their vengeance on Dr. Francis E. Forward, deputy governor and medical officer of Holloway jail.

Two women, armed with horsewhips, sprang upon Forward as he left the prison and were thrashing him severely when a policeman came to his rescue.

The women declared their action was a protest against the "forcible feeding, for which this beast is responsible."

Forward refused to charge the women with assault, but the police detained them on a charge of disorderly conduct.

CARGO OF NEGROES GOING "BACK HOME"

"Chief Sam" Starts From Portland on the Steamer Liberia

Portland, Me., June 4.—The steamer Liberia, on which "Chief Sam" Atkins proposes to take a colony of negroes from this port and Galveston to the Gold coast of Africa, left for Norfolk, where a quantity of bunker coal will be taken aboard, after which the steamer is to proceed to Galveston. One hundred men and women are waiting at Galveston to join the "back home" movement.

The Liberia, formerly the Curityba, is in command of Captain McKenzie, a member of the Holy Ghost and Us society, and several members of that society are among the crew, a majority of whom are white men.

The steamer has been equipped with wireless apparatus, repaired and fitted for the expedition since arriving here from New York on March 9.

POSSE HUNTING SLAYER

Woman Is Killed and Husband Seriously Shot by Farmhand

Danbury, Conn., June 4.—Mrs. John Harrison of Patterson, N. Y., died last night in a local hospital as the result of a bullet wound in her abdomen, said to have been inflicted at her home there by a negro farmhand, Samuel Haynes.

The condition of the husband, who was also shot, is reported at the hospital as comfortable. Haynes, according to Harrison, shot at him and his wife during a quarrel.

Haynes is still at large but a posse is searching for him in the woods. Mrs. Harrison, who was 21 years old, leaves two children, one of them a babe of a few months.

Watchman Charged With Trying to Dynamite Building

Washington, June 4.—Daniel V. Jauch, watchman at the department of agriculture, pleaded not guilty to the charge of attempting to dynamite the main building of the department by placing four sticks of explosive in a basement storeroom.

Jauch was held in $2000 bond for the action of the grand jury. He could not furnish the bond and was remanded to jail.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

A fire believed to have been incendiary, at the Crumb quarry, Westerly, R. I., caused a loss of $15,000.

N. B. Emmanuel, 66, assistant director of the Chicago Grand Opera company and a musical authority of international reputation, died at Chicago.

The body of Joseph Ayotte, aged 7, was recovered from a pond at West Warwick, R. I., where he had fallen from a boat.

SAYS HE CAN SEE PEOPLE HE TALKS TO OVER PHONE

English Scientist Gives Demonstration of a Most Remarkable Apparatus.

"Seeing by wire" is the startling suggestion of Dr. A. M. Low, a well known British scientific investigator.

Dr. Low in London gave a demonstration for the first time in public of a new invention whereby he claims that it is possible "for persons using a telephone to see each other at the same time."

The New York Times quotes Dr. Low as follows:

"It may be remarkable, but in reality it is quite simple, and I am sure that some day—perhaps not in our time, but some day—people on a liner at sea will be able to witness a spectacle taking place on shore, transmitted to the ship by wireless in the way news is now sent."

Dr. Low explained that he had been experimenting with the reproduction of pictures at a distance electrically for five years. He had been successful already over a distance of four miles, using ordinary telephonic and telegraphic apparatus.

The apparatus which Dr. Low has invented is a screen consisting of a large number of cells of selenium, over which a ruler is moved rapidly by a small motor, worked with a current of high frequency and of about 50,000 volts pressure. It is fitted in a box at the side of a telephone. The receiver at the other end is made up of a series of telephone slabs of steel, through which the light passes.

Another prediction Dr. Low ventured was that one of his machines could be used for the study of military operations taking place at a distance. This, he said, would be introducing a new complication into warfare—"seeing what the enemy is doing on the other side of a mountain."

PLANS GREAT SUBMARINE.

Navy Will Build Boat With Batteries Like Destroyers.

A new type of armed submarine boat which promises to displace the torpedo boat destroyer and revolutionize naval warfare has been developed in the navy department at Washington.

Department experts propose to build a seagoing submarine of about the size of the present destroyer, but considerably larger than existing submarines. It will have a speed of twenty knots on the surface and twelve to fourteen knots when submerged and will have the double function of engaging in under water attack and in taking part in action on the surface.

The new submarine will carry a disappearing battery of three or four guns of four or five inch caliber in addition to the usual torpedo tubes. The guns can be raised above the deck and lowered beneath waterproof shutters when the vessel is under water.

Many a Quincy Reader Will be Interested.

When people read about the cures made by a medicine endorsed from far away, is it surprising that they onder if the statements are true? But when they read of cases right here at home, positive proof is within their reach, for close investigation is an easy matter. Read Quincy endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills.

G. E. Mitchell, proprietor, 24-27 Temple street, Quincy, Mass., says: "A severe cold settled in my kidneys and disordered them. I didn't seem able to overcome the trouble until I used one box of Doan's Kidney Pills. I improved at once and since then haven't needed a kidney medicine. I know that Doan's Kidney Pills are a reliable remedy for the back and kidneys."

If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Mitchell had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

His One Useful Act

Puttering Turned Out to Be of Value

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

One day Edward Carr, who was always on the lookout for odd articles, attended an auction of furniture in the house of a man who had recently died. An antique desk, said to be 150 years old, was put up, and Carr resolved to buy it if he could secure it at a reasonable price. Among the bidders was a young lady of attractive appearance who seemed to be very desirous of buying the desk, but when the price was run up over $50 she dropped out and with evident disappointment. The desk was finally knocked down to Carr for $100.

One of the pigeonholes he used for pencils, erasers, penholders and other small articles. At times when he brought some little instrument from his workshop that he didn't care to carry back at once he would toss it into this pigeonhole. One day he put a pocket compass in there. In taking it out he noticed that the needle was deflected. There was not a bit of metal near enough to affect it sensibly, and Carr was at a loss to understand the deflection.

The young man moved the compass to the right and to the left, the needle holding the same position—toward the pigeonhole. Putting his hand into the latter, he discovered that it did not extend the full depth of the desk. But on examining the other pigeonholes in line with it he found that none of them extended farther back. He tried the magnet on them all, but without any noticeable effect except on the one in question.

Now, what Edward Carr did not know about old desks was not worth knowing. He was aware that many of them contained secret drawers. He was also aware that some of these drawers instead of being made of wood were made of metal. He believed that the needle of his compass was attracted by a metal drawer. At any rate, there was some metal substance there that influenced it. Taking up a penholder, he began to poke about on the back of the pigeonhole. After doing this for some time he struck the upper right hand corner, and the whole surface comprising the end of the compartment pressed forward against his penholder. When it had come as far as it could he took it out and found it to be a drawer made of steel. It was filled with papers yellow with age.

Carr fell to examining the contents. The first paper he opened contained a flower that had evidently been there for many years. Carr wondered what the story was connected with it and passed on to the next. It was a letter from a son to his father promising, if forgiven for past sins, to mend his ways.

On striking the next document Carr assumed that he had come upon something of importance. It was the will of one Peter Carson, executed fifty years before, making a few small bequests and leaving the rest of his estate to Emily Marston.

Here was a will that had been locked up for half a century. Doubtless the testator had died long ago and the estate had gone to the heirs at law, the real heir getting nothing. Possibly there was a later will. If so this one was of no value. Quite likely the property involved had passed into certain hands, and would it not be better that the will should be destroyed? Might it not be better that the possessors should not be disturbed?

Then suddenly the remembrance of the young woman who had bid on the desk and seemed greatly disappointed at not getting it popped up before Carr's mind's eye. Might she not be Emily Marston? He smiled as it occurred to him that Emily Marston could not be less than fifty years old. But the girl and the desk and the will all got tangled up in Carr's brain and he could not separate them.

Carr was not long in deciding on the right way to treat this case. He went to a lawyer and asked him to look up the estate of Peter Carson. It was found that Peter Carson had died forty years before without a will. The heir at law was a son, Nicholas Carson, who had gone to the bad. An effort had been made to find him at the time of his father's death, but it had been unavailing.

There being no proof of Nicholas Carson's death, the estate had remained in chancery for ten years, when the next and only heir at law, Mary Cowdry, spinster daughter of Peter Carson's sister, succeeded in obtaining from the courts a document declaring Nicholas Carson legally dead, and the property was turned over to her. The report made no mention of Emily Marston, but upon inquiry Carr learned that she was a young woman who had taken care of Carson, who was old and feeble. At the time of his death surprise was manifested that he had made no provision for her.

Of all these persons the last named was the one in which Edward Carr was most interested, though it appeared that at Peter Carson's death she was given no special importance. He learned that ten years after his decease she had married. She, too, had died, leaving one child, a daughter, who would now be about twenty years of age.

On learning this Carr was at once struck with the idea that the girl who had tried to buy the desk might be this daughter of Emily Marston and the real heir to Peter Carson's estate, which had been considerable at his death and in the forty-six years that had elapsed since had doubled. It was now in possession of Mary Cowdry, an old woman and still unmarried.

To look for the girl who had bid on the desk would be like looking for a needle in a haystack, but it was not difficult to get the name of Emily Marston's daughter, and it was found to be Emily Peck. Her address was obtained from a directory.

One afternoon Miss Peck, who was a schoolteacher, had just returned from school when a maid brought her the card of Edward G. Carr. Never having heard of Mr. Carr, she thought there must be some mistake, but went down into the parlor.

Carr saw before him the girl who had tried to buy the desk. She did not recognize him, though he recognized her at once.

"I think I have seen you before," he said.

"Indeed! Where?"

"At an auction where I bought a desk."

"Oh, you bought that desk, did you?"

"Yes. May I ask you why you wished it?"

"The desk belonged to an old gentleman, Peter Carson. My mother, as a young girl, took care of him. He told her that he had provided for her in his will, but no will was found. She expected to find it in his desk, but it was not there. The desk was bought by the person whose effects were sold at the auction I attended. I recognized it from my mother's description of it and thought I would like to buy it, since my mother told me she believed there was a secret drawer in it and that secret drawer might contain a will."

"I should be happy to assist you in examining the desk," said Carr, who had a scheme of his own for imparting the information he had for her. "I am living with my mother, and if you will come to our home we will make an investigation."

The young lady brightened up and assented joyfully. Carr kept her talking about the situation till her dinner was announced, when he left her. The next day she called at the Carrs', was received by Mrs. Carr and taken to Edward's room, where stood the desk. Carr began to tap here and there for a secret spring, but, gaining no result, took up his pocket compass. Then he showed his visitor that the needle was deflected and told her that there was metal near it. Following this up with the poking as he had done when he made the discovery, out came the drawer with the papers in it just as he had found them. Handing the drawer to the excited girl, she ran over the papers till she found the will and opened it and saw that she was the possessor of a splendid estate.

Then she fell back in a state of collapse.

Mary Cowdry was not especially sorry that an heir had been found. The estate was of no especial use to her, and she had no one to whom to leave it. She agreed, in consideration of Miss Peck's settling an annuity upon her sufficient for her support, to turn the property over without any process of law. This arrangement was carried out, and Emily Marston's daughter stepped from the position of schoolteacher to millionairess.

When the beneficiary came to ask Edward Carr what she could do for him to show her appreciation of what he had done for her he said that she had done a great deal—all she could do—already. He had been told and had believed that he would be nothing but a putterer and would never be of use to himself or any one else. He had the satisfaction of having brought a rightful heir to her estate, and that was quite enough for a man of whom nothing whatever had been expected.

Whether or not the heiress was caught by this frank modesty, whether she considered that there was but one way to pay the debt she owed, she finally discharged it by giving herself to the man who had made her rich. She takes great pleasure in humoring her husband's taste for old things, and, as for the desk in which the will was found, she has had it inlaid with gold.

Gardening

Oh, gardening is easy
If you know the proper way!
With a manner light and breezy
You go out from day to day
And do a little hoeing—
Great exercise, no doubt—
And when the weeds are showing
You may gently pluck them out.

But to be sentimental
With patience you must view
The daisies ornamental
And the dandelions too.
Your heart you must not harden
Toward bugs that round you stray.
It's fine to tend a garden
If you only know the way.

SHOWS RAPID GROWTH OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Four new words are added to the English language every day if we may accept the dictionaries as a standard of measurement, says the Outlook.

During the last three centuries the rate of growth of the dictionaries has been 1,500 words per year. In 1616 John Bullokar, the first English lexicographer, published his Complete English Dictionary, with 5,000 words. Edward Phillips, in 1658, was able to find 13,000 words for his New World of English Words, and his effort was in turn surpassed by the publication, in 1720, of Nathan Bailey's Dictionary, with a vocabulary of 45,000.

Twenty-five years later appeared Dr. Johnson's lexicon, which was not supplanted until 1828, when its vocabulary of 50,000 words was more than tripled by Noah Webster's American Dictionary. That the inventiveness of English writers did not abate during the later nineteenth century was evidenced by the publication of the Imperial Dictionary, with 200,000 words, and the Century Dictionary, with a still larger number, followed in 1891 by Dr. Isaac Funk's Standard Dictionary, containing 318,000.

SEE IF YOU ARE NORMAL.

Psychopathic Expert Offers Novel Test to Show One's Mental Development.

Read this quickly:

"A little dog ran up the street. It had brown curly hair, short legs and a long tail."

Now lay down the paper and repeat it aloud.

If you said it right you are normal, according to Dr. W. J. Hickson, head of the psychopathic laboratory, recently established to aid the Chicago municipal court.

If you said the dog had curly legs and a brown tail you are 50 per cent off in efficiency, according to the expert.

Better try again. Now point to your nose, then your eyes, then your ears and then your mouth. Do it quick.

If you stick your finger in your mouth the first jab you lose another 50 per cent in the grading.

A last chance—what is wrong with this sentence:

"I have three brothers, Ignatz, Abraham and myself."

You either answer quickly and correctly or, according to the Hickson test, you are to be classified as a "moron"—one with an arrested mental development.

RABBITS SAVE GARDEN LABOR.

Eat Up Weeds, but Never Touch Cultivated Plants, Says Their Owner.

No longer need farmers rack their backs and get stooping shoulders by hoeing out weeds, according to James R. Reed of Trumansburg, N. Y.

By careful breeding and systematic training Reed, so he claims, has produced rabbits which will go into a garden patch and devour all the weeds, but not touch a single cultivated plant.

During the last two years a special plot of ground has been devoted to the training of rabbits. They were kept without food for several days and then released in the plot which had been prepared by putting on the cultivated plants a chemical which would make the animals ill. After repeated trials the rabbits seemed to understand that they might only eat weeds with impunity. Now when his garden becomes cluttered with weeds Reed starves his rabbits several days and then lets them into the garden.

Magazines Wanted For Our Tars.

To help the sailors and marines on duty along the Mexican coast to spend their spare moments profitably the navy department is planning to send them magazines and other reading matter, including illustrated papers, and is appealing to those who desire to assist in the work to select publications issued in April, May and June. The department will distribute all reading matter as received.

RULES FOR HOT DAYS.

The public health service at Washington has given out these rules on how to keep cool:

Don't overeat. Partake sparingly of meats. Eat largely of fresh vegetables and fruits.

Keep in the air, but in the shade, as much as possible.

Sleep in the open.

Avoid cold baths and bathe in lukewarm water.

Do not fret.

BIGGEST ELEMENT

ement. The Board of Trade is the only avenue through which a city can grow.

In political government we have the arbitrary force, but in constructive government we have a moral object, tending toward the uplifting of the town. We must have a strong element of citizens in your body. If we do not have them it is because you do not go after them. You can get them if you try. Get out and get to work.

Your Quincy Board of Trade ought to have an income of $10,000 a year. There are three ways in which you can get this income. First, from membership, second from industrial business, and third from the taxpayers. The man who owns property owes it to you to give his support.

The money received from membership fees must be set aside for the expenses of your board, and the dues should be made to pay for these expenses.

The money received from merchants should be for development. Go to every merchant in your city and say that you are going after new enterprises. That you want them to subscribe a definite sum a year for a period of five years. Ten per cent to be payable as soon as the canvass is completed. The balance in payments of ten per cent as needed. No levy to be made until the previous levy has been used and a new business located in your city, a business to whom you have loaned money or have expended money in securing a site for it. On this basis Quincy should put up $50,000.

This is to be actually used as a business enterprise, the surety for the investment to rest in the Board of Trade. Every business man should realize that every new industry and every new family coming to your city means more business for him and he should be willing to contribute. No healthy business man will hesitate a minute to contribute. The man who looks for his personal benefit alone is of no help to the community, and is no credit to the race.

The third method of raising money from the taxpayers is done in some Southern cities. A copy of the tax levy was secured and every man who paid a tax on property over $800 and under $10,000 was asked to contribute. It was put to him as a matter of civic pride. It was pointed out to the man who owned store buildings that the growth of the city meant more trade for his tenants and more rent for him. He was asked to contribute one-tenth of one per cent for a period of five years.

Get an energetic committee. If they come back and say they cannot do it, fire the committee and get a new one. Every man is a part of your community and he owes it to you to contribute.

Southern cities are growing rapidly just because of work along these lines, and if New England does not wish to lose its prestige, it must look alive to its possibilities. It must keep abreast with the development of other parts of the country. Unless the citizens and Boards of Trade take hold and get behind, the community we will ge behind. The Board of Trade should be a school in which that development should be taught.

The great trouble is that we are resting on our laurels, while in other places the progressive movement is busy, and unless we wake up we will be left behind. We must get in line with the element of enthusiasm. You should have a membership of 1,000. Work for the Board of Trade as a business institution. Get a foothold, money and backing and you can accomplish wonders. Get busy and you will find you can do things that you think you cannot do. Apply a principle to your work and you will win out.

First get the support of your local paper. It is the biggest element for your growth that you can get. It is the greatest single element for growth there is, and they can do you a lot of good.

Mr. Wakefield's address was greeted with prolonged applause. As he closed his address he was given a rising vote of thanks.

WARD TWO LEADS IN POLLS

Ward One Drops From First to Third Place

The returns of the assistant assessors show that the number of assessed polls in the city on May 1, was 11,659, an increase of 708 over the same time in 1913. These figures however do not include the complete list of assessed polls for later in the year quite a number are assessed, especially during the registration period. For the purpose of comparison however the figures as returnd by the assessors in May each year are taken.

The following table giving the number of assessed polls by precincts show that precinct 2 of Ward Two made the greatest gain. The gain of this one precinct alone was 333, which goes to show how rapidly the northerly end of Quincy Point is growing. Next in line is precinct 1 of Ward Three which shows a gain of 71, while precinct 2 of Ward Five, the park district is a good third with a gain of 62. Other gains will be seen by the accompanying table.

It will be noticed that but two precincts of the city showed losses, but each ward as a whole gained. The two precients to show a loss were precinct 2 of Ward One with 3, and precinct 1 of Ward Four with 14.

Ward One, Pre. 1,	890	969	22
Ward One, Pre. 2,	1239	1242	3
Ward Two, Pre. 1,	971	859	12

Ward Six, pre. 2	704	670	34
	11,659	10,951	708

Ward Two leads in number of polls, but Ward Three and Ward One are close rivals with over 2100 each.

The game between the clerks of R. E. Foy's Adams market and the clerks of the Weymouth stores at Garfield Park, Weymouth, Wednesday afternoon ended in a dispute with the score 8 to 6 in favor of the Quincy team. The argument arose over the reversing of a decision made during the ninth inning by "Ump" Jimmie Walsh of South Quincy, Ray Condrick, the man in question, went to second on what he considered a balk and was declared out, but at the end of the inning the "ump" changed his mind and the game abruptly ended after a heated discussion on points.

ARCTIC HEROES OF THE KARLUK

Waged Frantic Fight In Dark to Save Equipment.

COMBATED FORTY MILE GALE

Details of Exciting Adventure In the Frozen North as Given by Captain Bartlett of Stefansson Expedition. Entire Party of Twenty-four Escaped Injury—Some Marooned.

From St. Michael island, Alaska, Captain Robert A. Bartlett has sent to the British government details of the loss of his ship, the Karluk, in arctic ice and of his own solitary journey over 500 miles of ice to get help for his endangered companions.

The Stefansson expedition which Captain Bartlett commanded was organized by the Canadian government to explore the Arctic sea lying north of the Dominion and to find if there was an unknown continent and to raise the British flag over any lands or islands that might be discovered.

Not a man of the expedition of twenty-four was killed or injured when the ice closed on the Karluk on Jan. 16 near Herald island, northeast of Siberia. Captain Bartlett's companions are safe on Wrangel island. They are well provisioned.

Vilhjalmur Stefansson is not in the party, having left his ship on Sept. 10, 1913, a few days before restless ice and winds shifted her to the unknown north.

Supplies cannot reach Wrangel island until late this month or early in August, but the party may under the guidance of their Eskimos follow Captain Bartlett's course over the ice through Siberia and across Bering sea to St. Michael.

Drifted Two Months With Ice.

Captain Bartlett relates that the Karluk began to drift after Stefansson had left the ship on Sept. 20, 1912, and that strong easterly gales sent the vessel steadily westward, with the ice becoming more and more dangerous. There were snowstorms.

For two months the party drifted at the mercy of gale and ice. On Nov. 15 they were in latitude about 73 degrees and longitude 162, the farthest point north they reached. There they found many evidences of animal life. Specimens of starfish and other species of marine life hitherto unknown in arctic waters were seen.

The drift took the ship south and southwest. Then easterly winds swerved the Karluk to the westward. Christmas day they held sporting contests on the ice.

New Year's eve, 1913, they were about sixty miles north by east of Herald island. They observed what seemed to be land south by west of the ship. It loomed at twilight.

Karluk Squeezed to Pieces.

On Jan. 2 ship and ice were motionless. Suddenly all hands heard a vast rumbling, which came from the interior of the ship. Not a sound of the sort came from the ice. This hinted of tremendous pressure. On Jan. 10, at 3 a. m., the Karluk's company was awakened by the noise of a tremendous report like the report of a big gun.

The Karluk quivered and trembled. Going on deck, they found that the ice pack had split along the stem of the ship, running in a westerly direction for about 100 yards, where the fissure ended. The ice sheet began moving in an easterly direction, leaving the Karluk stationary with ice on her port side.

Until 7:30 p. m. that day there was no further pressure. But a gale came up, bringing blinding snow. The ice sheet struck the side of the Karluk abreast of the engine room, smashing several planks. Water began to pour into the engine room. The men realized that the ship was about to sink.

The night was intensely dark. No moon and no stars were visible. The pace of the gale was fully forty miles an hour. Despite these conditions 10,000 pounds of supplies were removed from the Karluk and stored on the ice.

One hundred yards away from the ship and out of the zone of broken ice was an ice pan. The men hauled supplies to this ice pan, where there was a house previously built.

Captain Bartlett reports that there was ample time to save everything on the ship. They took, however, only what seemed absolutely necessary.

TURNING INTO A MAN.

French Scientist Shows Woman Who Has Beard and Big Muscles.

"I am going to surprise you," said Professor Tuffier in Paris when introducing to his colleagues at the Academy of Medicine a person wrapped in ample garments in such a manner that the age and sex could not be guessed.

Removing the bandages from the head and chest, the professor revealed a sturdy individual with a thick, black beard reaching to the waist, but the personage was really a woman.

She possessed all the feminine attributes until the age of forty, when she began to assume a masculine aspect owing to what the professor termed "extraordinary hypertrophy of the cerebro natal glands."

In addition to a beard the woman has developed muscles like a boxer.

BREAKFAST AT ATLANTIC

Ladies of Memorial Church Have Many Guests

The June Breakfast and lunch given by the Ladies Benevolent Society of the Atlantic Memorial church in the church vestry on Wednesday was a huge success in every way. The vestry was crowded from early in the morning and shortly after noon many were turned away as the food gave out.

The breakfast consisted of fruit, eggs hot muffins, fish cakes, cereal, doughnuts, and coffee, while the lunch consisted of boiled ham, egg salad, beans, cabbage salad, rolls, coffee and strawberry shortcake.

This was the first Breakfast ever given in Atlantic and its success was due largely to the very efficient committee with Mrs. L. T. Gurney chairman, Mrs. George Height Jr., Mrs. B. F. Thomas, Mrs. Charles Letteny, Mrs. A. H. Hall, Mrs. Alva Beede, Mrs. R. A. Dennison, Mrs. T. W. Davison, Mrs. Robert Harding, Mrs. Harry Read, Mrs. Spencer Apollonio, Mrs. Fred Osgood, Mrs. John Welch and Mrs. Elijah Hall.

HIGH SCHOOL ALUMNI.

The young men who are acting as a committee to see if it is not possible for Quincy like all surrounding suburban places, to have a permanent and strong High School alumni society, have presented the resolutions requested by the Class of 1906 to the School board, who have given their approval of such a project and endorsement of the same. It would be a good thing for all former pupils to be better acquainted with one another and also with their rapidly growing alma mater.

Much of the success of such a society depends upon the prompt and hearty support or co-operation of all former pupils, and the commitee is already at work on plans to unite all the past classes into one large united body. Therefore it is hoped that all former pupils will at once give any assistance they can, carrying through his idea of a closer relation between all the young people particularly all who will in the near future be prominent in the public life of Quincy.

Many advantages will enhance to the school as also to members of the society if such an association can be formed and the committee mentioned above will be only too glad to receive sugegstion through this column or the same can be addressed to any member of the committee by interested parties.

BRIEFS

Miss Margaret Read of Squantum street, is spending the week with Miss Margaret Woodruff, of Danbury, Conn.

Mrs. Smith and son Daniel of Westerly, R. I., formerly of Quincy have returned to this city where they are to make their home.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

QUINCY—TAUNTON.

The Quincy car men beat the Taunton team in a Trolley league game at Merrymount Park this morning 7 to 6. Ray Findlay's homer in the sixth tieing the score laid the foundation for the victory. A pretty single by Everett Harris sent Cowe home in the eighth with the winning run. The feature of the game was the pitching of "Law" Keegan for Quincy. It was his first appearance on the diamond. The game was nip and tuck from the start, all the runs by both teams being earned.

ON CHARGE OF LARCENY.

When Patrolmen Ramsey of the Joy street station, Boston, arrested Arthur Walter Cady in a West End street lodging house on a charge of larceny of three rings and a bracelet from Hazel Stevens, an actress, and in searching him at the station house found a photo of him in the uniform of a New York police officer, he thought he had stumbled on another scandal in which a member of the force of the metropolis was concerned.

Cady claimed to be a member of New York's finest, and the photograph seemed to be convincing evidence. The coat in the picture however was long, reached to the knees, a style not in use in New York for several years. The cap and shield were the same as now in use. He said at first he was in Boston on a vacation but later admitted he had been discharged from the force for drunkenness.

Cady said his home was in South Braintree but the police believe he lives in South Quincy as it is known that a young man, representing himself as a New York officer has been in this town for several weeks.

A search of the "rogues gallery" revealed Cady in his true self, and a record which stated he had been sentenced for six months in 1898 for larceny.

The rings were thought to have been taken from the rooms of the actress while she was absent. According to the arresting officer, Cady when arrested was accompanied by two females, one of whom was sporting one of the stolen rings.

Judge Sheehan continued the case to Saturday and held him in $500 bail. The police are anxious to learn the truth of the photograph.

CALLED BY MISTAKE.

The Central station auto chemical was given a useless run to the Fore River shipyard Wednesday night about 6 o'clock. There was some little accident in one of the buildings which so excited one man that when he started to telephone about it he called up the fire department by mistake. There was no fire and the apparatus was not needed in any way.

TAXATION PROBLEM IS DISCUSSED

Former Principal Assessor Johnson Tells How Assessors Do Their Work

Valuation of1914 Will Affect the Tax Rate

Charles H. Johnson, former Principal Assessor and the Republican candidate for Mayor last year, addressed an audience that filled Clan MacGregor hall to the door last evening on the timely topic of "Taxation" under the auspices of the Ward Three Improvement Association. Mr. Johnson was introduced by the president of the Association, Alfred Pinel.

Mr. Johnson expressed his pleasure on having the opportunity to meet so representative gathering of citizens that he might address them upon a topic that appealed to all citizens, "Taxation."

The speaker in an interesting and instructive manner described the old methods and way of taxation. He also gave a graphic description of the old town meetings. Figures were presented showing the rapid growth of the city from the old days.

The qualifications necessary to fit a man to serve as an assessor were clearly defined, and the speaker, flayed in strong speech the deplorable condition of affairs that the office had become now merely a reward for political workers.

Mr. Johnson stated that he believed it was possible to find men equipped as he had described from among our citizens at the salaries now in vogue.

Some fifteen minutes was then taken in an interesting description of the sub-division of taxes and the manner of Assessment. The old method of book service which had been in use from the settlement of the town, was discarded by the new Board of Assessors of three men appointed by Mayor Hall in 1901. Your most respected fellow citizen, the late Hon. James Thompson, who so faithfully served our city as Mayor was the chairman of the board, and his associates were William B. Glover and Charles E. Johnson, and the modern up-to-date card index system was introduced.

Mr. Johnson explained at length this system, showing during his talk, samples of the cards. He explained the hard tedious work of first placing the cards. some 18,000 geographically, and stated that at the close of the year's work they were highly commended for their work and it was stated that the Quincy office was one of the best equipped and arranged in the State.

As a result of the adoption of the card system, a survey of the City, was commenced, and plans for each street and parcel on the street were now in the office of the board.

Changes in values, should as far as possibly be levied in the land. The most interesting part of the evening, centered here when upon a large chart Mr. Johnson worked out an assessment on two corners of land in the busfness section of South Quincy.

Conditions govern values and with a Board of Assessors, alive to conditions, fair and just in their judgment of the same, changes can be made in values that will tend to reduce the rate and at the same time be of such a nature and in such places that every man will be obliged to admit the tax as levied is fair and equitable.

This however requires thought and study and should not be done in any snap shot manner.

Personal tax was explained at length, the amount of detail work to be done in the office was clearly shown and all this work was necessary that a sum might be reached and declared to be the valuation of the entire City for the year.

Mr. Johnson stated that the impression had been given the public several times, that the valuation fixed by the Assessors this year would not affect the rate. The speaker clearly showed that this statement was wrong and misleading and by his clear analysis it was demonstrated that the valuation determined by the boar dthis year would affect the rate.

The overlay exemption and abatements were next discussed. Mr. Johnson under this head, took occasion to vigorously defend himself from the attack made in the press of abatements during the last Mayoralty campaign on the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation during his term of office as assessor.

The assessors now come to the finishing touch of their work, the making of the rates. Mr. Johnson stated he would not go into this in detail as he was not here tonight to assist the board of the present administration in the making of a rate for this year, but he felt sure there were enough citizens interested and familiar with the procedure who would analyze the same when declared.

The speaker closed with a strong statement, clear and concise of his personal layout of the method to be pursued in reducing the heavy load of taxation now resting on the shoulders of our citizens.

The speaker talked for one hour and held the closest attention of his audience. The address demonstrated that Mr. Johnson was master of his topic, and showed that he was a man thoroughly familiar with city government. A round of applause greeted him at the close of his remarks.

Numerous questions were put to him from the floor which he answered.

IN MEMORY OF MISS BUMPUS

Handsome Memorial Window at Bethany Church

Another memorial window, in addition to the several already in place at the Bethany Congregational church, was installed this week. The new window is on the Chestnut street side nearest to the entrance to the chapel, and is placed by friends in and out of the church in memory of Amelia L. Bumpus, for many years librarian at the Thomas Crane Public Library and a life long member of Bethany church where she was a deaconess for several years.

The window is an unusually handsome one, the coloring being particularly fine. In the centre panel is the figure of a woman representing Dorcas ministering to a child which sits at her feet. The faces of both the figure and the child are unusually good. Over the figure is the word Dorcas " and in a panel at the foot are the words "In Memoriam."

"Amelia L. Bumpus
1825—1913"

At the top of the right panel of the window is an open book upon which are the words "Holy Bible." At the bottom in a smaller panel are the words: "She hath done what she could."

The outside of the window is protected from the elements or any substance that might injure it, by wire glass.

The new memorial window makes a notable addition to those already placed in the church, and is in recognition of valuable services to the church and the community by Miss Bumpus.

CATHOLIC CLUB PRESENTATIONS

New President Presides at Closing Events of Season

The closing event of the successful season of the Quincy Catholic club was a buffet luncheon and an attractive entertainment program in the rooms of the Quincy council Knights of Columbus on Thursday evening. Upwards of 100 attended the affair and tendered a reception to Mrs. Agnes Reardon, the new president, who presided for the first time.

Miss Mary Lyons, the retiring president was presented with a handsome gold bracelet watch in recogniton of the valuable services performed in her term of office; and Miss Mary Carey, retiring chairman of directors, was presented with a gold pin of pearls and sapphires.

The presentation of the gifts by Mrs. Reardon was a decided surprise to both of the former officers of the club but they responded in a short speech of acceptance. Mrs. Joseph Griffin, the new chairman of the directors outlined her proposed program.

The luncheon included chicken salad. rolls, coffee and ices which consisted of bombe glace. cafe parfait, frozen pudding, harlequin.

The program included piano solos by Mrs. John Reardon, vocal solos by Miss Marie De Laurier of Everett and Miss Eva Rice, readings by Miss Willa Coolbaugh, "The Diplomatic Mrs. Dunbar" and Mrs. Henrietta Tighe of Boston. A rose classic dance, presenting love, rejection and reconciliation, was given by Miss Coolbaugh. The program from beginning to end was appreciated by the members and all artists were obliged to respond with an encore to the enthusiastic applause tendered them.

Charles Falardo of Prospect avenue spent the week end at his farm at Warwick, Rhode Island.

AGAIN BILL IS SUBSTITUTED

For Adverse Report on Quincy Grade Crossing

The Quincy grade crossing bill came up in the Legislature this morning, when the question was on accepting the adverse report of the Committee on Ways and Means on the bill which provided that the grade crossings at Saville, and Water streets in the City of Quincy be abolished by the so-called "City plan of depression."The House turned down the report of the committee and the substitute bill of Representative Sullivan which carries the referendum clause was then accepted and the bill placed in the calendar.

REPRESENTATIVE SULLIVAN

Representative Sullivan, the first speaker, said this is a controversy between the New Haven Railroad and the City of Quincy. The House of Representatives has already stamped its aproval of the abolition of grade crossings in Quincy by depression, the House having previously substituted the bill despite the adverse report of the committee on railroads. The original bill was drawn by the Mayor and was presented by me on his petition. The bill was hastily and incorrectly drawn. The Ways and Means committee decided the bill was lacking in several particulars, in that it did not provide for damages for the cost and the construction of the work and did not contain a referendum. As a result of this lack of detail the committee found it neecssary to vote aaginst the bill.

I have introduced a substitute bill which embraces all of the details found to be lacking in the Mayor's bill A majority of the members of the committee on Ways and Means are in favor of doing something to relieve the situation in Quincy. I regret that the committee on Ways and Means are now listening to an address by Hon. John F. Fitzgerald, because I have the word of four members of the committee that they would appear this morning and speak in behalf of my bill.

He said the proposition submitted by the Mayor is the elimination of grade crossing by elevation, but the city wants the tracks to be depressed. Under the railroad plan they will take 51 parcels of real estate and will convert the use of this property into approaches for the stations and the building of a railroad yard.

My plans provides that practically all of the money to be expended will be for the elimination of grade crossings alone.

Representative Rudolph W. Currier of Lynn said, I do not know much about this immediate plan, but I do know that the time has come for the Commonwealth to recognize that the depression of tracks is the only solution of the grade crossing problem, and the House is already on record in many instances as favoring depression. Grade crossings were eliminated in the City of Lynn by the elevation of tracks. If the people of Lynn could now have their say, every track would be depressed.

THEATRE PARTY LOYAL LADIES

Preceded by Dinner at the United States Hotel

The amusement committee of Loyal Ladies of Clan McGregor held a theatre party in Boston on the evening of Wednesday, June 3. Taking the 4.28 train from Quincy Adams they proceeded to the United State Hotel where by pre-arrangement an excellent supper was in waiting. The table was presided over by President Margaret Ross and Past President Margaret Stronach and with good-natured raillery from one side met with by smart repartee from the other a general flow of merriment prevailed throughout the entire evening. The menu was varied and excellent and a very elaborate affair, being a full course dinner.

After leaving the hotel the party proceeded to the Colonial theatre, where seats had been reserved for them. The "Misleading Lady" proved a most interesting comedy and although rather a libel on the fickleness of their sex, they all agreed that the end justified the means as they lived happy ever after.

In books and in plays maybe, but in life with its many and varied epochs, its struggles and hardships, which those loyal women have organized themselves to relieve, they are brought closely in contact with the darker side, and an appeal for help is never made in vain. May their order prosper, their membership increase and the general harmony which is their strength continue throughout the years.

Those present were Mrs. Margaret Ross, Mrs. Margaret Stronach, Mrs. D. McLennan, Mrs. Jeannie McKay, Mrs. Effie Scarborough, Mrs. McLeod, Mrs. Bella Grassick, Mrs. A. Mundic, Mrs. J. Dawson, Mrs. Johan Norrie, Mrs. Mary Muckle and Miss Alice Joss.

WATER EXPENSES ARE GROWING FAST

Metropolitan Assessments Reached High Water Mark in 1913

Maintenance Has Doubled and Interest Is Growing

The objects of large appropriation for the Water department should be to increase the receipts or decrease the Metropolitan assessments, but neither of these ends have been accomplished.

As already reported by the City Auditor the gross receipts of 1912 and 1913 are less than in 1911, and thus far 1914 has been less than during the same months of 1912.

At the same time the Metropolitan assessment was larger in 1913 than ever before, having increased every year with two exceptions since Quincy entered the Metropolitan system.

The increase in water interest was very marked in 1912 and 1913, being larger last year than in any year since 1903.

The increase in maintenance was also very marked in 1912 and 1913. Previous to that it ranged from $8,600 to $12,353, but in 1912 it was $17,261 and in 1913 jumped to $18.802.

Some of the water expenses are compared below year by year, including everything except the bond payments:

	Metropolitan Assessment	Interest Paid	Maintenance
1913	$55,519	$28,892	$18,802
1912	54,588	27,384	17,261
1911	54,410	25,968	12,353
1910	50,950	25,980	10,800
1909	51,230	25,385	11,900
1908	49,285	25,894	12,400
1907	50,027	26,201	12,000
1906	46,314	26,722	12,000
1905	35,832	27,295	10,000
1904	34,084	28,482	11,000
1903	30,237	29,087	10,000
1902	24,379	29,811	10,000
1901	22,004	29,172	10,000
1900	11,271	29,907	8,600
1899	4,477	28,735	9,000

The bond issues and bond payments will be compared in a future article.

NOT PAID $200 PER MONTH

Mr. Howard Was 15 Months Earning $600

Caleb W. Howard, who was in court on Tuesday, claims he was misquoted in two particulars. He says it was in March 1913, and not March 1914, that he commenced work for the I. W. W., so that he was fifteen months instead of three months in earning the $600. He says however that he does not work steadily, only when called into active service because of a strike or as an organizer. He entered into the I. W. W. work not because of business depression, but because of a desire to get outdoor work.

FALLS ON KNEES BEFORE KING

Militant Begs British Ruler Not to Use Force

A SENSATION AT BUCKINGHAM

Woman Attired In Court Dress, Whose Identity Is Unknown, Arrested After Securing Entrance to Court In Mysterious Manner—Fears That Prince May Be Kidnapped

London, June 5.—The most astounding incident in the history of the militant suffragettes of Great Britain occurred last night when, in spite of the most extraordinary precautions, a militant succeeded in reaching the presence of the king at the court held at Buckingham palace.

Throwing herself on her knees before the king and queen, she shouted: "Your Majesty, for God's sake, do not use force!"

The woman was attired in court dress, and her action caused profound astonishment. She continued to admonish the king, but her words were inaudible, as the conductor of the band in the gallery, quick to observe the incident, signalled to the band to play louder, and the woman's voice was drowned.

She was immediately removed from the room and handed over to the police. The name of the woman is not known, and close inquiries are being made as to how she obtained a card of admission.

The scene, which gave a shock to those in the immediate vicinity of the royal circle, was very brief, and the assemblage had scarcely any knowledge of what was going on.

Whether the woman was one of the invited guests who sympathized with the suffrage movement or an intruder who gained admission to the court by forged card is still unknown.

It is difficult, however, to imagine how any person could have gained access to the court on a forged invitation, as the police had knowledge of a conspiracy to approach the royal presence, and every guest and every carriage arriving at Buckingham palace had been subjected to a very close inspection by a host of detectives—a unique precaution and one that caused considerable delay and not a little indignation or irritation in court circles.

The incident is calculated to produce a feeling of still greater exasperation in the public mind and renewed demands for strong measures to suppress the suffragette agitation.

Militant suffragettes have forced King George to supply a body guard of Scotland Yard detectives for his third son, Prince Henry, 14 years old.

Information that the boy was in danger of being kidnapped caused the king to sent to Eton, where the young prince is studying, special men who know all of the principal militants.

Prince Henry, like all students at Eton, has a room for his exclusive use. This room now is guarded continually. He has a giant tutor, Hansell by name.

On account of suffrage activities King George has been compelled to abandon his daily horseback ride in Rotten Row. It is stated the patience of the government has been exhausted and that the law offices of the crown are considering what action shall be taken against subscribers to the funds of the Women's Social and Political union, a complete list of whom was discovered in the recent raid on the London headquarters.

Mrs. Pankhurst has taken a house in Grosvenor place, from which she is able to overlook the grounds of Buckingham palace. This causes considerable anxiety to the police.

LINER WITHDRAWS REQUEST FOR HELP

Northland Strikes Gull Island on Her Way to Portland

New York, June 5.—A wireless message reported the passenger steamer Northland of the Eastern Steamship corporation, which left here for Portland, Me., ashore on Gull island, at the eastern entrance to Long Island sound. The Northland asked that a revenue cutter be sent.

Within less than a half-hour after the Northland was reported ashore a message came from her withdrawing her request for a revenue cutter and stating that she needed no assistance.

The Northland is a speedy boat, capable of nineteen knots, but probably was making slower time because of the thick weather. Her passenger list was not a heavy one on this trip. She carried about an ordinary cargo of freight.

Putnam, Conn., June 5.—After deliberating eight minutes, a jury in the superior court acquitted Mrs. Amanda U. Lawson of East Woodstock of the charge of manslaughter in the death of her husband, Jonas P. Lawson, last August.

Lawson was found dead in a horse stall in a stable in the rear of his home. A trail of blood was found.

Mrs. Lawson was arrested, charged with first degree murder, but the grand jury failed to find a true bill. She was rearrested some months later, charged with manslaughter, and the trial has been in progress two weeks.

PROMPT ARREST MILTON BREAK

Man Followed to Brockton and Found in Hotel

With nothing but a cut hand as a clue, the Milton police apprehended a man in Brockton at two o'clock this morning who burglarized the store of John F. Kerrigan at Central avenue and White street, Milton at 11 o'clock that night.

The break was discovered by John J. Shields, Jr., who joined the Milton police force last Sunday and who was substituting for his uncle, a member of the force. He found blood marks on a broken window and through inquiry learned a man with a cut hand had boarded a Brockton car sometime previous.

Accompanied by Deputy McDermott and Officer Rand he took up the trail in the police auto and the man was located in a Brockton hotel in less than three hours after the break was discovered. They were assisted by Inspector Guerin of Brockton.

The goods taken from the store are valued at $28.25 and consist of nine pocket books, 24 boxes of cigarettes, 10 flags. About $13 was taken from a prepayment phone after the instrument was wrenched from the wall. It lay in a mass of tangled wires on the floor when the police arrived.

When booked the man gave his name as William E. Powers and said his address was 323 Smith street, Providence, and that he had also resided in Seattle, Wash.

He pleaded guilty in Quincy court this morning to a charge of breaking and entering and was held in $1000 for the Grand Jury.

TWO HOLIDAYS AT ATLANTIC

Flag Raising on Seventeenth—Also Fourth of July Plans

An enthusiastic meeting of the Ward Six Patriotic association was held Thursday evening at their headquarters. The general plans for the Fourth of July celebration at Atlantic were talked over, and the collectors in the several parts of the ward reported good progress being made. The indications are that this year's celebration will eclipse all efforts of previous years.

Plans were also made and the committees appointed for the grand flag raising to be held at the headquarters of the association on the morning of Seventeenth of June. The flag raising will take place at 8.30 and a good program is being arranged.

AUTOISTS FINED.

Oliver Ames, Jr., of Harvard, son of Oliver Ames the wealthy North Easton manufacturer, pleaded nolo to a charge of violation of the speed laws in the district court this morning and the case was placed on file on payment of $15 costs.

The offense was committed in Milton on May 25, and according to U. G. Davis of the Metropolitan police four other students were in the machine at the time. Ie was charged that Ames passed along the street opposite the Tucker school without using due care, and that when the brakes were applied the wheels left a mark on the street over 100 feet in length. He paid the costs.

Charles C. McCarthy, manager of the Quincy house, Boston, appealed from a fine of $20, imposed by Judge Avery this morning, for violation of the speed laws on the Metropolitan Park reservation. Casper Berry, a Boston liquor dealer, and the chauffeur of the defendant, were accepted as sureties for his appearance at the next session of the Superior court. McCarthy was summoned to court by Officer U. G. Davis who testified he exceeded the speed limit and did not stop when ordered. McCarthy pleaded not guilty and said his failure to stop was due to misunderstanding what the officer said.

A. H. Dunham and his newsboys at Houghs Neck now sell the Daily Ledger. It will be delivered at the cottages in the afternoon.

MELLEN'S STORY MEETS DENIAL

Did Not Offer Himself as a "Vicarious Sacrifice"

THE TESTIMONY OF LEDYARD

Voluntary Witness Says Mellen's Grand Trunk Letter Was Claim of Innocence Rather Than For Protection of Morgan—Skinner Has Not Lost Confidence In the New Haven

Washington, June 5.—Charles S. Mellen's recent testimony that he, as president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, allowed himself to be indicted in the Grand Trunk case to shield J. Pierpont Morgan, was flatly denied before the interstate commerce commission by Louis C. Ledyard of New York, who was a director of the New Haven at the time.

"I want to say in the most unqualified terms," declared Ledyard, "that Mellen did not offer himself as a vicarious sacrifice for Morgan."

Telling of the letter in regard to the Grand Trunk investigation to the United States district attorney at New York, written by Mellen in the presence of E. D. Robbins, counsel for the New Haven, and himself, Ledyard said:

"That letter was not the letter of a man accepting responsibility. It was the letter of a man claiming innocence."

Ledyard took the stand as a voluntary witness in the commission's investigation into the New Haven's financial affairs, and was not sworn. The subpoena issued for him some time ago had been withdrawn, but he urged that he be allowed to make a statement.

Earlier in the day William Skinner completed his testimony, begun Tuesday. He said he could not recall any instance in which Morgan had tried to dominate the board of directors and that Morgan's frequent trips to Europe kept him from attending many of the meetings. He expressed the opinion that the public often got better service from railroads as a result of interlocking directorates.

There could hardly be a greater contrast in personalities than that afforded between Skinner and Ledyard. Skinner is a brisk, impatient, vigorous young man, apparently in his forties; a thorough-going man of business, who gave the appearance of knowing his own mind and trusting his own judgment, given to quick, impatient replies and lacking altogether the qualities of suavity and smoothness that some of the other participants in the inquiry have shown so markedly.

Skinner has long beeen one of the heavy stockholders in the New Haven road. He owns now, personally, 5400 shares. He and his family together own 210,000 shares. He has seen it decline in value from $220 a share to $50 a share, but has never sold any of his holdings. The reduction in dividends from what the stock formerly paid has cost him about $40,000 a year loss in income.

He is holding on to all of his stock because he believes that one day it will again be worth $220.

Ledyard was a striking contrast as a witness. He appeared old and tired and worn. His voice was not strong. He wore no collar, but had a white handkerchief tied about his neck and fastened at the throat with a jade stickpin. His voice was not clear and strong, and sometimes the stenographer had difficulty in hearing his words.

Ledyard did not tell his story directly and tersely. Sometimes he would go over the same ground more than once. Occasionally he was at a loss for a word or would employ one word when he meant another. He showed nervous mannerisms, shrugging his shoulders, and his hands were scarcely ever still a moment.

SALOONS MUST GO

Court Says Indiana City of 30,000 Population Must Be Dry

Muncie, Ind., June 5.—Muncie, a city of close to 30,000 population, will be without saloons after next Saturday, according to the ruling of Judge Ellis in the Delaware circuit court, in which he upheld the validity of the option election held here March 9 last when the city voted "dry" by a majority of 462.

The "wets" contested the election on the ground that it was illegal because voting machines were used and that the "drys" did not get a majority of the voters that appeared at the polls, nearly 500 failing to vote on the proposition.

RHODE ISLAND WOMAN TELLS OF HEALTH MIRACLE THAT SAVED HER

Mrs. Clare Shaw of Norwood Used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

Mrs. Clare Shaw of 21 Majestic Avenue, Norwood, R. I., was a sufferer from stomach and liver troubles for many years. She was treated both in the United States and abroad. She underwent an operation. Still she suffered.

Then she took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and found swift relief. In a letter telling of her case she said:

"I reecived your sample treatment the day before Christmas and it saved my life, for I was almost gone. I had an inflammation that got right up in my throat and seemed to choke me. My neighbors say it is a miracle, as they know how I suffered. I am better now than I have been for 20 years."

This remarkable health story is like those told in thousands of other letters from users of this wonderful remedy in all parts of the country. The first dose convinces—no long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know about—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154 156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful results.

Go to Church Movement Will Have Wonderful Support In Rural Communities

ADVERTISING in the newspapers, securing the co-operation of the telephone companies, announcements at farmers' granges, unions and clubs are suggested as means to arouse interest in a GO TO CHURCH Sunday for rural workers. The Orange Judd Farmer says editorially:

"THE RURAL CHURCH HAS HAD ITS SHARE OF CRITICISM IN RECENT YEARS. SOME OF THE CRITICISM IS JUST, BUT MUCH OF IT IS SENSATIONAL AND UNJUST. THAT RURAL CHURCHES ARE A VITAL PART OF EVERY RURAL COMMUNITY THERE CAN BE NO QUESTION. WITHOUT THEM COUNTRY LIFE WOULD GO TO RUST AND DESTRUCTION, AND THIS ASIDE FROM RELIGION. TO SAVE COUNTRY LIFE, THEN, WE MUST SAVE THE RURAL CHURCH, AND TO SAVE THE RURAL CHURCH WE, AS INDIVIDUALS, MUST DO OUR PART IN PERSONAL DEVOTION AND ATTENDANCE.

"The problem now before us is this: What can we as farmers do to promote this movement and accelerate the churchgoing custom of olden days? The answer is simple. Go to church ourselves, ask our neighbors to do likewise and ask minister or priest to join in welcoming everybody of the community."

To make a great success of this affair it will be necessary for each and every one to see his pastor, tell him of the plan, get his co-operation and then get generally busy. Let it be known in every church in this broad land—from Pacific to Atlantic, from the lakes to the gulf—that special services will be arranged and an effort made to have every person in the community attend church.

ASK THE LOCAL TELEPHONE OPERATOR TO NOTIFY ALL SUBSCRIBERS OF THE TELEPHONE LINES. BY WORD OF MOUTH, BY ANNOUNCEMENTS FROM THE PULPIT, BY NOTICES IN THE GRANGES, CLUBS AND SCHOOLS LET THE NOTICE GO OUT THAT THERE IS A GO TO CHURCH MOVEMENT THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRYSIDE.

THE PLAYHOUSE

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

The musical comedy "Let George Do It" now playing at Quincy's popular playhouse is a scream from start to finish. Last night the house was crowded and without doubt it will be again tonight, for most people like a show that's really funny. The same program is presented at the afternoon performance and one can secure good seats then for less money.

Homan's Musical Revue will be the attraction beginning Monday. The company consists of 14 clever performers and present a program of musical dancing and comedy specialties of the highest class. They are playing in Salem this week to packed houses and here is what the Salem Evening News says of them.

Homan's Musical Revue continues to be the attraction at the Federal theatre for the week end show. No snappier troupe of funmakers, fine singers and clever and talented artists have been seen at this playhouse than Mr. Homan's company. From once the curtain rises on their act there is fun a plenty for the capacity audiences which have been the rule all the week."

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

Gradually "Under Cover" is nearing the longest record run for Boston. On next Monday the piece will enter upon the 25th week of its long engagement at the Plymouth theatre, Boston. Another instance of the immense popularity of this remarkable play was proven during the terrific warm spell of last week when the attendance at every performance was equally as large as at any time during the last few weeks. This is conclusive proof that "Under Cover" is just the sort of play that may be thoroughly enjoyed in all sorts of weather. Several new members are now appearing in the cast. There is an extra matinee on Wednesday, June 17th, in addition to the regular Thursday and Saturday matinees. Theatregoers should bear in mind that strict attention is paid to all mail orders.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The final week of the season at the Castle Square will be one of mirth. The play will be "Baby Mine," an hilarious farce that has gone up and down the country with great success, and it comes to Boston now for the first time at popular prices. Its plot and scenes are lively, and it involves its characters in scenes and situations that are continuously and frequently uproariously funny. It will make a fitting windup to the sixth of Mr. Craig's Castle Square seasons, and in the leading roles in the cast will appear Mr. Craig, Mr. Meek, Miss Colcord and Miss Mary Young. Mr. Craig will during the summer make preparations for his coming new Castle Square season, which will open early in the coming September.

THE POPS.

Next week will be the last in which Mr. Andre Maquarre will have charge of the pop concerts in Symphony hall. He will be succeeded June 15th for the last three weeks of the season by Mr. Clement Lenom. Mr. Maquarre for his last week has made a number of interesting programmes and there will be two special nights. Tuesday night will be the annual "Tech Night" when the entire hall is taken by the alumni association of the Institute of Technology and there will be no accommodations for the general public. Friday night, June 12th, will be "Dartmouth Night" and a pleasant time may be expected. Monday night Mr. Maquarre gives an Italian program made up chiefly from excerpts from popular Italian operas. Wednesday, June 10th, he will play a program devoted to German music and incidentally will play three Hungarian Rhapsodies by Liszt. Thursday night will be devoted to selections by French composers and excerpts from Wagnerian music dramas. Saturday night will be a general popular program.

SHUBERT THEATRE

Madame Moscile at the Shubert theatre is the only musical comedy now running in Boston. It has scored a signal success. The cast is virtually an all-star combination. Ralph Herz has a ridiculously amusing part in the new piece which evokes screams of laughter, and he has some exceedingly funny songs. "Its Embarrassing"—brought eight or nine encores, and "It's a Lie," would have kept Mr. Herz on the stage at the opening performance until midnight, but for the fact that he had no more verses left to sing. William Pruette who was formerly with Fritzi Schaff in M'moiselle Modiste and sang "I Want what I Want When I Want It," has a big number in "Madame Moselle" called Constantinople, which he sung with the full chorus of his Turkish Harem. Jack Henderson of "Pink Lady" fame is the young lover of the story. He has a song hit "If I should Lose My Only Girl" that will very soon be whistled all over Boston. His wonderful Apache dance with Helen Novita in the second act is a decided sensation. A dainty little actress, named Diane D'Aubrey, quite a new comer as far as Boston is concerned, captivated the audience from the moment of her first entrance, when she sang, "I'll be There," a beautiful number of real melody. It reminded one of Edna May's advent in the "Belle of New York." All in all, Boston's latest musical show is a real delight.

CLARKE---NASH WEDDING

Reception at Bride's Parents on Putman Street

Alice Mae Nash, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Melvin Nash of 101 Putnam street, was united in marriage Thursday evening to Walter Ayer Clarke of Weymouth. Rev. Melvin S. Nash, a former pastor of the Universalist church of Weymouth officiating. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents at 7.30, and was followed by a reception from 8 to 9.30 o'clock. Miss Atossa Louise Burrell of Bridgewater was the maid or honor, the groom being attended by Charles K. Nash of Quincy.

The ushers were Frank H. Walsh of Quincy, Walter Burns of Providence, R. I., and Charles Leavitt of Weymouth. The flower girl was Miss Marion L. Walsh, a niece of the bride, and the page, Francis M. Walsh a nephew of the bride.

The bride wore a white crepe meteor, trimmed with silk shadow applique lace, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and bride roses. She also wore a tulle veil caught up with orange blossoms. The maid of honor wore a hand embroidered pink voile over white messaline and carried a bouquet of sweet peas.

Miss Elfrida V. Callister of Arlington presided at the piano and played Lohengren's wedding march as the bridal party entered.

The decorations of the house were daisies and smilax. The groom's gift to the bride was a brooch set with pearls and diamonds, and the gifts to the best man and ushers, scarf pins. The brides gift to the maid of honor was a crescent brooch set with pearls.

At the reception which followed the ceremony the bridal couple were assisted in receiving by the maid of honor, best man and the bride's parents. After a brief wedding trip to New York and Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Clarke will reside at 37 Bigelow street where they will be at home after September first.

The bride was for several years a teacher at the Tufts school, Weymouth, and is a graduate of the State Normal Art school. The groom is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and holds a responsible position with the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation.

VICINITY NEWS.

The pupils of the Jefferson school of East Weymouth held their annual patriotic exercises in Grand Army hall Teusday evening. The program was given by the pupils of the different grades and closed with the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

Nearly $1,000 was netted at the annual donation day of the Pond Home for Aged Men and Women in Pondville on Tuesday. The home is conducted by the King's Daughters and Sons of Norfolk County.

The old fire engine house in Memorial hall square, Dedham, is being torn down. Later the grounds will be grassed and seats arranged for the public.

William B. Belcher, who had charge of the gunning stands at the Weymouth Pond for many years shot himself through the heart with a shotgun at his home in Holbrook Thursday morning. He used a piece of wood to push the trigger as he aimed the gun at his heart. Despondency over ill health is believed to have led to the act. He was in his 72nd year.

Fire, following a series of explosions destroyed the buildings of the Searchlight Gas Co. in Canton shortly after eight o'clock Thursday morning. Four men who were at work in the main building at the time were blown to the street. They were C. S. Healy, Thomas Huxley, James Lowry and Harold Smith.

AGAIN SUBSTITUTED

Representative George H. Ellis of Newton, chairman of the committee on railroads, said the House should go slowly before overturning a decrees of a commission that has been accepted Public Service Commission, has been filed with the courts, and approved by the Mayor and City Council of Quincy. If this bill should pass the question of the recovery of damages will be most pertinent. Construction of work has already been stopped in Quincy because of the failure to adopt the decree plan and the possibility that new plans might be adopted. If any damage is caused by the substitution of the depression plan somebody will be obliged to pay for it.

He said the gentleman from Quincy recommends that the voters of his city shall be allowed to pass on this technical problem, and you must consider that the commonwealth itself will pay 25 per cent of the entire cost, the railroad 55 per cent and the people of Quincy ten per cent.

The elevation has been approved by Prof. Swain and by other engineers competent to pass upon the subject. He said I don't blame the people of Quincy if they want depression if it can be satisfactorily brought about, but personally I believe the plan already accepted is the better plan. The City of Quincy could have gone to court and held up the elevation plan before the hearings on this bill were concluded by the committee on railroads, but the plan was approved by the mayor and no effort was made to have it withdrawn from the courts.

Rep. Edward J. Sandberg of Quincy said the City of Quincy is in a peculiar predicament. The only suggestion he had to make was that it be referred to the people and let them settle their own differences.

Representative E. S. Abbott of Haverhill said this new bill is a subterfuge. I have no brief for the railroads or for the committee on railroads, but I do not believe that the voters of Quincy, with all due respect to their intelligence, are competent to pass upon so technical a problem. You might as well say to them, 'here is my watch, tell me how it ought to be repaired.' The legislature should turn a deaf ear to this form of petition.

Representative Thomas W. White, chairman of the committee on Ways and Means, said he had read the substitute bill and while willing to help out of this difficulty the gentleman from Quincy, who has the matter most at heart, he believed it, absolutely impossible to bring in a bill to the legislature under the scope of the original petition.

He desired not a new bill but an annulment of the decree and new proceedings for the elimination of grade crossings, and believed that no action can be taken. He further believed the substitute bill offered no solution of the problem. The decree has been accepted by the authorized officials of the city, and unless this substitute bill connvinces you that it takes care of the proposition you will defeat it.

Representative Sulivan again spoke and said he wished to correct the impression that the Mayor and the City Council have acted favorably on the elevation plan. For seven years he said this has been a matter of local agitation and every City Council has favored depression. The substitute will provide relief. I have the opinion of the Attorney General that the only way to overturn the decree is by action of this legislature. I am somewhat surprised that all of the opposition to this bill should come from Newton where the grade crossings were eliminated by depression in the best system of any city in the Commonwealth.

Representative White again said, the Mayor and City Solicitor has signed the decree and that he looked upon them as the properly constituted authorities to represent the city. If his bill relieves conditions I would be with it.

The legislature, I admit, has the authority to annul the decree but the bill does not do it. I sympathize with him and would be with his bill if I thought it relieved the situation.

Representative Peter Tague of Charlestown, Democratic leader of the House, said every member of the committee on railroads was more or less inclined to help the City of Quincy. The Mayor of Quincy originally appeared before the committee in favor of the depression of tracks, but he later came in and turned a complete somersault on his own proposition. The chairman of the Board of Assessors, appearing in behalf of the business interests of Quincy, partly the real estate holders, appeared before the committee in advocacy of the depression plan and was subsequently discharged by the mayor for upholding the mayor's own petition.

You may rave about foolhardy legislation, but don't lose sight of the fact that the cities do not want their tracks elevated. Springfield was a beautiful city until the New Haven elevated its tracks. Lynn presents a fine exhibition of how readily the elevation of tracks will spoil a city. It is an eyesore to its people, and a big detriment to business.

There was nobody against the wishes of the City of Quincy except the Mayor and one or two of his personal representatives. In fairness to the city let us pause and call a halt upon those distinguished citizens who know it all and who allow that the people of a city are not competent to pass upon what they want. We can substitute this bill and then amend it to meet the interests of all concerned.

TWELVE VICTIMS BURIED

Services Over Members of Empress' Crew Who Were Drowned

Quebec, June 5.—Twelve of the crew of the steamship Empress of Ireland who perished in the St. Lawrence disaster were buried here with fitting ceremony.

The funeral procession, moving to the music of military bands, passed between double rows of sorrowing spectators, representing every class of society. Everywhere flags were at half staff.

Services were held in two churches—St. Patrick's, the Roman Catholic church, where five of the bodies lay, and the Angelican cathedral, where there were seven of the dead.

Lieuetnant Governor Langelier, Premier Gouin and members of the cabinet attended in person. Mayor Drouin and the council followed the cortege, in the ranks of which were several Canadian Pacific railway officials.

ANOTHER FOR RESOLUTE

Vanitie Quits Race to Pick Up Two Men Who Went Overboard

Rye, N. Y., June 5.—The initial series for the America's cup defense candidate yachts was won by the Resolute, after the Vanitie withdrew while in the lead in order to assist in the rescue of two of her seamen, who had been washed overboard during the first leg of the race.

It was a disappointing ending of what had promised to be the best contest to date between the two seventy-five footers.

Once the Vanitie dropped out of the race, the Resolute was assured of a hollow victory, and the contest, originally planned to be an eighteen-mile race, was shortened half that distance and the Resolute crossed the finish line 53 minutes and 41 seconds after the start.

JURY DEADLOCKED IN HOE BALM SUIT

Millionaire Spent Over $50,000 on Miss Sullivan

New York, June 5.—Disagreement in the $225,000 breach of promise suit of Miss Mae Sullivan against Millionaire Arthur I. Hoe ended a long jury vigil on the sensational case. There will be a new trial.

After wrangling over the merits of the story of betrayal told by Miss Sullivan, the jury found themselves hopelessly deadlocked.

Eight of them, it was said, believed Hoe had used his wealth and position to impress the girl to her ruin. Four believed her an adventuress who guilefully squeezed out of the heir of the famous printer more than $50,000 he admitted having spent on her.

FEWER KILLED BY TRAINS

But Death Toll on United States Railroads Is Still Heavy

Washington, June 5.—A decrease of persons killed and injured in all classes of railroad accidents was shown in the accident bulletin issued by the interstate commerce commission for the quarter ended Dec. 31, 1913, as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1912. There was also a decrease in the number of train accidents.

There were 191 persons killed and 3726 injured during the quarter in train accidents. In railroad accidents other than train, 2484 persons were killed and 18,043 injured, and 117 persons were killed and 29,007 injured in industrial accidents allied with railroad operations. The property damage was $3,090,360.

SELECTMEN HESITATE

Unwilling to Hurry In Making Arrests In Peaslee Case

Henniker, N. H., June 5.—Repeated demands from A. H. Barrett, a Boston detective engaged by the Peaslee brothers to clear up the mystery of the murder of their father, Howard W. Peaslee, and from the sons themselves for action, have so far brought no response from the selectmen, who are cautiously investigating the case.

"We may have made one mistake," said one of them, "and if that is so it is most regrettable. But we do not want to make another. We are going to go slowly and surely and get the right man."

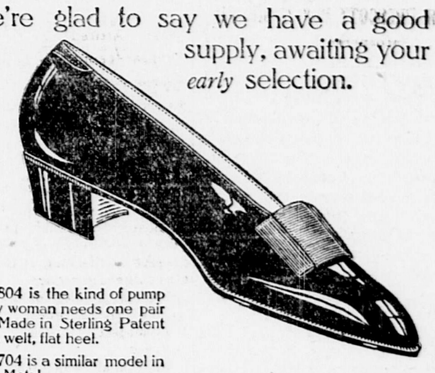

Criticism over making the hurried arrest of Wood is growing more open

ORGANIZED LABOR OF CITY

Labor Man Reviews the Ups and Downs

Editors of Daily Ledger:

A brief explanation of past and present conditions existing in the local Labor Unions of this city may possibly prove of interest to the members as well as to the general reader.

In 1910 there was held the first Labor Day celebration, that united all the Trade Unions of this city. At that date there were twenty-nine Unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, with an aggregate membership of three thousand men. As there are no women trade organizations, therefore all members are male adults.

The celebration of 1910 was a financial success all through. The expense amounted to over $1,500.00; even if it was a stormy day the small unions had a large per cent of their membership in line of the parade. The trade which has the big membership, having less than 100 men in line at this celebration, was the work of a few active men in the organized labor movement, and reflected credit on their energy and ability as union men.

There had been an active organizing campaign carried on to increase the membership of the Trade Unions then organized, and form new unions. This campaign was conducted and managed by the local organizer of the American Federation of Labor, who had the active assistance and support of a number of true energetic union men, who practiced their principles as their obligations required as Trade Unionists, regardless of their own personal interests, who too often have been accused and maligned by their own brothers. But this is to be expected, for it is so easy to condemn and critisize.

As a result of this campaign there were organized five local unions with a membership of one hundred fifty-seven men, and an increase in the membership of the existing unions to the number of fifty-seven men.

One Metal Trades Council with twelve unions affiliated, each entitled to five delegates and represented five hundred men. This council was chartered by the Metal Trades department of the A. F. of L.

A loyal Building Trades Council was organized with nine unions affiliated, and whose total membership was about four hundred men; and for the first time in the history of the crafts employees there was an agreement between the union men and the building contractors. This mutual agreement was in force for one year from the date of the signatures; as the result of which there were no strikes or other labor troubles for one year. In addition to this the Local Organizer collected in initiations and dues over $300.00 which was paid over to the local unions, of which he has the receipts to show.

At this date 1910, the Central Labor Union, chartered in 1901, had sixteen trade unions affiliated. Today this body has only five unions in good standing and the meetings are not held as regular as the by-laws provide, and is about to surrender the charter.

Five unions, formerly affiliated, withdrew and organized on Industrial Trades Alliance in contravention of the fact that in all constitutions of both International and National Unions there is a clause which provides that all local unions shall affiliate with all the departments of the A. F. of L., when their parent body is so affiliated and pay their per capita tax to the A. F. of L.

These unions which withdrew have disregarded their own constitution. The moral effect is to encourage dualism and discourage those who have faith and would practice their obligations and stand firm to the principles and assist their fellow wage workers in whatever trade or occupation they may follow.

No organization or body of men ever did or can succeed in their efforts for the betterment of man, no matter how high or noble is their code of principles, if they practice hypocrisy in their daily lives this leads to a dull character. The Trade Unions movement is no exception to this universal rule, which governs all men as individuals or as a class.

Now what is the condition at present in the labor world of this city. Two of the Local Unions have surrendered their charters, and are now affiliated with the Industrial Workers of the World, with a total membership of nearly nine hundred men. These unions have, by militant methods, been able to secure justice and fair treatment for their members from the largest employer of Labor in Quincy.

While those unions who are now affiliated with the A. F. of L. have lost members as compared with their strength in 1910.

Now, Mr. Union Man, what is the reason for this condition of loss in numbers and influence in the past four years, and what do you propose to do in the future to recover your former prestige?

I suggest to you, forget the past with the mistakes if any. Start on the high way of progress, by organization, education and agitation, and you will be successful and you can celebrate your holiday in 1914, as you did in 1910, and gain your former prestige.

Recently the Central Labor Union returned its charter to the Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, and the trades unions are at the mercy of the employing classes.

Evidently the unions of this city do not believe that in union there is strength.

UNION MAN.

SPORT BRIEFS

The boys of the city, who are athletically inclined, should be overjoyed that the Fourth of July Association has decided to hold a relay carnival instead of a closed athletic meet on Independence Day. Any number of arguments can be presented in favor of the idea and all are convincing.

The strongest indictment against the carnival will be the failure of the boys to prepare for the events. In glancing down the long list of stars, which includes Mullane, Miller, Flynn, Marceau, Gram and others, one sighs for the good old days. If it be true that history moves in cycles, that events are duplicated every few years, then let this be the year.

The principals of the grammar schools, who have not allowed base ball interest to sag, should jump into the breach now that the base ball season is completed and start the boys on a proper course, and it might not be amiss if the High school boys should set aside the indifference that marks all branches of their sport and awaken to the opportunity.

Valuable prizes will be awarded in the shape of trophies. Competent men will handle the events, and if the interest becomes as keen as it should, perhaps the committee will acept entries from junior clubs of the city.

When it comes down to facts, everyone is eligible, but a claim for permission to compete should be backed up by something more than an ordinary desire. It must be "a purpose to do."

Thirty athletes, every man a star, will represent the Boston Athletic Association on the cinder path this summer. Included in the list furnished by Manager George V. Brown is Franz Marceau of Wollaston, the fast Dartmouth miler. John L. McLaughlin of this city will represent the club in the broad jumps.

Flaming Finish.

"My grandfather," said the old-timer, "used to put all his money in his stocking." "Wa-all, things hain't changed much," said his old friend. "My grandson, who's takin' a course in modern deportment at one o' them eastern colleges, puts most all his money into socks."—Judge.

Something of a Lottery.

"What I want," said the young man, "is to get married and have a peaceful, quiet home." "Well, sometimes it works that way and sometimes it's like joinin' a debatin' society."

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

SHAMROCK UNDER SAIL

Cup Challeneger Maneuvers Handily In Light Breeze

Portsmouth, Eng., June 5.—Shamrock IV., Sir Thomas Lipton's new challenger for the America's cup, went out for her first sail-stretching spin in the vicinity of Spithead.

The wind was light and fluky and inaedquate to test the capability of the challenger. Under her huge mainsail and sloop foresail she maneuvered handily, however, and picked up way quickly after tacking. The towering mast of the new yacht quite dwarfed that of the older Shamrock.

Sir Thomas was on board the challenger, together with Charles E. Nicholson, her designer, and William P. Burton, the amateur yachtsman, who is to command the Shamrock IV. during the cup races in American waters.

HUB WOMAN SLAIN BY BROTHER-IN-LAW

Murderer Then Shoots Self After Quarrel Over Money

Boston, June 5.—As the result of a quarrel over money matters Mrs. Rose Rosenberg, aged 32, proprietor of a tailoring shop at 5 Minot street, died at a hospital with three bullets in her body, and her brother-in-law, Jacob Rosenberg, 28, who shot her and then turned the revolver on himself, is on the dangerous list in a hospital.

Bitterness on the part of Rosenberg toward his brother's wife, stirred up by quarrels over money matters, is credited by the police with being responsible for the tragedy. Rosenberg was formerly employed as a presser by Mrs. Rosenberg in her store, and, it is said, claimed that she owed him money.

BLUE AND GRAY UNITE

Join In Services as President Accepts Confederate Monument

Washington, June 5.—President Wilson accepted for the United States the southern women's monument to the dead of the confederacy at historic Arlington cemetery.

Impressive ceremonies marked the occasion. Feeble veterans of the "lost cause" were joined by their comrades of the union army in paying tribute to the heroes of the southland.

Mrs. Daisy M. Stevens, president general of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, made the official presentation and the president the governmental acceptance.

Taking part in the ceremonies were the leaders of the two great veteran associations—General Young of the United Confederate Veterans and Commander-In-Chief Gardner of the G. A. R.

BURNING CHINESE TOWNS

White Wolf and His Followers Continue Their Depredations

Pekin, June 5.—"White Wolf," the Chinese brigand, who has devastated the provinces of Hu-Peh, Ho-Nan and Shen-Si, is now looting and burning towns and villages in the province of Kan-Su.

After eluding troops sent to capture him by the Chinese government, within two days he set fire to the town of Ningchow. His followers then attacked Taochow, and, after pillaging the inhabitants, burned it to the ground.

The brigands then proceeded to Choni, where they set fire to the famous monastery of the Tibetan Lamas.

MAY BE FORCED TO TAKE PART

Carranza Cannot Well Afford to Avoid Peace Conference

MEDIATORS MAY GO AHEAD

Establishment of Provisional Government In Mexico Would Place Head of Rebel Forces In Serious Position —Money and Arms Could Be Withheld by the Various Nations

Washington, June 5.—Peace negotiations again are at a standstill awaiting the convenience of General Carranza. Friends of the rebel leader insist that he will not agree to enter the conference if the internal affairs of Mexico are to be taken up.

General Huerta's envoys have agreed that a discussion of them is necessary and proper to bring about the pacification of the country. Constitutionalists claim that Carranza will not listen to any proposition that gives Huerta a hand in the naming of a successor, even technically. And moreover they say in effect:

"We have conquered the greater part of Mexico. Our armies are moving on and will take the City of Mexico. We do not have to arbitrate. Who will stop our victorious army if we refuse to abide by the decision of the conference?"

For the other side it is argued that refusal to take part in this conference may result in the mediators going ahead and appointing a provisional government which will be recognized by the nations of the world. The constitutionalists then would become mere rebels. They could procure neither money nor arms and would in the end be beaten into submission by the new government, which could get all of the money and arms needed.

Captain Burnside, United States military attache to Mexico, says that practically the entire country is in sympathy with the revolution. He figures that altogether there are 150,000 armed men, "revolutionists for loot," of whom 70,000 are organized and under some control. Huerta has 60,000 troops. Here are 210,000 armed men with which a new government would have to deal, for the attitude of the so-called federal troops would have to be determined anew.

There is a curious mixup over the question of the shipment of arms to the rebels. Secretary Bryan has informed the mediators that no arms will be shipped during the conference. No legal way was found apparently to carry out the promise short of a proclamation by the president. This he has hesitated to make and is said to contemplate refusal of clearance papers to ships carrying arms, taking the chance that the courts may sustain him.

A coincidence is that at just this moment a Mexico City dispatch says that Huerta has determined to establish a blockade of the port of Tampico. He has the ships with which to make it effective. At the same time Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt indicates that the United States will not interfere with such a blockade, reversing the apparent former attitude of the administration in the case. If the American navy should interfere with a blockade the act would be ample excuse for the representatives of the Mexican president at Niagara Falls to terminate negotiations.

As long as the mediation conference is in session the armistice will prevail and any movement of the United States forces against Mexican forces in their defensive operations against the rebels would most certainly be construed as an act of war.

The sailing of the Ward liner Antilla from New York with arms for the constitutionalists has provoked a new embargo, to be invoked if the government hears of any further shipments being contemplated. That American manufacturers and exporters have been warned by the Antilla incident and will not attempt to send out any shipments is believed in official circles.

Maine Man Mistook Brother-In-Law For Deer and Killed Him

Guilford, Me., June 5.—Chester Emmons pleaded not guilty to the charge of negligently shooting Fred Gowen, who was shot to death in mistake for a deer at Wellington, when arraigned in the municipal court.

Probable cause was found for holding him for the September term of the sureme court. Bail, placed at $1000, was furnished by Mrs. Julia Gowen, widow of the victim and sister of the respondent, and by John Frye.

What Fate Did

A Story of the Ideal and the Practical

By EDITH V. ROSS

Barton Kenwood was a great disappointment to his father. He was an only son. His father had built up a good business and was extremely desirous of training the boy to take his place as its manager. But Barton's tastes were not for business. In the first place, he was too tender hearted for the management of a concern wherein many disagreeable things must be done for which the manager must take the responsibility. A customer whose credit is tottering is near failure; he must be jumped on and his ruin completed. Dull times come on, and persons dependent upon the concern for a living must be laid off. It is the manager's business to speak the word that deprives them of their daily necessaries and comforts.

Barton as a boy heard of some of these hardships—hardships for his father as well as the others concerned—and conceived a great dislike for what he understood business to be. But this did not satisfy his father, who considered it the part of a man to do necessarily disagreeable things when they came in the line of duty. When his son came to be eighteen years of age the father proposed to put him in his factory at the bottom of the ladder and elevate him as rapidly as he showed himself capable of being advanced. Barton demurred, declaring that he wished to go to college.

Here was a breach between father and son that was never healed. Barton went to college, and his father put in the place he had intended for him a nephew, Evan Swift, who gave evidence of possessing those qualifications which Barton lacked. Evan was a business man from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. He could say "No" when "No" was necessary. He could detect expenses that were unnecessary and cut them off, no matter who was hurt by doing so. He could figure profit and loss, and, no matter how hard the times, there was always some profit. By those who understood the requirements of the concern he was respected; by those whose minds were intent simply on their own interest he was hated.

Barton at college developed tastes that his father considered a waste of time to pursue. The bones of dinosaurs, the skulls of cave men, of cliff dwellers, of extinct lake men who several thousand years ago lived in houses built over the surface of tranquil waters, absorbed his attention. He also had a fancy for digging in the dirt to exhume ancient buried cities. He was as much delighted at discovering an earthen pitcher made 3,000 years ago as his father was at hitting upon a new article of commerce that could be manufactured at a profit.

When Barton was graduated from college he desired to go with an expedition to Asia to look for the lost site of a city that flourished a thousand years before the Christian era. His father, who considered the object useless if attained, refused to furnish him the necessary funds. But so important was Barton to the party that his alma mater supplied them. It was through Barton Kenwood's researches that the site was found.

There was a girl who had been a schoolmate of Barton of whom he had from the first made a confidant. Her name was Grace Bingham. Even as a child she showed evidence of both intelligence and practical common sense, in that respect resembling the elder and the younger Kenwood. At first she advised Barton to accede to his father's wishes, but before the break between them came about she realized that the two looked upon values from opposite standpoints and that Barton never could be made a business man. She therefore reluctantly advised him to follow that for which he was best fitted.

After Barton went away Evan Swift, who had entered his uncle's employ with a view to reaping the emoluments that his cousin had turned aside, began to pay attention to Grace Bingham. Grace from a little girl was predisposed to Barton, but after he went to the university she saw little of him. Whether during that period of rapid change between fourteen and twenty he passed out of her mind or lay there dormant is not to the point. What is pertinent is that at twenty years of age she found it time and a necessity that she should take a husband.

Swift was in all respects a desirable person. He had already been made second to his uncle in the management of the Kenwood Manufacturing company, and it was expected that he would soon assume full control. Mr. Kenwood's fortune was all in the business, was necessary to the business, and it was surmised that he would leave it to the man to whom he proposed to take his place instead of his son, who was considered to have sold his birthright for old bones.

Be these things as they may, Grace Bingham did not throw so favorable an opportunity for settling herself for life over her shoulder. But Swift was some time gaining her consent, and there were those who said that the reason was that the man she desired, for himself alone, was Barton Kenwood. But, given a practical girl, a fine business man with a prospective fortune and a penniless delver for stone jugs, the result must necessarily be a union between the practical girl and the prosperous man.

Evan Swift was as much absorbed in the Kenwood Manufacturing company as his cousin was in old pots and kettles. Unfortunately, Evan was not very strong physically, and about the time he became engaged to be married his uncle's health showed signs of giving way, and he relinquished all control of the business to his successor. This threw a load of detail on Swift, and before he could reorganize the various departments of the business he broke down completely.

He was admonished by his physician to get as far away from the Kenwood Manufacturing company as possible and remain away till he had recovered his health. He refused to take this advice on the ground that there was no one to take his place in the business, but Grace Bingham told him that he was making a mistake common among managing persons and there were doubtless men under him who, if given an opportunity, would soon step into his shoes.

This is not universally true, but it proved true in this case. One of the heads of departments was advanced to the management, and Evan Swift said goodby to the business and his ladylove and started for the other side of the globe. I put the business before the ladylove in this case, for it is quite possible that if Mr. Swift were called upon to give up one or the other he would retain the business. As a practical man he would know that he would not be likely to get another business, but girls are plenty.

The situation in this quadrangular affair at this time was an old man at home sinking into his grave, a young man whose practical nature had led him to break down his health by overwork, seeking to restore it in sunny Italy; another young man whose impractical nature was keeping him in the open air digging for old bones, thereby rendering him perfect in health, and a girl—a cross between the ideal and the practical—who was waiting for fate to produce what was in store for her.

The first step fate took in the matter was to kill off the old man. Mr. Kenwood's death resulted in the discovery that he had left all his property to Evan Swift. A cablegram informed the latter of his uncle's bequest, but fate, which delights in complications, entanglements and the thwarting of intentions, had sent the newly made possessor of a fortune off to Egypt, and, being some distance up the river Nile, he did not receive the announcement till a week after it was sent. It reached him on his return to Cairo, when his efforts to keep himself alive were proving useless. He died at Cairo only a few days after his return there.

An announcement of his father's death was also sent to Barton Kenwood, who was in Trieste, having just returned with a dozen boxes of bones and other worthless articles gathered from a big hole in the ground in Asia Minor. The cablegram said nothing about his father's will, but as he was about to take his collection of exhumed articles to a museum in America he proceeded immediately homeward. He arrived at his destination at the same time that intelligence arrived of the death of his cousin in Egypt.

Barton found himself in a peculiar position. He learned at once that his father had left all his property to Evan Swift; but, Evan Swift having died without issue, Barton as heir at law would possess the property. He also knew that Grace Bingham was engaged to Swift, and had she been married to him she would have inherited the Kenwood fortune. In other words, the quick succession of events after his uncle's death had transferred the property from Grace to Barton.

Kenwood, who had given up the profits accruing to a large business and had expected that his father would ignore him in his will, found no difficulty in making up his mind to relinquish his fortune to the girl whom fate had deprived of it. He called on his old chum, and he thought she received him with a repressed fervor. It occurred to him that perhaps since he had the fortune she had expected her betrothed would have she might bring herself to take him instead of the man she had lost.

"Grace," he said, "my father did not intend to leave me his property. It was Evan's by right, and had Evan lived a little longer it would have been yours. I shall assign it to you."

Grace took a good deal of time in which to frame her reply. Indeed, it seemed hard to make it. Finally she astonished Kenwood by speaking as follows:

"Barton, if I am not disagreeable to you, you may keep your fortune and do what you think right by me at the same time."

"What do you mean?" asked Barton, opening his eyes.

"A marriage between us would right all."

Barton's eyes were fixed on her intently for some moments. Then he took her in his arms.

"It's all right," he said, "but how could you do it?"

For reply she went to a desk, took up a document lying on it and handed it to him, saying:

"I received this last evening."

He unfolded and read it. It was a will executed at Cairo three days before Evan Swift's death, leaving her his sole heir.

Had Grace proceeded in the manner usual in such cases the affair might have had a different result. She realized that if it were known to Barton she and not he possessed the fortune he would not have proposed to her.

A Singular Advertisement

It Led to a Curious Result.

By RYLAND BELL

When I was graduated from the medical college which made me an M. D. I concluded for the purpose of broadening my ideas to spend a year in travel. Then I would return and begin where I had left off. I have never regretted this resolution. Being an observant man, travel was of great advantage to me, teaching me that all I had learned thus far was not necessarily true, that I had only begun to learn and that if I lived a thousand years I would not know it all.

If there was any one country that interested me most of all it was India. The Hindus seemed to me a unique people. Like other semicivilized races, they have lived for ages in their ruts, while their narrow scope has led them into correspondingly restricted investigations. What European civilization has produced in the way of assistance to live the Indians have brought forth for death. We have discovered a number of antitoxins; they have brought out an innumerable number of poisons.

While in India I gained through a friend admission to the palace of a rajah. He seemed to take a fancy to me, probably because he found in me a good listener. I said nothing except to guide him into channels that interested me. Drugs being in the line of my profession, I was pleased to hear what he had to say about the various Indian concoctions, and these included poisons.

I confess I was surprised to learn of the various substances that will produce death and the knowledge the Indians have acquired in handling them. I was interested in the flower to breathe which is death; in the process of a poison, taking increased doses of which one may become impregnated with it, and would be poisonous to others. But my attention was chiefly arrested by a poison the rajah mentioned which left no trace.

Why was I especially interested in a traceless poison? Because I expected to spend my life in a land where there are, as there must always be, murder and suicide. I knew that as a medical practitioner I would be constantly called upon in such cases, and the words "traceless poison" meant a great deal to me—not that I expected to have anything to do with such a thing, but it at once occurred to me that if a knowledge of it should be common property it would be the chosen instrument of murderers and suicides.

I did not bring home with me a sample of the rajah's traceless poison. Indeed, I was not interested in it for itself. I did not even care whether or not there was such a thing as a traceless poison. But on my return to America I began some experiments concerning the interest that would be taken in procuring it by various persons. I took the precaution to notify the chief of police in the city in which I lived of my intended experiments, and he was much interested in them. Then I wrote an advertisement announcing that a physician whose "sands of life had nearly run out" and who had spent his life investigating the various aids and enemies to human life had succeeded in discovering a poison that left no trace. He had concocted a powder which, if scattered about in places infested by vermin, would destroy them, leaving no odor or other disagreeable consequences.

I was well aware that those who would attempt to buy my powder would do so for other purposes than killing vermin. My advertisement had appeared but once when I received a number of applications for it. Nearly all of the replies were so worded as to conceal the identity of the writers. Some of them gave directions as to sending the powder which were evidently calculated to cover its route to its receiver.

After accumulating a number of replies to my advertisement I took them to the chief of police, who seemed to be able to tell what each writer intended to do with the poison. But this was a simple matter, because whether or not the intention was legitimate could be divined by the care the writer took to conceal his or her identity. The chief desired to investigate a few applications, and I gave them to him. I was not interested in the criminal side of the matter and never took the trouble to ask him for results. I confined myself to the investigation of those from persons who seemed intent on destroying themselves, for in such cases I might save some one whose mind had become disordered either by mental or physical suffering.

I received one advertisement that I puzzled over a great deal. The writer was a woman, and from certain expressions she used I judged that she was young. The chirography, the language used, a certain refinement in her methods of expressing herself, indicated that she was a lady. Even the paper on which she wrote bore a crest. There were but three possible reasons why any one should want my powder—murder, suicide and for the extermination of vermin. The writer of this note could not keep out of it a tinge of melancholy; therefore I argued that she wished it for the purpose of suicide.

I did not get all this information from her reply to my advertisement. I drew the applicant into a correspondence on the subject by telling her that I could not supply the powder without assuring myself that the person receiving it had no intention of injuring any one with it. She wrote me in reply to this that she had not an enemy in the world, adding that she was rather to be pitied than hated. This admission indicated her object.

Pretending to be satisfied that she did not wish the powder for any illegitimate purpose, I wrote her that if she would let me know where I could find her I would take it to her. She made an appointment for a certain day at a certain hour. I was not to leave a message or anything else with one who should admit me unless it was my correspondent, and I would know her by a rose she would carry in her hand.

If I had needed anything to convince me of the refinement of the lady this method by which I might identify her would have served. Besides, it was evident that, while she had no intention of using the poison on any other than herself, she did not wish it to fall into other hands, lest it might do damage.

I called at the exact time specified. I found a domicile that could be the home of one of the higher class only. I rang the bell, and in a few moments the door was opened.

I often revert to the moment I first looked on the face and figure which then were before me—a girl not over seventeen, a willowy figure, a face every feature of which was as perfect, it seemed to me, as it could be made, but withal tinged with a distressing melancholy. She held a rose in one hand and extended the other for what I was supposed to have brought her. And yet on seeing a young man of the appearance of one of her own class she seemed surprised.

"May I not come in for a few moments?" I asked. "I need to give you some directions as to the use of the powder."

She closed the door and led me to a little reception room beside it. She did not ask me to be seated, evidently desiring to secure what I had agreed to bring and have it over with. Nevertheless I looked at a chair and said nothing till she indicated that I might use it, and she sank into one herself. Then I said:

"Perhaps you inferred from my advertising that I am a quack, but I assure you I am a recent graduate of a first class medical college. After graduating I went to India, where I procured the drug of which I have been writing you. Its effect depends on the quantity taken, just as a cup of coffee will make a person nervous, while a very small quantity will induce sleep."

She looked at me in a melancholy dream, and I saw that she had not taken in what I said. I had brought a small box of a harmless powder with me and drew it from the bag of medicines I carried with me.

"This powder," I said, "if taken in large quantity will kill; if taken in small doses it is a very remarkable remedy, a remedy that is not generally known in this country. I got it in India; could get only a limited quantity, and so decided is its effect that I never give it without knowing all about the requirements of the person who uses it."

"I do not require a remedy. I require"—

"Pardon me; you do require a remedy."

"I have taken remedies till I am tired of them. They do me no good."

"Perhaps this one will. But, as to that, I cannot tell without knowing your symptoms."

I had a hard struggle, but in time gained such information concerning her case as I required and was convinced that she was suffering from a nervous condition that had brought on temporary melancholia. She needed a bracing atmosphere and to be convinced that there was really nothing the matter with her.

"This medicine of mine," I told her, "has some very singular features connected with it. In addition to what I have said about it as a curative, it needs to be taken on an elevation. It is just the season for visiting the mountains. Go there and take a box of my medicine with you. I will make it up into small doses such as you need. Take one of these doses each day, and I guarantee you that within a month you will be as well as ever."

She seemed to be encouraged. I knew that all depended upon my reaching her family, but not through her directly. I left her to think over what I had said, took her name and the same day called on her father at his office. When I told him that his daughter had been trying to use me to help her commit suicide and at the same time cause her family to believe that she had died a natural death he shuddered. Since I had probably saved her—thus far, at least—from taking her life, I found him quite willing to listen to what I had to say about the case. I convinced him that it would be well to try my prescription, and we laid a plan by which a trial was brought about. I arranged with the young lady to see her occasionally, pretending to be a stranger to those of her family who were with her, having a secret understanding with them on the subject. I made a number of such visits, and at every one I found my patient improved. Indeed, I flatter myself that my presence was more effective than my medicine, though the main curative was the mountain air, which I have found very beneficial in similar cases.

The interest in my story for myself is that it has been begun and ended for a purpose, that purpose being to tell how I met, wooed and won my wife.

One of the replies to my advertisement that I turned over to the chief of police prevented a murder.

EVOLUTION OF FASHIONS.

Changes In Silhouette—Reign Of The Petticoat—New Short Skirt.

Each season brings its changes in modish outlines, sometimes amounting only to minor, but telling modifications of prevailing styles. Occasionally there is what seems like a complete transformation, a revolution, yet careful study reveals that this seemingly startling change has been creeping in gradually, noted only by the few.

Take skirts for instance. A short time ago women were wearing a sheath so tight that walking, even with mincing gait, was difficult, hence they were split at the foot at front, sides or back. Then the dancing mania seized everyone and to permit graceful motion tightness at the hips was replaced by easy fullness, and the split at the foot increased to the horror of conservatives. To modify revelations not by any means uniformly attractive ruffles of chiffon and lace were introduced constituting a becoming screen where the skirt parted. These fluffs were arranged in various ways, some suspended from knickers and garters, but more draped on scant filmy skirts. For these no garnitures were too elaborate or fussy, and behold the tabooed petticoat had come back to its own, with more than its old prominence. So dainty indeed were these that it seemed a sartorial sin to cover them with the outer skirt and the showing of a thin fluffy petticoat at the bottom of the dress is now a notable feature of fussy frocks.

LACES AND CHIFFONS.

Most of the chiffon ruffles and lacey trimmings seem to be deserting the waist and lodging at the foot of the skirt, where the very scant ruffled and lace trimmed lower skirt hugs the ankles closely, bringing the foot into special prominence, creating another insistent demand for pretty hosiery nda foot wear, as if the need for smart foot dressing were not already sufficiently emphasized by prevailing skirt lines.

MODISH COMFORT.

Both short and long sleeves are fashionably endorsed but when once warm weather arrives, people lean naturally toward things that are at once modish and comfortable, so short sleeves, and silk gloves are alike firmly established in the field of fashion.

Whatever the length of the glove wanted it is best to avoid bargain counter offerings of uncertain weave and no special make which are pretty sure to fit badly and look so poor, that they quite spoil one's whole appearance. A particularly good looking new silk glove of reliable cut and quality which is beautifully finished, is marked "Gloversilk," and is fast becoming a favorite with clever women who are satisfied only with the best.

NEW SHORT SKIRT.

Short skirts especially those that lap over, cork-screw fashion are newly launched in Paris, and will shortly be seen here. These are not slit and the irregular line at the foot is a far cry from the old ideal of "hanging even all around." One of the smartest, developed in the fashionable striped material, and worn attractively with a flaring short coat of plain material cleared the ground at front and sides by seven inches, while the narrow, square cut, back panel touched the heels, another skirt on similar lines had the bottom finished with five large shallow scallops, the middle one at the centre back marking the heel length, the front assuming the upward dip, familiar in fussy frocks but arranged to run diagonally toward the side, in the fashionable corkscrew line.

The simple but smart gown shown in the illustration is of taffeta in the Nile green shade that is again fashionable, and can be made with or without the narrow train. The under bodice is in this instance developed in Valenciennes all-over lace and insertion, but it would be equally pretty in chiffon, or shadow lace. One advantage of this model is that no trimming is required outside of the dress material.

Self trimming is one of the notes of this year's modes that is appreciated by the girl with long wants and short purse strings.

FULTON TO BE LAUNCHED

Will Be Christened by Granddaughter of Robert Fulton

Another launching will take place Saturday morning at the Fore River shipyard when the submarine tender Fulton a new type of boat for the United States navy will receive her maiden dip. The launching will take place at 9 o'clock and will be witnessed by a distinguished party from New York and Boston.

The sponsor for the Fulton will be Mrs. Alice Crary Sutcliffe a granddaughter of Robert Fulton for whom the tender is named. Robert Fulton was the inventor of the first steamboat and also of the first known workable submarine. Mrs. Sutcliffe took a prominent part in the Fulton centennary celebration in New York five years ago being one of the patrons. At that time she unveiled a tablet erected to the memory of Robert Fulton at his birthplace at Lancaster, Penn.

The tender represents a somewhat small-sized steamship. She is designed especially to convoy submarines to act as a repair and supply ship and also furnish sleeping quarters for crews of the submarines in the squandron assigned to her care. She is about 200 feet long and will be propelled by oil engines and is the first of her type in the navy.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Miss Bessie Brooks to Marry Malcolm Hinkley

The sixth member of the Delta Sigma club of the Quincy High school to announce her engagement is Miss Bessie Brooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Brooks, the announcement being made Thursday evening at her home 778 Hancock street, on the occasion of the birthday anniversary of Miss Brooks.

The home was prettily decorated in red, white and blue; from the centre chandelier there was suspended a mammoth firecracker which when exploded disclosed the names of the bride elect and the groom elect, Malcolm Hinkley of Atlantic, and tiny pictures of both, which were presented to each guest.

Military whist was enjoyed during the evening, a dainty luncheon being served late in the evening. The members of the club presented Miss Brooks with one of Wollace Nuttings pictures as a birthday souvenir.

School graduations are near at hand. The grammar graduations will take place on Friday, June 19, and the High graduation on Wednesday evening, June 24.

NO FINES REACHED CITY

Quincy Junk Men Paid on Account of Costs

An order introduced at the last meeting of the City Council by Councilman Thompson calls for the reimbursement of $10 each to David Silverman and Isaac Cutler for the aomunts paid by them for violation of an ordinance which had been declared illegal.

According to Clerk of the Court, Lawrence Lyons, Silverman and Cutler did not pay a fine in the cases The court record shows that the cases against the two men were placed on file on the payment of $10 each on account of costs. In cases where a direct fine is imposed, the fine, less the amount of costs is paid to the City Treasurer, but in cases like the two mentioned above, the amount paid on account of costs goes direct to the county treasury, and therefore no part of it comes to the City Treasurer of Quincy.

In view of these facts it is hard to determine just how the City Treasure is to reimburse these men, money which the city has not received, unless out of the goodness of heart the sum was voted and charged to unexpended balances, or similar account.

Had a straight fine been imposed, the money would have come to the city, and it might be all right to give it back to them ,but in the present case ia would mean a straight appropriation of $20. There is also considerable question if the city can legally pay out funds in such cases.

MANY LAUNCHINGS SCHEDULED AT SHIPYARD

PUBLIC INVITED TO DIP OF NEVADA

Uncle Sam's Super-Dreadnought of 27,000 Tons to Go Over July 11

Should Be a Big Gala Day For City of Quincy

Many launchings are scheduled to take place at Quincy the next few weeks, but of greatest importance is the launching of the United States dreadnought Nevada on Saturday, July 11, at 1.30 p. m. This was announced today at the office of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, builders of the battleship.

It is expected that the launching of the Nevada will be attended by a large crowd as the public is to be admitted to the Fore River works to witness the ceremonies. The yard is to be closed down at 10 o'clock in preparation for the event. Admittance will be by ticket only which may be secured from the Fore River works.

Tasker L. Oddie Governor of the state from which the battleship derives its name will be a guest at the launching. His niece, Miss Eleanor Anne Siebert, daughter of Fred L. Siebert, Reno, Nevada, has been selected by the Navy department to name the dreadnought. The launching party will come from Reno by special train.

The Nevada will be one of the largest vessels in the United States navy, having a displacement of 27,000 tons. She measures 583 feet in length and has a breadth of 95 feet. Propulsion is by Curtiss turbine engines which are required to drive the battleship at 20 1-2 knots per hour. The main armament consists of 10 14-inch guns.

Gun slides for the Nevada's equipment were brought to Boston by the United States naval collier Caesar from the Washington navy yard and are to be discharged at Fore River today. The slides are for the main turrets. Three of the 14-inch guns will be mounted on each.

TO CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

Quincy council, K. of C., will observe its 20th anniversary in Colonial hall Monday evening with a banquet and entertainment. The special guests of the evening will be State Deputy Louis A. Watson, District Deputy and State Secretary-elect Daniel J. Gallagher, Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, Hon. William S. McNary who as district deputy instituted the council on June 6, 1894, and Rev. Fr. John J. McAnarney, the first grand knight, and the first local man ever appointed a district deputy, will act as toastmaster. An effort to reach all of the surviving charter members has been successful and among those that will attend will be Timothy J. Ford, first deputy grand knight of the council.

Senator Langelier voted against the Boston city council bill passed to be enacted in the Senate on Friday. It is now in the hands of Gov. Walsh.

LAUNCHING OF FULTON

Liberty of the Sea Will Be Happiness of the Earth

Submarine tender Fulton, the first of a new type of boats built for the United States Navy was successfully launched at 9 o'clock this morning at the Fore River shipyard in the presence of a number of notable guests from New York, Boston and other cities. The launching hour was set considerable earlier than usual on account of the tide so that the guests from New York came over on Friday remaining in Boston until this morning when they came to Quincy by automobiles.

The guests were welcomed by President Powell on their arrival, who presented Mrs. Alice Crary Sutcliffe, the sponsor with a magnificent bouquet of roses. There was particular significance in the selection of Mrs. Sutcliffe as sponsor for this new type of boat, for she is a grandaughter of Robert Fulton, who was the inventor of the steam propelled vessel, as he was also the first to build a workable submarine. Aside from the specially invited guests, there were quite a number of the wives of the department heads at the works.

The sponsor and other guests were immediately escorted to the launching stand that had been erected about the bow of the vessel. This stand was as usual, decorated with red, white and blue bunting, while suspended from the bow of the ship by a tri-colored ribbon, was the usual bottle of wine.

By the time the guests had arrived at the launching stand, the workmen beneath the vessel had about completed their work, and little remained but for the signal to saw away the sole pieces that the Fulton might slide down the greased ways for her maiden dip in her native element.

President Powell gave the signal, promptly on the stroke of 9 o'clock, and a second later came a ripping sound as the sole piece was torn asunder and the vessel began to move down the ways. Then it was that Mrs. Sutcliffe smashed the bottle of wine, giving the vessel her name by saying "I name thee, Fulton; liberty of the sea will be the happiness of the earth."

Hardly a minute elapsed before the Fulton was riding gracefully in the water, surrounded by tugs which took her to the fitting out dock, where she will receive her finishing touches.

After the launch a luncheon was served by the Fore River Corporation. Later an opportunity was afforded the guests to look about the shipyard after which they left for Boston.

The Fulton is the first naval vessel built in this country that is equipped with the Diesel heavy oil burning engines, a type of engine that has heretofore been confined to submarines, until the New London Ship & Engine Co. of Groton, Conn., incorporated them in its plans, following in the footsteps of equipping merchantships in Germany.

The engines are of large size adapted for use on merchant vessels. The Fulton, unlike most naval vessels was built to merchant specifications, and will be the mother ship of a fleet of submarines. She will also act as a repair and supply ship and as being used by the crews of the submarines for sleeping quarters.

She is about 226 feet in length, and her engines are designed to develop 1,000 horse power, giving her an estimate speed of about 14 knots, per hour.

Th government originally intended that the vessel should be named Niagara, but when later the old Niagara was raised from the bottom of Lake Erie and used in the centennial celebration in New York some years ago, the department decided to name her Fulton. Mrs. Sutcliffe, took a prominent part in this celebration being one of the patrons, and at that time unveiled a tablet erected at Lancaster, Penn., to the memory of Robert Fulton, her grandfather.

SLIGHT FIRES.

A fire in a pile of rags in the cellar of Max Pevan's home on Water street on Friday afternoon alarmed the inmates and box 137 was sounded at 3.15 o'clock. There was no work for the department when it arrived. The extra blow when the all out was sent in was caused by the mechanism of the box catching because the circuit is overloaded and frequently works incorrectly.

A lace curtain which waved in the breeze of an open window in the home of Samuel Cohen of 91 Sumner street caught first from a lighted candle last night. Excited neighbors ran to Washington and River streets and sounded an alarm from box 72 at 8.45 o'clock. Mrs. Cohen extinguished the fire with a pail of water before the department arrived. The damage was slight.

COURTSHIP OF DOROTHY QUINCY

Under Direction of Emery L. Crane of Historical Society

The June meeting of the Cociety of the Colonial Dames Friday afternoon at the Quincy Homestead was a notable one and was very largely attended. Not only were members of this society present in large numbers but many of the members of the Quincy Historical society who were special guests.

The principal feature of the afternoon was the presentation of a drama under the direction of Emery L. Crane, entitled "A Colonial Courtship" which depicted two episodes in the life of Dorothy Quincy. It was particularly fitting that the play should be given its first presentation at the home of Dorothy Q. dealing as it did with incidents at the time of Hancock and the Revolutionary period.

The play was given in two scenes. The first was laid in the parsonage at Lexington on April 19, 1775, the night before the famous battle. It discloses John Hancock and Samuel Adams who have fled from Boston to escape the British talking over affairs of the Colonies with Rev. Jonas Clarke. Hancock however appears to take but little interest in the conversation, as his interest is centered upon non-appearance of his aunt and Miss Dorothy Quincy who were to have joined him there and he is manifestly worried over their non-appearance.

As the conference is about to end, Madam Hancock and Dorothy arrive, having been delayed by the coach breaking down. Dorothy is naturally tired from her journey, and Hancock nervous and somewhat irritated, with the result that they quarrel.

Just at this juncture Paul Revere arrives on the scene bringing the news that the British have started from Boston. In an instant all is excitement and the confusion is added to by the hasty appearance of a Minute Man who rushes in to get the key of the church in order to ring the alarm.

Adams urges Hancock to hasten in order to escape, but the latter somewhat out of spirit by his quarrel with Dorothy refuses until finally persuaded by Dorothy. The Rev. Jonas Clark is sent to the common by the ladies to fight in the ranks of the Minute Men while they view the battle from the window. The curtain falls on the first act as the opening shots of the battle are heard.

THE SECOND SCENE.

The second scene is at the house of Thaddeus Burr, Esq., at Fairfield, Conn., August 28, 1775. Madam Hancock and Dorothy are the guests of the Burrs, as is also the Burr's nephew, Aaron Burr. The latter improves his opportunity and makes violent love to Dorothy, and urges her to elope with him. Dorothy's mind however is on Hancock with whom she has quarrelled. Burr in pressing his suit reads Dorothy a poem which he says was written in her honor.

While Dorothy is still wavering Hancock arrives on the scene and from him Dorothy learns that Burr has wooed other women with this same poem. This naturally piques Dorothy, who persuades Hancock that they should be married at once and the play closes as they leave the house to walk to the ministers.

The play was prettily staged and well acted, and was received with an enthusiasm seldom accorded an amateur performance. Much of the credit for the admirable performance is due to Mr. Crane, who staged it, and to Miss Georgiana Lane, who did the coaching.

In the cast were several who have appeared on previous occasions before Quincy audiences at amateur performances, the cast being as follows:

Samuel Adams — Emery L. Crane
Rev. Jonas Clark — Bruce Saville
John Hancock — Alan Arnold
Madame Lydia Hancock — Mrs. A. Isabelle Davis

With several avowed candidates for the Legislature already in the field, or at least in a mood to respond to the call of the people if it is loud enough. With one of last year's mayoralty candidates delivering a lecture on taxation and with one of this year's candidates advertising a four-legged chicken in his shop window, it does not look as if either job would go by default for want of candidates next fall.

If the people of Quincy were entitled to have a say in the matter, they would insist upon Col. Anderson remaining on the lecture platform notwithstanding his four score years, so much do they enjoy hearing him. But his rights are entitled to first consideration and he has earned a rest. It is to be hoped that he may be seen, although not heard in public for many years to come. He is Quincy's grand old man.

COLLEGE GIRLS AND MARRIAGE.

Traditionally the college girl is supposed to be a little indifferent to matrimony. In the earlier days of women's colleges there was some reason for this point of view.Marriage statistics of leading women's colleges were collected some twelve years ago. These showed that of the alumnae of a group of colleges who had been out of school 20 years, only 55 per cent had married. As most of the marriages occur within this 20 year period this did not seem a large proportion.

A young woman who was graduated from one of the most famous of the women's colleges, said recently that there had been a change even within a short time. When her class was graduated, only five were known to be engaged to be married. Of the class of 1914, 25 to 30 were positively known to be engaged, and a lot more were under serious suspicion.

The college girl type is changing. Formerly it consisted mostly of young women who desired intellectual achievement. They stayed at home studying Keats and Tennyson, while their sisters took moonlight walks. They were not averse to matrimony—provided some fellow came along who could swap views intelligently about Browning. But such candidates were not always handy.

Today a girl's college is not merely a place of intelectual achievement. It is a center of a very lively social life, which attracts many elements besides the bookworm and the grind. The college girl is quite as likely to be a "Fluffy Ruffles" as any other.

Suitors are liberally received, and unless the gaps in their early education are too obvious, embarrassing questions are not asked. This does not mean that the modern college girl shirks her book work. On the contrary, she does herself the greatest credit by the industry and intelligence with which she pursues the course of study.

FIRE DESTROYS RARE RELICS

Destruction of Ancient Church Is Blamed Upon Suffragettes

KING GEORGE'S INTERROGATOR

She Is Identified and Found to Have Been Alone Concerned In the Incident—British Public Opinion Inflamed by Numerous Outrages Perpetrated by "Wild Women"

London, June 6.—The ancient and historic church at Breadsall, dating back to Norman times and containing many priceless relics, was destroyed by fire. Suffragettes are suspected by the authorities, as explosions similar to those caused by the bombs usually employed by the "arson squad" were heard before the fire was discovered.

Some weeks ago a suffragette meeting in Breadsall was broken up by boys, and it is generally believed that the women burned the church for revenge. Among the things consumed by the flames was an ancient chained Bible, while monuments to Erasmus Darwin, the poet, and other Derbyshire notables were ruined. The church register, dating back to 1573, was saved, as it was kept in the rectory, which escaped the flames.

In consequence of militant suffragette attacks churches in many parts of the country are being closed except for the usual Sunday services. A sample of the notices posted by the rectors is as follows:

"Owing to dastardly outrages by frenzied criminals who have no regard for God or man, this church will be closed except during the hours of divine service."

Miss Mary Blomfield, daughter of Lady Sara L. Blomfield, widow of Sir Arthur Blomfield, was the woman who created the sensational scene at Buckingham palace, throwing herself on her knees before King George and Queen Mary, exclaiming: "Your majesties, for God's sake, do not use force."

Miss Blomfield alone was concerned in the incident. Her sister, who also attended the court, was requested to leave the palace after the occurrence, despite the fact that she took no part in the demonstration. She left without making any protest.

Officials of the palace are on the verge of nervous prostration as the result of Thursday night's scene, and the lord chamberlain's department has taken every precaution to circumvent any attempt to repeat the performance.

It is understood there is no ground for further action against Miss Blomfield, except that she will be banned from future court functions.

The sisters obtained admission to the court in the ordinary way through application to the lord chamberlain's department. Intimate friends of Miss Mary Blomfield knew that she had strong militant suffrage tendencies, but none of them had dreamed that she would go to the extreme of interrupting such a customarily dignified function as a royal drawing room.

Palace officials are so anxious to hush the matter up that they specially intimated their desire that no further publicity should be given to the incident.

The recent discourtesies shown by militant suffragettes to the king and the burning down of many churches have inflamed public opinion to a remarkable degree. The British people have been still further incensed by what is regarded as the well grounded belief that much of the work of destruction is done by hired hands well paid for their work out of the bulging coffers of the Women's Social and Political union.

On several recent occasions police magistrates have warned suffragette prisoners that if they had not been protected by the police they would almost certainly have suffered at the hands of the irate public.

Much lucrative American tourist business is being lost by London hotels and storekeepers because of the suffragette raids on the public museum and art galleries. The American embassy is inundated with applications for special permits to visit the sealed institutions, but American Ambassador Page is unable to give any assistance in this way, and consequently disappointed visitors from across the Atlantic are packing their trunks and leaving for the continent.

"GIRL WITH A HOE"

MUCH-USED BRIDGE OUT OF COMMISSION

Defective Cable Destroys Structure In Boston Suburb

Boston, June 6.—Thousands of motorists bound to and from Revere Beach and the North Shore, and the 35,000 residents of districts served by the Elevated lines running from Boston to Stoneham, Spot Pond and Wellington, will be compelled for months to make detours, owing to the destruction by fire of the Wellington bridge, spanning the Mystic river between Somerville and Medford.

The Somerville side of the bridge was saved, but the Medford end was totally destroyed, the estimated loss being $75,000.

It is understood the legislature will be asked at once to appropriate funds to rebuild the bridge, which affords the shortest and most convenient route between Boston and towns and cities to the north.

A defective cable ignited the woodwork of the bridge and the flames, fed by the oil-soaked wooden blocks of the paving and fanned by a stiff northwest gale, rapidly gained headway.

Montreal Executive Demands Money Due as Two Weeks' Salary

Montreal, June 6.—Mederick Martin, recently elected mayor of Montreal, struck and refused to attend a meeting of the board of control until he received $325 due, he says, as his salary for the two weeks during which he was kept from taking office by troubles over recounting the ballots cast at the last city election.

He sent back a check for $840 salary, with notice that the city would be sued for the balance of the full amount due from the day his term began. The board of control promised the mayor that he would receive his full salary of $20,000 for the two-year term.

INSURANCE MAN MISSING

Strauss left his office May 28 and has not been seen since. The reason for his disappearance is not known and a reward of $1000 has been offered for him.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

Now that the school committee members have to deliver addresses at the graduating exercises, perhaps there will not be such great desire hereafter to be elected to the board. It is easy to hand out diplomas to the little ones, in silence, but making a speech before a critical audience is another matter.

Grand Carnival of Women's Club Next Week

The program for the grand carnival, "Around the world in eighty minutes" to be held on Thursday, June 11, will be the closing event of the season of the Quincy Woman's Club. This progressive club has undertaken many novelties during its existence, but the carnival noted above is expected to eclipse all previous events, in the way of novelty of entertainment, affording a program as it does replete with pleasing surprises and situations.

Starting from the Womens' Clubhouse on Presidents Hill, which has been named "America" the automobiles will whirl those who participate in the carnival "around the world" making stops at Italy, Russia, England, Japan, Germany, Holland, Greece and Jamaica. At each of these countries attendants attired in the costume of the country will be in attendance, and articles pertaining to that country will be on sale. At each of the stopping places there will also be refreshments on sale.

At America one may see a demonstration of dances by American artists with fancy dances by American Jockies and Puritans. There will also be general dancing, a Marshmallow toast by the Wompatucks, Quosset and Pasonagessitts, orchestra, also Uncle Sam and other attractions.

Leaving America the auto will land you at the home of Mrs. William H. Doble, the land of sunshine and music which will represent "Italy." There will be Italian music and dancing, fortune telling, and Italian fruits.

The home of Mrs. George E. Pfaffmann as Russia is next in line. Here there will be Russian folk dancing. Russian maidens and Russian Tea.

England will be found at the home of Mrs. Theophilus King. Her Royal Highness, the Queen, will honor the occasion by her presence and receive and welcome the voyagers. The minuet will be danced by twelve young ladies.

At Japan, the home of Mrs. George W. Stone, one may hear choice bits of Mikado sung by a chorus of Japanese girls, and vocal and instrumental music. There will be dancing in the garage, and tea servad both in Japanese and American style.

Germany will be found at the home of Mrs. Robert E. Park, where there will be music by a German band, a German supper served in the open air, and dancing on the piazza.

Holland, the land of the tulips and windmills will be found at the home of Mrs. Thomas Fenno. Here there will be Dutch dancing by ten little Dutch maidens, songs by Mrs. Ripley, free souvenirs for the children, etc.

Greece will be found at the home of Mrs. Henry H. Kitson. Here will be found a classic setting with entertainment on the lawn.

The last country to be visited will be Jamaica at the home of Mrs. E. W. Sheppard of Greenleaf street where there will be fancy dancing by Spanish maidens, plantation dances, canoeing on the pond and other attractions.

Some will doubtless take the trip early in the day, but there are others who will postpone the delights of the journey until late in the afternoon. To these it will be welcome news to learn that they may satisfy the pangs of hunger, which always follow a sea voyage, at Germany and Greece. At Germany there will be potato salad, sandwiches, Frankfurts, rye bread, pretzels, pickles, cheese and "near beer," and while partaking of these, German songs will enliven the evening. At Greece a supper will be served to all who desire at a small cost.

To those who cannot spare time for the entire trip around the world it has been arranged that they may visit any of the countries, without the automobile ride. It has also been arranged so that voyagers may make their starting point from any country desired. Tickets may be obtained from drug stores in different parts of the city. Other particulars are advertised in this issue.

BRIEFS

In the district court this morning the liquors seized from Alfred Laurier some days ago were forfeited to the Commonwealth.

The City Council Committee on Streets met Friday evening and acted upon the petitions for the acceptance of number of streets upon which public hearings had been held. There will be reported at the next meeting of the council, Monday, June 15. There will be no meeting of the council on Monday evening.

One visiting the City Clerks office this morning hardly recognized in the beardless official behind the desk, the genial City Clerk has always sported a dinky mustache, but as they were not in style in Colonial times he had to part with this facial adornment in taking the part of Samuel Adams at the play given at the Dorothy Q mansion Friday afternoon.

The Girls vested choir of Bethany Congregational church held its first business meeting at the home of Miss Gertrude Shaw on Butler road, Friday evening. Miss Marjorie Welch was chosen president and Miss Ada Williams and Martha Wilkinson members of the social committee. The dramatic committee elected was Miss Hazel Livingston, Miss Marion Bolster and Miss Gladys Hunt. Several amateur productions will be given during the season.

BOYS AND GIRLS MASS.

First communion was administered to nearly 200 boys and girls of St. John's parish at the seven o'clock mass in St. John's church this morning. Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, pastor, celebrated the mass and he was assisted by Rev. Fr. Florence McCarthy. During the mass hymns were sung by the children. The sight as the children entered the church was most impressive, all of the girls being dressed in white and wearing floral wreaths, and the boys black suits and white gloves. Rev. Fr. Coan delivered a short sermon on the sacrament of the Holy Eucharist.

OYSTERS LIVE AND DEAD.

And the Big Difference It Makes When They Are Eaten Raw.

Speaking about keeping hotels, Simeon Ford, who won fame and fortune in that profession, had this to say about the succulent oyster:

"People have come and sworn to me that we had the finest oysters in the world. Now, that was all tommy rot. We had the same oysters any one else could buy, although we always bought the best we could. But there is this about the oyster: When he is good he is very, very good; when he is bad he is very, very bad.

"There is a whole lot of difference between a dead oyster and a live one. When an experienced opener puts his knife into an oyster he can tell in a second if the oyster is really alive. He can even tell by the resistance whether the oyster is in prime condition or only fair. If the oyster was not just right our men would throw it away, and they used to throw away about one oyster in every four that we bought.

"A dead oyster isn't fit to eat raw. But the live oyster that is opened right in front of you and stays on the plate just long enough to squeeze a drop of lemon on, he goes down your throat a juicy and a palpitating treat. That's only possible when you stand up to an oyster bar.

"Why, in some of our gilded palaces they begin to open oysters after breakfast and you get them for dinner. Well, you get them, that's all, and they're dead! A corpse is a corpse, even if it is kept on ice."—Henry M. Hall in New York World.

METHOD OF TEACHING.

Wherein Our Educators Often Put the Cart Before the Horse.

This simple principle (spirit before discipline) we sometimes seem to lose sight of in our education, consistently putting the cart before the horse.

In the days of the renaissance, when people had caught a vision of a new world, they studied Greek with avidity because they believed it was a path into that world. We reverse the process. We set our students to grinding Greek verbs in order that in an indefinite future they may come in contact with the Hellenic spirit, when what they wanted was a touch of the Hellenic spirit to transform the Greek grammar into a book of magic.

We set them to cutting up earthworms when what they wanted first was to have their thoughts turned toward the mystery of physical life. We put them to studying Italian, trusting that in due time a knowledge of that language may prove an incentive to read Dante, never perceiving that a craving for Dante might be made the strongest incentive for studying Italian.

We red ink and blue pencil their compositions, believing, with a touching faith, that there is some intrinsic beauty in correct spelling and perfect punctuation that will appeal to the undergraduate mind, and all the while what they needed was a sense, however dim, of the wonder of literary creation.—Harold C. Goddard in Century.

A. H. Dunham and his newsboys at Houghs Neck now sell the Daily Ledger. It will be delivered at the cottages in the afternoon.

FOR SCHOOL CHAMPIONSHIP

Washington Wins from Massachusetts Field

The Massachusetts Field school, leaders of the national grammar school league, lost its first game of the season Friday afternoon when it was defeated by the Washington school team of the American league 2 to 0 in the first leg of the series for the championship of the city at Merrymount Park. The second game will be Monday afternoon.

Over 500 pupils witnessed the struggle between the two undefeated teams, and heartily cheered their favorites. The game was one of the snappiest every played at the park, and all the players exhibited a fine knowledge of inside ball.

Only three balls were hit to the outfield and but one error was made in the game. The winning runs were sent across by Washington's hitting in the pinches.

Barr and Ryan of Washington and Coupel and Vibut of Massachusetts Fields figured in the double plays of the afternoon. The battery work of both teams was exceptional. A high wind swept the field and made the fielding difficult at times. The score by innings:

Washington 1 0 1 0 0 x—2

Batteries—Gamble and Thayer; Ganzel and Ranagan.

BILLARD PROFIT "OUTRAGEOUS"

Ledyard Says He Made Protest to Morgan Personally

"MAGIC POWER" OF MONEY KING

People Set Him on Pedestal and Gave Him Undue Worship—Predicts Bad Days Ahead For Express Companies—Little Light Is Shed on New Haven Road Transactions

Washington, June 6.—Lewis C. Ledyard, J. P. Morgan's personal friend and the man, as it definitely came out, who drew Morgan's will, sat in the witness chair in the New Haven investigation by the interstate commerce commission and completed his statement as to certain matters within his knowledge relative to the road.

Ledyard and Chief Counsel Folk, who as usual conducted he examination, did not get on particularly well together. The bitterest clash took place when Folk attempted to secure a statement from the witness that the American Express contracts with the Boston and Maine, which were extended for twenty years during Ledyard's directorship of the Boston and Maine, were the lowest in New England except the Maine Central, the percentage of division being thirty-five.

"I don't know," replied the witness, and the subject was dropped, the witness nearly exhausted from exasperation, Folk beaming at the newspaper men.

Ledyard said he thought the $2,750,000 paid to John L. Billard for "profit" was outrageous, and said he made this protest to Morgan personally.

The late J. P. Morgan was just a human being and the practice of setting him on a pedestal and worshipping his "magic power" was not due him, Ledyard said.

Ledyard often opposed J. Pierpont Morgan, he said, and he pooh-hooed the "worship" of Morgan by many of his business associates.

"Many people seem to have an undue appreciation of the magic of Morgan," said Ledyard. "They set Morgan up on a pedestal because of his power."

Prolonged examination of Ledyard failed to shed and more light on New Haven transactions. Ledyard told the commission express companies would have to quit business on account of the parcel post and the new zone application of rates, unless the railroads give the companies a more equitable share of the revenues.

Walker D. Hines, an attorney of the New Haven, placed several present officials of the road on the stand, and when adjournment was taken Commissioner McChord announced that he wanted to conclude this phase of the case today. Hines said the only other witness he wanted heard was L. S. Miller, president of the New York, Westchester and Boston railway.

T. D. Cuyler, a New Haven director, placed on the stand by Hines, said the meetings of the board were conducted in a regular, orderly and careful manner. Arthur E. Clark, secretary of the New Haven, identified and read minutes of directors' and committee meetings.

Figures designed to show that between June 30, 1903, and June 30, 1912, the profit and loss surplus of the New Haven had decreased only about $1,300,000, were read by John M. Tomlinson, general auditor of the road.

HUERTA EXPECTED TO BLOCKADE PORT

Great Shipment of War Supplies Sent to Tampico

Washington, June 6.—The Ward liner Antilla and her enormous cargo of arms and ammunition furnish the critical element in the Mexican situation. Carranza is believed here to be delaying his answer to the Niagara Falls mediators until he finds out whether he is to receive the arms.

Admiral Mayo, with his fleet lying off Tampico, expects Commodore Azueta, with the Huerta fleet, to attempt a blockade before the Antilla reaches that port.

Mayo's instructions, up to the present unmodified, are to prevent any blockade. His instructions are elastic. "Hold Tampico as an open port," was the only order sent to him.

If the Huertista gunboats attempt a blockade they will be warned to retire. If they do not, then the pretence of a cessation of hostilities between Huerta and the United States may come to a sudden end.

Two More Army Aviators Killed

Dijon, France, June 6.—Lieutenant Giron and Private Rion were both killed when the aeroplane in which they were scouting capsized near here. Both were members of the aerial corps of the army.

SHIP STRANDED IN HEAVY FOG

North Land Pulled From Reef and Sails For New York

HOLES PUNCHED IN HER BOWS

Wrecking Tug Brings Passengers Safely Ashore and They Continue Their Journey by Train—Empress of Ireland Disaster Made Them Fearful of Another Disaster

New London, Conn., June 6.—The Eastern line steamer North Land, which grounded off Bartlett's reef during heavy weather Thursday night, was pulled off the rocks last night by four wrecking tugs, after her cargo had been lightered.

The North Land came to New London harbor under her own steam and later she proceeded to New York for repairs. The forward plates of the vessel were started, but the damage is not extensive.

The captain and crew remained aboard their ship, as it was seen that she was in no danger whatever.

The passengers, seventy-five in number, were brought to port by the wrecking tug Tasco, which had been summoned by wireless to the aid of the stranded steamer. They started in a special train for Boston and Portland.

The passengers were in a happy frame of mind when they found themselves safely ashore. While on the stranded North Land, they said, and with the Empress of Ireland disaster so fresh in mind, they were in constant fear that another storm would come up and endanger their lives.

The North Land grounded on Bartlett's reef, ten miles southwest of here, about midnight. There was a heavy fog over Long Island sound and, according to members of the crew of the tug Tasco, the North Land for this reason got too close to shore. There was little alarm among the passengers.

When the Tasco reached the scene it was decided to transfer the passengers, as it had been found that the North Land was damaged about the bows and that her forehold was making water.

An attempt to haul off the North Land was made at high tide yesterday by three tugs, but the steamer remained hard and fast on the reef. Arrangements were made to lighter the cargo so that at high tide in the evening another effort to float the vessel could be made.

It is believed here that the grounding of the North Land was due to the captain mistaking, in the fog, the Bartlett's reef light for that on Gull island.

When the steamer struck she jammed well onto the reef, and the pounding on the rocky ledge soon punched holes in her bows through which the water entered the forward compartment.

DIVERS TO INSPECT WRECK

Cruiser Will Send Men Down to Sunken Empress of Ireland

Quebec, June 6.—The cruiser Essex left here today for Father Point, where her divers will attempt an inspection of the wreck of the Empress of Ireland. The Essex has a modern outfit for submarine work and her divers will be able to penetrate the corridors of the sunken vessel. Nearly 800 bodies are believed to be in the hulk.

Only eight minutes were allowed Ronald Ferguson, the Empress' wireless operator, to call for assistance before the dynamos failed, according to his story.

The commission to inquire into the Empress of Ireland wreck will open its sessions at Quebec on June 16. This was officially announced in an Ottawa dispatch.

THE LARGEST BRITISH SHIP

Aquitania Ends Maiden Voyage by Docking In Quick Time

New York, June 6.—Without the slightest mishap to mar her welcome at the end of her maiden voyage here, the Aquitania of the Cunard line, the largest vessel afloat flying the British flag, swept up the harbor and to her pier.

At an average speed of 23.10 knots, she made the 3181-mile passage in five days seventeeen hours and forty-three minutes.

The Aquitania is the third largest vessel in the world. She brought 2019 passengers. Nine hundred and two feet long, the Aquitania is surpassed in length and tonnage only by the Vaterland and Imperator.

With fourteen tugs working alongside after she had passed up the river the Aquitania was only fifteen minutes in making her berth and it was only forty-five minutes after passing quarantine that her passengers were walking ashore. The passengers were all enthusiastic over the new sea giantess.

THIEVES GET $5200 CASH

Highwaymen Pull Off Big Jobs In New York and Brooklyn

New York, June 6.—Two cashiers of the local office of the American Can company were held up as they were leaving the New York County bank and robbed of $2200, part of the company's weekly payroll fund. The highwaymen jumped into an automobile and escaped.

Three thousand dollars was taken by highwaymen from two clerks of a Brooklyn paint company. Arthur S. Barlow and Harold Beeh, the two clerks, had just returned from a bank with $3000 in small bills in a satchel. As they entered the factory two men leaped out of a touring car and with pointed revolvers told them to throw up their hands. A third confederate stepped inside the factory and ordered every one to keep quiet. Barlow dropped the bag and in the confusion the robbers escaped with the money.

VOLUNTEERS GET 3000 MAUSER GUNS

Daring Irish Yachtsman Puts Them Ashore In Ulster

Belfast, June 6.—The army of the Ulster "Volunteers" was strengthened by the addition of 3000 Mauser rifles as the result of a daring gun-running feat of an Irish yachtsman.

A portion of the consignment was landed to the south of Donaghadee, sixteen miles from Belfast, but most of the rifles were delivered straight onto the quay at Belfast and the cases were removed under the eyes of the police by specially selected volunteers.

CUTS OFF TELEPHONES

How an Enthusiastic Father Celebrated Birth of a Son

Atlantic City, N. J., June 6.—The birth of a baby in the home of Matteo Gionotti of Merlonville cut off all telephone service in that section for the greater part of a day, to the rage of 200 subscribers.

The boy arrived at the Gionotti home shortly after midnight. There was nobody around to help Matteo celebrate, so he grabbed his shotgun and proceeded to blow holes in the atmosphere.

The phone company's wire chief discovered the lines were useless when he came to work. He seafched until late in the afternoon. Then, opposite Gionotti's place, he found the broken wires hanging loose from the pole, with about a pound of shot in the cross arm. Gionotti was forgiven.

PATRIOTIG EXERCISES

N. E. O. P. Lodge Entertain Patriotic Societies

Quincy lodge New England Order of Protection, held its annual patriotic exercises in Electa hall on Friday night in the presence of large delegations from the patriotic societies of the city and friends.

Col. Edward A. Anderson, who was to have been the speaker of the evening was unable to be present because of a slight cold which affected his voice and the speaker of the evening was George W. Penniman of Boston, grand warden of the Massachusetts lodges and a former resident of Quincy. His theme was "Patriotism."

Commander Dr. C. R. Marstin headed a large delegation from Post 88, G. A. R. Other organizations represented were Paul J. Revere Woman's Relief Corps, Col. Abner B. Packard camp, Sons of Veterans; Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans. Many visitors from places other than Quincy attended.

Warden Chester C. Brown, who presided during the evening, sat in the centre of one of the prettiest flag arrangements ever devised in Quincy. On each side were the colors of the organizations, while smaller flags and bunting draped the rostrum. A large flag formed the background.

Mr. Penniman in his address paid an eloquent tribute to the Boys of '61, and urged all to nurture a spirit of patriotism.

The feature of the entertainment program was the flag drill by members of Lizabeth A. Turner tent, Daughters of Veterans, of South Boston. The intricate figures were executed with a skill that provoked a patriotic demonstration.

Popular song hits and patriotic airs were rendered by a kitchen orchestra composed of the Misses Marion Orr, Helen Croucher, Beatrice and Margaret Buzzell, Annie and Edith Lowe, Gertrude Allen, Elsie Whitehead, Elsie Thompson and Gladys Parlee.

Readings were given by Mrs. Isabelle V. Sawin and violin solos by Miss Marion White. Both were well applauded.

After the exercises closed, dancing was enjoyed until midnight, music being furnished by an orchestra.

The committee was Mrs. Isabelle V. Sawin, chairman, Miss Belle Maria Henderson Mrs. Hary A. McNeil, J. M. Ellison, Hoyt N. Macauley and Edmund C. Sawin.

PERMITS FOR NEW BUILDINGS

Parties intending to erect new buildings, or to remove or alter existing buildings should bear in mind that it is necessary before work is commenced to obtain a permit from the Inspector of Buildings. Many parties seemed to have overlooked this important provision of the building ordinance as well as the fact that a violation of the ordinance might result in a heavy fine if the case was brought before the courts. The Inspector does not desire to summon any one into court for the violation of this rule, although it may be necessary in order to make people understand that the ordinance must be lived up to.

The Inspector has found quite a number of cases of late where the owners or builders have neglected to obtain a permit before beginning work and in some cases the building is well along before this most necessary part is attended to. Builders are therefore cautioned that if they wish to avoid court proceedings they shoud not neglect to obtain a permit before beginning work.

The following permits were issued by the department this week.

Harry L. Rice, addition to dwelling, Whitwell street.

Mrs. Rosie Silverman, dwelling, Sumner street.

PROFESSOR SEWALL OF THAYER ACADEMY

Professor Little Gives Sketch of His Life on Founders Day

Memorial Also to Gen. Sylvanus Thayer the Founder

Saturday, a large company of former and present pupils of Thayer academy, with their parents and friends, assembled at Thayer academy to take part in the exercises connected with the Founder's Day program. Atkinson's orchestra rendered "The Tales of Hoffmann"—Offenbach and the "Humoreske"—Dvorak, finishing their part of the program with a spirited march.

Marion Alberta Bradford, president of the class of 1915 gave an interesting synopsis of the life of Gen. Sylvanus Thayer and welcomed the audience in the name of the Senior Middle class.

Since the exercises last year Jotham Bradbury Sewall, D. D., head master at Thayer from 1877 to 1896, and trustee from 1899 to 1913, has passed away. The remainder of the exercises were a memorial to his life and service. As Gen. Sylvanus Thayer because of his efficiency was called "the Father of West Point," so Prof. Sewall could be just as appropriately termed "the Father of Thayer academy. Called from his chair at Bowdoin college to assume the duties of head master at Thayer, he demonstrated the fact that he was a profound scholar and an excellent teacher. He was a high thinking, plain-living gentleman and was both sympathetic and helpful to those about him. The loving memories all have of him is the best possible eulogy which could be given.

Head Master William Gallagher before introducing the speakers told of his own pleasant associations with Mr. Sewall, and read a letter from Schuyler Hazard of the class of 1886, who regretted his inability to be present but expressed his approbation of the memorial service.

Prof. George T. Little of Brunswick, Maine, a former pupil of Prof. Sewall, gave a most eloquent address taking the life and qualities of the man into careful consideration and giving a most complete account of his accomplishments.

Hon. Asa P. French, a special student at Thayer in 1877, and a member of the board of trustees, spoke with reverence and affection of Mr. Sewall, and gave a most eloquent address.

The planting of ivy concluded the stated program.

The members of the Senior Middle class were seated on the platform which was suitably decorated for the occasion. Besides the speakers and Dr. Gallagher, Judge Albert E. Avery, a trustee of Thayer academy was also on the platform.

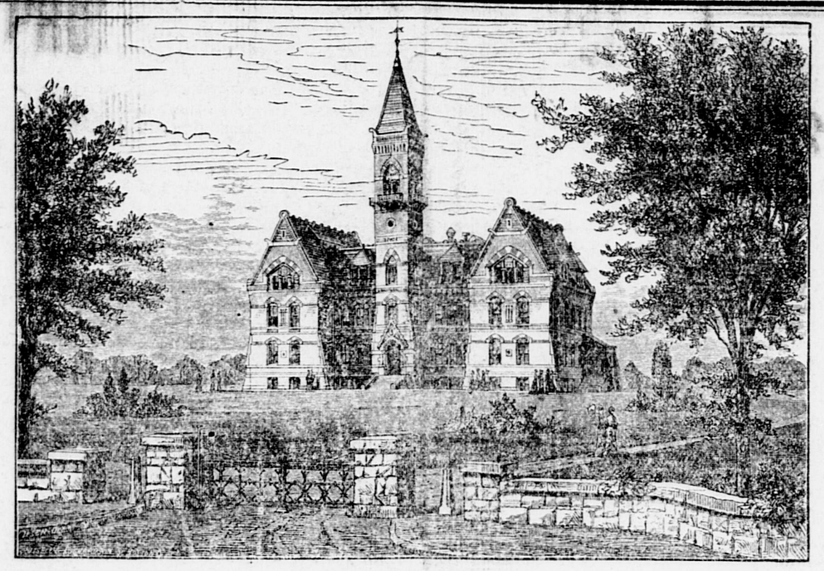

The Senior Middle class includes: Elmer Ellsworth Abercrombie, Fedora Rose Bianchi, Richard Bower, Marion Alberta Bradford, Augustus Warren Clapp, Marion Edwards, Harold Talbot Greeley, Mary Louise Hagney, Maurice Aiken Hall, Hettie Vawter Harris, Lena Gertrude Hunt, Helen Alexander MacDonald, Eugene Reginald McLaughlin, Rachel Clare McMahon, Isabella Josephine Murray, Raymond Percival Palmer, Lester Edwin Parker, Priscilla Allison Ring and Alfred Reed Worthen.

Later the pupils and guests assembled in the hall for dancing. Dr. Gallagher announced that on Saturday, June 13, the first examinations for admission were to be taken. Saturday, June 20, the exercises of the graduation class are to be given at Thayer academy at 2 o'clock.

PROF. LITTLE'S ADDRESS.

Professor Sewall was well born. He sprung of that choice seed which God sifted from a whole nation to sow the wilderness of New England. His ancestor, Henry Sewall, the third of the name, came to Massachusetts Bay with a letter from Richard Cromwell, Lord Protector of Great Britain, commending him as a clergyman of the County of Southhampton, "Personally known to us to be laborious and industrious in the work of the ministry and very exemplary for his holy

CANVASSING FOR FUNDS

Fourth of July Committees Busily at Work

An enthusiastic meeting of the Fourth of July association was held Saturday evening at the rooms of the Board of Trade, President Eugene R. Stone presiding.

Reports of several of the chairmen were made all of which indicated that everything was moving rapidly and indicated that this year's celebration would be as successful as in the past. Collections are underway and several collectors made reports. This morning the canvass for funds will begin in a systematic manner.

A letter was received from Mayor Miller stating that on account of his health he could not take any active part in the celebration, and would reluctantly have to decline acting as chairman of the reception committee. Joseph L. Whiton, president of the City Council was unanimously elected as chairman of the reception committee.

A letter was received from Senator Lodge, in reply to a request of the association that a battleship be assigned to Quincy waters on the Fourth. The letter stated that if it were possible a battleship would be assigned to Quincy. There were now two battleships at the Charlestown Navy yard and if possible one of these might come to Quincy.

Harry G. Studley, chairman of the childrens entertainment committee, reported that he was arranging to have entertainments for the children in nearly all of the wards. It was planned to have an entertainment in either Kincaides theatre or Music hall, at one of the theatres at Houghs Neck, and possibly the theatre at the Quincy Shore boulevard for the Wollaston children.

Chairman Gilson of the publicity committee reported that he had his small six page circulars, giving the full days program, well in hand, and that as soon as the details relative to the parade and some of the minor matters were settled they would be issued. The parade has not been definitely settled as yet. It is hoped however to start the morning parade not later than 7 o'clock in order that it may be over before the sun gets too high.

Another meeting of the association will be held at the rooms of the Board of Trade on Thursday evening and a general invitation is extended to all interested in making the celebration a success to attend.

ANNUAL PARTY FOR CHILDREN

Given by Wollaston Women's Club at Alpha Hall

The annual children's party of the Wollaston Women's club was held Saturday afternoon at Alpha hall and was attended by upwards of 135 children, and a very pretty party it was. The little girls for the most part were dressed in white, while the boys wore white trousers and blue coats.

The party was matronized by Mrs. Charles M. Bryant, Mrs. Percy Davidson and Mrs. Nathan G. Nickerson. The ushers were George Nichols, Russell Sears, Eaton Chase, Joseph Barbour, Stacy Nicholson, Sumner Robinson, Malcolm Anthony, Robert Anthony, Frederick Cheever, Malcolm Barry, George Sumner, Amory Wight and Norman Blake.

The children assembled at 2 o'clock and forming in a line marched past the matrons where they were presented. The younger children then adjourned to Union hall where there were games of various kinds in charge of Miss Alma Hatch, while the older children enjoyed dancing in Alpha hall under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Coriew. At 3 o'clock the children again formed in line in Alpha hall and marched to Union hall where refreshments were served. During the refreshments Miss Hatch entertained them with a whistling solo. The afternoon was in charge of Mrs. J. K. Barbour assisted by the matrons.

WINDOW DEDICATED TO AMELIA L. BUMPUS

Special Sermon at Bethany Church Sunday Morning by Rev. B. A. Willmott

Topic—She Hath Done What She Could

A beautiful memorial window, the voluntary gift of the people of Bethany church and friends of the late Amelia L. Bumpus was dedicated Sunday morning, the whole service being in memory of Miss Bumpus who for many years was a deaconess of the church and a friend of the sick and needy.

The flowers for the occasion were contributed by Miss Little from her gardens on Spear street, where Miss Bumpus lived so many years. The music was appropriate for the occasion, the choir singing the anthem, "Jehovah reigns;" a male chorus "Some blessed day," and the hymns being specially selected.

The Scripture reading of the pastor was the eighth chapter of St. Mark, and he took his text from the 14th verse "She hath done what she could" The story in this chapter was chosen for the memorial window. It was between periods of darkness that the woman comforted Jesus. Goodness must be the test of life; it is the only thing that lives. Three words illustrate the life of Miss Bumpus, simplicity, sympathy and sincerity. She was the last one who would want a eulogy Only the strong dare to be simple. Do not think wealth or social distinction is the ultimatum. The many who received from her a flower when they were christened i nthis church should remember her simplicity. Like Dorcas her great desire was to minister to the sick and the poor. Her sweet face was always cheering. She clothed many and brought them to Sunday School. She shared the sorrows of others. The world knows a church and a people with sympathy. All the world loves a lover, a love which is sympathetic.

With her there was no note of insincerity. We all miss her. Whatever she said and did was sincere. Where sham and veneer are so common it is refreshing to find one so sincere, a sincerity born by the grace of God. Jesus Christ was her central thought. She trusted sublimely and it inspired her to live, and this is why we dedicate this window. Not because she died rich; not because she was a scholar; not because of distinction, but because she went about doing good. She spent all for Him, as is shown by her much marked Bible. Thanks for these people. Quincy is known to the world as the City of Presidents, but in Heaven may be known as the home of Amelia L. Bumpus and other humble souls.

"Amelia L. Bumpus
1835—1913"

At the top of the right panel of the window is an open book upon which are the words "Holy Bible." At the bottom in a smaller panel are the words: "She hath done what she could."

The outside of the window is protected from the elements or any substance that might injure it, by wire glass.

COLLEGE EXAMINATIONS.

Formal examinations for entrance and promotion in schools and colleges are a good deal out of favor. They were often too much a memory test. A pupil might fritter away the most of a year in desultory study. Yet by feverish work, aided by a good memory, he might so cram his mind with names and dates in the final weeks that he could secure a bare passing mark.

Yet markings based on daily classroom work are not always ideal. Easy going teachers dislike or fear to apply rigid standards, and a whole class slips through easily.

Examinations ought not to be so much a query for facts, as a test whether the student has entered into the spirit of the study. In a moment of flustration, he may not be able to give the date of a battle. But if his study has been of any use, he must be able to state in his own language, the causes that led to a war. Such examinations put backbone into a course of study, and impress on the student the need of definite accomplishment.

TRIP TO CALIFORNIA.

To become familiar with our own beautiful country before we take a trip abroad is always wisdom on the part of American travellers. Such an opportunity offers itself to the public, before taking the "Trip Around the World," on Thursday; if all will go to Bethany chapel on the evening of Tuesday, June 9, at 8 o'clock. Marion Fessenden Miller will guide the audience to California by way of New Orleans, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona; returning via the Grand Canyon. Beautiful views of the country will be shown. Music en route will be furnished by Winnifred Flagg Symonds, a pleasing soloist, with Jennie Hocking Hunt at the piano. Homemade candy and punch, to delight and refresh all the travellers, will be sold by Unity Circle, King's Daughters, under whose auspices the trip is planned.

☞A. H. Dunham and his newsboys at Houghs Neck now sell the Daily Ledger. It will be delivered at the cottages in the afternoon.

NO REASON FOR IT!

You Are Shown A Way Out.

There can be no reason why any reader of this who suffers the tortures of an aching back, the annoyance of urinary disorders, the pains and dangers of kidney ills will fail to heed the word of a resident of this locality who has found relief. The following is convincing proof.

A. T. Preston, 33 Park street, Wollaston, Mass., says: "Jumping on and off a wagon a good deal caused kidney trouble. Some years ago I had to give up work and I was in pretty bad shape. The kidney secretions were discolored and caused much pain in passage. I tried remedy after remedy, but got no relief. I was discouraged; suffered awfully at times and did not know what to do. Finally I read in the Quincy paper an advertisement for Doan's Kidney Pills, telling of what they had done for a man I knew. I got a box and began taking them. I noticed a change at once. The passage of the kidney secretions became less frequent at night and caused less pain. I passed two gravel stones; one of them as large as a pea. I kept on taking Doan's Kidney Pills and I can now sleep better at night and am improved in every way."

HIGH SCHOOL PUPIL DEAD

Walter E. Halvosa the Son of Philip Halvosa

The grim reaper for the second time within eleven weeks has invaded the family of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Halvosa and on Sunday claimed Walter E., their 16 year old son, a member of the sophomore class of the Quincy High school. His death was the end of a long fight in which sickness triumphed over medical science.

Like his brother Philip, who died in his 21st year, Walter E., until two years ago was as healthy as the normal youngster. When he became ill his case was diagnosed by physicians as one form of tuberculosis. The best treatment available was obtained and for a while it seemed as though his recovery would be assured. Then Dr. Friedman the German scientist came to America and Walter took his treatment three times. In each case a slight improvement was noted, but the strain of the final relapse was too trying for his weakened constitution.

Walter E. Halvosa observed his 16th birthday on April 22. He was graduated from the Coddington school of this city, and on entering High school became a very popular member of the class of 1916. He was a member of the Boy's Club of the Christ Episcopal church.

His funeral will be held from the home of his parents at 292 Whitwell street Wednesday afternoon and services will be held in Christ Episcopal church at 2.30 o'clock. All the requests made of his parents just before his death will be granted. Burial will be in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

TICKETS ARE IN DEMAND

People Enthusiastic Over Trip Around the World

Many parties are being made-up to take "The trip around the world" under the auspices of the Quincy Women's club on Thursday, and there is a good demand for tickets. By purchasing tickets early the committees will know how to provide.

Tickets for the round trip, including admission to all the countries, are sold for 50 cents; children under 15 years, 25 cents. For those who do not wish to take the automobile trip, tickets of admission to any country may be obtained for 25 cents; children, 10 cents.

People may startfrom America or any other country by automobile between 2 and 5 in the afternoon, or between 7 and 10 in the evening. The trip will be made in this order America, Italy, Russia, England, Japan, Germany, Holland, Greece and Jamaica and tourists are requested to plan their trip so as to stop over for supper at Germany or Greece.

At the various countries the committees are preparing entertainment and refreshments after the customs of those countrnes. All in all, it will be an educational and enjoyable trip for Quincy people.

DO IT CONTINUOUSLY.

Reporting Thursday to the National Electric Light and Power convention, an investigating committee declared that prosperity and development depended to a great extent on newspaper advertising.

The report was read by P. P. Kemble of Cincinnati, who said that every central station must advertise in order to grow. "Yearly or semi-monthly appropriations should be decided upon," he explained. "Use all newspapers, but concentrate on those giving the best audience. Limit the advertisement to one idea, spend the time and money to get the copy right, regardless of the cost of getting the argument to the reader. Advertise continuously."" life and good conversation." "Laborious in the ministry;" could any phraise better portray his godly descendant in the fourth generation, Reverend Jotham Sewall, the grandsire of our friend, whose active service as an evangelist extended over a half century, who labored in fourteen different states and over four hundred towns, and after his ordination at thirty-eight years of age, delivered over twelve thousand public addresses. Fragrant memories of this humble and devout servant of Christ still linger about the hamlets of Maine, his native state.

Lawyers who fail to receive copies of the Quincy Ledger, Patriot of the Braintree Observer containing their legal notices, because of slowness or miscarriage of the mails, can find them on file for their convenience at the Probate Court in Dedham. PROFESSOR SEWALL

More learned, but not more loved, was another clerical ancestor, the famous Puritan divine, Reverend John Cotton. Dean of Emmanuel College at Cambridge, rector of St. Botolph's in Old Boston, driven from home by Archbishop Laud because he would not kneel at the sacrament, this teacher of the First Church in Boston for nearly twenty years, would seem to have bequeathed to our friend his love of learning, for he was a critic in Greek, wrote Latin with elegance and could discourse in Hebrew. He was wont to study twelve hours a day and, as his grandson, Cotton Mather, writes, loved "to sweeten his mouth with a piece of Calvin before he dropped to sleep."

Yet all of Professor Sewall's ancestors were not Puritans and Roundheads. In the direct maternal line was a strain of cavalier blood. It appeared in Thomas Bradbury a gentleman-adventurer from Essex. He came to Agamenticus in the Province of Maine in 1634 as the agent of Sir Ferdinando Gorges. And when the ambitious projects of that enthusiastic colonizer came to naught and the walls of the many-officered city of Gorgeana failed to rise, he joined himself to his countrymen in Essex of Massachusetts, took a wife of Puritan descent and became captain of the militia in the frontier town of Salisbury. Here he spent his long life as teacher, magistrate and judge. The greatest adventure of his career came at its close. In that brief but terrible panic known as the Salem witchcraft delusion his wife fell under suspicion as a witch. To oppose the persecution was to ally oneself with Satan. "Terror was in every countenance, fear haunted every street." There is nothing in the court records of that woeful period more pathetic than the unavailing testimony, simple and steadfast of this white-haired old man in behalf of the wife of his youth. "She hath lived with me five and fifty years. She hath been both prudent and provident, of a cheerful spirit, liberal and charitable. Being now very aged and weak, grieved under afflictions, she may not be able to speak much for herself, not being so free of speech as some others."

There apeared for the legal defense of this good woman, another ancestor of our friend, Major Robert Pike. This "new" Puritan, as his biographer terms him, criticised the persecution of the Quakers, though he did not sympathize with their views· was the opponent of clerical tyranny, though a a firm believer in the right of church members to rule the state: and in the darkness of this delusion protested against the insufficient testimony on which these judicial murders were accomplished. In him was that clearness of vision, breadth of mind and sanity of judgment which re-appeared in the subject of this address two hundred years later. When the so-called conflict between science and religion seemed likely to divide a group whose special purpose and aim were one, a prominent Boston lawyer said to him, "We can ill spare you, Sewall, for you are the connecting link between the saints and the sinners."

Fortunate in his ancestry, Professor Sewall was fortunate also in birthplace and boyhood home. Ancient Sheepscot was once termed the Garden of the East and while the long granite ridges of the modern township of Newcastle hardly suggest that title to a stranger, between them lie fertile valleys; and the two great tidal rivers which bound her territory on the east and the west, also enclose on the landward side charming alluvial peninsulars, wooded and arable. Here, on a hill overlooking the Damariscotta, Professor Sewall was born October third, 1825. Here his father, Rev. Jotham Sewall, the second to bear that name, ministered to a parish territorially large, numerically small, worshipping in two churches several miles apart. Here, when only eleven years of age he lost his mother, Rachel Bradbury Sewall, a woman who left him the best of gifts, the vivid remembrance of a loving, Christian spirit. Here there grew up in the plain and simple mode of life made necessary by the place, the period, and the meagre salary of the father, a family of ten children.

It was a Puritan home. The training was of the strictest. Punishment must follow infractions of the family law, regardless of extenuating circumstances. It doubtless happened, as in other such homes, that conscientious observance of a theory on the part of the father sometimes aroused a feeling of injustice done him on the part of the child. Incidents soon forgotten by one, rankled long in the breast of the other. Yet five of the sons became preachers of the gospel and one of the daughters an eminent Bible teacher. Could one ask for a better test of the genuineness of the Christian spirit that animated the household? Home life had one attraction rarely possessed in those days. Parents and children were good singers. Music was the one art cultivated. Prayers were held morning and evening. And so sweet was the praise that rose from their voices united in song that a visitor at their morning devotions once remarked that he wished prayers would last all day.

Though not a college graduate, the father was an accurate thinker and a man of scholarly tastes. He held his children to a high standard of thoroughness. Boys began their Latin and Greek at an earlier age than now and although the instruction in the academies at Newcastle, Bluehill and Yarmouth, which Professor Sewall attended in succession, varied much in quality, his youthful study of the classics made them an integral part of his mental equipment.

But his education was not merely a matter of books. Earth and air and sea had a large part in it. Despite his Puritan ancestry and training, the lad was one of those happy pagans, who saw "the sea bare her bosom to the moon," who heard "old Triton blow his wreathed horn." who felt the hills gather up the howling winds and quiet them when the setting sun tinged with pink the feldspar ledges in the West. For sincere love of nature is of slow growth. Had not our friend sat long at her feet in childhood he would not so keenly have enjoyed her society in later years.

From the academy Professor Sewell passed at eighteen to the college. His four years at Bowdoin were years of high thinking and plain living. Entirely dependent upon himself pecuniarily, he met the necessary expenses of the course by teaching during the long winter vacations and by other gainful occupations during the short summer ones. To the intimate comradeship of under-graduate life he brought a genial and cheerful spirit, a heart of kindness, not averse to fun, a mind alert to the outer world and ready to express itself in speech, and a skill in vocal and instrumental music that gave easy entree to society without the college walls. These were happy years. He made many friends. It is not a mere chance that both of his surviving classmates write letters of eulogy glowing with the affection that seventy years have not dimmed nor the width of a continent lessened. He gave much and he gained much from his college mates. How could this be otherwise when they were such real and dissimilar men, as Professor Charles C. Everett, Senator William P. Frye and General Oliver O. Howard? He gained most, and here I include the period of his tutorship, when he was most closely associated with them, from President Woods and Professor Goodwin.

The president had not long returned from his travel year abroad during which his mental and social gifts had won him recognition in the literary circles of Oxford, the royal court of France and the Palace of the Vatican. He had discussed theology with Newman and Pusey, had held their skeins of worsted for the daughters of the Citizen King at the Tuilleries and talked in Latin with Pope Gregory XVI. From him, as one of his college-mates beautifully expressed it, "they received such an influence as breathes in the aisles of old cathedrals. They learned what reverence means and loyalty. They felt the dignity that is behind the family and the state." His influence in private was made more powerful by the genius revealed in his public addresses. The orator who moved the literati of New England in his Phi Beta Kappa address at Cambridge in 1840 by an oration that for half a century held a place in tradition as the most powerful and polished the listeners had ever heard—was at his best in the parting addresses to his own senior classes. These were given without notes and generally in the gathering twilight of the college church. "As the shadows fell the arches of the church seemed to rise and dilate with the rich music of his voice and the thoughts that he uttered more rich and mellow even than it, united to place the listener in a world which was very foreign to every day life and from which he could not fail to go forth quickened and elevated."

As President Woods was the embodiment of culture, so Professor Goodwin stood for mentality. He came a young man to the chair of modern languages, a professorship filled for seven years with marked success by the poet Longfellow, and he left at Bowdoin eighteen years later the reputation of the most stimulating and interesting teacher the college had known. Of him Professor Sewall's classmate, Rev. Dr. Egbert C. Smyth, wrote "His memory seemed to be unfailing and inexhaustible in its resources, his thought clear as crystal, his words apt, his manner cheerful and spirited. His acquisitions and fluency of discourse were proverbial. How or when he gathered so much knowledge we knew not. He seemed to possess himself of the library without being obliged to read the books as other men must. His acumen, his power of sarcasm and his logical persistence were as remarkable as his stores of information."

To his association with these men and others of hardly less marked individuality and moral excellence, I ascribe the rapid development of that love for learning, interest in things present and past, appreciation of the beautiful in art and literature, wideness of sympathy, devotion to the truth, which made him the man of culture whom we knew and loved in later years.

From the wide plains of Brunswick Professor Sewall ascended the narrowing valley of the Androscoggin and became the principal of the Lewiston Falls Academy, a position he held for two years. Here his good fortune gave him a home in the household of the Rev. James Drummond, a former teacher of his at Lincoln Academy, and a pastor whose memory still abides in the community as the "saintly Drummond." It also gave him a life companion and sympathetic helpmeet in the person of his hostess' sister. Her love for flowers and birds was like his. The region was as yet hardly touched by the march of industrial development which has since harnessed the falling waters of the two rivers that unite their courses at this point. From the plateau on which the academy stood, girt about with a few of the primeval pines that had been saved from the first settler, there were delightful winding walks through a local vale of Tempe, where the raging Peneius was replaced by a noisy trout stream and where instead of laurel the flower lovers found the rare yellow ladies slipper, to the so-called Pulpit Rock, a hemlock covered cliff projecting into the river just as the latter made a plunge downward of forty feet, and affording embryo orators opportunity like Demosthenes on the sea shore to test their voices in the roar of many waters.

Professors Sewall's call to the ministry has seemed to me the call of ancestry and environment quite as much as that of his own heart and conscience. A lover of God and man, that path then seemed the only one for him to walk in. His theological studies were begun at Andover but he soon went to that school of the prophets at Bangor which his reverend grandsire had labored to endow and which had been the training place of his father and brothers. Here he graduated in 1854. His teachers in theology were devout and able men, one at least of a markedly conservative type. After a few months of further study on Andover Hill as a resident licentiate, he was called in February of 1855 to his first and only pastorate, that over the Central Congregational Church of Lynn. A volume from his pen published towards the close of his ministry entitled "Evenings with science and religion," contains four discourses delivered to his people. They display careful and extended reading of the assaults of Science on the accuracy of the Bible, much study and thought on the side of the defence, and in the main a firm adherence to the conservative views. They are free of any charge of bigotry or narrowness by the repeated admission that an inerrant Bible may be and often is wrongly interpreted, that each succeeding generation may find new light and truth where its predecessor found none. Of the impression made by his ten years of labor his successor in the pastorate, Rev. Rr. A. H. Currier, writes as follows: "His genial personality marked by unfailing courtesy and gracious manners gave to their homes and the circles of young people, a model of Christian manhood. I found the atmosphere of the Church redolent from his recent presence and pastoral kindness. He had labored faithfully among them

Among Our Churches

FIRST PARISH CHURCH.

There was a very large attendance of parents, friends and parishioners at the First Parish church Sunday morning at the annual Children's Sunday exercises. The program, an exceedingly interesting one, opened with a processional during which the Sunday School marched in singing "Onward Christian Soldiers" taking seats that had been reserved ofr them in the centre aisle. The program was as follows:

Organ Prelude
Processional— "Onward Christian Soldiers"—Sunday School.
Hymn—"God of the Earth"
Scripture Reading
Hymn—"I think when I read"

During the singing of the hymn—"Heavenly Shepherd" by the choir the following children were christened by the pastor of the church: Eleanor Lane, Samuel Morse Lane, Seth Cushing Lane, Seth Haskell Low, Franklin Faxon Ogden, Richard Porter, Ruth Mitchel Souden.

Pupils whose attendance has been perfect during the past year: Harvey Curtis, Lewis Curtis, William Curtis, Earl Dunham, Ruth Dunham, Constance S. Fryer, Norma M. Johnson, John T. Lane, Arthur C. Nicoll, Edith M. Nicoll, Karl Pfaffmann, Charles H. Putnam, Isabella M. Putnam, Ramon B. Putnam, Robert A. Putnam, Harlow Schenkelberger, Maria Schenkelberger, Roxanna Schenkelberger, William E. Smith, Mildred E. Stoddard, Philip W. Weixler, Richard C.Weixler.

The christening service was by the minister, Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson, each child being presented with a rose, a symbol of the unfolding of a beautiful life.

Superintendent Harry Porter, spoke briefly of the Sunday School work, and what the school was trying to do. It required the assistance of the parents and friends, and he hoped that the years to come may accomplish even better results than in the past.

Rev. Mr. Hudson spoke briefly to the congregation and Sunday School. It was exceedingly important, he said, that you should help the children realize what this church means to the city and country. This old church has done more in the history of the past to build a great people for the city, commonwealth and country than any other institution in this country. You parents should teach your children this. He urged the children to try and be as beautiful as these flowers. God's special flower was found in the sick room, in the rooms of the shut in, that brought joy and comfort to human hearts. You children can be God's flowers in carrying comfort and pleasure to the shut-ins. There are three things that are eternal, Faith Hope and Love, which we call charity. They abide forever. Cultivate these three in your hearts and make them grow. Make God's flowers grow in your hearts. They will make your life beautiful and all around you beautiful.

Diplomas for perfect attendance at Sunday School during the past year were presented. In presenting the diplomas, Mr. Hudson said that this year, through the generosity of a lady interested in the Sunday School books would be presented to those having a perfect attendance during the past year, and on the inside cover of the book would be found the diploma.

It was announced that the annual Sunday School picnic would be held Saturday afternoon at Merrymount park at 2 o'clock. One of the features of the picnic would be a game of ball between the boys and men.

Sunday afternoon the members of the school and friends met in the chapel at 2 o'clock when a special car was taken for the Braintree woods for a study of the birds. They were accompanied by Mrs. Pfaffmann who gave an interesting talk on birds.

ST. MARY'S.

A class of eighty-eight boys and girls of St. Mary's parish received their first communion at the eight o'clock mass in St. Mary's church on Sunday morning. The celebrant of the mass was Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy, director of the Sunday School at which they are pupils. Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, pastor, assisted Father Duffy, and gave a short instruction. During the mass hymns were sung by the children. The class was about evenly divided. The girls were dressed in white, and wore veils and wreaths of flowers, and the boys wore black suits and white gloves.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

"Satisfaction from the Christian Ideal" was the theme of Dr. Sneath's most helpful and optimistic Sunday morning talk.

We are living, said Dr. Sneath, in an age of discontent, when men and women, everywhere, amid all kinds of opportunities for satisfaction, are still longing for something else, and there is that which satisfies. It is that which comes from the Christian ideal.

First, this ideal offers to every individual the opportunity to enter into unfettered communion with God who understands us and sympathizes with us, as no human soul can.

Second, it gives us the opportunity for a life of earnest endeavor. Always the happiest men are the busy men. There is no chance for laziness in the true Christian life that endeavors to help lift the world up to God. Also it carries a necessary note of genuine optimism; a hope and assurance that all things work together for good.

And, finally, it gives an eternal life, an abiding Christ, a friend that will never leave nor forsake us. Satisfactions that nothing else can afford—are they not worth striving for?

The service of the morning included two anthems by the choir and a tenor solo by Mr. Rogers.

Thursday evening the regular midweek service led by Dr. Sneath. Topic: "Joyful Living," John 1:13.

Next Sunday will be observed as Children's Day. There will be baptism of children, presentation of Bibles, and special exercises by the Sabbath School.

PARK AN DOWNS.

The beautiful Sabbath morning drew a large number of worshippers at this church. Rev. William B. Ayers gave a very instructive, interesting and impressive talk; text, Rev. 3:20—"Behold I stand at the door and knock." The minister said that these old texts that in the past have so moved men often are neglected today. The development of education and civilization has led us to discard many of the great old invitations that so stirred men's hearts in the past. Men need to be recalled to the fact that God does not forever stand unchanging in His attitude and invitation to them. There are times when we feel God's presence very near to us, and there are also times when this seems to be withdrawn. The invitation once given may never be repeated. It behooves us to respond now.

The evening service was on "Cement"—What men seek for is continuity. There should be some direct line from childhood to old age which ties together all motives and actions.

They should all have a relation one to the other. What a boy does should have a direct bearing on what the man is to be. No act should be held as isolated. Personality is the sum of what we have passed through; in its result. A man is not only what he is, but what he has thought and done. A man claims a relationship to what has gone before him. He gets the promise of what is to be from what others were before him. Men go down to the grave with old latent-scarce-stirring hopes all gone and then they long for some further life in which to make up for the failures of this one. As a man stands at the grave, his life has unity and oneness only as it is mixed and bound together with the Divine Spirit that makes each separate transaction of his life stand related to this supreme moment. The subject was well borne out, for it "cemented" the attention of the large audience.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

This church exists to serve the whole community. It is "An house of prayer for all people." Visitors are welcome at every service of worship and those without church connection are invited to affiliation with this home-like church. The minister is glad to meet strangers after any service. All seats are free.

"The blessing of work" was the title of a helpful sermon by the pastor Sunday morning. In his opening remarks Rev. Carl G. Horst referred to Dr. Richard C. Cabot's book entitled "What men live by"—namely work, play, love and worship. There is no greater blessing bestowed upon man than that of work. Labor is the mainspring of human improvement. Thanks to it we have moved away from barbarism. All work is honorable and essential to self culture, development and growth. The devil never troubles a man who is busy, but always finds mischief to do for idle hands. It is a noble privilege to work. By labor, body and mind advance into their finer life. By labor we save ourselves from weakness, deliver ourselves from temptation and maintain ourselves in honor and progress. Therefore:

"Live for something, be not idle,
Look about thee for employ;
Sit not down to useless dreaming
Labor is the sweetest joy.
Folded hands are never weary
Selfish hearts are never gay.
Life for thee hath many duties:
Active be, then, while you may."

The Norfolk Conference of Unitarian churches will be held in the First Parish, Dedham, Wednesday, June 10, at 10 A. M. The speakers are Warren F. Spalding on "The treatment of crime," Meyer Bloomfield on "The Immigrant" and Prof. Daniel Evans, D. D., Rev. Walter Calley, D. D. and Rev. Charles F. Dole, D. D. on "What does the world most need to keep it in the path of true progress?" Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson of Quincy will conduct the devotional service.

"The Congregationalist" declares that the American Unitarian Association is the one missionary organization that has come through these trying financial years without a deficit.

Bibles will be presented on Children's Sunday to the pupils of the Sunday School that received the rite of baptism ten years ago. Children's Sunday will be observed June 21 with a joint service of the church and Sunday School at 10.45 A. M. All parents who wish to present children to receive the rite of baptism on Children's Sunday, June 21, please notify the minister.

The entertainment committee of the church announces a June festival to be held on the grounds of Mr. Charles T. Baker on Safford street, Friday and Saturday, June 26-27. On the 27th, there will be a grand parade, in which every child in Wollaston is invited to take part. Prizes will be awarded for the best representation of an advertisement, the best oldfashioned costume, the most grotesque costume, the best decorated doll carriage and the best decorated boy's express cart. Entries for the parade must be made to Mrs. Ralph W. Oldham, 305 Safford street. The parade will be followed by a children's entertainment.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

"Rebuke and command" was the subject of the Sunday morning sermon at the regular service, text, John 21:22, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." After a few introductory remarks, the words were brought right down and applied to our everyday selves. "There are people today who are worrying over the mysterious and inexplicable in the Bible, in the past, in the future, and this rebuke and command are just as much for them as they were for Peter in those olden days." At the close of the service the ordinance of communion was observed.

Junior Christian Endeavor meetings have been discontinued for the summer, and the children are attending the senior meetings at 6.00. A fine consecration service was held Sunday night in charge of Miss Ruth Price; subject—"The purity verse."

At 7.00 the pastor gave a stereoptticon lecture on "A century of missions." These missionary lectures have been given once a month for some time, and have created great interest.

Something of a Lottery.

"What I want," said the young man, "is to get married and have a peaceful, quiet home." "Well, sometimes it works that way and sometimes it's like joinin' a debatin' society."

BRIEFS

Several from Quincy are planning to participate in the trip of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange to the Cape Cod canal, on Tuesday. The trip will be made in the steamer Dorothy Bradford, and dinner will be served on board for those who desire. The return to Boston will be made at 7 o'clock that evening.

The young people of the First church were well represented at the annual picnic of the Boston Federation of Young People's Religious Unions, which was held on Saturday at Houghton's pond. Miss Alice Arnold captured two prizes in the afternoon's sports—the first in the 50 yard dash, and the first in the obstacle race.

FUNERAL OF E. G. SHAW.

The funeral of Edward G. Shaw, a well known carpenter, held from his home on Cherry avenue on Sunday and was largely attended delegations being present from Clan MacGregor, Order of Scottish Clans, and John Adams aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, societies with which he was affiliated.

Services were conducted at the house by Rev. James A. Matheson of the First Presbyterian church. While the funeral procession was on its way to Mr. Wolaston cemetery where the body was interred three automobiles passed through its line.

The matter has been reported to the police department and an investigation is being made. Already the name of the operators of one of the machines has been learned. Although Quincy has never adopted traffic regulations the operators may be summoned into court under the law regulating the rights of funeral processions.

TROLLEY VICTORY.

The Campello base ball team, running at fast speed to first place in the Trolley league was derailed at Marrymount Park this morning by the Quincy aggregation, 8 to 3. Quincy's eight hits, two of them for full circuits, forced them off the iron.

The scoring in the first inning came about when Everett Harris drove out a home scoring two men, and three others reported at home on hits. In the second inning Rooney bunted and reached first. A wild throw gave him the right of way and he signed off in record time. The score by innings:

Quincy	6	2	0	0	0	0	0	0	x—8

Twelve Persons Hurt In Express Train Wreck In Vermont

Randolph, Vt., June 8.—Eight passengers and four train employes were slightly injured by the derailment of a portion of the Boston and Maine express, from Boston to Montreal, at Braintree, on the Central Vermont railroad.

A mail car and an express car rolled down a thirty-foot embankment into a branch of the White river. The baggage car, smoking car and a day coach left the rails and jolted over the ties, but were not overturned.

Occupants of the remainder of the train, including three Pullmans and a day coach, escaped without injury, as these cars remained on the track. The cause of the accident has not been determined.

Bram says he has experimented with thirty patients with a special diet and also with medicine. He gives his conclusions in the current number of the New York Medical Journal.

NINETIETH BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Thomas Drake, Mother of Frank Drake

Mrs. Rosanna Drake, one of four elderly women who make their home with Mrs. Lydia Beaulieu at 53 Buckley street, observed the 90th anniversary of her birth Saturday and had the unusual pleasure of receiving the greetings of five-year old Dorothy Drake of Braintree, representing the fifth generation of the family.

During the day messages of congratulations, in the form of letters, postals and flowers were delivered to Mrs. Drake. Friends from Northboro, Watertown, Brockton, Braintree, Southbridge and Quincy visited her during the day.

One of the cheeriest of missives came from the Trask circle of Kings Daughters of Watertown, of which Mrs. Drake has been a member for many years.

Mrs. Drake, before marriage was Mrs. Rosanna Gurney. She was born in South Abington, now Whitman, June 6, 1824. Despite her four score years and ten her mind is very active and she readily recalls events recorded on the pages of history. Age has now weakened her sight, and her hearing is slightly defective, but until she fell a few years ago and sustained a hip injury, which has since confined her to her bed, it was her habit to frequently visit friends in all parts of the state.

She was married to Thomas Drake in her 25th year and came directly to Quincy, her home at 170 Washington street being now occupied by her son Frank Drake.

Saturday she sat in her chair and renewed friendships that were born in the golden past. Dr. C. M. Marstin, an acquaintance of many years standing, was among those that called, and in the evening Mrs. J. Blade of Brockton, a protegee of Mrs. Drakes, sang the favorite songs of long ago for her aged friends.

Mrs. Drake cut her birthday cake and presided over its distribution. She suffered no ill effects from the excitement occasioned by her many callers and today states that she is happy in possessing so many friends, good, kind and true.

GIRL STRUCK BY AUTOMOBILE

Car Sped Away But Number Was Observed

Marion Marr of Sumner street was struck by a passing automobile on Washington street near the corner of Edison street Sunday afternoon and quite seriously injured. What made the accident more aggravating was that the driver of the auto, after striking the little girl, did not stop to see how badly she was injured, but apparently put on more power and sped away. His number was obtained however and he is likely to hear from it later.

The little girl stood on the sidewalk waiting for a car for Quincy. The car came along and stopped and the girl started across the street. One automobile was going down Washington street and another coming up the street. A lady who was crossing at the time barely escaped being hit but the little girl was struck and thrown onto the sidewalk.

The auto did not stop however but applied more power and hastened along. There were a number of passengers on the electric car who saw the accident and the conductor and others took the number of the car.

The number has been reported to the police. Owing to the large number of automobiles on Washington street Sunday afternoon it was difficult to get across the street and at times an electric car had to be held up several minutes before would be passengers could get across to take the car. The practice of making people stand in the middle of the street to take cars on Washington street should be stopped.

According to Conductor Towne the automobile bore the Massachusetts number 35835. This car according to the Highway Commissioners book is owned by Willis A. Mahoney, 837 Broadway, Medford.

TWO YACHTS IN COLLISION

Iris Protests the Almira in Quincy Race

The race under the auspices of the Quincy Yacht club Saturday afternoon came near proving disastrous for one of the Cape Cat class, the Iris of ex-Commodore Frank Fessenden Crane. The race was for all classes and a baker's dozen were out to participate in the scrap. The wind was rather light and all of the yachts carried full sail.

When off the government wharf buoy at Peddocks island, the Iris and Almira, the new boat of Dr. H. A. Jones came into collision and the Iris had a hole punched in her. Ex-Commodore Crane who was sailing the Iris claims that he was sailing on the starboard tack and that the Almira tried to pass him while on the port tack. The Iris held to her course claiming the right of way, and the Almira did the same thing with the result that they came together..

Immediately on the return to the club float, the Iris protested the Almira, claiming that the latter should have gone under the stern of the Iris when the latter was on the starboard tack. The judges took the matter under consideration and will decide the protest later.

In class A the Marie L of A. W. Finlay practically had a walkover as the Little Haste of G. W. Sargent failed to finish.

In class I the little fellows had a good time all to themselves. There were three starters in the boys class and the race was won by A. E. Whittemore, a son of ex-Commodore Whittemore, in the Louise.

In class D, the Cape cat class, the Dartwell, was the first to finish with the Mudjekeewis second. The latter boat however won the race on time allowance. The Iris, iu spite of her crippled condition, finished in fourth position.

In class C, the Hush won out by a margin of several minutes over the Brownie. The summary:

At a meeting of the regatta committee later Dr. Jones of the Almira admitted that he was in the wrong and the protest of the race was allowed. This will result in throwing the Almira out of the race and will count against her yearly percentage.

ONE MAY WITHDRAW.

A conference was held this morning between John D. MacKay, chairman of the School board, and Councilman Charles R. Ross of Ward Three with relation to the nomination for representative on the Republican ticket from the Fifth district, at which it was practically agreed that either one will leave the field in favor of the other within a few days. Thus far it seems to be a case of "after you, my dear Alphonse." Mutual friends say that the question must be settled within a few days.

There was a large field of entries at the matinee meet of the Old Colony Gentlemen's Driving club Saturday afternoon at South Weymouth park. The winners in the several events were as follows: Class B, Chato; class C, Miss Lake; class D, Catherine C; class E, The Senator; class F, Firebug; class G, Pauline; class H, Jefferson McKerron; class I, Stella Nelson; class J, Jane Patchen; class K, Sampson Maid class L, Nelsa Benton.

Eggs Long Used as Food.

Just how long people have been eating eggs is not known, certainly long before breakfasts were "invented" or made a custom. There is no doubt mankind in a barbaric state had learned of the use of certain eggs as a food.

DOUBLE HEADER AT WEST QUINCY

Hibernians and St. Marys Were the Winners

The first of the series of double headers of the West Quincy base ball league were played on the Ward Four playground Saturday afternoon and proved to be good games to see, even though the Ave Maria council, Knights of Columbus team was given the most signal defeat any team has received this year.

They lost to the team of Div. 22, A. O. H. by a score of 22 to 1. After making their lone tally in the sixth they retired from the contest. Loose playing and poor stickwork was the cause of their slump.

DEMOCRATIC CHAIRMAN.

The vacancy in the chairmanship of the Democratic city committee, caused by the death of William Kelly, will be filled at an election held early next week. As far as is known the only candidates are Edward J. Parker of Wark One and Charles C. McHugh of Ward Four. It is rumored that Councilman Thomas Griffin of Ward Two also intends to be a candidate. A warm debate may preceed the election, at which one of the candidates may be charged with desertion of the party at the last muncipal election.

SENATE STILL HAS MUCH WORK AHEAD

Vote on Canal Toll Expected to Be Taken Late Today

Washington, June 8.—Senate leaders expect to get through with the tolls exemption repeal bill tonight, but the debate-wearied members will have only a few days of breathing spell.

Already the ways are prepared for anti-trust legislation, and unless there is a change in plans before the end of the week, the senate will be at the steady grind of discussing the interstate trade commission bill.

There is little doubt that the vote on the tolls exemption repeal bill will come late today. Senator O'Gorman, who has led the fight against the measure, expects a vote, and there are only two speeches to be delivered before the action is demanded.

Three French soldiers were killed and twelve wounded in a fight with rebellious Moors.

President Wilson's chauffeur, E. Johnson, who was arrested at Hyattsville, Md., for speeding, was fined $10 by a justice of the peace.

Apparently having walked around his room in his sleep until he finally stepped through an open window on a fourth floor Daniel F. McDermott of Boston was killed when he fell.

BELIEVE 800 BODIES IN HULK

Wrecked Steamer Empress of Ireland May Be Raised

PLANS FOR THE INVESTIGATION

Lord Mersey, Who Presided Over Titanic Inquiry In England, Will Begin Work as Soon as He Arrives at Quebec—Official Board Goes Into Session on June 16

Montreal, June 8.—With further developments in connection with the Empress of Ireland disaster lacking, the public has settled down to await the official investigation that is to be begun on June 16, with Lord Mersey as chairman of the committee of inquiry. It is believed 800 bodies are still in the hulk.

There is confusion in the public mind as to whether the investigation is to be held at Montreal or Quebec, but Ottawa dispatches mention Quebec as the scene of the inquiry.

The announcement was made in the Ottawa parliament by J. D. Hazen that Lord Mersey would arrive from England on the 13th, and with Sir Adolphe Routhier of Quebec and Chief Justice McLeod of New Brunswick would immediately open the investigation.

The commissioners will be assisted by Commander Caborne of the British royal naval reserve, Professor Welsh of New Castle, Eng.; Captain Demers, Dominion wreck commissioner, and Engineer Commander Howe of the Canadian naval service. Caborne and Welsh have beeen nominated by the British board of trade. Lord Mersey presided over the Titanic inquiry in England.

It is believed by many that the Empress may be raised. There is a general desire that all the bodies possible shall be recovered from the wrecked vessel. It is thought that divers may be employed to extricate the imprisoned bodies and the ship blown up after the bullion in it has been brought out.

Lyolds, the insurance underwriters of the Empress of Ireland, are selecting a special committee of salvage and engineering experts to investigate the chances of floating and saving the wreck.

AUTOMOBILE BANDIT SEARCH

Man Confesses Driving Car In $2800 Robbery In New York

New York, June 8.—Frederick Kelly, the chauffeur who has admitted, the police say, that he drove the automobile in which were the bandits who held up the bank messenger and cash clerk of the American Can company and escaped with $2800, was arraigned in court with three other men arrested in the case. He is said to have caused the arrest of the others by the story he told to detectives after his arrest.

The others held by the police are Joseph Reardon, James Fay and Joseph Largo.

No arrests have been made in connection with the holdup and robbery by two automobile bandits of two clerks of the Masury Paint company of Brooklyn. This occurred a short time before the Manhattan holdup, the robbers escaping with $3000.

Oodles, the Avenger

He Was Half Witted, but Faithful

By M. J. PHILLIPS

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"The New York attorney, he goes to-morrow," said Frederic, the fat French landlord of Pere Chene.

His wife, a thin little woman, with a sharp voice and a heart of gold, blazed into sudden anger.

"He stayed too long, and he goes too soon!" she cried.

Frederic took his pipe from his mouth and turned ponderously.

"You mean—what?" he questioned.

"I mean that our Therese"—

Frederic gazed uncomprehendingly, and she made a gesture of impatience at his stupidity.

"Tchk! Can't you see? She likes hi'n too well."

Her husband's mouth sagged open. He held the pipe in his pudgy hand. His black beard rippled over his breast. His eyebrows were raised in amazement and something of dismay. He looked like a wondrously carved statue, for he sat very still.

But one's mouth cannot stay open indefinitely. Frederic's closed reluctantly. He peered into his pipe and drew forth his buckskin tobacco pouch. "Chut!" he commented.

Mme. Lecoeur ceased her agitated rocking.

"'Chut!'" she snapped. "'Chut!' And our only child is breaking her heart. Look for yourself. They are coming."

She inclined her head sideways. Her husband turned in his stout chair, all together, like a piece of machinery, and looked up the one street of the backwoods Michigan town.

It was a pretty sight that Frederic saw—one that appealed to the quick sentimental perceptions of his race.

A man and a girl were coming toward the hotel on the veranda of which they sat. The man was of the city, and his neat, fashionable clothing was in striking contrast to the Mackinaw garb of the few woodsmen who lounged in doorways. He was talking eagerly to the girl, who kept pace with him, and his keen young face was alight with the visions of one who is both dreamer and doer.

The girl was a glorious creature, whose roundness was not plumpness and whose slenderness was not thinness. Her luxurious brown hair was uncovered. She walked in Indian moccasins with the springy ease of a frontiersman.

Her big, dark eyes were turned on young Amidon with flattering attention. In their depths was an unconscious and pitiful revelation of her heart.

They paused a moment by the rude steps.

"We are going down to the falls," said the lawyer. "I want to explain to Miss Therese what our company means to do here. Why, M. Lecoeur, the country above is a natural reservoir. A dam will furnish power to light every town within a hundred miles of here and run the mills besides."

He turned to Therese as he finished as one turns to a friend who comprehends. But there was nothing in his look or his manner but impersonal enthusiasm; no hint that he was conscious of her sex or of her loveliness.

"Your company is rich, M. Amidon?" queried the landlord.

A smile came to the lawyer's boyish face.

"They have barrels of it," he replied.

Mme. Lecoeur turned to her husband when the young people had gone on.

"You see, you see?" she demanded. "She cannot get enough of looking at him. And he—his head is full of dams and electric lights and mills. Tchk—men!"

"My daughter," she continued, "is worthy of any man in the land. She has graduated from the Grayling high school. She can bake and sweep and sew. She is as merry as a robin. She can walk from here to Tahquema in four hours, and it is twenty miles.

"She has taste, too, Frederic—a taste she did not inherit from the Lecoeurs. Faith, no.

"She has the high heeled, small shoes and a gown no bigger around than your trousers leg—great, fat—oaf! She has even been three times to Bay City. She is as innocent and unspoiled as a babe. Why does he not see?"

She had spoken rapidly in French. Her husband removed his pipe in order to shake his head slowly.

"I will tell you why he does not see," she said, switching to English to answer her own question. "He has had no time but to bargain and plan and buy the land.

"If he could stay here for two weeks more, with his mind free of business, he could not help loving her. But he will go without seeing or speaking, and it will kill her."

She sighed wistfully. "If he would but fall sick. She is a splendid nurse."

They turned guiltily at a sound behind in the doorway, but at sight of the queer face looking down at them Mme. Lecoeur spoke relievedly. "Oh, Oodles! It is you!"

Oodles Napper was one of "God's innocents," a silent young half wit who roamed the wilderness, flitting here and there as the errant fancy took him. The door of every settler from the straits to Saginaw bay was open to him. No one dreamed of charging him for food and lodging.

But he paid in his own way nevertheless. He was a mighty hunter. He always carried a rifle, and his aim was of the deadliest. Birds and squirrels and deer in season he brought to the homes of his friends.

Now the wide, thin, upturned mouth was doleful; the small blue eyes were dull.

"You heard, Oodles?"

Mme. Lecoeur and all of Pere Chene knew that he loved Therese, as the dog loves his mistress, with a dumb love that asks nothing but the privilege to serve.

The half wit nodded.

"Yes," he murmured. "Sorry—sorry." He looked to the north after Therese and Amidon.

"Where to, Oodles?"

Frederic had noted that he carried rifle and pack.

"Tahquema—south."

Without another word or look he turned toward the blue hills. Soon he disappeared in the scrub at the end of the street.

When the village had been shut off by tag alders and bushes Oodles' long strides shortened. Unconsciously he came to a standstill. He stood for several minutes in an indecision that was painful. His lips moved soundlessly.

Evidently it was a time of intense mental agitation, for the sweat burst out on his forehead, and his hands clinched until the knuckles showed white through the brown skin, and the tendons in his wrists drew like cords.

At last a resolution was reached. Heading west, he began to run swiftly, but with great caution.

He slipped through the brush like a wild thing. His face took on a new expression—queer and terrible.

As he ran he bore to the north in a half circle. Presently he came out on a little knoll, threw himself flat in the long grass and peered between the trunks of a clump of jack pines.

Yes, there they stood on the bank of the river, near the rapids. The lawyer, his face alight, was pointing as he explained the plans of his company to Therese.

The girl was looking up at her companion. Even at that distance the half wit read the unconscious pathos of her attitude.

With swift fierceness he drew the rifle to his shoulder, sighted carefully and fired.

Therese's scream echoed high above the bur of the rapids. The half wit ran away, more like a wild thing than ever.

* * * * * * *

Therese and her lover, who was also her husband, stood on the porch of the Lecoeur house in the gloaming. Her dark eyes were pools of brooding happiness.

The man, mimicking a shy schoolboy, edged over and took her hand. She laughed and leaned against him.

"It's good to be here," he said.

"Do you know what day it is?"

He looked down at her, eyes round with recollection.

"By Jove!" he cried. "It's just a year—a year ago today."

She nodded. They were silent a moment, and then he went on:

"If it hadn't been for that I'd never have discovered how much I cared. I was going away without a word to you. Think of that!

"But you hadn't finished binding me up before I was crazy about you, and the longer you nursed me the more I loved you."

His arm went round her.

She nestled against him and sighed contentedly.

"The chap who did it was a marksman," he continued. "There I was, gesticulating like Mark Antony, and along comes a bullet and breaks my arm—snip—like that. I wonder who it was?

"I'd like to know so I could thank him. The fellow did me a good turn."

She shuddered a little.

"I was frightened—at first. But it did come out all right, didn't it?"

"It certainly did," returned Amidon. "And now let's talk of something more serious. Kiss me," he said severely.

A chuckle came from the doorway behind, and they turned guiltily, like children.

"Oh," said Therese, relieved, "it's only Oodles!"

RACE FOR FLETCHER CUP

Won by Vanitie, Whose Backers Praise Her Speed Qualities

Larchmont, N. Y., June 8.—Backers of the Vanitie, the cup defense candidate, are enthusiastic over the way she led the Resolute nearly all the way in the first of three races sailed for a cup offered by Vice Commodore Fletcher of the Larchmont Yacht club.

The Vanitie defeated the Resolute by 5m 52s actual time and by 2m 40s corrected time. She had to allow the Resolute 3m 12s. The winning of the race gives the Vanitie five points toward the Fletcher cup, and the Resolute gets two points. When the Defiance enters the contest one point will be given to the third yacht in.

APPEAL NOTICE IN THE BECKER CASE

Counsel For Condemned Man Said to Have "New Evidence"

New York, June 8.—Formal notice was served upon District Attorney Whitman today by counsel for Charles Becker informing Whitman that an appeal from the verdict of guilty returned several weeks ago will be made. This acts as an automatic stay of execution.

Notice of the appeal will also be filed with the court of appeals in the expectancy that the argument will be set for the October term of that court. Becker was sentenced to be electrocuted in the week of July 6.

Counsel for Becker is also considering the possibility of asking for a new trial for Becker on the ground of new evidence said to be in possession of three witnesses, who, Becker's counsel admits, were known of at the time of the last trial, but were not called in to give their testimony.

THE FRENCH CRISIS

Mixup Is Caused by Radicals' Maneuvers Against President

Paris, June 8.—The ministerial crisis is as far from solution as ever, despite the strenuous exertions of President Poincare, who cancelled all his out-of-town engagements.

The exceptional difficulty in finding a premier is openly declared in many quarters to be due to the skillful maneuvers of the Radical followers of Joseph Caillaux against the president, with the object of forcing him to retiring or to capitulate to them. Poincare, it is stated, is firmly resolved to do neither of these things.

FORE RIVERS RETAIN LEAD

Defeat the Norwood Press by Score 4 to 3

The Fore River team defeated the Norwood Press Club at Merrymount Park for the second time Saturday afternoon, and holds its lead in the Manufacturer's league. The losers were the first team to score against Fore Rivers.

In the first inning they made two runs without getting a hit and Fore river tied the score in the last half by good hitting. Another batfest resulted in the third run in the seventh, and in the eighth Norwood lost a chance to score when Bailey tried to steal home on a squeeze play and was nailed at the plate.

In the first to the ninth a man scored when Stevens threw wide to home from right field instead of to second base. He retired himself in the last half of the ninth by getting a triple and scoring on Captain Bates' hit to right.

The feature of the game was work of the Fore River battery. Knight boosted his strikeout record to 56 in four games. He has allowed 16 hits in the series. Wall, the catcher played a star backstop game, only two visitors stealing.

The rooters of the visiting team crabbed throughout the entire game, and Frank Hoyt, the Taunton second base men, who umpired, was continually baited. The game was witnessed by a large crowd of fans, including a good representation of the fair sex. The summary:

BREAK AT QUINCY POINT.

An investigation as to why a lamp was burning on the stairs leading into the basement of the store of Arthur McGilvray at Washington and Chubbuck streets Saturday morning led to the discovery of a break made after the pharmacy was closed Friday night The woodwork around the lamp was badly scorched. Goods consisting of cigars, cigarettes and other articles, valued at about $30 were taken. The break apparently was the work of an amateur. Entrance was gained by forcing a cellar window.

PROFESSOR SEWALL

and I, his successor, entered into the rich results of his labor. I found no roots of bitterness nor stumbling blocks of enmity in my way, but a helpful inheritance of good influences to assist my progress."

Happy was the young minister who had such a predecessor, still more happy Bowdoin college in adding to its small faculty one so well fitted to teach the humanities, and to exemplify the amenities of life. The classics then needed reinforcement. Two brilliant young teachers, Professors Brackett and Goodale, now professors emeriti at Princeton and Harvard, had just joined the side of science. Our friend was first drafted for rhetoric and Greek, the next year he was made professor of ancient languages and literature, a title he held until 1873, when the chair was formally divided and he became the first professor of Greek at Bowdoin. He was fitted for the work of instruction in this language by his love for it and its literature. His ideals were for the good, the true and the beautiful. He had the Greek sense of proportion. By no means destitute of enthusiasms still the wholeness of life and the fitness of things apealed strongly to him. After an extended tour on the continent, he came back from Greece itself in 1868 with a fund of personal familiarity with Greek art and scenery that added much to the interest and vividnes of his teaching.

He early became a member of the American Philological Association, the first of our national societies devoted solely to the promotion of linguistic study and served as its president in 1877. The first fruits of his Hellenic studies, was the scholarly paper "On the Distinction between the Subjunctive and Optative modes in Greek Conditional Sentences" contributed to the Transactions of this association in 1874. The last contribution to the literature of his profession was the attractive edition of the Timon of Lucian issued by Ginn & Co. in 1896. I cite these two titles because they illustrate the prime object of his instruction in Greek, his earnest desire to help the student to gain the exact meaning of the author read. I well remember the il-concealed scorn with which he referred to a highly metaphorical and deceptive rendering of a line in the Odyssey which the editor of the edition used by my class had placed in the notes to conceal the real meaning of the Greek, and scores of Bowdoin alumni can testify to his conscientious endeavors to make them understand the graduations of thought that distinguish the six classes of hypothetical relative sentences. His interest in the attainments of his pupils led him to establish the two prizes for excellence in Greek and Latin that bear his name and have been annually awarded since 1871. That his efforts were not in vain may be inferred from the circumstance that one of every seven of those who took the former prize are today professors of Greek in as many different colleges and universities of the land. His service to the college in other ways can hardly be over estimated. He was acting president during the interregnum between President Woods' resignation and President Harris' accession. He was the curator of the art collections and compiler of the first catalogue of the paintings. The whole period of his stay was one of storm and stress in the history of the institution. New policies had been inaugurated without sufficient funds to execute them. As the secretary and executive officer of the general association of the alumni he was indefatigable in labors to arouse the interest and to enlist the aid of the graduates for their Alma Mater. His tact and his loyalty, the methods he employed, and the movements he set in motion, bore rich harvets in later years.

Few men who left Bowdoin before 1877 failed to greet with gladness the kindly face annd dignified form of the secretary of the alumni on their return at Comencement, and every one rejoiced that on leaving the position of instructor he was at once chosen an overseer of the college.

To use who were younger then, his departure from a college to an academy was a surprise. The secret of his action lay in the ideal before him. He was a servant of Jesus Christ, and for him, a teacher of youth. He believed, that he could accomplish more as head master of Thayer Academy than as a professor in Bowdoin College. It was Thomas Arnold of Rugby and Edward Thring of Uppingham, not Judge French of Braintree and Rev. George A. Thayer of Cincinnati that called him to this school. He came for ten years, the best ten years of his life, well worth the adventure for an ideal as high and noble as was his. He stayed nearly twice that period. His pupils in this audience are living witnesses that these years were truly lived, that his labors were well performed, that his reward was fairly won.

Then came the rest time, the flowering of old age, the childhood of his immortality. The lichens on his earthly mansion seemed to brighten. At times the gaiety and sprightliness of youth returned. At all times he was the genial companion, the helpful friend, the Christian gentleman. His days were given partly to study, partly to the interests of the three educational institutions whom he served as a trustee, partly to travel and residence abroad. Blessed with congenial companionship during his active career, he was similarly fortunate in the later years of retirement in the society of the accomplished lady, the friend of a lifetime, who took his name and was with him till the end. This came on the thirteenth of last June at his home in Brookline.

I have told you of Professor Sewall's ancestry and boyhood home, of his college life and educational environment, of his work as a clergyman at Lynn and a teacher at Bowdoin. I have not shown you the man himself. This I despair of doing. I hope his talented pupil and friend who follows me will essay the task, for I know he will succeed.

Yet I ought not to close without referring to certain qualities that made him what he was. Foremost among these I place his Tenderness. The words of the Psalmist can in his case be paraphrased and we can rightly say His gentleness made him great. It appeared in a thousand ways.

Allied to this tenderness of heart was a sympathy and consideration for those in tastes in conduct and in character far different from himself. This underlay his daily walk and conversation and showed itself in the courtly manners and kindly converse that made an hour with him a pleasure.

Deeper yet as the result of a long trained conscience and a keen sense of duty was his unwavering determination to help others; not perhaps in the way they expected nor with the result he longed for but none the less steadily, genuinely and cheerfully. Friendly at heart he ever proved himself a friend. And to him was granted the great reward:

"A body sound; a mind that sees
Deep into life's strange mysteries;
A soul that seeks the highest things
A heart where love forever springs
A quiet conscience; God for friend
And at the last a peaceful end."

Further arrangements were made on Sunday at a meeting at which E. P. Powers presided, for the band concerts to be given at Houghs Neck on Sunday afternoons. The committee includes Arthur W. Hubbard, Charles Dame, Arthur Maynard and Roy Wilcox.

SUICIDE BY SHOOTING

Thomas L. Cameron of Common Street Found Dead

On her return from a shopping trip Mrs. Thomas L. Cameron found the body of her husband on the floor of the kitchen of her home at 299 Common street on Saturday afternoon. Clasped in his hand was a revolver with one empty chamber. Ill health is thought to have been the cause of Cameron's act. About a year ago, following an accident at the Fore River shipyard, he underwent an operation at the Quincy City Hospital. He has been a constant sufferer. It is thought that he went to Boston on Saturday and purchased the revolver and a box of cartridges.

CITY'S WATERFRONT GIVES PROMISE

A Civic Centre with Remarkable Group of Public Buildings

Noted for Presidents, Granite and Shipbuilding

Quincy was the subject of an illustrated sketch in the Christian Science Monitor of Monday, and few exceptions can be taken to the kind words said of our municipality. A past of which to be proud, a busy bee hive today and a future of promise. The write-up is given in full.

Although Quincy may be better known in modern times for its granite quarries and its activity in shipbuilding, nevertheless there are many other notable things to distinguish it. Quincy was the native place of two Presidents of the United States, John Adams and John Quincy Adams, in which honor it has no rivals. Many men of prominence in the early history of North America were given to the country by Quincy. This place was also the scene of activity of the first incorporated American railroad.

The city now has a civic center, comprising the historical Stone Temple, City hall, Crane public library, the new postoffice, the courthouse, the Coddington schoolhouse and the Y. M. C. A. building.

This was the first center of religious liberalism. In 1635 William Coddington erected a farmhouse on land granted to himself and Edmund Quincy. Welcome guests here were Sir Harry Vane, Ann Hutchinson, the Rev. John Wheelwright, and other religious freethinkers of the time. They formed a church society which probably first met in the Coddington farmhouse. The "legalists" in Boston, alarmed at their progress, took measures to break up the church and banished all the leaders in it. Ann Hutchinson and Coddington fled to Rhode Island where the latter became that state's first Governor.

FAMILY HOMESTEAD.

The Coddington farmhouse later was given a stately colonial front by the third Edmund Quincy. John Marshall of Virginia, who was visiting there, wrote of it in his diary: "June 14th, 1706, we raised Mr. Quincy's house." Benjamin Franklin visited the Quincy's here, also. This combination of two houses is the Quincy homestead or "Dorothy Q" house shown to visitors today. Two Dorothy Quincys were natives of this place. The first was the great grandmother of the poet Oliver Wendell Holmes; the second married the patriot, John Hancock, her neighbor, in 1775. Three Quincys have been mayors of Boston and one was president of Harvard College.

Something of the character of the men of Quincy is symbolized by the granite hills which tower with their mast-like derricks above the city. The surface granite was used in King's chapel, Boston, in 1752, but this was soon exhausted. In 1803 the use of wedges was discovered by three local workmen ,so that the granite could be split and cut as desired to any depth. Shortly after this Bunker Hill monument was planned, and Solomon Willard was chosen architect for the work. He approved the purchase of four acres of quarry land in Quincy, for a little over $250. This brought the granite into immediate fame. It also caused the building of the first incorporated railroad in America.

To get the stone rapidly from the quarry to tidewater a three-mile road was constructed with rails of pine, having an iron bar on the top. The first cars, drawn by horses, ran Oct. 7, 1826. The granite business now has greatly increased. Many quarries, occasioning the need for cutting and polishing plants, are in operation, giving several thousand workmen employment. The Stone Temple was erected in 1828 and affords a good example of the use and durability of Quincy granite. City hall and the water tower on Forbes hill also are constructed of this stone.

The city's extended waterfront gives promise.At Quincy Neck, on the Weymouth Fore river, the plant of a shipbuilding company, which includes a modern apprentice system, covers 40 acres. Besides merchant vessels and every kind of ship for the navy, they have built for Argentina the Rivadaia the largest warship in the world, and, submarines for the Japanese navy. About 4000 operatives are employed.

TROUBLE AHEAD FOR OFFICER

Attorney Promises to Get After Weymouth Guardian

The continued cases of John Cohen and Arthur Di Senso of Weymouth, who were arrested several weeks ago by Patrolman Lawrence Schofield for smelting during the closed season, was disposed of in court this morning. The case of Cohen was placed on file on payment of $10 costs. DI Senso was fined $10 and placed on probation until June 26.

Both men were arrested one morning at daybreak while fishing on the Town brook and at the trial the officer stated they had a great number of smelts in their possession. After a hearing the cases were continued to this morning.

Attorney Garofola objected to assessing the defendants in any form, urging that the disposition. Judge Avery was to make of the cases on the continuance was to place them on file. The patrolman stoutly maintained that such was not the case.

After Judge Avery made his finding the defendant's council, turned toward the officer and promised to even matters up for making a claim he was not entitled to.

WATER DEBT IS ON INCREASE

Annual Payments of $50,000 Fail to Reduce the Total Water Indebtedness

Previous to 1910 There Was An Annual Reduction

During the last three years—1911, 1912 and 1913—the new issues of water bonds by the city have totaled $206,000, causing a net increase in the water debt of $57,500. This is one of the reasons why the interest account and the tax rate are on the increase.

For seven consecutive years, from 1903 to 1909 inclusive, there were net reductions in the water debt, but since the latter date the bond issues have been excessive, and out of proportion to the benefits received. As noted in a previous article the water revenue to the city is decreasing instead of increasing.

With one exception, the new water bonds did not exceed $30,000 per year from 1899 to 1908, and that was regarded as a very generous appropriation. They should be confined to $30,000 now, but note the issue in 1913 and the four years previous.

The following summary shows the bond issues since 1899, also the amount of the water bonds maturing during the year, and gives the increase or decrease in the water debt year by year:

	Bonds Issue.	Bonds Paid.	Increase or decrease
1913	$70,000	$57,500	Inc. $12,500
1912	65,000	53,500	Inc. 11,500
1911	81,000	48,500	Inc. 33,500
1910	50,000	45,500	Inc. 4,500
1909	42,000	42,500	Dec. 500
1908	27,000	40,500	Dec. 12,500
1907	30,000	39,000	Dec. 9,500
1906	30,000	39,500	Dec. 9,500
1905	26,000	37,500	Dec. 11,500
1904	25,000	35,500	Dec. 10500
1903	30,000	34,500	Dec. 4,500
1902	34,000	32,500	Inc. 1,500
1901	30,000	31,500	Dec. 1,500
1900	30,000	30,500	Dec. 500
1899	30,000	29,500	Inc. 500

Future articles will tell of the amount included each year in the tax levy for Water department expenses, requiring nearly $1 of the tax rate in 1913.

PROSPERING IN THE WEST.

"I notice," says the Observant Citizen in the Boston Post, "that the current issue of a big Chicago lumber magazine carries an interview with a former Quincy boy who has become an important figure in the timber districts of the Pacific slope. He is Thorpe Babcock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Babcock of Quincy.

A dozen years ago, when young Babcock was in school on the south shore. I remember that he once told me his ambition was to be a great dancer and perform in the chorus of a musical comedy. But destiny ruled otherwise, and Babcock entered the lumber business.

Today he is an official of the West Coast Lumber Manufacturing Association, and at the recent Forest Products Exposition in Chicago was one of the most prominent of the lumber men that attended from all sections of the United States and Canada.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

After a summer hotel man gets his dance hall built, he can then see to providing a dining room.

THE PUBLIC ATTITUDE.

When disasters happen in English jurisdiction, there is no question of prompt action or intelligent investigation. Three days had not passed after the Empress of Ireland catastrophe, when an English royal commission was already named, hearings to begin a week later.

In our own country great disasters are followed by fairly prompt action of some sort. There is a clamor for publicity and punishment of the guilty. After delays incident to judicial sloth or political inefficiency, some kind of an investigating body gets to work. That its efforts are not always intelligent is suggested by the historic question asked in the Titanic investigation, "Did she go down by the bow or head?"

After a week or two the newspapers find some other subject makes more taking headlines. They quit for fresher tales of sorrow, love, or intrigue. The investigation proceeds its dull way, and usually finds some underling responsible. Or it is declared to be a case of no one to blame, or an "Act of God." For a short time more stringent regulations are imposed and enforced. Then things drift back about where they were before.

A great disaster like the sinking of the Empress is not in vain. Some changes favorable to public safety are always made. But every day there is a harvest of little accidents, most of which are needless and the fruit of carelessness.

The passengers on a railroad train or street car complain bitterly if a porter or a brakeman answered a question with uncivility. Persons of determined conviction get the offender's name or number, and write wrathy letters to the management.

But do they ever complain where dangerous chances are taken? Indeed, they rather seem to enjoy bragging about risks taken and escaped. So long as this spirit prevails, railroad trains will try to pass each other on the same track, and steamships will collide.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

SUIT IS HANGING OVER HIS HEAD

Elliott Desires to Avoid Long-Drawn-Out Court Action

ADVOCATES WALSH'S MESSAGE

Thinks Railroad Situation In New England Could Have Been Straightened Out More Advantageously, but Thought Best to Bow to Wishes of Department of Justice

Boston, June 9.—Peace at any price to secure speedy reconstruction of the railroad system in New England was the message Chairman Elliott of the New Haven railroad left with the legislative committee on railroads at the state house.

The head of the New Haven company was addressing the committee on the government railroad dissolution message, and he urged the passage of enabling legislation in Massachusetts in conformity with the agreement that has been entered into between the attorney general in Washington, the New Haven company and the governor of Massachusetts.

His plea was underlined, however, with occasional replies that showed the whole trend of the proposed legislation to be contrary to the best judgment of the railroad management. Elliott showed it to be a case where the department of justice and the administration in Massachusetts have dictated a policy of dissolution which they say must be carried out either through the pending agreement or through the federal court.

To avoid the alternative of long litigations in the federal court for which the department of justice has prepared the papers already and is holding them over the head of the present New Haven management, Elliott wants the agreement to be carried out, by the aid of the Massachusetts legislature.

Elliott started with a review of his own connection with the system. He demurred, he said, when his friends invited him to come down to help to unravel a bad tangle.

Elliott thought that possibly the situation could have been straightened out, with less loss to the investors and less impairment of the service, along different lines from what the attorney general has decided upon. But the company, through its directors and stockholders, thought it was best to bow to the wishes of the attorney general.

It is more necessary now than it was then that there should be a calm, peace and harmony, to enable those responsible for the management of the road to give their attention to the traffic problem and make the service more efficient. That is why the company made its concessions to the department of justice, avoiding long-drawn-out litigations.

Following are some of the pertinent things Elliott told the committee:

The New Haven road looks to the legislature for legislation that will enable it to get rid of the Boston and Maine stock held by the Boston Railroad Holding company.

It does little good today to blame the past; what we all really want is to handle the present and prepare for the future.

There is a difference of $4,852,000 or about 11 percent on the Boston and Maine stock, due to conditions a railroad management could not foresee.

Passenger rates are too low throughout the United States, and there ought to be increases in this direction.

Every community wants a well equipped passenger station, but you can get along without these things until bridges and safety appliances are cared for.

It is absolutely necessary that within a year something be done that will permit the Boston and Maine and the New Haven to adopt some modern, broad plan reorganizing its finance.

They (the roads) have done the best they could, but the conditions hurt the credit of both roads, and they need careful nursing by you gentlemen in order to get through at all.

RAILROADS UNDER BUT ONE MASTER

Commerce Board's Power Upheld by Supreme Court

Washington, June 9.—A long step toward placing railroads under "one master instead of many" was taken by the supreme court in upholding the power of the interstate commerce commission to strike down state rates that discriminate against interstate commerce.

The court said, in substance, that the Minnesota and other recent state rate cases, in which the railroads lost, might have been decided otherwise had the roads gone to the commission for relief instead of the courts.

The cases arose out of complaint by the Shreveport, La., merchants that the Texas railroad commission had shut them out of all Texas business by compelling the railroads to reduce Texas state rates far below what the interstate commerce commission allowed the railroads running from Shreveport to Texas cities to charge.

"Three dollars, doc," said Van Geisen.

"Fine," said the physician, skinning his roll. "It was worth the money to see your hair standing on end."

HUERTA IS NOT TO INTERFERE

MUCH RELIEF AT WASHINGTON

Insistence on Holding Up Cargo of Arms For Rebels Might Have Broken Up Peace Conference—Way Almost Open For Protocol Which Will Satisfy United Mexico

Washington, June 9.—Much relief was manifested in official circles when it was learned that General Huerta had backed down from his plan to blockade Tampico. It obviates the necessity of the United States showing its hand in favor of the constitutionalists.

It is known that the A. B. C. mediators have been bringing pressure to bear upon the Huerta commissioners. A declaration of a blockade by Huerta would result in the United States defying his power. The inevitable result would be withdrawal from participation in the mediation conferences, thus giving a black eye to Pan-American influence.

It was admitted in diplomatic circles that this action on the part of the mediators had been expected, as they are understood to have determined to permit nothing to interfere with the successful issue of their negotiations. And their influence on the Huerta delegates is admittedly very great.

While no official comment was forthcoming, unofficially high government chiefs were inclined to accept the pressure on Huerta as indicating that the mediators will allow Carranza to enter their conferences on his own terms. And if they do so all possible contention will be eliminated and it will be possible to put through a protocol of a united Mexico. At least this was the way the White House construed the existing situation.

Thus, the latest crisis in the Mexican situation, fraught with possibilities of renewed hostilities between Huerta and the United States, passed over.

It did not appear that Huerta's change of position had been contingent upon any change of plans for the cargo of the steamer Antilla, steaming for Tampico with arms for the constitutionalists. It had been suggested that possible pressure upon the owners of the ship might cause them to divert her.

One thing, however, was plain: President Wilson was determined that Tampico should be kept open to the commerce of the world, and the American ships under Rear Admiral Mayo were in evident readiness to enforce it.

Whether the Antilla's war cargo would have been considered commerce had the situation come to the point of a break, all Washington officials decline to say.

The Spanish ambassador officially notified the state department of Huerta's changed position. He declared Huerta gave no reasons for this change.

Huerta's action in calling off the blockade was inspired, it was stated, by a sincere desire not to jeopardize the success of mediation.

In diplomatic circles Huerta's action is regarded as conclusive evidence that he has placed the fate of his government and the settlement of the Mexican problem fully in the hands of the South American mediators and his representatives at Niagara Falls.

The wires between Washington, Niagara Falls and Mexico have been hot with official dispatches since the receipt of the dispatch announcing the proclamation of the blockade.

Representations on the serious nature of the crisis precipitated by his action, and the decision of the American government to keep Tampico open, were made to Huerta in several quarters, with appeals to sacrifice a possible monetary advantage for his government in order to prevent the collapse of the peace conference.

BLOCKADE HIS "LAST BLUFF"

Huerta Is Again Reported as Being About to Resign

Vera Cruz, June 9.—The announcement of the suspension of the proposed blockade of Tampico by Mexican gunboats was accompanied by the revival here of reports of Huerta's early resignation—"possibly before Wednesday night."

Passengers from the capital seem to be convinced that there is truth in the report, and the Vera Cruz newspapers made a considerable display of the news of Huerta's withdrawal.

One of the passengers, a close friend of Huerta, is authority for the statement that the president told him he intended to quit office. It is stated that the threat to blockade Tampico was Huerta's last bluff, and now that it has been "called" he will quit.

A story is current at the capital that Huerta's resignation has been prepared and deposited in the British legation.

DO IT CONTINUOUSLY.

Reporting Thursday to the National Electric Light and Power convention, an investigating committee declared that prosperity and development depended to a great extent on newspaper advertising.

The report was read by P. P. Kemble of Cincinnati, who said that every central station must advertise in order to grow. "Yearly or semi-monthly appropriations should be decided upon," he explained. "Use all newspapers, but concentrate on those giving the best audience. Limit the advertisement to one idea, spend the time and money to get the copy right, regardless of the cost of getting the argument to the reader. Advertise continuously.""

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Quincy Council K. of C. Celebrate; Important Event

Charter and present members, and men prominent in Knights of Columbus circles throughout the state attended the anniversary banquet of Quincy council in Colonial hall Monday evening. The affair was the most eventful one in the 20 years existence of the council.

The general theme of the speakers was the aims and objects of the organization but Rev. Fr. John J. Coan departed from the regular order and announced that the growth in the parish of St. John had been so great he had commenced preparations to erect a church at Washington and Pray streets, on land recently purchased for that purpose.

The guests of the evening were State Deputy Louis A. Watson, State secretary-elect Daniel J. Gallagher, district deputy of Quincy council; Rev. Fr. John J. Coan, chaplain; William S. McNary of the Port Directors of Boston, who as district deputy assisted at the institution of the Council; Walter Maranville, short stop of the Boston Nationals and past Grand Knight of the order.

The address of welcome by Grand Knight, William A. Carey, opened the post-prandial exercises. He introduced as toastmaster, John W. McAnarney, first Grand Knight of the council and the first local man appointed a district deputy.

Mr. McAnarney gave a sketch of the council and mentioned the late Mayor William T. Shea, the late James F. Burke and Richard Larkin as being of valuable assistance in its formation. One thing that can be said of Quincy council, he said, is that none of its members ever took a position of public or private trust that did not reflect credit on himself and the organization. He spoke of the four years of William T. Shea as chief executive of the city, of James F. Burke's service as postmaster, representative and city treasurer, of Timothy J. Carey of the State Board of Charity and as collector of taxes and of John J. O'Hara, the present incumbent and referred to Michael T. Sullivan, the present representative in glowing terms. His reference to all these men was vociferously aplauded.

Father Coan the first speaker said the council had been of great assistance to him in attaining what successes he has, as pastor of St. John's parish, and said the church he proposed to erect in Quincy Point would be a credit to the city. He was assured the support of the members of the council, expressed by deafening applause and cheers.

State Deputy Watson and Secretary-elect Gallagher confined their talk to the purpose of the Knights of Columbus and were frequently interrupted by applause.

Walter Maranville of the Boston Nationals was an unexpected guest and when presented as the greatest shortstop in the world he said he was "The greatest shortstop talker." He spoke in a general way of the value of membership in the Knights of Columbus and spoke briefly of councils visited in all parts of the country. The ovation tendered him at his presentation was repeated as he sat down.

Hon. William S McNary, the speaker of the evening was late in arriving. He also spoke along the lines of organization and said that Quincy council, when instituted had more solid men on its roll of membership than any one council in Boston. He referred to the late James N. White of West Quincy and James E. Hayes of Charlestown as being strong factors in the early days of the organization. In his characteristic way Mr. McNary covered briefly how he came to love and esteem residents of Quincy and his eyes filled with tears and his voice choked with emotion as he mentioned the name of the late William T. Shea. He closed with a fervent appeal for a continuation of the success of the council. He was given tumultuous applause.

The music during the banquet was furnished by Wilson's orchestra. The menu, by Burleigh and Martin, was:

Grape fruit
Boiled salmon and peas
Englaissed potatoes
Banana fritters rolls
Filet de beef
Mushroom sauce
Delmonico potatoes String beans
Chicken salad Lobster salad
Lettuce and tomato salad
Assorted light and fancy cakes
Lady fingers Macaroons
Frozen pudding
Bisque glace
Coffee

Harry McGowan, the peerless entertainer of Boston, presented a vaudeville program at the close of the post-prandial exercises and participated in the fun himself. The artists were all clever and received liberal applause.

The clerks of the Adams Market take the field Wednesday afternoon with the clerks of Braintree. The intense rivalry between these teams for leadership in the grocers league has stimulated interest among all the clerks on the South Shore.

The game will be called at 2.30 at Merrymount Park instead of the Old Colony grounds. In the Adams lineup will be Taylor c, J. McGrane p, Berry 1b, Dennehey wb, W. McGrane ss, Avery 3b, F. Foye lf, Provost cf, Brown rf.

The team has had an exceptional season and is desirous of booking teams for Wednesday afternoon games. While they do not profess to be professionals they have produced a good article of base ball and have earned the title of the "Swatters with the willow."

HOMEMADE TROUSERS.

Would men ever get anywhere, do you think, if they fussed around with as many disconnected things as most women do? And the worst of our case is that we are rather inclined to point with pride to what is really one of the most vicious habits of our sex.

We have all seen the swelling satisfaction with which the comely young schoolma'am, complimented upon a pretty gown, announces, "I made it myself." And we have all heard the chorus of admiring approbation following the announcement—joined in it, perhaps, and asked to borrow the pattern. But really, viewed in the light of reason, what is there about the feat upon which she should so plume herself?

Suppose that a man should point proudly to his nether garments and say: "Lo! I made these trousers." I have not a mental picture of even the most economical of his fellow clerks or mail carriers, or clergymen, or schoolteachers, crowding around to admire and cry: "What a splendid way to spend your time out of business hours! And it looks just like a tailor made."

Which last is just as truly a lie when we tell it to our fellow women as it would be if men told it to men.—Mary Lee Harkness in Atlantic.

VISIONS IN THE EYES.

Why It Does Not Appear Absolutely Dark When You Wink.

When a person winks his eyes he momentarily covers the entire eyeballs and everything therefore should turn absolutely black and be in total darkness for the instant. As a matter of fact, he certainly is in total darkness, but he is unconscious of same.

The reason he is unconscious is that the eye is incapable of removing a certain view from itself until an eighth of a second has elapsed. So the view seen just before the ball goes into eclipse continues to be seen for an eighth of a second. But as the eye is not covered by the lid as long as this, a new view arrives to supplement the old view before the old one has vanished. Thus the darkness is not noticed, although there is no doubt that it exists.

This same peculiarity of the eye enables moving pictures to have their being. It also is the reason why a lighted torch whirled rapidly around shows a path instead of a sequence of torches. Also why a rapidly rotating wheel does not show its spokes. If a snapshot be taken of such a wheel it does show the spokes, however, and proves the above fact of persistence. Or if the wheel be viewed by a lightning flash it shows them.—New York World.

"Of course we are going to Cape Cod again this summer, but that doesn't mean that you and I are to be separated all the time. You must call me up occasionally, and I'll call you, too—it is so easy to make a toll call, you know. Are you really going to visit the Adams's? That's simply fine—you and Ned must visit us also. Nell is going to Cape Cod as usual and Fred and his wife will be in the Berkshires. They'll be glad when you call them. FUND FOR THE INJURED.

Editor of the Ledger:

In your issue of recent date you made reference to making July 11 a gala day for Quincy at the launching of the U. S. Battleship Nevada. A good idea at the same time if it is proper I would suggest that his Honor the Mayor proclaim it a holiday for Quincy. Furthermore the Nevada being a public ship and built for the purpose of protecting the public, I would suggest that a subscription be taken up at the yard gates in behalf of those injured and the widows and families of those killed in the construction of the battleship and that a committee of three be appointed to take charge of the subscription, one to be appointed by the Ledger and one by the Telegram and these two to appoint the third. Also that these papers advertise the same in their respective papers,

CHAMPIONSHIP STILL IN DOUBT

Final Game in Grammar School League Wednesday

The unexpected did happen.

Both teams are now tied for the grammar school championship of the city. The final game will be played at the Park Wednesday afternoon.

Close to 1,000 pupils, teachers and parents saw the Washington colors lowered for the first time this season. The loyal rooters of the winners created a din while their team piled up run after run on the team considered the best in the city.

The first blow-up occurred in the second inning when the fielders scored three runs. Five more followed in the next inning and one in each succeeding inning. The runs were scored with apparently no effort on the part of the winners, the frequent errors of Washington being of great assistance.

Gamble, the peerless twirler of the Pointers was taken out of the box in the third and Thayer, the catcher finished the game. Gamble went to first and Ryan to the backstop. The change worked well.

Several spectacular plays were made, the most interesting being in the fifth. Washington had the bases full and a man bunted. He was thrown out at first, by the catcher, the ball returned to home and the runner squelched and returned to first in time to put out a runner trying to get back. One out when the play started prevented a triple play being recorded although it was actually made.

Police lines will be established at the final game Wednesday afternoon and it is expected that close on to 2000 pupils from all parts of the city will be on hand to see the banner won and lost. Practically all of the teams beaten by Washington in its climb to the championship of the national league are supporting it while the American league teams are with Massachusetts Fields. The score by innings:

BRAINTREE MAN SUICIDE

Feared that he would soon become totally blind

Fearing that he would soon become totally blind, Nathan Bangs, aged 89 years, and one of Braintree's well known citizens, took his own life Monday by cutting his throat with a razor. Mr. Bangs had been living with his son Charles Bangs on Town street.

He had been in poor health for some time, due largely to advancing age and was beginning to lose his eye sight. Fearing that it would only be a question of a few weeks before he became totally blind he took his own life.

The body was found by his son. The medical examiner was notified.

IT IS ALL RIGHT NOW.

An amusing incident occurred during a religious meeting in City Square on a recent evening which demonstrates how an irate landlord can be soothed through the charms of music. The landlord was one of the curious, standing idly by while the more religiously inclined participated in the service. His eye brightened as he caught sight of a man he had been seeking for many months. Turning to a friend he pointed him out, remarking he owes me $50 for rent. As the words of a hymn died away he walked toward the gathering and had taken but few steps when the leader announced another hymn, "It is all right now." He bowed his head, and withdrew.

Lawyers who fail to receive copies of the Quincy Ledger, Patriot of the Braintree Observer containing their legal notices, because of slowness or miscarriage of the mails, can find them on file for their convenience at the Probate Court in Dedham, J. R. McCoole, Register having consented to file them for reference.

ASKS THAT THAW BE GIVEN FREEDOM

Bail Plea Reaches United States Supreme Court

Washington, June 9.—Application was filed in the supreme court by counsel for Harry K. Thaw for his release on bail pending consideration by the court of the extradition case on which the state of New York is seeking to remove him from New Hampshire.

The required presence of Thaw in Pittsburg, regarding litigation over the Thaw estate, was assigned as the principal reason for the bail request.

The action of Federal Judge Aldrich in granting Thaw a writ of habeas corpus to prevent his extradition to New York and Aldrich's statement, conceding Thaw's right to bail, but passing the question along to the supreme court, was cited as argument by Thaw for his immediate release under bond.

Thaw is now in technical custody of a deputy sheriff in New Hampshire, although enjoying almost every liberty.

BERKMAN SUPPLIES BAIL

Anarchist Secures Release of Dozen "Free Speech" Prisoners

Tarrytown, N. Y., June 9.—Release of twelve "free speech" prisoners held in jail at White Plains for defying the authorities at Tarrytown was ordered by Justice Moorehouse when Alexander Berkman, Anarchist, tendered bonds to the amount of $2400. This was $200 each as demanded by District Attorney Weeks. The prisoners will appear for trial June 12.

Berkman reached here with Helen Harris, one of the women involved. The bond was offered, accepted and the release ordered in a few minutes.

"LET THEM DIE" NEW SLOGAN

Father Vaughan Suggests "Hunger Strikers" Start at Once and Make Up For Lost Time—Other Prominent Clergymen Appear to Be of the Same Opinion

London, June 9.—"Let them die," is becoming a rather popular slogan in connection with the "hunger striking" suffragettes since the public has become so profoundly resentful of the activities of the militant women.

It is reported that the government has decided to take a step in this direction by introducing legislation to indemify the prison authorities against the consequences of allowing suffragettes to starve themselves to death while in prison.

The Standard interviewed a number of prominent people, including clergymen, on the subject, and all of the latter who are quoted by the newspaper express themselves in favor of the proposal.

Fr. Bernard Vaughan, brother of the late Cardinal Vaughan, replied: "There would be nothing ethically wrong in letting them die. Let them start at once and make up for lost time."

Rev. Arthur Waldron, vicar of St. Matthew's, Brixton, said: "If the women refuse food they should be allowed to die."

Rev. Richard Free, vicar of St. Clement's, Fulham, replied: "I think the suggestion very good. I have advocated it for many months."

Several of those interviewed denounced impartially both forcible feeding and the "hunger strike," while Willoughby Dickinson, a Liberal member of parliament, Lady Cowdray and Lady Muir-Mackenzie dismissed the suggestion as preposterous.

TRAVEL ON SAME TRAIN

Roosevelt and Alfonso Unaware of Presence of One Another

Madrid, Jnue 9.—Theodore Roosevelt arrived at Madrid on his first visit to Spain, the object of the trip being to attend the wedding of his son, Kermit, and Miss Willard, daughter of the American ambassador to Spain.

Although Roosevelt and King Alfonso had traveled on the same train for some distance, each was unaware of the presence of the other and there was consequently no meeting.

King Alfonso had been at Biarritz to see his doctor and it was merely a coincidence that his car was attached to the train in which Roosevelt was traveling.

When the king left the trajn Roosevelt was an interested spectator as Alfonso passed through a guard of troops drawn up on the platform.

WILL BRITAIN WIN SHAMROCK IV.

Lipton Yacht Is a Complete Success or Utter Failure, Say Experts.

THE yachting world is agog over the forthcoming attempt of the persistent Sir Thomas Lipton of England to win the America's cup. Since the first contest, in 1851, between America and England victory has crowned our defenders. But will it be the same old story this time? That is a question in the opinion of yachting experts. They regard Shamrock IV., the English challenger for the historic trophy in the races off Sandy Hook, N. Y., Sept. 10, 12 and 15, as a formidable opponent.

Shamrock IV. is a freak to look at. In comparison with the Yankee models, says the New York Tribune, an expert abroad who has seen the challenger says the new Shamrock is striking. When canted on a good sailing angle we are told that she sails upon straight lines for the greater part of her entire length. She is ugly and unconventional in the modeling of bow and stern, more stubby and broader of beam than any of the American contestants and has many minor features that are at direct variance with the customary uses of yacht designers.

She is all wood. Her deck is three feet narrower than the hull just above the water line, her keel is long and curiously formed, her rig is large, and her general construction seems to prophesy that her sail area will be considerably in excess of 8,000 square feet.

Success or Flat Failure.

Yachtsmen believe that the British yacht, designed by Charles E. Nichol son for speed and not for beauty, will be either a complete success or an utter failure.

Yachting experts were favorably impressed with the challenger's performance on her first trial spin, especially to windward, when she showed a distinct improvement on Shamrock III., which accompanied her. Close hauled the challenger pointed splendidly, and the weight of the wind scarcely affected her. She sailed remarkably well also on a long beat, and only when running before the wind did the older boat hold her own.

The American boats, while smaller than their predecessors, are not such marked experiments as the Shamrock. The three new candidates are totally different, however, from the last defender, the Reliance, in many other details than that of actual size. They have rounder floors and sharper water lines forward.

The Resolute was built by the New York Yacht club syndicate, whose members are former Commodores Henry Walters, Arthur Curtiss James, Frederick G. Bourne, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Vice Commodore George F. Baker and Rear Commodore J. P. Morgan. The Defiance was built for the Tri-city syndicate, in which G. M. Pynchon and E. W. Clark are moving spirits.

The Defiance, considerably larger than her Herreshoff rival, the Resolute, has measured up well with the plans of her designer, George Owen. She has a graceful bow and stern, moderate overhangs and an enormous mast and topmast. Her hull is of polished mahogany, and her underbody is white enameled.

The Vanitie is the middle of the three as far as most of her dimensions go, although more closely approaching the Defiance than the Resolute. In length over all she measures 119 feet, the greatest of them all. Her sail area is about 9,000 feet, while her draft and displacement are the same as her two rivals. She carries five tons extra on her keel over the amount borne by the other two and stands between them in the height of her mast from deck to truck. Her lines throughout are sweeping, easy and graceful. Like the Resolute, her underbody is of manganese bronze burnished until it shines like a golden mirror. No expense has been spared in building her, and whether she is the fastest of the trio or not she is considered the best looking. Her owner, Alexander Smith Cochran of Yonkers, N. Y., has paid the full amount from his own pocket.

Resolute—Length over all, 107 feet 7 inches; water line, 75 feet; beam, 21 feet 6 inches; fixed draft, 13.9; displacement, 106 tons; mast, deck to truck, 124 feet; sail area, 7,800 square feet.

Vanitie—Length over all, 119 feet; water line, 75 feet; beam, 21 feet 6 inches; fixed draft, 13.9; displacement, 106 tons; mast, deck to truck, 130 feet; sail area, 9,000 square feet.

Defiance—Length over all, 115 feet; water line, 75 feet; beam, 22 feet 6 inches; fixed draft, 13.9; displacement, 106 tons; mast, deck to truck, 153 feet; sail area, 9,000 square feet.

Shamrock IV.—Length over all, 110 feet; water line, 75 feet; beam, 23 feet; draft, 13.9; sail area, probably over 8,000 square feet.

The First Cup Winner.

The change in type of sailing vessels as represented by the America and her successors is perhaps more interesting to all lovers of yachting than the actual details of the contests by which the famous cup was taken and held.

The America, which sixty-three years ago went across the Atlantic and took away the Royal Yacht Squadron trophy, marked a greater revolution in yacht construction than any vessel since her time.

Still in commission after as exciting a career as any other American vessel has had, she was originally a pilot schooner of about 170 tons, able and seaworthy. Her length over all was 101 feet 9 inches; load water line, 90 feet 3 inches; beam, 23 feet; mainmast, 81 feet; foremast, 79 feet 6 inches; bowsprit, 32 feet. She carried no foretop mast, relying on the largeness of her sails. She carried no boom on her foresail. Her masts had an extreme rake of two and seven-eighths inches to the foot, and her hull was built of wood.

Subsequent Improvements.

Since the time of the America, up to and including the construction of the yachts that are to race in September, builders have sought for a form that will present the smallest wetted surface and the least amount of wave making and the greatest freedom from eddy formation with the greatest sail power. From the time of the America up to the Mischief and the Atalanta, that raced for the cup in 1881, all the boats were of the straight keel type, with hollow water lines forward and a deep forefoot. Steel had not been thought of in the process of yacht construction. Builders were constantly designing models that would cut the water like a knife and allow it to slip away from the underbody with little friction.

After thirty years there appeared the sloop Puritan in 1885, with less forefoot and straighter water lines forward and a long overhang aft. She showed a marked difference from the old models, and was far ahead of them.

The Mayflower was a slightly enlarged Puritan, while the Genesta and Galatea, that competed with these two, were of the narrow, deep, "plank on edge" type that had been the logical development of the English measurements that were popular at the period.

The next English challenger, the Thistle, was more of an American, while the Volunteer, that raced with her, was an improved Mayflower, with a clipper stem and a draft of twelve feet without board. The next American boat, the Vigilant, although carrying a centerboard, was virtually a keel model, with a draft of fourteen feet. Her bow was the embryonic "spoon bow" that became so popular later.

Metal yachts had begun to figure upon the lists of the cup defenders. When iron and steel had gained sufficient tensile strength the builders saw that it had many advantages over the common hull woods that had been generally employed. The Mischief was the first metal yacht to race as a defender and the second metal yacht in America. From her time on steel and aluminium were more frequently employed in the hulls, the first hollow steel spars, however, not coming into vogue until after the race between the Defender and the Jubilee in 1893, while the first steel mast was carried by the Columbia.

The most marked change in any of the American defenders was in the Reliance, which successfully defended the cup against the Shamrock III. in 1903. The Reliance, like the present Shamrock IV., approached somewhat to the type of racing scow that has been used with much success on bodies of fresh water. The Reliance had the largest sail plan of all the yachts that engaged in any of the international contests, amounting to no less than 16,160 square feet, which was as much as the combined areas of the Mayflower and the Puritan and also more than twice as much as was carried in all the sails of the schooner America.

Why Yacht Racing Is Costly.

Yacht racing is the most expensive sport, and it has been said on good authority that it will cost at least half a million dollars this year to defend the America's cup. William Gardner, designer of the Vanitie, recently said:

"In a cup defender expense is never considered. The very best materials are obtained, and everything that is new in materials is used. What was considered the last word in materials a few years ago is commonplace now.

"As every ounce of unnecessary weight is a detriment to the boat, the prime object of the designer is to reduce the weight to the very minimum so as to give the maximum amount of lead to the keel and consequently sail carrying power.

"The work of designing a cup defender entails five or six times the labor of a regular boat of the same size."

How Defenders Are Built.

The first step in the construction of the modern cup defender is the molding of the lead keel. Some ninety tons of lead are used. A wooden trough is built of the size and shape required, into which the molten lead is run. The moment the contract is signed hurry orders are sent out to firms who furnish steel, so that by the time the keel is run some or all of the frames are generally on the way to the shipyard.

Being received in straight lengths, the steel for the frames is made hot at the shipyard, placed on what is known as the bending platform and by means of wedges and pins is bent to the shape required by the designer's plans. A long flat piece of steel, called the keelson, reaching the entire length of the yacht, is first fastened to the lead keel by long bolts; then the stem and stern posts are set up, the stern post being the part of the frame to which the rudder is later attached.

A captain and crew of some fifty men are engaged and under pay long before the yacht is launched. Their pay, food and clothing go on from six to eight months. Bills for towing and a special steamer upon which to berth the crew are among some of the heavy expenses.

An Anonymous Letter

But There Was a Clew In It

By EVERETT P. CLARKE

Walter Borland at twenty-two was a very agreeable chap. He was not especially handsome, and since he paid very little attention to girls the girls paid very little attention to him. Such being the case, he had a very poor opinion of his powers of charming the fair sex. True, he thought little about the matter; he simply regarded himself as not a ladies' man.

One day the postman handed Walter a letter that brought the surprise of his life. It was postmarked and dated at the city of Cincinnati and signed by one of whom he had never heard, at least not by the name given. The writer said that she was a girl nineteen years old. She had met him and had fallen in love with him. She would not be so unmaidenly as to reveal her identity, but she just couldn't help letting him know that there was a girl who loved him and would never love any one else.

There would be no chance of his discovering who she was because she had taken every pains to prevent his doing so. Without this she would be inexcusable in revealing her love for him. Possibly he might meet her again. If so he would be at liberty to woo her, if, indeed, he felt drawn to her, without knowing that he had already made a conquest.

Now, if Walter Borland were conscious of being a heart smasher, doubtless he would not have been seriously affected by this letter. As it was, he was very much moved by it. What any girl saw in him to cause her to give him her heart without even the slightest courtship—for he had never preferred any one girl to others—he couldn't imagine. His judgment told him that some one was putting up a job on him, but his amour propre said that it hoped the letter was genuine.

Then he fell to thinking out the problem as to who that lass might be. He had never lived in Cincinnati and, so far as he remembered, had never met a girl who was a resident of that city. Quite likely she had posted the letter while there temporarily or had sent it there to be posted. It seemed to him that she had been successful in her intention to conceal her identity, for he could see no possible clew. And yet it would be just like a girl to give a clew—that is, a clew that it would be next to impossible for him to hit upon.

He thought of all the girls he had ever known, trying to call up some mark of favor shown him by any one of the number. Not a girl of his acquaintance had ever indicated that she coveted his attentions.

All living beings are hunters, and man is the chief hunter of them all, though man's weapons are either intellectual or the result of intellectual action. Borland found himself facing a problem. A girl had confessed that she loved him, and he could never be satisfied until he had found her. His first move was to study the girls of his acquaintance. When he met one of them he would scrutinize her countenance with a view to seeing some telltale expression in it. If he failed to meet any one of them casually he called upon her. Not one received him with the slightest sign of embarrassment.

Being completely blocked in his efforts, he consulted his chum, Bob Carter, a young man who was supposed to understand women. Carter put him through an examination with a view to bringing out some indication that had been shown by one of his girl acquaintances. Borland mentioned a girl who had taken umbrage at some unintended slight he had given her. Carter pounced upon the lady as the writer of the letter. When a girl takes offense at a man's treatment of her it indicates that she is sensitive to his treatment. But unfortunately this young lady was not less than twenty-one years old, whereas the writer had described herself as nineteen. Nevertheless Borland applied certain tests, all of which failed to show any unusual interest in him.

Having failed to get any available counsel from a man, the young huntsman or, rather, the young detective—for this is a detective story without the pale of criminality—concluded to try a woman. He consulted his friend Mrs. Cheltenham, a bride of three months.

"No girl," said the lady, "would write such a confession to a man without placing it within the bounds of possibility that he should discover her identity. She has given a clew, but if you discover it you will still be a long way from discovering the girl. I would advise you to examine her letter with a microscope. If that fails try chemicals. She may be a college girl up in chemistry."

It was evening when Borland received this advice, and, going to his home, he took out the letter, procured a hand-glass of strong magnifying power and, taking both to a gas jet, brought the glass to bear on the letter. In order to get the best light he held the paper within a few inches of the flame. Brownish letters came out written across the face of the letter. "Month of roses, 12—'12."

Borland would have been very stupid had he not been able to interpret this as June 12, 1912. Mrs. Cheltenham had hit the nail squarely on the head. "Get a woman to catch a woman," said Borland. "But she was also right in predicting that if I found a clew in the letter I would still be far from the girl. However, whoever she is, she is educated or she would not have known that citric acid becomes brown when heated. June 12, 1912—where was I on that day? It was nearly a year ago, and I doubt if I can determine just where I was."

But Borland sat himself down to think, and it was not long before he remembered that on June, 1912, he attended the graduating exercises of a women's college, where he had been introduced to more than a dozen young ladies and had seen and been seen by several hundred more. Surely his friend Mrs. Cheltenham must have the power of divining the human female mind, for he was not only far from discovering the writer of the letter, but among so many it would be impossible to pick out the culprit.

The graduating exercises of the women's college were approaching, and Borland considered the expediency of going there to look for a needle in a haystack. He called upon the lady who had put him on the track and told her that he now believed the letter to be a college prank and in that event he would take no further interest in it. His counselor replied that the age of the writer, if given correctly, rather indicated that she belonged to one of the lower classes or was not a college girl at all, since girls did not usually enter college before they were eighteen. Mrs. Cheltenham was rather inclined to believe that the writer of the letter was a visitor to the college, because she would not be likely to put him in possession of her location.

Borland attended the commencement exercises of the women's college, but he might as well have gone to Greenland for all the benefit his visit was to his search, and when he returned to his home he felt that if he ever found the letter writer it would be because she would give him an additional clew. His adviser told him that the girl had doubtless been at the college commencement and had seen him there. She therefore knew that he was hunting her. Better drop the matter. The girl doubtless was observing him, and if she saw that he had given up the chase she would very likely do something to urge him on.

Borland adopted the Fabian policy; but, as for not thinking about the matter, that was impossible. Toward the end of August he went into the country with his friend Carter to spend his vacation canoeing. One evening he went with Carter to a summer hotel for supper. While passing through the hall to the dining room they passed several young ladies. When they were seated at the table Carter said:

"Walter, I've found your girl!"

"Which? When? Where?" was the hurried response.

"Coming through the hall. One of the girls we met, the moment she saw you, started. Then the color all went out of her face and came back red as a jack rose."

"Pretty or homely?"

"A peach."

"Good! I must go and find her."

He was rising from his seat, but Carter held him down.

"Sit still. Do you want to spoil your romance? Eat your supper and keep cool. Your game is to pretend not to recognize the girl as the writer of the letter. Make her acquaintance, get spoons with her and at the proper time tell her you're going to turn turtle in your canoe because you're dying of love for her and have no hope of winning her."

"Is that the way it's done?"

"Of course it is. If you ever let her know that you are on to her secret she'll flee from you as from the wrath to come."

"By Jove, Bob, where did you learn so much about women?"

"Any fool would know that."

"I've no doubt you're right. In due time get an introduction to her and introduce me."

"It won't do to hurry."

"But are you sure she's the girl?"

"She must be. No girl at meeting a man would start and go red and white by turns unless there was some important tie between her and him. But we must make her think right off that we're ignorant of her secret or she'll leave for parts unknown."

After the young men had finished their suppers they looked in the drawing room and on the piazza for the girl in question, but it was not till late in the evening that she showed herself. The men were on the piazza in the dark, while she was in a lighted room, so that Carter had no difficulty in pointing her out without her being aware that she was under observation.

The rest of the story is one of ordinary courtship, except that the suitor knew all the while that he had won. The young lady was not a student and had not played a college prank. She was an innocent girl who had relieved her mind by sending the man to whom she had given her heart on sight an anonymous letter, telling him of her love. After their engagement she sounded her betrothed as to the letter she had written him. He told her that he had received such a letter, but, thinking it to be a joke of some of his men friends, had torn it up. He dared not let her know even that he had considered it sincere. He expects some day to atone for the lie by telling her the truth, but thus far every time he has started to do so he has been frightened off. Possibly some day when they have been a long while married and the romance of love has given place to the reality of love he may venture to tell her that he knew from the time he met her that she loved him. Quien sabe?

SCORES BRYAN LECTURES

Bill Before Congress Puts Damper on Secretary of State

Washington, June 9.—Secretary Bryan's lecture tours cropped up in the house again when Representative Britten of Illinois, Republican, introduced a bill to make it a penal offense for any cabinet officer, head or clerk of a government department to lecture for pay other than actual hotel and traveling expenses, and to prohibit senators or representatives from lecturing for pay while congress is in session.

Offenders would be fined $10,000 or imprisoned for two years, or suffer both penalties.

Britten launched a broadside in a statement accompanying his bill, in which he spared no political party, and included Senator La Follette and Representative Murdock. He said the bill was prepared last September, but was not introduced when Bryan formally said he would lecture no more during the period.

The recent announcement, said Britten, that several members of congress and the secretar yof state had signed contracts for a period of lectures beginning July 1, was responsible for his bill.

BANDITS ELUDE POSSE

Two Make Off With $22,150 Loot and Another Is Shot

Columbus, O., June 9.—With $22,150, the loot of two daring robberies in their possession, two armed bandits are being hunted by officers in a score of automobiles between this city and Centreburg, O.

Three bandits robbed the home of Frederick and Henry Schwilk, wealthy farmers, near here, of $21,000 in securities and $150 in cash. Later, when attempting to escape on a freight train, they were intercepted and one of the number wounded by pursuers.

The remaining two escaped and returned to the Schwilk farm, there stealing an automobile, which they used to escape after robbing the store of E. E. McQuire, Centreburg, of $1000 in cash. Cornered in a rye field for six hours by several hundred men, the desperadoes again made their escape.

The wounded bandit, dying here, is said to have confessed he is Arthur C. Strom and his two companions were Earl and Ernest Jones, ex-convicts of Iowa state penitentiary.

CANADIAN AGENCY CLOSES ITS DOORS

Closely Follows Failure of Another Big London Concern

London, June 9.—Formal announcement of the suspension of the Canadian Agency, Ldt., was made here. The concern, which also has offices in New York, was largely controlled by Arthur Grenfell, formerly of the firm of Chaplin, Milne, Grenfell & Co., which suspended business on Saturday with liabilities estimated at about $1,250,000.

The business of the Canadian agency was the flotation and financing of Canadian and other companies, and it recently is alleged to have been engaged in a campaign for the purchase of a controlling interest in the Grand Trunk railway.

JACK TAR'S SWEET TOOTH

To Be Satisfied With Big Batch of Candy and Salted Peanuts

Philadelphia, June 9.—To satisfy the sweet tooth of the bluejackets of the Atlantic reserve fleet, at the Philadelphia navy yard, the government has placed an order here for thirty tons of candy and 80,000 packages of salted peanuts.

This supply will be delivered from time to time to the canteens on the vessels of the fleet.

The sailors are very fond of candy, salted peanuts and tobacco. An officer stated that the men eat more candy when at sea than they do in port. Salted peanuts sell better in port than at sea.

Happy Over Widowhood

Pittsburg, June 9.—Mrs. Margaret Snyder won discharge in police court by declaring she was drunk in celebration of the seventh anniversary of her husband's death. "I'm so happy without him," she said.

CHURCH AND CHOIR

HALL PLACE M. E.

At the Sunday morning service at the Hall Place M. E. church, the pastor emphasized the prayer service and its need, taking for his text Acts 9-11—"For behold he prayeth."

Sunday school followed the morning service. Miss Edna Burke led the Epworth League devotional service at 6 P. M; subject "A song of security and contentment."

At the evening service the pastor spoke from the text "And the king and Haman sat down to drink; but the city Shushan was perplexed"—Esther 3-15.

At the close of the evening service an Epworth League Cabinet meeting was held.

Tuesday evening the regular meeting of the Sunday school board will be held at the parsonage.

The Ladies' Aid Society will meet in the vestry Tuesday evening.

Junior League will meet Friday afternoon at 4. Prayer meeting will be held Friday evening at 7.30.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL

One of the features of the Sunday morning service was the taking into membership of five new members. This is additional to the ones taken in at the regular communion services and shows a steady growth. Dr. Sneath preached one of his "Optimistic sermons" taking as his subject "Satisfaction from the Christian's ideal." An uneasy dissatisfied age calls for satisfaction, not a satisfaction outwardly however beautiful; but within, which shows itself in work. Three heads were noted: Communion makes like; endeavor means work and an abiding Christ.

Children's day will be observed next Sunday with exercises by the children and a talk by Dr. Sneath at 10.45. Bibles will be given as usual to children who have reached the age of seven.

Union services this summer as usual in July and August.

AMONG LOWEST IN FIRE LOSS

Quincy stands among the lowest of the 28 cities of Massachusetts with a population of 20,000 in pro rata fire loss in 1913. Salem is at the top with $12.08, and Boston second with $5.79. Quincy is down to $1.51, but New Bedford and Medford are less than $1.00.

FINE HORSE ACTS IN ROBBINS' CIRCUS

Every circus that comes to Quincy has horse acts. It would not be a circus if it did not, but none of them have such performing horses as the wonderful troupe of imported German stallions, brought to this country for the Frank A. Robbins All-Feature Circus, which apears here twice on Monday, June 15. At an expense of $200,000 these eight coal black wonders of the equine world twice a day give a performance which is unequalled in the annals of circusdom. Under the direction of Prof. Joseph Barris, King of Horse Trainers, and without a peer in the show business today, the troupe go through the most remarkable evolutions in the ring, the whole act concluding when Hector, king of the group, walks out of the ring on his rear legs to the plaudits of all who witness the remarkable act.

High school horses bareback riding, trained ponies and elephants form but a few of the features with this show. Wire walkers unexcelled, iron-jawed men and women, numerous aerial acts, and a troupe of clowns second to none in the country today, present a two-hour program which will delight young and old. There is nothing old about the show but the name.

WATERWAYS DEVELOPMENT

Party of 1500 on visit to Cape Cod Canal

Quite a party from Quincy was present at Faneuil hall, Boston Monday evening at the illustrated lecture on inland waterway development by by Hon. Wilfred H. Schoff, secretary of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways association. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange.

In his lecture he spoke of the reconstructed New York canal system which will connect the Great Lakes, Lake Champlain and the St. Lawrence river.

Speaking of Boston he said, "Boston is the natural eastern and northern terminus of both these systems and it is important that Boston should consider the value of completely utilizing her connection with them."

Today the members of the Real Estate Exchange and guests to the number of 1500 are on an excursion to the Cape Cod canal. The party left Boston at 9.30 and they will have the distinction of being on board the first sea-going passenger vessel to enter the canal. They will probably go up the canal for about a mile in the steamer and then smaller boats will be taken for a trip up the canal as far as possible. During the trip addresses will be made by Gov. Walsh, Mayor Curley, Congressman Greene and others.

BARGAIN DAY AT CITY HALL

New Flag Flies from Pole on City Hall this Morning

Some of the multitude of office seekers, and perhaps some of those who would like to fill the chair in the Mayors office in City Hall next year, missed a golden opportunity, when they failed to take advantage of the alleged bargain day at City Hall. Mondays are known as bargain days at certain of the City Square stores but no one for a minute ever supposed that there would be any bargain days at City Hall, and they were naturally surprised this morning, or rather those whose business calls them out early, were surprised to see a white bargain day flag flying over City Hall.

Some wag about City Square Monday night evidently conceived of a brilliant idea, for securing one of the white flags, with the words "Bargain Day" printed across it in red letters, fastened it to the halliards on the flag pole at City Hall, and hoisted it to the peak. The flag was not seen Monday night but this morning it was noticed that people hurrying to take an early train for Boston stopped and gazed in wonderment at the municipal stone building. Then they smiled for the flag was waving proudly from the peak of the flag staff.

Not for long however for an the arrival of the janitor the flag found a resting place in the ash barrel.

AUGUST FLOTOW.

Friends of Mrs. James S. Whiting of Wollaston will regret to learn of the death of her father, August Flotow of Egleston Square, Boston, on Thursday of last week. Mr. Flotow was a cigar manufacturer, having been associated in business with his son. He had been in failing health for several months. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the Crematory chapel, Forest Hills, and were conducted by the Germania Lodge of Masons, assisted by a choir of sixteen male voices. He is survived by a widow, three daughters and a son.

LAWN PARTIES.

Social evenings and lawn parties are being held in different parts of West Quincy this week in aid of the various tables at the annual midsummer festival of St, Mary's parish. On Wednesday evening a moving picture show will be held in St. Joseph's hall and Friday evening a bundle whist party will be held at the home of Mrs. James White on Miller street. A lawn party in aid of the West street table will be held at the home of the Misses Galvin on West street on Saturday evenings.

Miss Irene Graham and Miss Margaret Bisson, two well known young ladies of Quincy, have gone to New York where they will spend their two weeks vacation.

The cool east wind which prevailed all day Monday, during the evening and this morning had one result. That is it made people wearing B. V. D.'s hustle to get into something warmer.

Those who took the trip to the Cape Cod canal today may not feel like taking the trip to California this evening but those who hear Mrs. Victor Miller tonight will want to take the trip around the world on Thursday.

Quincy lodge of Elks will observe Flag day next Sunday afternoon with appropriate exercises at Kincaide's theatre. The club is also to hold a flag raising at its club house on Foster street, for which a new pole has been provided.

Both have the referendum attached and will go to the people next fall. A bitter fight is sure to result.

It will be of interest to the general public to know that by calling at the office of the Granite Trust Co. in City Square they may obtain a card giving in convenient form the time of trains between Quincy and Boston by the new timetable which went into effect Sunday night. There are quite a number of minor changes in the leaving time of trains.

A supper and entertainment, the proceeds of which will be devoted to expense of sending the delegates of Paul Revere Post, G. A. R., to the National encampment, will be given in Grand Army hall Friday evening by Rebecca Wiswell tent, No. 53, Daughters of Veterans. The supper will be served at 6.30 and a large committee has charge of the event.

Many Quincy people with their children were numbered among the thousands at Fenway park Saturday afternoon at the reception given at the presentation of the three trained elephants to the city of Boston which were purchased largely by small contributions made by the children throughout New England at the request of the Post.

There was almost a constant stream of automobiles passing through Washington street, Sunday afternoon, going in both directions, and at times it was difficult to cross the street, which prompted one citizen to remark that the city should build a subway, or an overhead bridge so that people might cross without being in danger of being run down. Just after the closing of the Quincy Point drawbridge about 6 P. M. 134 were counted going in one direction in six minutes.

☞North Weymouth people can now secure a copy of the Quincy Daily Ledger at the store of D. A. Jones, Thomas Corner. Beside North Weymouth and Quincy news they will find much interesting reading and also some advertisements that it will pay them to read as Quincy merchants can save them money. tf

Sailed Into Canal and Held Exercises After Landing

The trip of inspection to the Cape Cod canal on Tuesday proved to be a midnight water trip for some, and a sea and land trip for others, and nearly everybody "fed the fishes." It was the second day of continuous east wind which was not only strong but cold. Before the canal was reached many had decided that they would not return by boat, and 200 to 300 left Sandwich by train at 5 P. M. and reached Boston soon after seven. The steamboat was expected to dock at Boston before seven, but while in the canal her propellor picked up a hawser and it was 6.30 before she was able to drop it and proceed homeward.

It was a large and gay crowd of 1300 excursionists which embarked from Boston at 9.45 A. M. on the steamer Dorothy Bradford of the Provincetown line, including nearly as many women as men. Lieut. Governor Barry, Mayor Curley and wife, Congressman Greene, Col. Millis of the Army engineers, ex-Governor Brackett, Councillor Guy and wife of Quincy Water Front Commissioner Frank Fessenden Crane and wife of Quincy and other notables were there.

Many in summer attire were ill prepared for the cold east wind, but others had sweaters and overcoats which they were glad to put on as soon as the Bradford left her dock at Boston. Scarcely had the ship passed out by Boston light when people aboard began to feel uncomfortable. Within an

FIFTY CENTS ADMITS TO ALL

And Includes Trip Around the World by Auto

Many whose business and home ties will not permit of their taking two or three months away from home for a trip around the world are planning to take the trip Thursday with the Quincy Women's club, when all of the important countries of the globe will be visited in eighty minutes. Of course this eighty minutes only affords a short visit to each country, but those who desire may make a longer stay at any of the several countries visited during the trip.

The itinerary includes, besides America, the home of the free and the brave; Italy, the land of sunshine and music; Russia; England on whose domains the sun never sets; Japan, the land of the wistaria and lanterns, Greece, Germany, Jamaica and last but not least Holland, the land of the tulips and windmills.

Arrangements have been made so that one may start on his or her trip about the world from any of the different countries. Or they may confine their trip to the visit of one country If one desires to take in all of the countries, as the great majority will, a fifty cent ticket will suffice, as it will include the automobile trip and admittance to every country.

Attractions of various kinds will be found at each, and there will be eatables and drinkables and souvenirs. To those who plan making the trip in the late afternoon, a stop for supper may be made at Germany or Greece.

Persons who desire to send home souvenir postals may mail them before leaving England, and with his usual promptness, Uncle Sam will see that they are delivered to their destination on the following morning.

Returns from the agencies where tickets for the trip have been on sale indicate that the automobiles will be taxed to accommodate the tourists The ladies in charge, however, promise that there will be no difficulty about obtaining passage, and that all who desire to take the trip will be accommodated, if tickts are secured in advance.

AWARDED $2 EACH.

The following people are $2 better off today because they traded at Quincy stores on Monday: Ragnar Bergren of 142 Granite street, Mrs. Fred Biggin of 95 Cranch street, Mr. George Main of 325 Granite street, Sabbatta DiBona of 146 Liberty street, and W. L. Jacobs of 30 Euclid avenue.

NEW THEATRE FOR QUINCY

Will Be Erected on Site of Present Auditorium

It is understood that the building on the corner of Hancock street and Revere road, recently used as a moving picture house, is to be torn down and a model theatre erected on the site.

The removing of this building will take away one of the old landmarks. Originally the building was the church of the Orthodox society, as it was then called. When the present edifice now known as Bethany church was erected, the tall steeple on the old building, which citizens thought many times would be blown down by high winds, was taken down.

Since that time the building has been used for various purposes. At one time it was used by a company of the 9th regiment for drills and later it became a public hall, known as Hancock hall. At one time there was also a shoe manufacturing shop in the basement: The hall itself was also used at one time as the Public Library, also a skating rink. Many of the Grand Army and other fairs have been held there, also many political gatherings. Of late years it has been used as a moving picture theatre.

RECENT FUNERALS.

The funeral of Thomas L. Cameron was held Tuesday afternoon from the undertaking rooms of John Hall. Services were conducted by Rev. James A. Matheson of the First Presbyterian church and burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetrey.

Many relatives and friends attended the funeral of Albert J. Caddy, who died in his 25th year on Monday, which was held from his home at 102 Quincy street. Among those present was a delegation from Court John Adams, Foresters of America, with which he was affiliated. Services were conducted by Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott of the Bethany Congregational church. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery There were many floral remembrances. A wife and infant baby survive.

The funeral of Edward E. Douglas was held this afternoon from his late home at 13 Farrington street and was well attended. Rev. Joseph E. Walther of the Wollaston Baptist church officiated at the services. There were many floral remembrances from relatives and friends. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

ANNUAL TRIP OF THE KIDDIES

Seventy-Seven From Quincy Off For Automobile Outing at Nantasket

Chester Campbell of Wollaston in Charge of Party

Seventy-seven happy, care-free kiddies of Quincy left City Square this morning as the guests of the Boston Auto Dealers Association on the annual outing to Nantasket. A dozen autos transported the children and their attendants.

The party was under the direction of Miss Frances Abele and Rev. Rufus B. Tobey. They were assisted by Miss Helen H. Gavin, Miss Mary Carey, Mrs. M. Lacey and daughter Gertrude, Mrs. George W. Abele, Mrs. Arnold Hopkins, Miss Gladys Thomas Mrs. Lucille Smalley and others.

The affair is held annually for the children of the greater Boston district and was under the direction of Chester I. Campbell of Wollaston. As early as eight o'clock those to be taken in the Quincy division were on hand, but it was not until 9.45 that the procession of gaily decorated machines filled with children, tooting red, white and blue horns, got underway.

The machines were loaned for the occasion and included in the Quincy party were the machines of Enos B. Harrington of Arlington, Paul H. Houston of Holbrook, Joseph S. Winslow of Watertown, Alice T. White of Milton and B. H. Bain, Charles C. Hearn, Walter E. Frost and Charles P. Gould of Quincy.

Children over 13 years of age were not permitted to join the party, but one boy, Salvatore Di Liccio of Water street, managed to find a vacant place in a machine and was taken along.

The affair, strictly for the poor children, is one of the gayest in the state. Every attraction at Nantasket is thrown open for their amusement and about noon a good dinner is served in one of the hotels.

An almost endless line of automobiles filled with happy children, each waving a small American flag passed through City Square this morning on their way to Nantasket. The first cars went through about 9 o'clock and from then on up to nearly noon they went in bunches of fifteen to twenty-five. Each car was in charge of a lady. It needed no one to tell that the children were happy and that they were having the time of their life

GRANITE TRADES COUNCIL.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

So far the leading politicians are all straddling the issue of T. R.'s river.

So far no one has proposed to pension criminals, but all other classes of the population are well taken care of by pending legislation.

Mr. Wilson and Col. Roosevelt had an amicable discussion, but the question of renting the White House for the next four years was not taken up.

The government still seems slow to make war, in spite of the heroic willingness of the yellow editors to bang out their typewriters in the nation's service.

It is claimed that college girls do not have musical voices. That being so, the colleges have evidently prepared them well to shine at the tango teas.

INTEREST IN THE HORSE.

It does not add to one's sense of comfort to open one's eyes and consider the question whether the domestic animals on our streets are well cared for or not. Most people go their ways, comfortably oblivious as to whether horses are well fed and kindly considered or the reverse. It creates an unpleasant sense of responsibility when one sees a maltreated animal, a feeling that it is one's disagreeable duty to interfere.

However, the horse seems to have more friends than formerly. In a great many places, work horse parades and "horse days" are being held at this time of year. The summer is the period of highest strain for these faithful helpers. Anything that attracts attention to their needs is useful.

Drivers of horses who are careless in treating horses regard it as officious and impertinent when people call their attention to such neglect. The grocer's boy will crack his whip loudly over his horse's head, if he sees some specially zealous friend of animals passing along the street. Nevertheless, the person who protests against cases of cruelty performs a service.

The most obvious ill-treatment occurrs along one of three lines: Insufficient feeding, lack of protection against insects, and badly fitting harnesses. Many drivers fail to remedy the last difficulty, simply because it would take them five minutes to punch a few extra holes in a strap.

The poorly fed horse is the discontented horse. He plugs along the street at a discouraged and drooping pace, and balks at a fair sized load. He returns no dividends to his owner and is a discredit to any home, place of business, or farm.

NEW MOVE TO SAVE MELLEN

Counsel's Immunity Claims Have Not Been Successful

THE GRAND TRUNK TESTIMONY

Debatable Whether Revelations Concerning New Haven Deals Was Broad Enough to Remove Liability of Prosecution—Interest Over Proposed Suit In Behalf of Stockholders

Washington, June 10.—John W. H. Crim, personal attorney for Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New Haven railroad, says that, when the trial of Mellen on the indictment in the Grand Trunk case is resumed before the United States district court for southern New York, he will make a motion in bar in behalf of his client.

This action may be construed as prima facie evidence that the department of justice has refused the application of Crim that prosecution against Mellen should be abandoned on the ground that he had gained immunity in connection with the New Haven deals through his testimony before the interstate commerce commission.

The fact that the influences chiefly responsible for bringing Mellen before the commission are now working hardest to save him from prosecution strengthened the theory that his appearance was sought by Chief Counsel Folk for the purpose of securing immunity for this one man.

This outcome confirms the hint previously given that Attorney General McReynolds has regarded the testimony of Mellen as a useless sacrifice, at least with respect to the Grand Trunk case. In that case the written statement submitted by Mellen, which was much broader than his oral testimony, is said to be disregarded by the law and to constitute no factor in securing immunity. His oral testimony was so brief that Mellen himself was surprised that Folk should have been contented with so superficial an examination.

Many of Mellen's statements were declared at the time to be greatly at variance with information already in possession of the department of justice. It is also regarded as debatable whether his testimony concerning the old New Haven deals, sweeping as that testimony appeared to be, was broad enough to remove the liability of prosecution. In the Grand Trunk case Mellen was the only official of the New Haven indicted.

The proposed suit to be brought by Sherman L. Whipple of Boston in behalf of New Haven stockholders for the recovery of their money alleged to have been lost in the New Haven deals has caused much interest here.

While the so-called McReynolds-Elliott agreement was hanging in the balance Whipple, it is now learned, made a strenuous effort to have a settlement of the case made contingent upon the return of large sums of money by the former New Haven directors to the stockholders. This stipulation the department of justice could not entertain, as the matter was regarded as beyond its province.

Tillman Scores Wilson For Pressing Canal Tolls Issue

Washington, June 10.—The senate marched steadily forward toward final action on the bill to repeal the tolls exemption clause of the Panama canal act, but leaders are unwilling to make a confident prediction as to the day when a vote can be taken on the bill.

Action within the next day or two, however, hardly can be avoided unless there are unexpected developments. The debate for the most part followed the old lines laid weeks ago, but Senator Tillman made an unusual speech, criticising the president in vigorous terms for bringing the tolls issue before the country at this time and endangering the chances of the Democratic party in the congressional elections next fall.

Tillman announced he would vote for repeal only because he felt his state party convention had freed him from the tolls joker in the Baltimore platform.

POWER OF BOARD INCREASED.

Gov. Walsh will sign this week one of the most progressive business-and-labor bills that has been presented to this legislature. The bill is an amplification of the present law relative to labor disputes and is a thorough extension of the powers of the state board of conciliation and arbitration. Its purpose is to permit the hasty adjustment of labor difficulties and is calculated to decrease the suffering that is caused by these disputes upon the employe and the employer alike.

The bill provides that the mayor of a city or the selectmen of a town who have knowledge that a strike or lockout actually occurs or is seriously threatened shall at once give notice to the state board of conciliation and arbitration. Notice may also be given to the state board by the employer or by the employe. When the state board has knowledge that a strike or lockout, which involves an employer and his present or former employes is threatened or has occurred and that such employer at the time was employing not less than 25 persons, the state board shall communicate with such employer and employes and endeavor by mediation to obtain an amicable settlement or endeavor to persuade them to submit the controversy to either a local board of conciliation and arbitration or to the state board.

If a settlement is not agreed upon and the parties refuse to submit the matter in dispute to arbitration, the state board shall investigate the cause of such controversy and ascertain which of the parties is mainly responsible or blameworthy for the existence or continuance of the strike or dispute. Unless a settlement of the controversy is reached, the state board shall publish a report finding the cause and assigning the responsibility or blame to either the employe or the employer.

The bill allows the state board to employ agents to assist in its investigations. The board may be directed by the Governor to investigate and report a controversy if the Governor believes that the controversy seriously affects or threatens to affect the public welfare. The parties to any controversy may submit the matter to a local board consisting of three members mutually agreed upon, or in their failure to agree, chosen by the state board.

CASE OF DIPHTHERIA.

The Board of Health is taking every precaution to guard against an outbreak of diphtheria in the Massachusetts Fields circle as the result of the death of little Abbie C. Phinney of 119 Hamden circle. The original death certificate issued by the attending physician stated that the cause of death had been mumps but it was later changed to diphtheria. When this became an established fact an immediate burial was ordered and the funeral of the child was held from her home Tuesday and the body interred in the Plain Street cemetery, Braintree.

The officials of the State Board of Health are conducting an inquiry as to why the cause of death should have been changed on the certificate. Little Abbie was one of a family of two children and her death followed a short illness. The home of her parents is under quarantine but it is thought that the delay in the discovery of her illness may have serious effects on the children of the neighborhood.

ANNUAL PICNIC.

The Sunday School connected with the Park and Downs Congregational church will hold its annual picnic on Saturday at Highland Park, Brockton and it is expected a large crowd will go, so popular have these picnics become. Last year it required four cars to carry the crowd, where at first only one car was needed. Now it is necessary to get tickets ahead for assured seating capacity.

LESS LABOR TROUBLES.

An air of satisfaction attends the monthly statement issued Monday by the state board of conciliation and arbitration.

Strikes and lockouts are on the decrease. A smaller number of employes are idle today because of labor disputes than at any time in many months. Both employe and employer are manifesting a commendable desire to submit their differences to arbitration.

In its statement the state board does not intimate that a smaller number of employes are out of work, by reason of labor difficulties, because money and material are scarce, as intimated in the last quarterly report of the bureau of statistics. In some sections it is said that employes have delayed presenting their demands for higher rates of wage or better working conditions because of the inactivity of the money market and the generally poor condition of all branches of work. But individual members of the state board believe that these conditions do not enter into the situation and that the state board's message of industrial peace has been taken home by employer and employe; that both interests, employer and employe, have at last realized the futility of declaring war until grievances are adjusted. The state board feels that the employer and employe realize more than ever before that to strike and walk out imposes a burden of hardship that will never result so long as employes remain at work pending the outcome of arbitration boards.

The records of the state board show that during the month of May, there was a remarkable reduction in the number of labor strikes as compared with the same month last year. Last year in May there were 29 strikes of 25 or more workers in the commonwealth that were brought to the attention of the state board. In May of this year there were only 10 strikes of 25 or more workers.

In the 39 strikes in May 1913, there were 7073 workers involved. Last month only 1176 were involved in the ten strikes that were reported to the board. In addition, the biggest strike that has occurred so far this year in this state, the Haywood Brothers and Wakefield rattan workers, was settled by the state board in May.

TECHNOLOGY GRADUATES.

At the graduating exercises today of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, President Richard C. Maclaurin presented diplomas and granted degrees in behalf of the Institute to 313 students. Of these there were two Doctors of Philosophy, one Doctor of Engineering, 24 Masters of Science, and 286 Bachelors of Science, the whole being the record graduating body at the College.

The students are well distributed over the United States, in fact the world, since there is one from South Africa, one from western Asia, and half a dozen from Central or South America, besides eighteen from China. In all there are twenty-eight from outside the United States. Of the graduates, seven are from the West Coast, 12 from the Far West, and 10 from the Western Mississippi valley. The south is represented by 16, the nearer West by 24, the Middle States by 30 with ten more in New York City and Brooklyn, and the rest are from New England.

One woman, Marion Rice of New York, was in the group receiving the hearty cheers of her companion students as she received her diploma. Miss Rice has taken the full course in Chemical Engineering, and has pursued her studies in precisely the same manner as her fellow students.

SURVIVORS TELL GRAPHIC STORIES OF EMPRESS OF IRELAND WRECK; PITIFUL SCENES AT QUEBEC

A GRAPHIC description of the wreck of the Canadian Pacific steamship Empress of Ireland is given in the New York Times by the Rev. J. Wallett, pastor of the United Methodist church, Westcliff-on-Sea, England. This is his story:

At about 2:12 o'clock on Friday morning I was awakened by three melancholy blasts on the siren. The ship appeared to be still, but before the last note had died away I heard a horrible, grinding crash, and the ship seemed to shake from stem to stern. I jumped out of bed, ran along the starboard side and out on the upper promenade deck.

There was a slight haze on the river, and the Norwegian collier Storstad that had crashed into us amidships was slowly backing away from us.

I rushed back to my berth and put on a pair of trousers and a coat, also a heavy overcoat, over my pajamas and soon was prepared to go on deck. Almost by accident that afternoon I had noticed the life preserver on the top of the wardrobe. I hastily secured it and rushed out on deck.

Many people were by this time on deck, but very, very many never managed even to get so far as that. The list to starboard had increased alarmingly, indeed the port side had assumed the position usually occupied by the deck.

By this time several hundreds of people were sitting on the side of the ship, which had assumed an almost horizontal position. So markedly was this the case that one man was seen stooping down to fasten up his bootlaces as though he were doing it on deck. Near where I sat on the side of the ship a man who appeared to be a fireman sat with his head between his knees calling loudly on God for help, his nerves seeming to be quite shattered.

Engulfed by a Great Wave.

Suddenly, without any warning, the vessel plunged into the depths taking with her all of us who were seated on the side. To me it appeared not so much as though the ship had gone down as that the sea had risen up, a great wave coming hissing along and sweeping her away. Naturally, we went down with her, and at that moment one remembered all the stories that one had heard of people who in similar plights had been sucked down never to rise alive again.

After a little space I was conscious that I was coming to the surface. Of course I had been treading water vigorously all the time and soon felt the welcome air blowing on my face. As one rose to the surface it was horrible to feel the countless arms and legs of people wildly struggling. It seemed almost impossible for any to win through, but it was, however, accomplished at last, and soon I was swimming in the direction of the nearest boat. On the way there several men clutched at me. One big man seized my life preserver, and I begged him not to struggle and we might both be saved. A few yards away was a piece of timber only about 5 feet long by 3 inches square, but when we reached it it helped us amazingly.

Dead Women Afloat.

We swam steadily toward the boat we saw, hearing on every side the fearful cries for help. I did not see a single woman alive in the water, though a little later I saw many floating about dead. Just as we reached the boat it pulled strongly away from us. It was quite full, and there was no help for it. For a moment despair seized me, only to be followed by the determination to live if possible. I instructed my companion to make for the Norwegian collier, and we slightly altered our course to do so.

At this moment we saw bearing down upon us one of the Storstad's boats, and very quickly it was alongside of us.

Soon afterward we picked up a Scandinavian who had gone stark mad. He clawed and yelled and shrieked like one possessed. As we came alongside the collier they threw us a rope. The Scandinavian seized this and made a wild attempt to haul himself aboard. It was quite impossible to release his grasp, so one of the sailors managed to reach up and cut the rope just above his head. He crashed into the bottom of the boat, and before he could recover we moored our boat. Again the foreigner took a hand, trying to swarm up the rope ladder and generally behaving in such a way as to endanger our lives. There was only one thing to do. The coxswain struck him on the head with an oar, and he went down. When the rest of us had got aboard he was gently lifted after us.

A Weird Sight.

Once on board the collier we made our way quickly down into the stokehold. There most of us stripped and attempted to dry our things before the furnaces. It was a weird sight to see gleaming wet bodies against a background of glowing fire. There was very little hysteria or excitement—indeed, there had been little time for any.

Men who had saved watches showed them to have stopped at 2:25 a. m. A rough calculation would serve to show that from the moment we had been asleep in our beds until we were plunged into the water a period of only twelve or fourteen minutes had elapsed. Surely this must be the quickest wreck known.

Presently, said the Rev. Mr. Wallett in conclusion, we were transferred from the Storstad to the Lady Evelyn, a government boat which had come to the rescue, and so began our journey to Rimouski.

Heartrending scenes on land followed those at sea, when relatives stormed a low ceiling pier shed at Quebec to identify the Empress of Ireland's dead.

At the heads of forty rows of coffins stood lines of men and women. Each coffin lid was lifted by one of the searchers while others crowded close to get a glimpse at the body inside.

Suddenly a low moan of a man or the muffled scream of a woman broke the silence.

A stalwart man bent forward and kissed the gashed forehead of his wife. A woman would fall fainting on the lid of the coffin she had just raised.

A man would find the bodies of his wife and children. A woman would identify the body of her husband. In the hunt for bodies of the victims there was no distinction of class.

Some of the babies lying in the coffins looked as if they were asleep, with their hair curled or ruffled by a light breeze. Others had bruised foreheads, suggesting vividly how they had been hurled against stanchions or the sides of their cabins and killed before the water came upon them.

A Pathetic Incident.

C. W. Cullen of Montreal rushed from one coffin to another looking for his wife, but in vain. Then he turned to gaze on the twenty-five coffins of children. He quickly found the body of his six-year-old daughter and finally picked out one baby with blond hair. "That is my boy!" he said brokenly.

Scarcely had he turned away than T. S. Archer of Saskatchewan, who had lost wife and baby in the wreck, found the body of a woman that he supposed to be his wife. He came upon the body of a child marked No. 118, which had been identified only a few minutes before by Cullen as the body of his baby. Archer insisted that the body was that of his baby Alfred.

Somebody suggested that the decision be left to Mayor Drouin of Quebec. The mayor was called, and each father presented what he considered proof that the child belonged to him. The mayor, however, after a study of the features of Mrs. Archer and those of the child, decided the baby was not the Archer child, and he finally awarded the baby to Cullen.

A woman attired in clothes of crude texture wandered past the bodies of the children, stopping to lift up the coffin lids and gaze tenderly on the little faces. Her baby had been torn from her arms.

One child with dark hair and features of a cherub, bearing many bruises, attracted her attention. She believed the baby was hers, but she was not sure. "My child," she said, "has one tooth on the right side. Bending over, she reverently opened the mouth of the tot, and then a moan escaped her.

"It's mine," she whispered and untied a black baby ribbon that ran around the neck.

Stairways Upside Down.

Alex C. Radley, chief boatswain's mate, who was on the bridge of the Empress of Ireland with Captain Kendall before and at the time of the collision, tells a comprehensive story of the tragedy. He insists that the Empress gave clear and distinct signals.

Radley gave the explanation for the few women saved, saying:

"The stairways were all upside down. Leading from the berth decks all of the stairways of the Empress were of the fan variety. They started up from the center of the ship with a few rises and then spread out toward the port and starboard sides. When the ship heeled over, which was almost immediately after the crash, the starboard angles of stairways were below the angle of the water, while the port stairways were leading straight up into the air.

"No one could get up them, not even the strongest men," said the boatswain's mate. "They were all caught as in a prison.

"It was the worst thing I have ever known in all my experiences at sea.

"When we saw the Storstad was going to strike I ran forward and shouted a warning to the men of the watch, who were asleep, about forty or fifty of them. Then I ran back to the boat deck to break out the lifeboats.

"The list, which came almost as soon as the ship struck, prevented free movement of the lifeboats. The first one we broke away tumbled and killed a sailor. All the time Captain Kendall urged the men to get the boats out quickly.

"When I reached the last boat on the boat deck I ran down to the saloon deck to clear the boats there. There were seven or eight of the passengers, men, out on the deck to see what was the matter. They were in their pajamas. I told them to hurry in and get their women folks out.

Women Trapped Below.

"When I brought out the last boat on that deck the ship was so far over that the lifeboat swung back and forth and nearly threw me overboard. It was No. 15, on the starboard deck. But we got it to the water. I cleared the stern fall, but the forward was caught. I passed two axes forward to some one in the bow to chop the lines, but he let them fall overboard. Then the ship was settling and pulled the lifeboat down under the water until the fall broke. We all went under the water. When we came up the boat was upside down. Paddy, the cook, was with me when the boat came up. We saw another lifeboat a little distance away and swam to it.

"There were no women near us on the decks when we broke the boat away, but when we came up in the water they were all around us. I did not see any on the decks because they were all trapped below by the stairways being upside down. When the ship heeled over the starboard side of the steps were all under the water or so far down that to go on them meant to run down further. The port sides were perpendicular, and no one could run up them or climb up them.

"The women and the men had no way to get to the decks. When I reached the other lifeboat I took charge, and we rowed around, picking up all the people we could see. Most of the other women had been picked up by some of the other boats, but we got four into our boat and about thirty-four men. We took any one that was near. Most of them were the ship's men, naturally, because they were familiar with the boat.

"The Storstad had her lifeboats out just as quickly as we had ours out."

Premonitions of Disaster.

One of the saddest figures on the pier at Quebec was Major J. M. McGillivray of the Salvation Army, who told the story of the loss of 150 of 175 members of the Salvation Army.

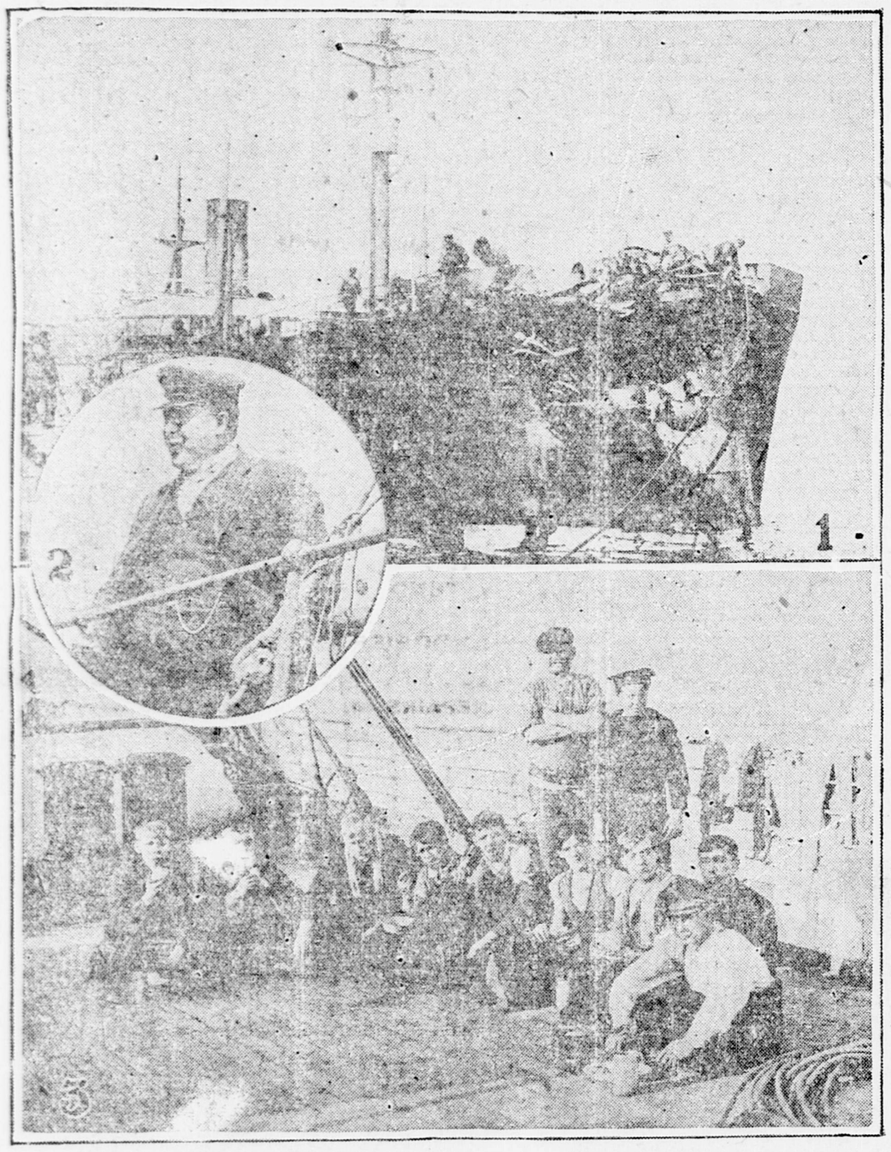

He told, too, the story of a dream which foretold the fate of the party. "Mrs. Nettie Simcoe," he said, "had a terrible dream the night before we sailed. She saw heads moving about in the water and great crowds of people all wearing crape. She told me about it that morning, and later Edward Gray, a young newspaper artist, who was with us, told me he had made a will in favor of his sweetheart fearing disaster."

Kenneth McIntyre, one of the Salvation Army survivors of the Empress of Ireland, said:

"If I hadn't been able to swim there wasn't the remotest chance of my getting ashore alive. I swam for nearly half a mile to the vessel that struck us. Then we were taken on board the Lady Evelyn."

Miss Teria Townshend of Blenheim Marlborough, New Zealand, escaped death by swimming two miles after jumping from the Empress.

Robert W. Crellin, a miner from British Columbia, grabbed Florence Barbour, eight-year-old daughter of Sabina Barbour, after the collision and swam for ten minutes with the child on his back.

HEARING TO OFFICER GOLDEN

The Finance Committee of the City Council will give a hearing tonight to Officer Timothy J. Golden, on his retirement on apension. Golden claim is that the reason of his being incapacitated from duty is due to the effect of injuries received during the administration of ex-Mayor Bryant while in the performance of duty as a police officer in quelling a disturbance on a railroad train. Officer Golden although carried on the roll as a permanent policeman since that time has been unable to do but little active duty since the night in question. During the summer months he has been given some little work at Squantum, and has been on duty at one of the polling places at elections. He is however unable to perform active duty.

The Golden matter has been before the public for some time, but no definite action has ever been taken. Some months ago Officer Golden placed his case in the hands of ex-Councilman Hobbs, who had recently been admitted to the practice of law, but before any final action could be taken Mr. Hobbs died, which hung the matter up again.

It is understood that the whole matter hinges on the question whether Officer Golden's condition is due to injuries received while in the active performance of duty as a police officer.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

QUINCY HIGH DROPS ANOTHER

Brockton Wins by the Score of 14 to 6

The Brockton High school base ball team hung its 15th scalp to its belt Tuesday when it defeated Quincy High school 14 to 6 at Brockton. The runs of the winners exceeded the hits by four. Eight costly erors tell their own story. Quincy batted the Brockton pitchers for nine hits but poor base running prevented several scores. Ford, Sawyer and Larkin registered two hits apiece off the Brockton pitchers, two men being used. Hamlin started the mound work for Quincy and Martin finished the game.

OVERDOSE OF NUTMEG.

Nutmeg is good spice for some things, but not good to be taken into the stomach in large quantities. This is what a Quincy Point woman learned by experience Tuesday. Mrs. Rose Beaubett took a large dose of nutmeg in mistake for ginger to alleviate a stomach pain and soon sank into a comatose state. A physician was summoned and she was sent to the City Hsopital, where the physicians said that nutmeg taken into the stomach in large quantities acted as a narcotic affecting the heart and producing a comatose condition in the patient. Mrs. Beaubett had taken a teaspoonful of the nutmeg in hot water by mistake for ginger. She will suffer no serious effects from her error.

WRITES THAT LIFE IN THE ARCTIC IS LOTS OF FUN.

Too Fine to Leave, Says Navy Ensign With Crocker Land Expedition.

"This is the life!"

Summed up in four words, this is the stamp of approval placed on life in the arctic regions by Fitzhugh Green, ensign, U. S. N., a member of the Crocker Land expedition of the American Museum of Natural History, in a letter to his father, who lives in Missouri.

Green's letter reads:

"Our house is a howling success. It is electric lighted, and we have hot and cold water on tap. We eat two meals a day, at 9 a. m. and 4 p. m. We haven't seen the sun since October letter was written on Jan. 11), but the horrors of the arctic night are all rot, simply because you are having such a cracking good time at other occupations that you have no time to think of home except now and then.

"I am having a lot of new clothes made for the spring trip. It will be a hard pull (dash to Crocker Land), but I don't think we will fail. The cold is different from the cold at home. It is not to be feared so much as other things. Wind at 40 degrees below zero —real wind that roars like an express train coming through a tunnel—doesn't pierce the skin clothes that we have, but it seems to get in under them in a fiendish way that cannot be imagined.

"We work in the mornings. I usually walk in the afternoon. After dinner we study, play chess or read. It is a happy life. I sleep in a snow igloo that has been built for me outside the house.

"I hope we can stay another year. I guess the Lord made me an Eskimo and then forgot and sent me to you instead of to Pan-ik-pah or the like.

"The Eskimos are an ideal crowd. They are good natured, unselfish and everlastingly good fun.

"Don't expect me home until you see me. This place is too fine to leave."

POLO A GAME FOR THE RICH.

Last Year's Matches Cost More Than a Million—The Sport Described.

Only the wealthy can afford to play polo. Last summer it was estimated somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,250,000 was expended in staging the international matches, two games played on the polo field at Meadow Brook, N. Y. Employing long division to divide this sum by 180, it is seen that each minute of actual play cost $7,500.

In 1911, when America successfully defended the polo challenge cup against an English four, winning the two games played, the competition cost not less than $600,000.

What the total cost of this month's games will be it is impossible to estimate with accuracy now.

Polo is played on a field 900 by 500 feet. At each end are two goal posts twenty-four feet apart, and along the sides are white boundary boards ten inches high. A goal is scored when a player knocks the ball between the goal posts of the opposing team. If he knocks it between his own goal posts the play counts a quarter of a goal against him.

Eight periods of seven and one-half minutes each are played. Three minutes are allowed between periods to permit for changing ponies and seven minutes between the fourth and fifth periods. Each team consists of four players.

Ponies cannot exceed 14.2 hands in height. The ball is three and one-eighth inches in diameter. The mallets used are fifty to fifty-six inches long.

HOW TO TIP IN AMERICA.

San Francisco Steamship Company Tells Australians the Scale.

A San Francisco steamship company gives Australians the following information concerning tips in America:

"In restaurants or hotel cafes keep to the 10 per cent rule. Bellboys should get 5, possibly 10, cents for a service. The maid at a hotel should receive a small gratuity—say about 50 cents a week.

"Barbers in fashionable hotels expect a ten cent tip, and hotel elevator boys should be tipped at the rate of 25 cents a week. Sleeping car porters should be paid about 25 cents a day although if the traveler feels exceedingly prosperous this might be stretched to 50 cents."

THE POPS.

Mr. Maquarre ends his engagement as conductor of the Pop Concerts this coming Saturday evening, June 13th, and the next three weeks will have as conductor Mr. Clement Lenom, who made such a favorable impression and won so many friends last season. One special night of particular interest in this week will be Monday June 15th, when Boston College will celebrate. This is always one of the pleasantest evenings at the Pops. Mr. Lenom has set Thursday evening for "Italian composers Night" and the following Monday evening, June 22nd, he will give a programme of dance music which will be representative of the characteristic dances of various nations and he will not neglect the modern fashionable dance music of the day. Mr. Lenom's programme will differ considerably from those made by Mr. Urack and Mr. Maquarre. He is reviving a number of old favorites and has a large number of new pieces which are sure to win the liking of the public that frequents the Pops.

ANY STYLE BATHING SUITS IN CHICAGO

But Police Chief Warns Girls They Must Be Careful

Chicago, June 10.—"Go as far as you like, girls—but be careful," advised Chief of Police Gleason, in announcing that he will make no attempt to censor bathing suits at Chicago beaches this year.

"Girls can wear skirts as short as they like, or discard them entirely and wear bloomers, so far as this department is concerned," said the chief. "Women wear bloomers in the gymnasium, and if they are proper there they are not improper on a beach."

An attempt by former Chief McWeeny to censor female bathing suits last year was a failure. Miss Rosalie Ladova, arrested for wearing bloomers without a skirt, was acquitted of the charge of being improperly dressed.

ROYAL NAMES ON THEIR LIST

British Suffragettes Get Money From High Personages

KING'S SON IS A SUBSCRIBER

Raiders of Headquarters of "Furies" Find Prince of Wales Made Immunity Payments—Queen Offered $5000 Contribution but Was Turned Down —Evidence of Blackmail

London, June 10.—Raids on the suffragette headquarters resulted in the discovery that several members of the royal family, including the Prince of Wales, have been regular contributors to the militant funds, while the queen tried to contribute, but her offer was refused.

These contributions do not mean that royalty favors the militants. On the contrary, it really amounts to paying blackmail for immunity for the persons and property of the royal family from militant attacks.

When the raids were made and the lists of subscribers found the government hastily announced that it would immediately begin prosecutions on the charge of supporting a criminal organization, but minute examination disclosed among the subscribers several royalties, including the Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Fife, Princesses Teck, Christian and Royal.

Still further investigation showed immunity payments made in the name of the Prince of Wales. He so frequently argued with his father and mother in favor of suffrage that there was uncertainty as to what category his contribution came under.

It was also learned that the queen offered a subscription of $5000 if the militants would agree to stop annoying their majesties, but this subscription was refused, the militants being unwilling to lose their most valuable advertising privilege.

Among the others in the list are the Duchesses of Portland and Westminster and many Americans, including the Duchess of Marlborough, the Countess of Essex and Lady Cunard. American hostesses in London have been left conspicuously alone by the militants.

When the royal names were found on the list the government had to give up the idea of prosecutions of subscribers, and is now considering prosecutions of the militants for blackmail. The royal and noble subscribers seem unwilling to be complainants and witnesses, and without their aid nothing can be done.

Of course, many of the subscribers are strong supporters of militancy, but they also are safe, as the government cannot prosecute them and refrain from prosecuting the others, so the militants seem to have scored on the government once again.

HAS A "BULLY" TIME

Roosevelt a Guest of King and Queen of Spain at Summer Palace

Madrid, June 10.—King Alfonso and Queen Victoria were the hosts of ex-President Roosevelt at a luncheon at their summer palace at La Granja.

Roosevelt and his party, which included Ambassador Willard, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, Kermit Roosevelt and his fiancee, Miss Belle Willard, and Captain Wood, military attache, motored to the palace. There were many titled persons also at the luncheon.

On his return the colonel declared in his characteristic manner that he had had a "bully time."

"GROCERIES" IN A JUG

Breaking of Package In Shipment Lands Liquor Dealers In Court

New York, June 10.—The accidental smashing of a jug in a shipment labelled "Groceries," over the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, led to the arraignment in federal court of Mariani Bros., wine dealers, charged with violating the federal statute relative to misbranding merchandise carried in interstate commerce. The "groceries," consigned to St. Johnsbury, Vt., turned out to be seven gallons of whisky.

The firm contended that the misbranding was the result of a shipping clerk's error, but the court imposed a fine of $25.

NEW FRENCH CABINET

Ribot Completes Task Laid Upon Him by the President

Paris, June 10.—Completion of a new French cabinet was reported to President Poincare by Senator Ribot, selected by Poincare to solve the tangle which left the country without a government. Ribot reported that he had induced the following to act:

Leon Bourgeois, foreign affairs; Theophile Delcasse, navy; Jean Dupuy, public works; M. Noulens, war department.

Wakefield Strike on Again

Wakefield, Mass., June 10.—Despite the urging of certain strike leaders that force and violence be used in winning their points, the striking employes of the Heywood Bros. and Wakefield company, who went on strike yesterday after a week of peace and quiet, did not resort to violence.

1,351,000 MAY BE TOTAL

Indications of Largest Immigration Year In Our History

Washington, June 10.—Immigrants arrived at American ports at the rate of more than 2900 every week day during the first ten months of the fiscal year of 1914, and indications are that by June 30, when the fiscal year ends, the greatest number of immigrants ever admitted during any year will have entered.

Statistics of the bureau of immigration indicate that the 1914 total will be approximately 1,351,000 immigrants. The greatest number arriving in one year heretofore was 1,285,349 in 1907.

Immigrants from the south of Italy during the ten months numbered 220,123, while those from the north of Italy numbered 38,397. Hebrew immigrants were second in number, there having been 119,364 admitted. Polish were third with 105,547.

Of other races there were: Germans, 66,073; English, 42,705; Russians, 40,083; Croatian and Slavonian, 33,396; Ruthenian, 32,076; Scandinavian, 29,546; Japanese, 7432; Chinese, 2012.

During the ten months 26,291 aliens were debarred for various reasons.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Divorced Man and Wife Are Rewed Ir Denver Safety Vault

Denver, June 10.—The safety vault in the city and county recorder's office in the courthouse was the place chosen by Olive B. Dodamead and John H. Saul for their secret wedding.

The ceremony took place after all of the offices were closed and no one but the night watchman was around. A chauffeur and Mrs. Lucy I. Harrington, clerk in the recorder's office, were the witnesses.

Saul and his wife were divorced Feb. 24. Recently they began a new courtship, Saul winning his divorced wife's consent to a remarriage.

They discovered it was too late to obtain a marriage license. Saul then called Mrs. Harrington and prevailed upon her to issue a license. A minister was summoned.

It was necessary for Mrs. Harrington to open the safety vault to gain access to the marriage license ledger. Saul, his bride-to-be, the minister and chauffeur followed her into the vault, where the ceremony was performed.

SHAMROCK IV. WINS TRIAL RACE EASILY

Leaves Older Sister Far Astern In Fair Weather Contest

Southampton, Eng., June 10.—Grand form was shown by Shamrock IV., Sir Thomas Lipton's new challenger for the America's cup, in her first race sailed in the Solent, when she quite outpaced the older Shamrock, leaving the trial yacht far astern.

Only a light breeze was blowing and both Shamrocks carried a full spread of fair weather canvas. Beating to the eastward the challenger quickly drew away.

In the run back with jackyards and spinnakers set the challenger took a still more commanding lead, gaining some five minutes in covering a four-mile stretch.

FOSTER PLEADS GUILTY

Postmaster Admits Conspiracy to Get Increase In Salary

Boston, June 10.—Harold A. Foster, formerly postmaster of North Brookfield, pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the government and was fined $300 in the United States district court.

By large sales of stamps to the Sterling Debenture company of New York Foster inflated the receipts of his office to such an extent that he was granted an increase in salary.

As the postal regulations prohibit the sale of stamps outside the postal districts to which they are issued, and as the salaries of postmasters are based on the volume of business in the district, Foster was arrested.

The other parties to the conspiracy are now in jail in connection with frauds perpetrated by the Sterling Debenture company.

WILSON EASY WITH MEXICO

Establishment of Stable Government Sufficient Reward

WILL NOT ASK WAR IDEMNITY

Possible Explanation of Compliance of Mexican Envoys In Dealing With Our Peace Propositions—Reference to Agrarian and Educational Reforms Constitute Advice Only

Washington, June 10.—Mexico will not be asked by the United States to pay war indemnity. The Huerta government has learned through the American delegates that the Wilson administration will be content to have set up in Mexico a stable government to succeed Huerta rule.

An intimation that the United States would not demand reparation for the losses sustained at Vera Cruz or expect to be recouped for the enormous expenditures already made in an attempt to pacify Mexico was given to the Mexican delegates soon after the conferences opened.

This made it easy for the opposing delegates to meet harmoniously. It was responsible, largely, for the ease with which a general understanding was reached between them, and it lent consistency to the American demand that consideration be given to the constitutionalist cause.

The submission of the American plan, accompanied by verbal statements from the delegates of the United States, removed all doubt that this country was not disposed to make any unnecessary drain upon Mexico's already depleted finances.

The mediators submitted to the Mexican delegates the counter proposals of the American government for the pacification of Mexico. The American plan is, with few modifications, the same as that which the mediators and Mexican delegates recently agreed upon and which General Huerta approved.

It provides the method of transferring the executive power in Mexico City from the present regime to a new provisional government which shall in a few months conduct elections for president, vice president and members of congress. No names have been agreed upon between the Mexican or American delegates for the new provisional president or his cabinet. In fact, neither side has yet made its nominations.

While details of the peace plan are necessarily withheld until there is a final agreement, it is known that a large share in the new provisional government will be given to the constitutionalists.

The plan calls for the establishment of a provisional government at the head of which shall be a neutral person, with a cabinet of four persons representing the varied political interests of Mexico. This government would be brought into power by constitutional succession when Huerta appointed as minister of foreign relations the men agreed upon at Niagara Falls for the provisional presidency.

No other internal questions are included in the peace plan, as recommendations and suggestions of a general character with reference to agrarian and education reforms are phrased in such a way as to constitute advice rather than dictation. The plan includes provision for general amnesty, the payment claims, the withdrawal of the American forces from Vera Cruz, and kindred subjects which would develop when Huerta retired and a new provisional government was installed.

The new provisional president would make his own cabinet, men virtually selected at Niagara Falls being chosen by him. Constitutionalists would have a voice in the formation of this cabinet, as at least two of their party would be named. The new government would be given formal recognition by the United States and thus enabled to float loans and rehabilitate Mexico's finances.

Already there is talk of a $100,000,000 loan to cover the multitude of obligations arising out of four years of almost incessant revolution. Final approval and the signing of any protocol will be withheld by the American government until absolutely assured that the constitutionalists will accept it.

The correspondence between the mediators and the constitutionalists is expected to be brought to an end in another day or two. The mediators are insistent on their original terms—declaration of an armistice and broadening the discussion from international to internal questions. The constitutionalists are willing to meet the mediators on a satisfactory basis as to the latter point, but they are absolutely determined against declaring any armistice.

The constitutionalists have argued that to declare an armistice without knowing in advance the terms of the peace plan is like buying an article of apparel without knowing if it will fit.

WARNER—CORLISS.

Miss Ruth Corliss, a telephone operator of the Dorchester exchange, became the bride of John Warner of this city on Tuesday evening. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. John J. Coan at the St. John's parish house.

The bridesmaid was Miss Lillian Cross of Dorchester and Waldo Galligan of South Quincy was the best man. Following the ceremony a wedding supper was served at a Boston hotel which was attended only by the immediate relatives and friends.

The bride, a native of Dorchester, is well known in Quincy, having made her home with her sister at 312 Billings road, Norfolk Downs. The groom is a chauffeur in the employ of the Henry L. Kincaide & Co. They will live at Glendale road and Whitwell streets on returning from a wedding trip.

CITY HALL NOTES.

Two ex-city officials paid visits to City Hall this morning. Their call however was of short duration for after exchanging a few words of greeting they hurriedly departed. The first to appear was ex-City Solicitor McAnarney, who desired to see some papers in the City Clerk's office. While he was there ex-City Treasurer Tilden, who was on his way from his summer home at Adams Shore to his farm at South Quincy, dropped in just long enough to say "How are you." He was garbed partly as a yachtsman and partly as a farmer, his sunburned face giving evidence of having been on the water.

NORWOLL CLUB PRESENTS PLAY

Bank Transaction Prominent in the Story

An excellent entertainment was enjoyed Tuesday evening at the Park and Downs church, which was presented by the members of the Norwoll club. Before and after the entertainment, and also between the acts, music was furnished by the orchestra led by Earl B. Simmons of Marlboro street.

The scene of the play was in the Adirondacks of northern New York, the cast being:

Jack Ashton, a reporter— Harry Swett
Dick Percival, an actor—John Breen
"Toots," a negro cook—Earl Gilliatt
Dennis Clancy, all round man—
Alexander McTear
Mr. Pemberton, president of the Empire Bank Frank Dunham
Curtis Dunbar, a "truly good" young man Stanley Smith
Herbert Wells, a guide, formerly cashier of Empire Bank
Millard Sumner
G. Elliott Brayton, a dude,
Lowell Norris
Old Obadiah Siggins, farmer,
Clark Crichton
Young Obadiah, his son
Percy V. Carter
Raggles, a tramp Alan Painter

Two years before the time of the play, Herbert Wells had over drawn his account at the Empire bank to the extent of five hundred dollars to help his father out of of debt. Dunbar, then the teller of the bank had drawn out forty-five hundred dollars more on Well's account. Mr. Pemberton just returning from a trip, discharges Wells without any explanation. The discharged cashier then goes to the Adirondacks and becomes a guide under an assumed name. He happens to have the chance to guide a camping party of Ashton, Percival, Pemberton, Dunbar, Brayton, Clancy and "Toots." After being discovered by Dunbar, and quarreling with him, Wells confides in Ashton, who promises him aid. Raggles then puts in an appearance, and lets on that he knows something of Wells' history. He then disappears and arrives again at night just in time to save Wells from death by Dunbar, who, fearing that the truth may be discovered, resolves to do away with Wells. The tramp then reveals himself as an assistant helper at the bank at the same time that Wells was accussed of theft. He tells the whole story of Dunbar's crime, having seen and heard conclusive evidence at the bank, to Mr. Pemberton, thus incriminating Dunbar and vindicating Wells, much fun was furnished by "Toots," Clancy, Obadiah Siggins and his son.

SMART DRESSING.

Fashionable Collars—New Waistcoat Girdles—Bridesmaids Frocks—Seen in New York.

The girl who is clever at presenting a rather limited dress outfit, at so many new angles that only the initiated would discover its lack, has seized the oportunity offered by the various bits of smartness obtainable at counters where neckwear and girdle novelties are shown. Anything is permissible in collars that stands up as a becoming frame for the face, with the best endorsement for those made up in organdie. Plain picot edges and hemstitching reckoned rather better style than embroideries, though enough women prefer the latter to keep them in vogue. The trick is to get the collar that suits one's particular style and see that the wire adjusters are placed so that it maintains its proper lines.

Waistcoat girdles in moire velours, which exactly repeat the line of a masculine waistcoat even to the little side pockets, and buckle trapping at the centre back, are fetching additions to a plain toned coat and skirt suit. These extend about four inches above the waist and as much below at the centre front, tappering to a medium width belt at the buckle fastening at the centre back. The buckle sometimes covered with matching material, but more often of metal.

ORGANDIE BLOUSES.

Organdie blouses endorsed by the best acceptance are without other decoration than that supplied by their modish outlines, and dainty finishes, in hemstitching, seam-beading and picot edged collar. These usually have ties of moire ribbon and fasten with pearl buttons.

Organdie petticoats with a series of narrow flounces, often little over an inch in width, banding them for twelve to fifteen inches at the foot, are attractively worn both as underskirts, and for the fashionable lingerie drop skirt, surmounted by a caught-up tunic of taffeta silk, printed crepe-de-chine, or any of the materials generally employed for dancing frocks

FASHIONABLE PETTICOATS.

Petticoats of organdie with wide straight hems, surmounted with lace inserts, or rather wide tucks at intervals are similarly employed, their transparency half revealing, half concealing the daintly shod foot with its silken hose.

Artificial flowers are quite as much employed for dress as for hat trimmings which is saying much. They form the lapel boutonniere that is worn half way between waist and shoulder line whether or not any lapel is in evidence. Arranged in garlands they hold in the fashionable bustle draperies, and in small sprays and single buds nestle in the folds of overlapping flounces that cover many pretty frocks from hem to belt.

IMPORTANT ACCESSORIES.

From now on Brides and Bridesmaids and indeed the whole contingent of fashionable women take advantage of the combination of style and comfort offered in handsome long silk gloves. White remains the majority choice, with quite a liking manifested for black stitchings. There is also some demand for maize and other yellow tones, and for color matchings of gloves and costumes.

Whatever the style selected a woman should be especially careful of the shape and quality of a silk glove, since this is apparent at a glance, and a poorly woven silk is about the meanest looking glove made. A new style make that is meeting with great favor with clever buyers is stamped "Gloversilk." This rivals in cut and apeparance a fine French article, though in this country.

BRIDAL ATTIRE.

Dresses designed for the bridesmaids at a simple out of town wedding next month exemplify the 1870 revival of white organdie, the four inch flounces covering the skirt from foot to within about twelve inches below the waist, where there is a yoke effect of fine smocking. The bodice with flat hemmed surplice folds of the material finished with two inch hemstitched hems, has a narrow vestee of the smocking. Black velvet ribbon is to be worn at neck, fastened by slides set with brilliants. Small rosebuds are caught at intervals in the flounces and the horsehair hats dressed with sprays of rosebuds caught by ties of the velvet ribbon. Girdles of white moire ribbon end in sashends caught up bustle fashion with long sprays of the rosebuds. Only the contour, very narrow at the foot of the skirt, differentiates these from the gowns worn by some of the charming ancestral belles of the present wearers.

ILLUSTRATED TRAVEL TALK

Mrs. Miller Tells of Her Trip to California

A large and apreciative audience assembled at Bethany chapel on Tuesday evening and listened with rapt attention while Marion Fessenden Miller, president of the Unity Circle, King's Daughters, led them in imagination to California and return. The "Trip around the world" advertised for Thursday is certainly a very attractive one; but we feel positive that the travellers participating in that trip will not be entertained in a more instructive manner than were those of Tuesday evening.

The soloist of the evening, Winnifred Flagg Symonds, was greeted with applause, many having the pleasure of hearing her before. Voice and songs were most pleasing to all; and mention of the name of the accompanist, Jennie Hocking Hunt, denotes that her part was well executed, as it always is. Quincy people would like to hear her more often.

Mrs. George L. Badger, vice president of the circle, introduced the artists in a very pleasing, happy manner, and announced the fact that the soloist and speaker were her schoolmates, and that since their youth they had been noted as entertainers. The Unity circle feel very grateful to Mrs. Symonds for coming so many miles to entertain.

Mrs. Miller in her talk took us down through Virginia and Georgia, and entered some of the homes of native Georgians, picturing to us the lack of thrift of the typical Southerner; but praising their cordiality of manner in entertaining the stranger.

As we were led across the Great American desert we certainly felt that our guide was capable of making the desert bloom like the rose, for the views were beautiful and every spot seemed fertile.

Arizona was not without attractions as the Indians and their inseparable companions—baskets and beads—were much in evidence.

When we reached California we came to the conclusion that in no part of the world are the beauties of nature more apparent. Such flowers, such trees and shrubs, truly a paradise. And the cordiality of the people made the picture an ideal and perfect one. Drives, mountain trips, visits to the missions, a Sunday at Catalina island, a visit to Riverside and then Easter Sunday at San Diego with a peep into a dozen churches decorated with many thousands of calla lilies and roses seemed like a dream or a visit to fairyland.

At SanDiego we were given a glimpse of Miss Mary E. Fletcher, who now resides there, but was for many years a resident of Quincy and an ardent worker in the Unity circle.

Los Angeles was beautiful also, and we were loathe to leave it all, but we were obliged to hasten on as the trip via the Grand Canyon was in prospect. Grand and awe-inspiring was the trip here, as we followed our guide, but for once during the evening we were rather glad that the trip was an imaginary one, when on the back of a stubborn mule, our guide took the trail down into this silent region. The trip was a dangerous and exciting one, after the restful beauty of California.

But such is life—beauty and grandeur, joy and danger intermingled. We were sure that the audience longed to spend more than one evening in the study of the most interesting country in God's world, as far as natural beauty is concerned—our own land America.

TO CAPE COD CANAL

hour every one of the limited number of staterooms was taken but the decks continued crowded, especially when most of the passengers wanted space at the rail simultaneously.

Many saw for the first time, as they sailed out of Boston harbor the new landmark on Great hill. The cup-like reservoir mounted high above the hill, is destined to be a conspicuous landmark for yachtsmen and others. The gilded dome of the First Parish church, the water tower on Third hill and other standpipes were seen, and also the derricks at the Quincy quarries.

The coast of the South Shore seemed unusually long on this occasion, especially after Nantasket was passed. Beyond Plymouth, however, with its sand hills, it was new to the excursionists, and the sea became calmer before the canal was reached.

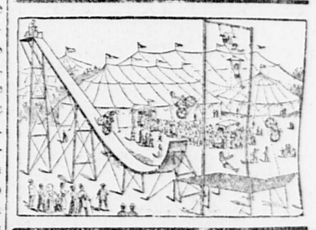

Land about the entrance to the canal is low, and the Bradford sailed in majestically about 2.30, the first ship with passengers to enter the ditch now nearly completed. Passengers were landed at a rudely constructed wharf.

Commodore J. W. Miller, vice president of the construction company, was on hand to welcome the members of the Massachusetts Real Estate exchange and their guests, and President Martin congratulated him on the progres made. On shore there were addresses by President Martin, Commodore Miller, Lieut. Governor Barry, Mayor Curley, Congressman Greene and others.

The steamer was expected to start back at 4, but then came the tedious delay, and uncertainty as to whether the steamer would sail that night, but there was music and refreshments aboard, and at 6.30 the Bradford sailed The return trip was not so rough, and the steamer docked at Boston at 10.45. Those who returned by train saw more of the canal than those on the steamer.

LEGISLATURE FAVORS NEW BRIDGE

To Be Built on Site of the Present Neponset River Bridge

Would Assess Quincy 22 1-2 Per Cent of the Cost

(Special from State House.)

At the conclusion of a prolonged debate, the House of Representatives on Wednesday recorded its approval of the bill for the construction of a new bridge over the Neponset river between the cities of Boston and Quincy on the site of the present Neponset bridge.

This approval was recorded when the House, on a voice vote, substituted a bill filed by Representative Sanford Bates of Boston for the adverse report of the committee on roads and bridges. The bill will now go before the committee on ways and means for further consideration.

The bill is substantially the same bill that was filed earlier in the session by Senator Francis J. Horgan. It differs from the Horgan bill, primarily, in the apportionment of the cost for construction of the bridge. The cost, as provided in the substitute bill, would be borne as follows: 41 1-2 per cent by the city of Boston; 22 1-2 per cent. by the city of Quincy; 10 per cent. by the county of Norfolk; 15 per cent. by any street railway company or companies operating tracks on the bridge, and 10 per cent. by the commonwealth.

The bill further provides for a bridge commission of three members, one member to be appointed by the mayor of Boston, one member by the Mayor of Quincy, and the third member to be selected by the two mayors.

In opening the debate, Representative Bates said, "This bill is somewhat improved over the bill originally presented, and I believe that it will be more generally received with favor. The highway which this bridge will provide will connect two great cities of the commonwealth and will be a substitute for the antiquated and dilapidated structure now known as the Neponset bridge. The removal of the present drawbridge of the Neponset bridge is necessitated because it is inadequate to meet the present demands. The drawbridge is operated by hand and is a distinct barrier to uninterrupted traffic which it is so necessary to provide for the people."

"I am surprised that this bill should have been reported unfavorably by the committee on roads and bridges," said Representative Edward J. Sandberg of Quincy. "This matter has been before the legislature since 1909 and has been invariably reported favorably by that committee, despite the fact that the bills have failed of passage. It stands to reason that the bridge is less valuable than it was five years ago, when the committees considered that a new bridge was necessary. At least twenty-five years ago there was a sign upon that bridge warning teamsters not to attempt to cross it with a load in excess of six tons. I have seen twenty-ton loads cross the bridge and some day the final result will be that the load with horses, driver and all will go down to the bottom of the river. The city of Quincy has a tax rate of $23, and despite the fact that the expense borne by the city for the construction of a new bridge would increase the tax rate, the people of Quincy are willing that the bridge should be built."

Representative Davis, rising on a point of information, demanded to know if the bridge is unsafe. Representative Sandberg replied that in his opinion it is highly unsafe. The average weight conveyed by the common carriers of today is greatly in excess of the weight carired twenty-five years ago, when the bridge was considered to be dangerous.

"There is only one bridge in the commonwealth that is in worse condition than the Neponset bridge," said Representative Michael T. Sullivan of Quincy, "and that is the Wellington bridge that was destroyed by fire the other night. The cost of maintenance and of repairing this bridge has been $1000 a year to the city of Quincy. If the present structure is allowed to continue the development of property will be delayed. A new bridge is absolutely necessary to prevent the further congestion of traffic to Nantasket Beach."

Others to speak in favor were Representative Ahern of Boston and Representative Curley of Cambridge.

SUDDEN DEATH ON TRAIN

Weymouth Grand Army Man Was en Route to Boston

A telephone message was received at the police station shortly before 8 A. M. from the conductor of an inward South Shore train, stating that one of his passengers had been suddenly taken ill and was thought to be dying and asking that the police ambulance meet the train at Quincy. Lieut. Hanson, who was in charge of police headquarters sent the ambulance as requested, and also notified Medical Examiner Jones, and both Dr. Jones and the ambualnce were at the depot when the train arrived. The man however had expired on the train. Dr. Jones had the body taken to Hall's undertaking rooms.

The unfortunate man was Horace Smith, a Grand Army veteran of Weymouth. Mr. Smith had been troubled with a weak heart for some time and his death was due to heart trouble. Mr. Smith was for many years crossing tender at the railroad crossing near the Weymouth Landing depot but retired from active duties recently. He is well known in Grand Army circles. One of his daughters, Miss Mildred Smith, is a teacher in one of the schools of Weymouth.

Mr. Smith resided at 175 Washington street Weymouth. He was 74 years of age and leaves a widow and daughter. During the Civil war he served in the 19th Maine infantry. He was a member of Post 58, G. A. R. of Weymouth.

MANY TOURISTS HAVE EMBARKED

Quincy People Today Making a Trip Around the World

If an unusual number of automobiles, filled with sighteers are noticed about the streets this afternoon and evening they can safely be taken for a detachment of the tourists who are making the "Trip around the world in eighty minutes," under the auspices of the Quincy Women's club. The morning gave promise of being an exceptionally fine day for the trip, and those in attendance at the several countries which will be visited during the trip will doubtless be kept busy separating the tourists (in regular European fashion) from their coin, in exchange for souvenirs, postals, refreshments, and articles of various kinds which are on sale at the different countries. Many forms of entertainment are offered also.

Early this morning there were scenes of activity in all the foreign countries in anticipation of the invasion by the Americans. As far as possible the tourists are received on the lawns which are in festive attire.

There were quite a number of tourists during the afternoon but the great rush is not loked for until this evening, when a ride about the city, in automobiles, in the cool of the evening, after a hot day, will in itself be very invigorating.

By a special arrangement with the booking agencies, tourists may start on their trip from any of the several countries on the itinerary or they may confine their visit to one country, just as fancy prompts. A fifty cent ticket however entitles the holder, to the auto ride, and is the pastport which will admit them beyond the frontier into the foreign country to be visited.

MARRIED AT COURT.

Frank Brandlund, who was sentenced to six months in the house of correction last February for larceny from a blind man on Suomi road was brought into court this morning from Dedham jail on a habeas corpus warrant to face a more serious charge made by Lydia Enquist. Through the efforts of the probation officer, arrangements were made for a marriage ceremony which was performed in court this morning by Court Officer Marden after which Branlund was taken back to jail. The court with the probation officer are going to try and have the County Commissioners pardon Brandlund that he may be able to support his wife.

PINK WEDDING AT WOLLASTON

Ruth Penniman the Bride of Stephen C. Rogers

A brilliant home wedding took place Wednesday evening at 853 Hancock street Wollaston, when Miss Ruth Penniman, daughter of James Henry Penniman, and Stephen Carleton Rogers, son of Mrs. Edward Little Rogers of Lynn, were united in marriage by the Rev. Adelbert Lathrop Hudson of the First Parish church, (Unitarian) of Quincy.

Just before eight o'clock to the strains of Lohegrins wedding march, the bridal procession passed down the hall through an aisle of ribbons held by four ushers, Messrs. Guy Horton Hunt, Harvard 1909, Herbert Stevens Sanborn, Harvard, 1910, Clarence Watson Johnson of Lynn.

Rev. Mr. Hudson followed by two ushers, Messrs. Joshua Berlin Clark, Dartmouth 1911, and Howard Blair Penniman of Wollaston, a brother of the bride. Then the groom and best man William Dallas Moss, Virginia Polytechnic Institute 1909 of Richmond, Virginia. The little flower girl, Eleanor Penniman, a niece of the bride, in white over pink silk, from her basket, scattered pink rose petals. The maid of honor Miss Catherine Saville of Quincy in pink crepe meteor with cream lace, carried pink Kilarney roses and wore a pearl pendant, the gift of the bride.

The bride who is tall and lithe looked charming in an exquisite, long square trained gown of white satin charmeuse. The skirt was draped and caught with pearl ornaments as were the sleeves, the bodice was almost entirely of Duchess lace part, of which had belonged to the bride's mother. Her tulle veil was in cap effect and was fastened with orange blossoms, an heirloom which had been worn by the bride's mother. The veil ended with a ruffle of the tulle headed with lilies of the valley. She carried a shower bouquet of bride roses and wore a pearl dog collar, the gift of the groom. She was accompanied by her father who gave her in marriage.

The bridal party stood in front of a bank of palms for the ceremony, the double ring service being used which was most impresive.

Only the immediate families and a few intimate friends witnessed the ceremony. A largely attended reception followed from 8.30 until 10 o'clock. Mr. Penniman and Mrs. Ed-

GRAMMAR SCHOOL CHAMPIONSHIP

Wo by Massachusetts Fields Team Which Defeats Washington 5 to 3

Boys Played Like Veterans Before Big Gallery

The Massachusetts Field base ball team, winners of the American league, beat Washington, leaders of the National league, in the game to decide the Grammar school championship of the city at Merrymount Park Wednesday afternoon. All of the winner's runs were made in the first inning, the score being 5 to 3.

Washington's defense weakened under a strong attack in the first. A change in lineup was ordered, and team tightened up and prevented the Fielders from scoring during the rest of the game.

No particularly spectacular plays were made, the main features being the intelligent base ball exhibited.

Foster Ganzel, son of the late Charlie Ganzel, held the box for Massachusetts Field, and secured six strikeouts. His men played behind him with a supreme confidence, and throughout the contest he smiled broadly. Only once did he remove his coat and that was in the fourth innings when the Washington attitude had the apearance of danger. He allowed but two hits.

A possible increase in the Fielders score depended several times on young Barr, the midget short stop of Washington, but each time he was ready for the fray and threw his man out at first with ease.

Thayer, in the pitching box, loomed up large compared to some of the other boys, but his size struck no terror to the hearts of the Fielders, who faced his delivery with the ease of veterans. Ranagan was the only man to get a hit, while Ganzel allowed two.

Nearly 1000 children and mothers filled the bleachers, and created a din in the first innings. The Massachusetts Field rooters cheered their team on to greater efforts, and Washington suporters yelled their lungs hoarse while urging their players to tighten up.

No sooner had the last out been declared than Principal Thomas B. Pollard of the losing team congratulated David H. Goodspeed, principal, and the winners. Each team cheered the other as the most successful game season in the history of grammar school ball closed.

The silver trophy, emblematic of the championship, which is given annually by Dr. J. Gardiner Smith, physical director of the schools, who conducts school sports, will be presented at an early date, the arrangements being now under way.

Mountains of praise were bestowed on the victors as they left the ball field and at seven o'clock the pupils of the school gathered at the school to ceelbrate the event. A procession was formed and about 300, including principal David H. Goodspeed, paraded the streets of the district. The revelers were cheered along the line of amrch and the antics of those in masquerade costume amused many a fond parent of the district. All carried flags which they waved and horns which they blew.

Tonight the champion team will play their last game of the season when they are guests of Miss Taylor, master's assistant at the school, at a banquet in their honor. During July they will be the guests of Mr. Goodspeed at the Detroit--Boston series.

The game by innings:

FIRST INNING.

MASSACHUSETTS FIELD—Ranagan was passed and went to second on a balk; Coupal reached first on an error by Irish. Osberg was passed, filling the bases. Ganzel hit to Bassett at third and two men scored on his fumble. It then became apparent that Gamble was not in form, and he was sent to third, Bassett to left field, W. Weinhouse to first, Ryan to catcher and Thayer to the pitcher's mound. An immediate change in the playing of Washington was noted. Vibert was put out when Gamble took

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

The boys would no doubt be glad to mow the lawn, if they did not feel that it is such splendid exercise for Dad.

How can the suffragettes think they are fitted for citizenship, when they know so little about baseball?

Under the old regime, the directors of the New Haven road got $20 each every time they attended meetings, but if they wanted to earn their money, they weren't supposed to ask questions.

The American idea of physical development is for 20,000 people to get up on a grand stand where they can see eighteen fellows play ball.

After laborious studies in domestic work, many of the June brides are now competent to supply the household with fudge.

The June bride may receive seventeen duplicate cold meat forks, but several of them can be used very handily as garden trowels.

Some people blame the government for never balancing its books, although every one feels much better not to know that there is a deficit.

It is hoped that our army it not sent to Mexico City as long as the two factions continue to do such good work killing each other off.

LENGTHENING THE EVENING.

Cleveland and several other Ohio cities have recently changed or planned to change their clocks from Central to Eastern Standard time. As every clock will be set one hour ahead, that means that there will be one hour more of daylight after supper or dinner, whichever Ohioans call their evening meal.

The little objection anticipated in Cleveland to this change is a very funny illustration of human nature. Precisely the same thing could have been done without interfering with the railroad schedules by a public ordinance and general consent. It was simply necessary to agree that all places of business should open and close one hour earlier in each case. Also the meal times in the homes would have to be changed to correspond.

Popular habits become so set that it would be almost impossible to get such a change made. The man who is used to getting up at 7 A. M. would never get over the idea that it is a hardship to rise with the clock saying 6 o'clock. But if his clock can be set ahead, so that he will get up an hour earlier without realizing it, he feels no hardship, and enjoys all the benefit of the longer evening.

The change that these cities are making produces some approach to English conditions, where long evenings permit out door sports to be enjoyed after the evening meal. At Edinburg it is broad daylight until 10 P. M. during the long days. Imagine what a baseball business would be done in this country, were it possible to play even to 9 P. M.

It is a misfortune that the American people have established living habits that make the evening dark. There is little physical development in theatre going, and automobile and trolley riding and carriage driving, which are the principal amusements after the lamps go on.

WEDDING KNOT IS TIED TWICE

Kermit Roosevelt and Miss Willard Are Married at Madrid

FINAL CEREMONY IN CHURCH

Religious Form Performed by Two Clergymen Following Civil Marriage In Office of Chief of Police—Many Distinguished Persons Present—Couple to Make Home In Brazil

Madrid, June 11.—The church wedding of Miss Belle W. Willard daughter of Joseph E. Willard, American ambassador to Spain, and Kermit Roosevelt, son of Theodore Roosevelt, was performed today at the Episcopal church in the British embassy grounds.

Colonel Roosevelt and Ambassador Willard were the witnesses to the ceremony today. There was a brilliant gathering at the British embassy for the marriage. Members of the Spanish aristocracy, representatives of the diplomatic corps and many guests from various countries were present.

The church where the ceremony took place was decorated with flowers. The American embassy, too, was turned into a pretty bower, for the young couple held a reception there after the service.

Rev. Dr. Watson, rector of the American church in Paris, officiated at the ceremony, assisted by Rev. Robert Brown, chaplain of the British embassy in Madrid.

Miss Willard was attended by her sister, Miss Elizabeth Willard, as maid of honor; the Princess of Thurn and Taxis, daughter of the German ambassador at Madrid; Miss Katherine Page, daughter of the American ambassador to England; Mlle. Gilono le Vonour de Tilliores of Paris, and Miss Virginia Christian of Richmond.

Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt will start at once for a brief honeymoon on the continent. They will sail for Brazil, where Roosevelt is connected with a railroad company. They will make their home at Sao Paulo.

Roosevelt and his bride first met at the Roosevelt home at Oyster Bay, when Miss Willard was visiting Miss Ethel Roosevelt, now Mrs. Richard Derby. Miss Willard is 21 years old and Roosevelt 24.

Since coming to Madrid with her father, Miss Willard has been a favorite in Spanish society. She was presented at the court of St. James in London before coming to Madrid. Miss Willard made her debut in society at Richmond two years ago. The family home of the Willards is in Richmond.

Kermit Roosevelt accompanied his father to Africa for the big game hunt in 1910 and has had several other hunting trips since. He was graduated from Harvard in 1912 and after a trip to England took up railroading in Brazil. Last winter he accompanied his father on an exploring trip through the Brazilian wilderness, and after coming out from the Amazon country a few weeks ago hastened at once to Madrid. His father, after a visit to New York, sailed for Madrid to be present at the wedding.

The civil ceremony was previously performed at the office and residence of the chief of police by the magistrate of the Buenavista district.

Police headquarters is located in a populous section of the city, and the passage of the wedding party in five automobiles attracted considerable attention.

Governor Walsh's Remarks Bring Cheers From Women Prisoners

Worcester, Mass., June 11.—After dedicating the new Dowse Memorial library in Sherborn Governor Walsh visited the Sherborn reformatory for women and addressed the prisoners, being the first governor to appear before the inmates of that institution in more than a score of years.

The governor urged the women to co-operate with the officials in making Sherborn the leading institution of its kind in the country. He told them they were all daughters of Massachusetts, that the commonwealth wanted to see them get along and that he would like to pardon every one of them if such a thing was possible.

Time and again during his short speech the governor was applauded, and when he was leaving the inmates all stood up and cheered him for several minutes.

Highlands, N. J., June 11.—The Resolute won the race of thirty miles over the America's cup course off Sandy Hook. The Vanitie finished second. The Defiance had trouble with its sails and quit early.

The Resolute got away first and was never headed. The Herreshoff boat turned the first mark, fifteen miles to windward, far ahead of the Vanitie. But racing for home, with the wind astern, the Vanite picked up some of the distance.

Pastor Who "Fathered" Jack Rose Gives Up His Pulpit

South Norwalk, Conn., June 11.—Sponsoring "Jack" Rose, reformed gambler and Rosenthal murder case witness, has cost Rev. J. H. Brown his pulpit.

The vestry of Christ church, over which he has presided for six years, asked for and received his resignation.

It was Brown who took up and fathered the former gambler when he came into the country after the first Becker trial. Brown coached him and introduced him on the public platform at his first lecture.

The church has not relished this missionary work, and when Rose lectured in the church to help raise the mortgage hardly a dozen came out to hear him.

EIGHT KILLED IN FIRE

Many Others Narrowly Escape Death In Gotham Tenement Trap

New York, June 11.—Eight persons were killed and a dozen others were perhaps fatally injured when fire swept through a tenement firetrap on the East Side.

The lives of 200 other occupants were probably saved by Miss Cecelia Shapiro, who discovered the blaze and ran screaming through the halls to give the alarm.

Within five minutes after the blaze was discovered on the first floor the flames were shooting through the entire structure. Finding their escape cut off many of the tenants fled to the roof and were rescued by firemen and policemen.

SENATE IN TEST VOTE ON TOLLS

Adopts Simmons-Norris Amendment by Large Majority

NO RIGHTS ARE SURRENDERED

Passage of Repeal Will Not Affect Rights United States May Have Under Hay-Pauncefote Treaty—Ashurst Says Measure Will Go Down In History as Simmons Tango

Washington, June 11.—The senate last night adopted the Simmons-Norris amendment qualifying the canal tolls exemption repeal bill by a vote of 50 to 24.

This was the first test vote after six weeks of debate on the repeal bill. Even the most optimistic senators who favored repeal had not expected the amendment to carry by so large a majority. It is not believed, however, that the bill itself can be put through by so great a margin.

The Simmons-Norris amendment would provide that the passage of the repeal shall not be construed or held as a waiver or relinquishment of any rights the United States may have under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty with Great Britain.

Senator Ashurst, Democrat, announced that he would vote against the compromise amendment.

"I do not quite know what it will be called in history, the Simmons amendment or the Norris amendment, but I think it will be called the Simmons tango because it is one step forward, two steps backward and then a sidestep."

The amendment adopted reads as follows:

"Provided, that the passage of the act shall not be construed or held as a waiver or relinquishment of any right the United States may have under the treaty with Great Britain, ratified the 21st of February, 1902, or the treaty with the republic of Panama, ratified Feb. 26, 1904, or otherwise, to discriminate in favor of its vessels by exempting the vessels of the United States or its citizens from payment of tolls for passage through said canal, or as in any way waiving, impairing or affecting any right of the United States under said treaty or otherwise with the respect to the sovereignty over or the ownership, control or management of said canal and the regulation of the conditions or charges of traffic through the same."

Senators who hoped to see the bill disposed of last night took comfort from the decisive way in which a motion to adjourn was defeated. Senator Bristow made the motion and on a rollcall the vote was 53 to 22.

The Sutherland amendment proposed as a substitute for the Simmons-Norris amendment was defeated, 49 to 33. It declared that nothing in the repeal act should be considered as denying or abridging the right of the United States to discriminate in favor of American shipping, and added that on the contrary such right is reasserted.

MAY BE 150 DEAD

Many Schooners Known to Have Gone Down In Severe Hurricane

St. John, June 11.—New Brunswick government officials fear that the death list in the recent hurricane and blizzard off the north coast will go over 150.

Late reports indicate that many of the fishing schooners that were supposed to have taken refuge in Caleur bay were dashed to pieces before they could find shelter.

The vessels that suffered from the gale were small schooners. Nearly every craft was manned only by members of a single family, and three or four sons or other relatives composing the crew. Because of their small size the craft were not registered in the shipping lists.

Loss of the Karluk A Serious Blow to Canadian Expedition.

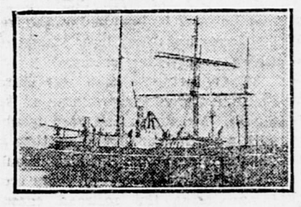

THE 320 ton wooden whaler Karluk, flagship of the Canadian government's arctic exploring expedition, under command of Vilhjalmur Stefansson, was crushed in the ice and sunk on Jan. 11, near Herald island, northeast of Siberia.

The entire crew, including a party of scientists, excepting Captain Robert A. Bartlett and one of his men, is now on Wrangel island, with a plentiful supply of food and wood. Captain Bartlett, accompanied by Sailor Perry and some Eskimos, with a sledge and seven dogs, made his way across the ice to North Cape, Siberia, and then proceeded overland to Whaler bay, Siberia. There he was taken on board the whaler Herman, which carried him to St. Michael, where he now is, and from which point information of the Karluk's fate came by cable.

The expedition which Stefansson organized and commanded was undertaken for more than geographical reasons. It was sent out by the Canadian government not only to discover what might be lying in the Arctic ocean to the north of the Dominion, but also to take formal possession as British territory of any islands or even continents which might still be unknown.

On the maps of today there is a vast blank space stretching to the west of Banks and Melville islands to the north of Alaska and Siberia. To discover what it might contain, to see if there was any truth in the tradition that here was a mighty continent perhaps never yet trodden by the foot of men, the expedition went forth.

The whereabouts of the Karluk had been a mystery for months—since the time last September when after Stefansson had gone ashore on a land exploring trip she was caught in the ice and drifted away. There has been much speculation over her fate. The ship drifted for nearly four months—slowly drifted with the ice in which she was fast locked until finally the water poured in the engine room down the main hatch and the ship sank bow first.

Most of the provisions, scientific instruments and stores were placed on the ice before the ship took her downward plunge. Two houses were built on the ice—one of snow, the other of boxes covered with sails. There was a stove in each house, and plenty of coal was saved. This camp was called Camp Shipwreck and answered its purpose well until there was sufficient light to begin the march and transportation of stores to Wrangel island, about sixty miles away, which was reached on Feb. 13 following and where a camp was established.

Realizing the necessity for immediate relief, Captain Bartlett left on Feb. 18 for the Siberian shore, 100 miles away. The little party made its way through a succession of fierce gales, and when it reached the mainland but four of the dogs had survived the trip. Emma harbor was made in the middle of May, after a remarkable march of 500 miles down and across the peninsula to the shore of Bering strait, and here Captain Bartlett was taken aboard the whaler Herman, which made for the American coast. As there was too much ice to permit a landing at Nome, the little party was finally landed at St. Michael, Alaska.

On the Karluk when she was carried away stuck fast in the ice were twenty-four persons besides Captain Bartlett. Among them were Dr. Henri Beauchat, a French scientist who had made a special study of the Eskimos; Alister Forbes Mackay and James Murray, who were companions of Shackleton in his dash for the south pole; Bjarne Mamene, George Mallock and William Baird McKinlay, as well as five Eskimos.

The revenue cutter Bear, now bound for Unalaska to cut a way through the ice for shipping bound for Nome, will be ordered to the relief of the marooned scientists and crew of the Karluk as soon as the cutter reaches Nome.

Big Men of Nation Go to Church. Get the Habit! Join the Procession!

IT is deplorable, but nevertheless true, that there are men who think it savors of effeminacy to be seen often in church. These men should awaken to the error of their ways.

The really strong men, the men of the nation, are constant churchgoers. They rarely miss a Sunday. The story is told of a great composer who on one occasion was accorded a magnificent ovation. The audience cheered him for fully five minutes. It was a tribute calculated to turn any man's head. Then there came cries for a speech. The composer faced the great multitude of his admirers and said:

"'WHAT DOTH IT PROFIT A MAN TO GAIN THE WHOLE WORLD AND LOSE HIS OWN SOUL?'"

THAT WAS ALL. THE AUDIENCE WAS ELECTRIFIED. THEY KNEW THE DEEP RELIGION OF THE MAN AND GRASPED THE SIGNIFICANCE OF HIS REMARKS. THE OVATION THAT WENT BEFORE WAS AS NOTHING COMPARED TO THAT WHICH FOLLOWED. THAT GREAT AUDIENCE DIDN'T THINK THIS MAN EFFEMINATE. HE WAS BIG ENOUGH TO PROCLAIM PUBLICLY HIS FAITH IN GOD AND A HEREAFTER. IT IS THE WEAK RATHER THAN THE STRONG MAN WHO, WHILE PROFESSING A BELIEF IN GOD, REMAINS AWAY FROM CHURCH. IF YOU BELIEVE IN GOD, PRACTICE YOUR BELIEF BY GOING TO CHURCH. GOD DOESN'T ASK MUCH OF YOUR TIME.

Don't delay GOING TO CHURCH. Start in next Sunday. Get the habit. You'll find it is not a hard task. Join the procession. By going to church you set a good example to your neighbor. It will set him thinking. You will please your wife, your mother, your sister. It will fill them with happiness to see that you are on the road to righteousness. And be honest with yourself. Don't you know you are a lot happier after an hour with God?

THOMAS CRANE PUBLIC LIBRARY
HIGH SCHOOL PUBLIC SCHOOLS
WOODWARD INSTITUTE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL

GRADUATION PLANS.

With all the school halls of the city used this year for grammar school graduations, there will be ample room for all the friends of the graduates to attend. The exercises will be short and extremely simple, it being the policy of the school department to check any tendency which would lead to elaborateness or expense.

Grammar school graduating exercises will take place on Friday of next week in four different places simultaneously.

At 3 o'clock the exercises for the John Hancock, Lincoln and Willard will be held in the High School hall. Speakers: Arthur W. Newcomb and Joseph H. McPherson.

The Cranch and Adams school graduates will receive their diplomas in the hall of the new Adams school. Speakers: Dr. N. S. Hunting and Alfred O. Diack.

The Gridley Bryant, Montclair and Quincy graduates will receive their diplomas in the hall of the Quincy school. Speakers. Dr. D. A. Bruce and Chairman J. D. Mackay.

The exercises for the Cranch, Coddington and Atherton Hough schools will be held in the hall of the Coddington school. Speakers: Dr. E. H. Bushnell and Arthur B. Foster. The superintendent will deliver his annual address at this place.

In the evening, the graduates of the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields schools will receive their diplomas in the Wollaston school hall. Speakers: Dr. W. G. Curtis and Joseph H. McPherson, and probably brief addresses will be made by Chairman Mackay and Superintendent Barbour.

The School Committee hope that every citizen who receives a ticket will use it, so that there may be a more general appreciation of what the schools are accomplishing. The speakers will endeavor to make clear in their addresses what the aims and needs of the grammar schools are.

SCHOOL ACCOMMODATIONS.

The delay in securing and passing upon plans for school additions makes it certain that the schools will open in September with nothing new in the way of school accommodations. As the largest school increase in the history of the city is looked for, it is quite certain that there will be considerable overcrowding.

It is planned to make use of the High School assembly hall to take care of the increase at that school. This arrangement, while not convenient, will be fairly comfortable except in the coldest of weather.

The Massachusetts Fields school is certain to be so filled that pupils on the border of the district will be pushed back into the adjoining districts.

The very great amount of building this spring in the Bigelow Park district, where nearly 50 new tenements will be occupied in the fall means that the Washington and Coddington schools will be called upon to share the overflow.

It is quite probable too that the Lincoln school will be as badly crowded in September as any section of the city, while the conditions of Houghs Neck are already known.

The normal school increase in the city is at the rate of about five rooms per year. As only two rooms were added last year and none have been provided for September, the result may be foreseen.

HIGH SCHOOL.

The unusual increase in High school attendance for next year will call for three teachers more than had been anticipated in the annual budget of the committee. Even then the ratio of pupils per teachers will be very high compared with the conditions in other city High schools. A much larger number of pupils than usual will go from Quincy to the various colleges and normal schools.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

An exhibition of exceptional interest to Quincy people has been loaned to the library through the kindness of C. Willis Garey. This collection consists of photographs taken and enlarged by Mr. Garey. The larger part of the exhibit shows different views of the industries in Quincy such as the Quincy Lumber Co., Swingle Quarry, Pneumatic Scales Co., etc.

The remainder of the collection includes three scenes of Hancock street on a winter's night showing the brilliant illumination through the snow-covered trees, making very effective pictures, two or three views of the Dorothy Q. House and the house of the late Dr. Everett and their picturesque surroundings. Besides these are also numerous landscapes showing secluded and restful nooks, which probably are not known to many people, but which form a great part of the beauty of Quincy. Last but not least is a photograph of the interior of the library.

The library will be pleased at anytime to have loan exhibitions of local talent or attractions of local interest on lue request in order not to conflict with the dates of the Library Art club exhibit.

WATERWAYS ILLUSTRATED.

A very interesting lecture, illustrated with the stereopticon, was given at the Quincy Yacht club house Wednesday evening before an enthusiastic audeince on "Inland Waterway development" by Hon. Wilfred H. Schoff. Mr. Schoff spoke of the development of the inland water way from Florida to Boston and of its great value to commerce. A number of pictures along the line of this waterway were shown as were also a number of local views. The stereopticon was operated by Dr. A. H. Gilson and it was said taht the pictures were never shown clearer. One pleasing incident of Mr. Schoffs visit to Quincy was the discovery that he was a descendant from one of the early German families at Germantown. While in Quincy he was the guest of Commisioner Crane, and visited many of the historic spots in the city.

SUPPER LARGELY ATTENDED

The women of the Montclair Improvement Association served a supper in the association hall on Wednesday evening to 150. The menu included cold meats, potato salad, ices, coffee, etc., etc. Dancing was enjoyed until 11 o'clock.

☞A. H. Dunham and his newsboys at Houghs Neck now sell the Daily Ledger. It will be delivered at the cottages in the afternoon.

THE YELLOW PERIL IN JAPAN CLAIMS AND MEXICO; BLOOD RELATIONSHIP

Professor Ferrero Calls Attention to Japanese Belief.

The Resemblance of Asiatics to Aboriginal Indians.

PROFESSOR GUGLIELMO FERRERO, the distinguished Italian historian, has published an article calling attention to the assertions that the Japanese intend to secure a foothold in Mexico and Spanish American countries and declares that the Japanese will use their supposed relationship to the aboriginal races of these countries as a pretext for establishing an entente cordiale. He says:

A few years ago the emperor of Japan sent to Porfirio Diaz, then president of the Mexican republic, a dispatch in which he hailed Diaz as the head of the sister state of Japan—that is to say, a country peopled by the same race.

This declaration will appear to many people absurd. Most people in Europe imagine that both the Americas are entirely populated by the descendants of Europeans who have immigrated there during the past four centuries. This belief is only partly true. The populations which were living in America at the time of the discovery have not entirely disappeared. Perhaps the wild Indians, of whom we hear in our romances, are becoming extinct in the United States, and the most flourishing and prosperous part of the Argentine Republic is almost entirely peopled by the descendants of Europeans. But even in the Argentine we find a large element of the ancient population, which becomes more and more numerous as we go inland from the Asiatic seaboard. In Chile the laboring classes are very largely composed of descendants of the ancient aborigines. The latter are also very numerous in several states of Brazil, and it is very important to remember that they form a great majority of the population of Mexico, where the descendants of Europeans have hitherto constituted a kind of dominating aristocracy.

To what race do these populations belong which have resisted with so much vigor European conquest and immigration? It is not necessary to be a learned anthropologist to find in them a certain resemblance to the Japanese. I shall never forget the impression produced on me at Uspallata, in the Andes mountains, by the men who came to take the mail from the Argentine Republic across the colossal mountain range into Chile. At that time the trains were not able to go beyond Uspallata during the winter. "Are those men Japanese?" I asked one of the persons who accompanied me. "They may be Japanese," was the answer, "for there are a considerable number of them in Chile, but they are just as likely to be Chileans."

A Frenchman who had resided for a long time at Valparaiso, in Chile, told me an interesting episode bearing on this subject. There was at the lawn tennis club to which his family belonged a janitor whom everybody thought to be a Chilean of aboriginal stock. One day they found that the janitor could speak not only Spanish, but French and English as well. The Europeans in the club were surprised that a man of supposed Indian blood should possess all these accomplishments, and they asked him where he had learned them all. Then they found for the first time that he was really a Japanese.

Many scientists have sought to give scientific certainty to the impression produced by similarity of features between the American and Japanese races. The scientists of the United States have been very active in seeking to prove this relationship, which may become so embarrassing to their country. Several American anthropologists have endeavored to prove that America before the discovery was peopled by the same race that is found today in Japan and in China. The most various and subtle arguments have been constructed with this object. I recall a long conversation on this subject with Senor Rodriguez, the late distinguished director of the great botanical garden at Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil. This distinguished scientist believed he had found among the American aborigines traces of religious rites and symbols which are today found nowhere else but in China. He outlined a hypothesis explaining how the same race had been able to occupy countries separated by an immense ocean at a period when navigation must have been still very primitive. The resemblance between the architecture of the ancient civilized races of Mexico and that of Japan has often been pointed out.

These Japanese theories have a certain practical bearing. Everybody knows that the Japanese are not disposed to let Europeans profit alone by the prodigious development of the two Americas. For a long time they have been endeavoring to establish themselves as settlers along the whole Pacific coast of America from Chile to California.

The difficulties which they have encountered, especially in California and the United States, are well known. The United States has adopted toward the yellow race a policy of resistance and exclusion, against which Japan is struggling energetically, especially since her last war. On several occasions after the Russian-Japanese war the federal government at Washington had to consider protests made by the Japanese government against laws passed by the state of California. The Washington government found itself in the embarrassing position of being responsible for the acts of a state which it could not prevent or change.

The practical importance of these ethnological theories, however vague and uncertain they may appear, must be considered from the point of view of this controversy between the two governments, which may one day become grave. Reports have been current recently that Japan and Mexico were planning an alliance and that Mexico would open to Japanese immigration certain territories upon its frontier. It would be difficult to say how much truth there was in these reports; but, true or false, they are none the less signs of an unmistakable political tendency.

PINK WEDDING

ward L. Rogers assisted in receiving. Mrs. Rogers wore white satin with deep lace flounces and pearl ornaments and a rope of pearls.

The brides grandmother, Mrs. Josephine V. Blair was among the guests.

The quantity of beautiful gifts in silver, cut glass, china, pictures, mirrors and many gold pieces attest to the wide circle of friends of the young people.

The bride was of the class 1909 Woodward Institute and the groom of Harvard 1909. Mr. Rogers is connected with the General Electric Company of Lynn.

The spacious home was most effectively decorated with greenery, pink carnations and large vases filled with pink Kilarney roses on the mantles and asparagus vine.

The dining room table was beautifully decorated with a large centerpieces of yellow marguerites, candelabra, and a yellow basket of spun sugar elaborately decorated with marguerites of the sugar. The music during the evening was by Durrells string quartet.

The bride as she stood on the stairs threw her bouquet among the group of young friends, many of whom now cherish the buds and lilies. Friends covered the young people with white confetti to speed them on their way as they left for an automobile trip through New Hampshire.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers will be at home after October first at 21 Red Rock street, Lynn.

SPORT BRIEFS

There will be only one game Saturday in the West Quincy League at Ward Four playgrounds. It will go nine innings between the Copeland Club and Division 22 A. O. H. These teams are tied for second place, each having won and lost a game. The Hibernians are heavy hiters and are sure to make trouble for the Copeland pitcher.

The St. Marys travel to Lowell Saturday where they will play Rev. Thomas W. Buckley's Holy Name team. Father Buckley is planning a good time for the West Quincy boys, although he expects to beat them on the diamond. They will be given a supper after the game.

QUINCY CLERKS WIN.

The clerks of the Adams Market of this city defeated the Braintree clerks Wednesday afternoon 8 to 4. The game was scheduled for Merrymount Park but was played at Braintree so the final grammar school game would not be interfered with. The features were the work of both pitchers, Drinkwater of Braintree getting 15 strikeouts and allowing but six hits, while W. McGrane of the locals secured 12 strikeouts and allowed but six hits, while W. McGrane of the locals secured 12 strikeouts and allowed but four hits. The game was clinched in the seventh innings when Taylor scored on Frank Foy's sacrifice. Another hit and an error totalled five in that inning. A change in the infield of the Adams team proved too effectual, Berry at first, Avery at second short, and Frank Foy at third, playing tight base ball throughout the game. The score by innings:

Braintree	0	0	0	2	1	0	1	0	0	—4

Miss Pankhurst Arrested and Militant Parade Broken Up

London, June 11.—Miss Sylvia Pankhurst was not even permitted to approach Westminster last night to interview Premier Asquith.

The proposed visit to Asquith was arranged for some days ago by Miss Pankhurst and other militant leaders, and it was decided that she should be carried shoulder-high in the procession, as she was not considered strong enough to bear the strain of what promised to be an arduous journey.

Before the procession had gone a mile, Miss Pankhurst was arrested for the eighth time since she was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for inciting language in Hyde Park, and conveyed to Holloway jail.

The procession struggled on without a leader, but by the time it reached the Strand it had been dispersed by the police.

MORGAN'S REAL ESTATE

Value of His Holdings Is Placed at About $3,745,000

New York, June 11.—Although real estate was never counted in the common estimates of the wealth of the late J. P. Morgan, it was disclosed at a formal conference concerning appraisals for tax purposes that, exclusive of his city and country residences in this state, he had realty worth about $2,000,000.

In addition, his residence in this city and the library are scheduled at $1,640,000, his country place at Highland Falls, $99,600, and Camp Uncas of 1550 acres in Hamilton county at $26,650, making the total of his appraised realty $3,745,000. He had thirty-five separate parcels in City Island on which no valuation is placed in the schedule.

Actual appraisal of all the Morgan property will begin at once. The report on the entire estate is expected within one month.

DAY OF ENJOYMENT FOR HUB CHILDREN

Hundreds "Go the Limit" as Guests of Auto Dealers

Boston, June 11.—Approximately 2500 children from all sections of the city, most of them out of charitable institutions and public homes, had their big day of the year at Nantasket Beach. They were guests of the Boston Automobile Dealers' association, which annually gives the youngsters an outing.

Every child in Boston that wanted to go along was accommodated. They were of all denominations and nationalities. More than 300 automobiles of every description carried them over the road to the seaside.

It was an all-day frolic for the children. They were told to "go the limit" in having a good time. And they certainly did. They were tendered a luncheon, followed by sports and games. The children were brought back to town at sundown.

LEWIS IS SENSITIVE

Illinois Senator Orders "Jim" Cut Off His Name Hereafter

Washington, June 11.—Because he doesn't like to be nicknamed "Jim Ham," Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois directed the senate clerk to enroll his name simply as "Hamilton Lewis."

"I never could make people understand my full name; they call me 'J. Ham,' or 'Jim Ham,'" he complained. "It is an economy to write it simply 'Hamilton.'"

For years Lewis has been cartooned, joked and gibed on account of his dress and his flamboyant tinted whiskers. Senate barbers say they have received no orders to change the official whiskers of the senator from Illinois.

Congress Pushing Measure Calling For Nation-Wide Prohibition

Washington, June 11.—Nation-wide prohibition will be voted upon by the house within four or five weeks, according to confident predictions made at the Capitol, after the rules committee had postponed until July 1 action on a special rule to provide for immediate consideration of the proposed Hobson amendment.

In some quarters it was said the delay meant no action at this session of congress, but members of the committee declared emphatically that they would consider and probably favorably report the Cantrill rule resolution in July.

NEW ZEALAND EELS.

Eels can cause the death of a salmon of considerable weight by the use of strategy. One will obtain the grip between the dorsal fin and the tail and then hold on like a bulldog, while the unfortunate victim in vain throws itself backward and forward, endeavoring to shake off its captor, until at length its strength is exhausted and the eel proceeds to make a meal at leisure.

Worse crimes than these are laid to their charge in New Zealand. A great number of bathing fatalities had taken place at a certain spot, where the current ran with such strength that a powerful swimmer could only just stem it. It was a favorite pastime to have a tussle with the stream, but several times a bather disappeared before help could reach him, and when his body was found it had been eaten by eels.

The cause of the fatalities remained unknown for a long time, but at last it was discovered that while the swimmer was almost stationary in the rapid stream a huge eel would seize him by the foot or leg and drag him beneath the surface. Eels attain an immense size in those waters, twenty to thirty pounds being no uncommon weight.—Pittsburgh Press.

HOLES IN POTS AND PANS.

Quick and Easy Method of Repairing Them at Home.

Pots and pans, whether of iron or tin (which is only iron tinned over), get holes in their bottoms all too soon to please the economical housekeeper. Then it becomes necessary to call in the tinsmith, who puts a lump of solder in the hole. This soon melts, and the hole is there again.

But nothing is easier than to repair such holes at home and without the aid of a tinsmith. First of all make the hole round by inserting the point of a knife and twisting it back and forth. Place the pot or pan upon any firm, flat piece of metal, such as an anvil, a bar of iron or an inverted flatiron, so that the hole is immediately over and touching the latter. In the middle of the hole place a shot of about the size of the hole. Any piece of lead will serve if the shot is not handy. Now a few sharp blows with a hammer will flatten the shot and spread it out, filling the hole tightly and overlapping enough to hold it in place. A few strokes with a file and a rub with sandpaper complete the operation. The repair is permanent.

It is said that a hole as large as a quarter of an inch in diameter can be mended in this way.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"Read the Eternities."

The only large values are those in which our ancestors participated. The oldest of wonders is the greatest—life. An ironclad, as such, is a commonplace beside a ship, and society merely as society is a more stupendous fact than Rome or England. The Iliad is less remarkable than speech, and the aeroplane is only a mote in the sky. Landscape, the family, the nation, religion—their origins are lost in the silence of a gray antiquity. The now—the present—is indeed sacred; but its sacredness is inappreciable to those who are circumscribed by its limits; it is reserved for minds that escape its bounds. "Do not read the times!" said Thoreau, in words that become the more memorable the less they are remembered; "read the eternities."—O. W. Firkins in Atlantic Monthly.

Comparative Values.

A German peasant had just lost his faithful cow. His wife became so grieved over the loss that her heart was broken and she, too, died. Scarcely was she buried when one of the neighbors came and offered his daughter, another his sister, and a third his niece, for a wife, whereupon the farmer remarked:

"Well, I can easily see that it is better to lose a wife than a cow in this town. As soon as my wife is dead a choice of half a dozen wives is offered me, but when my cow died they didn't offer me a single one."—Youth's Companion.

The Lord's Prayer and Druidism.

A curious proof of how tenaciously paganism held its ground for some generations after the majority of the people had become Christians is found in a Gaelic version of the Lord's Prayer, which up to a very recent period existed in parts of Cork and Kerry. Instead of "Lead us not into temptation," "Na Leig sinn a ndraoidheach" was said, meaning "Allow us not into Druidism."—London Times.

Hard Luck.

Husband comes in to find his wife turning everything topsy turvy.

"Gracious, Isabel! What are you doing?"

"I just received a telegram from Aunt Jane saying she'll be here at 6:30, and I can't find her photograph anywhere."—Chicago News.

At the Concert.

"Why do so many people yawn all at once just now?"

"Didn't you notice that the critic over there in the front row yawned first? Everybody else wants to show that he, too, is a musical sharp."—New York Post.

Pretty Tough.

TRAINER FATALLY CLAWED BY LION

Savage Animal Had Killed a Keeper Three Years Ago

Binghamton, N. Y., June 11.—Gene Deveilh, a lion trainer in an animal show exhibiting here, died at the city hospital from lacerations received from the claws of a lion which attacked him during a performance.

Deveilh was badly torn about the head and throat. The lion killed his keeper in New Orleans three years ago and badly injured his trainer in Chicago one year ago.

Deveilh leaves a wife and three children, who are with the circus. His home was in New York.

PEACE PLANS THREATENED

United States Will Refuse to Recognize Huerta

SYMPATHY WITH THE REBELS

Administration Thinks They Should Be Given Controlling Share In New Government Because of Successes In Northern Mexico—Plan of Rebels to Cut Off Huerta's Escape

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 11.—A dangerous obstruction to progress on a vital point in the mediation proceedings has arisen, which again threatens failure for the negotiations.

The United States has said to the mediators in unequivocal terms that it cannot consent to any method of transition from the existing regime to the proposed new provisional government that can be construed as recognition of General Huerta's administration.

The mediators are insisting that Huerta be permitted to make the appointment of the man agreed lupon by them for provisional president. This the American government absolutely refuses to accept, not only because it is committed against recognition of Huerta, but because it has been informed by the constitutionalists that under no circumstances will they accept a peace plan which permits Huerta to exercise the constitutional function of naming his successor. On this point the mediators and American delegates are blocked.

Some of the principals have lost hope for a settlement, but there is a growing confidence that the mediators will devise some method of bridging the difficulty rather than allow mediation to founder on the rocks.

Involved in the question of method in choosing the new provisional president is an underlying principle, which if not settled now, will certainly provoke other disagreements before any protocol can be signed.

The American government is firm in its belief that the constitutionalists, having conquered the greater part of Mexico, should be given the controlling share in the new government; that the constitutionalists are moving forward to undoubted conquest in Mexico City, and that to prevent such a contingency, concessions should be made which will make their acceptance of the peace plan possible.

The United States believes that the constitutionalists, with their large army, form the real party which must be pacified and that the transfer of power must be to them in order to insure peace.

The mediators are understood to have contended that to transfer the power in Mexico City from Huerta directly to a constitutionalist, without intervening steps in conformity with the Mexican constitution, would be heaping indignities upon Huerta.

The American delegates, it is believed, took the position that questions of personal dignity should not be allowed to stand in the way of a peaceful settlement of the Mexican problem, when the alternative is an invading army of constitutionalists who would peremptorily divest Huerta and his supporters and sympathizers of power.

Amnesty for the Huerta followers and a guarantee of their property rights has been undertaken by the American government. Also the United States considers it has acted magnanimously in declining to ask for a war indemnity as a result of the occupation of Vera Cruz. It wants as reparation the establishment of a stable government and to have peace restored. It will ask nothing more.

Unless the mediators find a way to straighten out the differences which have arisen the proceedings will come to an abrupt end. On the other hand, intimations have come from the Mexican delegates that they will not insist on technicalities in the method of transfer, though they seemed to be determined that a neutral be chosen provisional president and that no one actively identified with the constitutionalist cause be considered eligible.

TO CUT OFF HUERTA

Rebels Prepare to Capture Him Should He Try to Escape

Washington, June 11.—Railroad communication between Mexico City and Vera Cruz is menaced by constitutionalist forces, Brigadier General Funston reported to the war department.

From sources in touch with the constitutionalist agency in Washington it was learned that the particular object of the activity of Carranza's troops in Vera Cruz state is to cut off all means of retreat for Huerta and his cabinet in case they determine to quit the capital.

The constitutionalist forces in Vera Cruz state, numbering about 9000, are said to be disposed so that they might be able to cut not only the railroad between Mexico City and Vera Cruz, but also the line between the capital and Puerto Mexico.

SAVED FROM SIBERIA

A Story of the Russian Revolution

By F. A. MITCHEL

Leaving my comfortable home behind me, my dear father and mother my brothers and sisters, I set out for St. Petersburg, the headquarters of the revolution, where I became identified with the revolutionary party and did such work as was assigned me. In time my clothing was worn threadbare; I became thin and pale from want of proper nourishment and from the condition of a noble was reduced to that of a serf.

One day I was informed that a young girl who was a prominent worker for the revolution had been caught in a house where bombs were found by the police and had been arrested and thrown into prison. I attended a secret meeting of persons devoted to the cause, convened to take measures to free her. Five hundred rubles were raised to bribe her jailer, and one of our number was appointed to interview him.

In a few days the messenger called us together again and informed us that he had offered the money to the jailer if he would contrive the girl's escape, but the man had said that it would be impossible. He had, however, suggested another plan. If one of our own party would marry the girl he would arrange that the priest who performed the marriage service should antedate the marriage certificate so that when she came up for trial her identity would be lost. It would be supposed that a mistake had been made in her case and the wrong person had been arrested. The jailer agreed to carry out this plan for the 500 rubles.

It was decided to accept his terms. The marriage being simply a form to save the girl from Siberia, no importance was attached to it, and almost any of us bachelors was willing to be the groom. But it was decided that we should draw lots for the service, and the lot fell to me.

I went to the prison, not as a groom going to his bride, but as one going to perform a duty of no especial importance to himself. But my first glance at Marya Ivanovna, or Marya, the daughter of Ivan, changed all this. She was not so very beautiful, but there was in her face the look of a martyr—a look of perfect innocence. She had been told of our plan by the jailer and knew that I had come to marry her. She seemed to consider it a great favor on my part and gave me a look of gratitude that went straight to my heart. We were obliged to wait some time for the priest, and I spent it chatting with my bride. Singular as it may appear, when the priest arrived and married us I kissed my wife with all the fervor of a bridegroom who had married for love.

In a twinkling there had been in me a change of motive. I had entered the prison, as I have said, carelessly to perform a duty to the cause of the revolution. I left it with a burning desire to free my bride and possess her in peace. The incentive of the amelioration of millions of people kept in ignorance and poverty had vanished to give place to a matter of individual selfishness.

Yet was it selfishness? Pity had brought love, not for the millions, but for one. I grant that the former is a broader emotion, but love for the individual is not less divine.

At any rate, it seemed to me that I had stepped back to take a new start on a new foundation; that, whereas I had been standing on a vast plain too large for my diminutive power to cultivate, I now stood on my own little plat. The sympathy I had for my downtrodden brethren had become concentrated upon one poor girl in prison.

I rejoined my comrades for a different purpose from that with which I had left them. But I took care not to reveal to them the change that had come over me. I continued to do any duty that was assigned me, but all the while I was thinking of some plan by which I might hasten the release of Marya Ivanovna. There is no habeas corpus in Russia, and a prisoner, innocent or guilty, may remain for years in prison without being brought to trial. The thought of my wife thus wearing out her life behind bars was maddening to me. I went to the prison to see her and to talk with her, but the sight of her sad, pale face so distressed me that, realizing I needed all the coolness that was in me to work for her liberation, I did not go again. Then I settled down to plan in her behalf.

Marya Ivanovna had been in prison but a short time when we were married. Therefore, if I should call the attention of the authorities to her case, she would be remembered, and the plan of losing her identity might fail. I did not on this account dare take such a course—at least, not without waiting. That there was no other had already been demonstrated. The jailer had said that he could not contrive to permit the prisoner to escape. But that was because the money appropriated for the purpose was no more than enough for himself. Might he not, if supplied with sufficient funds to bribe others in the chain of government officials concerned in the matter, be able to accomplish the desired result?

I went to him and asked him this question. He replied that it was possible, but the amount required for the purpose would be considerable. When I asked him how much he said that he would have to investigate, and, considering my shabby appearance and the improbability of my raising any large fund, I did not believe that he would trouble himself in the matter. However, I had a plan by which I might probably raise the amount required, and when I revealed it to him he changed his manner and, I felt confident, would sound those who must be bribed.

Within a week he sent for me and told me that in order to procure Marya Ivanovna's escape it would be necessary to bribe five different persons, including himself; that one of these was an official of importance and could only be bought for a considerable sum. In short, 2,000 rubles would be required to put the scheme through. I left him and immediately started for my father's home in Smolensk.

So shabby was my appearance that when I entered the gate the dogs barked at me, and I was ordered away by one of the servants. But I paid no attention to either of these and, going to the front door, opened it, and there stood my mother in the hall. She recognized me and fell into my arms. I told her that I had come home to make a request of my father and if he would grant it I would agree never again to commit any overt act in favor of the revolution. The boon I asked was the money to free my wife.

My mother used her influence with my father to induce him to grant the request, but he, fearing that I was already so far entangled with the law as to compromise the rest of the family, would only consent on condition that I would leave Russia and not return. I cared to do this only in case I could get Marya to go with me. So I returned to the capital—with means for my temporary necessities given me by my mother—and held a conference with my wife.

Her health was breaking down under her confinement, and it was not probable that she could ever strike another blow for the cause of the revolution. Besides, my interest in her behalf had already won her heart. This last act of devotion served to make it completely mine. She consented to my plan only too gladly, and I left her with high hope for her speedy release and our future happiness in a foreign land.

Returning to my home, I completed the arrangement with my father, receiving 5,000 rubles in lieu of my share in his estate, and returned to St. Petersburg. There I set my friends of the revolutionary propaganda to work to forge passports for myself and my wife on which to leave Russia. At this work we had several experienced hands, and I was not long in securing the necessary documents. Then when all had been made ready I went to the jailer, showed him the money he asked to free my wife and gave him half with a promise of the other half when Marya should be delivered to me.

How he accomplished his work I never have learned, but infer that he bribed those who were a check upon him to wink at certain irregularities, and forged papers probably assisted in the work. Marya was released at 2 o'clock in the morning, and by arrangement I was near the prison with a carriage. I put her in without a word and, having directed the cabman to drive to the railway station, got in after her and closed the door.

Then, locked in each other's arms, we experienced inexpressible delight.

We selected America for our destination and in due time arrived at our new home. I, having been well educated, have found no difficulty in making a living in the United States, though until I learned to speak the language I was at a great disadvantage. Already, having an excellent manager for a wife, I am becoming prosperous.

The Russian revolution is over, many a young life has been taken, many are perpetual exiles, and yet little was accomplished. But though the people have lost their cause they have not been put back to the point from which they started. They have made their first dash for liberty, and as the north pole of the earth was gained after a number of dashes so doubtless will a greater freedom eventually be gained in Russia.

WAYS OF MAKING SHIPWRECK SAFER

Life Saving Suit That Keeps One Warm In Water.

SUGGESTED BY LEWIS NIXON

Says Such a Device Would Have Prevented Great Loss of Life In Empress of Ireland Horror—Sound Wave Expert Advocates Submarine Bell as Best Warning of Impending Danger.

Lewis Nixon, the ship builder, believes that hundreds of lives might be spared in sea disasters with an efficient life saving suit that would keep persons warm when in the water. He says that it is perfectly possible to have a life saving suit that would be comfortable for many hours in the coldest water.

"With every loss of a vessel we look for lessons, find them each time and then ignore them," says Mr. Nixon in the New York Herald. "It's true we do not build vessels to collide with one another, yet we have had many collisions of late. We build to avoid fire, yet fire still stands out, to my mind, as the great peril at sea.

"But let us read our lesson from recent wrecks. In all many have been lost who might have been saved with an efficient life saving suit.

"It is not only necessary to have the man in the water kept afloat until relief comes. We all know of the grewsome sight of numerous corpses floating on the ocean, dead from exposure, after the loss of the Titanic. It is perfectly possible to don a life saving suit that one can be comfortable in for many hours in an icy sea.

"It may be said that such a device is too bulky to be carried and that it will not often be used. Yet if such devices had been available the greater part of the passengers of the Titanic and the Empress of Ireland would now be alive.

Chutes Down Ship's Sides.

"Since, under certain conditions, which have been of frequent occurrence of late, safety lies in getting afloat, there should be regular chutes down which one could slide and be delivered clear of the vessel. When one thinks of jumping from the deck of a vessel as high as a house the terror of contemplation results in demoralization just at a moment when the keenest wit is needed. Of course this does not argue that we must not have the best boat and boat lowering equipment possible.

"The safe transfer of all passengers into the lifeboats is, of course, the most desirable outcome, but, as we see, this is not always possible.

"A side wiping blow delivered by such a vessel as the Storstad would sink almost any vessel, though I am inclined to think that the heavy scantlings of large vessels like the Lusitania, the Imperator or the Vaterland would break off the stem of a vessel so much smaller and so localize the damage. Our aim must be, of course, to keep them apart.

"I have expected before this to see some direction indicator, to the need of which I called attention when the Titanic sank. Such indicator worked by wireless to point toward the approaching or signaling vessel being moved by wireless rays originating on the other vessel, each to have such an indicator worked by rays from the other at a distance up to, say, five miles.

"There should be on all passenger vessels storage batteries that would light up enough lights in passageways and about the decks to enable passengers to move freely and special colored lights, well understood, to show the means of reaching the upper deck."

Expert Urges Submarine Bell.

That marine tragedies like the sinking of the Empress of Ireland are needless, even inexcusable, is the contention of J. B. Millett, with whom a New York Times correspondent discussed the subject at Cambridge, Mass.

Sound waves, Mr. Millett says, are absolutely true in water, whereas in air they vary in accuracy of direction; hence submarine bell warnings of danger are superior to all others in time of fog or darkness.

Mr. Millett was one of the first to take up the study of sound in water and for seven years as an officer of the company which introduced the system now in general use all over the world was engaged in perfecting the apparatus, making it practicable and causing its adoption in marine circles.

"HUSBAND DID RIGHT IN SPANKING ME," SAYS WIFE.

"My husband spanked me, but I disobeyed him, and he did right to punish me," said Mrs. Louis Laparcone, a twenty-year-old bride, in court at Jamaica, N. Y.

"So you think he had a right to punish you?" asked Judge Salmon.

"Yes, I do," the young woman replied. "I think every wife should obey her husband. I promised to do so when I married. I shall never disobey again."

The KITCHEN CABINET

Health and good digestion are dependent objectively upon appetizing flavor due to skilful preparation and good cooking; and subjectively to a cheerful and harmonious state of mind on the part of the eater.—James.

HINTS TO STORE FOR USE.

When traveling in a sleeper and too much draft is felt from a window, a good way to have the fresh air is to put a lead pencil under the sash, and the small crack will let in enough air to keep the air in the berth pure.

Keep an old comb to remove lint and hair from the sweeping brush.

When bathing the baby lay him on a pad and towel on a sewing table, unless he is to be put into a bath, as the little one is much easier bathed and not so apt to have his back injured as when held on the lap.

When fly paper gets on wood or the floor soak it with vinegar.

Wear blue glasses when hanging out clothes or putting curtains on a stretcher in the sun, it will be a great saving to the eyes.

Always carry a few flax seeds in your purse, and if a cinder gets in the eye the moistened flax seed will slide in so easily and gather up the painful foreign body.

A shelf over a gas stove or just back of it within reach is a great convenience, as one may keep the seasoning there. The shelf may have hooks underneath on which may be hung the most used utensils, all near at hand.

Cotton crepe is becoming the ideal house dress material, as it is also for underskirts. A bit of lace or a ruffle may be put upon the skirt which can be starched and ironed if so desired, but the dress simply needs washing and drying on a hanger, when it is sweet, clean, and ready for wear.

Iodine marks may be removed with ammonia. Put it on until the spot disappears, then wash well.

For mud stains, allow the mud to dry, then brush briskly with a whisk broom, and the spots will usually disappear.

Ink stains, as well as paint, may be removed by turpentine and soap.

When you find cocoa or chocolate stain on linen, soak in cold water, rubbing well to loosen any fat, then wash in hot suds.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

MASTER PLUMBERS ORGAGNIZE

The master plumbers of Quincy and vicinity have formed an association to be known as the South Shore Master Plumbers Association. Practically all of the plumbers of Quincy are affiliated as well as the Master Plumbers throughout the district. The new organization starts off with these officers:

President—William A. Bradford of Quincy.

Vice presidents—A. E. Stephenson of Wollaston, Frank Hall of Rockland, Percy Bates of Milton and W. J. Skinner of Braintree.

Recording secretary—D. J. S. McCurdy of Quincy.

Treasurer and financial secretary, E. Ludden of Braintree.

There is also to be an executive comimttee to include the president, vice president, secretary and treasurer and three members who will be appointed later.

Through the organization the master plumbers have been able to adjust a difference with the journeymen in an amicable manner which would not have been possible under the old conditions where the journeymen dealt with the master plumbers as individuals, which might have caused some friction.

DODD—BECKWITH.

Miss Frances E. Beckwith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Beckwith was united in marriage Wednesday evening to John Wellington Dodd of Brookline. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride 345 Belmont street and was atended by the immediate family friends only. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Joseph Walther.

TRICKED HIS PREMIER.

Pitt Was Quick to Act, but the King Got Ahead of Him.

On Jan. 19, 1805, Dr. Manners-Sutton, bishop of Norwich, was giving a dinner party in his Windsor deanery when his butler informed him that a gentleman wished particularly to see him, but would not give his name.

"Well, I can't come now in the middle of dinner," said the bishop.

"Beg pardon, my lord, but the gentleman is very anxious to see you on important business," and the butler was so urgent that the bishop apologized to his company and went out. The gentleman who would not be denied proved to be King George III.

"How d'ye do, my lord?" said he. "Come to tell you that you're archbishop of Canterbury—archbishop of Canterbury. D'ye accept—accept? Eh, eh?"

The bishop bowed low in token of acceptance.

"All right," said his majesty. "You've got a party—see all their hats here. Go back to them. Good night."

Next morning Pitt appeared at Windsor castle to inform his majesty that Archbishop Moore had died the day before and to recommend the bishop of Lincoln, Dr. Pretyman, for the vacant primacy.

"Very sorry, very sorry, indeed, Pitt," said the king, "but I offered it to the bishop of Norwich last night, and he accepted. Can't break my word."

Pitt was very angry, but the deed was done, as the king meant it should be, and so Dr. Manners-Sutton became archbishop of Canterbury and held the great office for twenty-three eventful years.—Chambers' Journal.

OUR NATIONAL GAME.

Baseball as Now Played Is Essentially American In Origin.

Some authorities trace baseball to an old English ball game called "rounders," which dated from the eighteenth century. "Rounders" was played in an open field marked out by a five sided figure, the points being called bases, first to fourth and home bases. The "feeder" (modern pitcher) stood in the middle of the pentagon; the batsman ran the bases and scored a run if he made the circuit without being put out, but he was retired if a hit ball was caught on the fly or on the first bounce or when he was struck out by having the ball thrown at him while running the bases.

"Rounders" was played in this country before the Revolutionary war and baseball possibly was an outgrowth of it, but if so it was a long time coming. The game as now played is essentially of American origin, through the different stages of two old cat, three old cat, four old cat, town ball and bull pen.

The Washington Baseball club, the first known, was formed in New York in 1843, and the first regular code of rules was drawn up in 1845 by the Knickerbocker Baseball club of New York. The first national association was organized in 1853, and the first convention of baseball financiers and managers was held in Philadelphia in 1867, about 500 organizations being represented.—Philadelphia Press.

SQUANTUM TO CELEBRATE

Fourth of July Committee Has Been Appointed

Squantum opened its campaign to make the district mosquitoless at the regular meeting of the Squantum Improvement association at Lee's Inn, Tuesday evening. It was voted that an initial appropriation of $20 be made for spraying stagnant pools with oil. A barrel of oil and a spraying machine will be purchased at once and the work will be started next week. There will be one spraying of oil a month during the summer. This with the work of the high tides once a month, it is believed will keep Squantum as mosquitoless as it was last summer.

Scores of residents who up to last year had their verandas screened have decided not to put up their screens this season. It will take about $55 to make monthly spraying of oil during the season. It is expected that this sum will be raised by the minstrel show which is to be given by the Improvement association at the Squantum Inn on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings next week.

President Herbert A. Smith appointed the following committee to look after the mosquito proposition this summer—James H. Foster, chairman; W. N. Kenyon and Warren Fifield.

Councilman John R. Nelson made a report for the street committee. He said it looked as if the City Council might accept Huckins avenue, but that there was not so good a chance of getting Bellevue road accepted. He told of the recent public hearing before the City Council.

John Holmes reported that an order for the purchase of a school house site on Huckins avenue had been introduced in the City Council. It was voted that the association go on record in favor of the school and school house site, and that the secretary write to the City Council committee to this effect.

It was voted that the secretary write to the Bay State street railway and see if arrangements could not be made to have the regular car leaving Neponset bridge at 7 o'clock wait for the 6.59 P. M. train out of Boston. Many passengers have been serious inconvenienced as the car leaves just before the train arrives and this means nearly an hour's wait for the next car.

There was some discussion upon the bill introduced in the Legislature regarding the consolidation of the street railways of Greater Boston. It was voted that the secretary write to the Quincy Representatives and Senator advocating the passage of this bill. It was the sense of the meeting that it was a good thing for the community.

T. F. Callahan, chairman of the nominating committee, then reported the following nomination for officers for the ensuing year:

President—John R. Nelson.
Vice President—James H. Foster.
Secretary—Warren Fifield.
Treasurer—Charles S. Bostwick.
Executive committee—James H. Sumner, Herbert A. Smith and Frank Anderson.

The nominations go over for the annual meeting a week from Tuesday when nominations can also be made from the floor before the voting takes place. The nominating committee besides Mr. Callahan included John Holmes and Roger Mason.

It was voted that Squantum observe the Fourth of July with its usual celebration and President Smith appointed the following committee to arrange the celebration: Chairman Charles S. Bostwick, James H. Foster, John Jepson, Warren Fifield, John Holmes, John Marden, Charles Singleton, Frank Anderson, Roger Mason and John Nelson.

It was voted that the next meeting of the association be held at the Squantum Inn, and a letter of thanks be sent Mrs. Lee for her courtesies extended the association during its recent meetings.

There was some discussion of the nuisance created by open vaults recently built in some sections of Squantum and the secretary was instructed to complain to the Quincy Board of Health and ask that an inspection be made and some action taken.

Owing to the fact that Secretary Foster and Treasurer Charles Bostwick embarked upon the high seas with the Massachusetts Real Estate exchange for their inspection trip to the Cape Cod canal, their reports were not read and were put over to the next meeting.

TOURISTS STRANDED ON TRIP AROUND THE WORLD

NOT SHIPS ENOUGH FOR BIG PARTY

Thousands of Friends of Quincy Women's Club Anxious to Take World Trip

Scenes of Splendor at Various Countries Visited

There are probably thousands of weary travellers in Quincy today who comprise those who started on the trip around the world Thursday afternoon and evening under the auspices of the Quincy Women's club. The trip around the globe was suposed to be accomplished in eighty minutes. This however allowed hardly more than a passing glance at the countries visited, and as most of the tourists desired to see some of the many places of interest and to forward home souvenir postals, the eighty minutes was in most cases lengthened to two and three hours.

All long trips, whether on water or on land are subject more or less to delays. It is just like a train from a long distance. It leaves its starting point on time but meets with a delay of a minute here and a minute there, so that by the time the destination is reached the train is considerably behind the schedule. Thus it was with the trip around the world.

Automobiles were assigned to each country, and the driver of each was given a schedule or route to follow. He was supposed, when he arrived at the first stopping place to drop his load, take aboard another, and proceed, leaving his first passenger list to be picked up by cars following. If this had been carried out all would have been well. The trouble however was that some tourists instructed the driver of their car to wait for them, with the result that it was not long before the schedule was entirely disarranged.

The first real snag struck was at Holland, at the home of Thomas Fenno on Hancock street. When the Daily Ledger man arrived here he found a large number of ladies who had become stranded and who were rather disconsolate at having to wait half an hour or more for a car to take them on. The snag here mixed things up all along the line. At Greece and Jamaica the same condition prevailed. However most everybody made the best of the situation and eventually were able to pay a visit to the several countries.

Mrs. J. R. Mellen was the chairman of the general committee in charge and was assisted by Mrs. Chandler W. Smith the club president, Mrs. Walter S. Pinkham, Mrs. Nathaniel S. Hunting and Mrs. W. F. Cummings

AT AMERICA

America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave" was at the Woman's Club house on Goffe street. The main entrance was from Upland road. The spacious lawn on the east side of the clubhouse was gaily decorated with American flags and lanterns, which were lighted at night, while here and there were clusters of tables upon which refreshments were served. There were also several booths scattered about the lawn at which various articles were on sale.

Over on one side were the Campfire girls, in their Khaki uniform and wigwam tent. In front of the tent was a fire at which the girls were kept busy roasting marshmallows for which the Boy Scouts in attendance found a ready sale. This group of girls was in charge of Marjorie Fay and Carlena Walker. They were Ruth Bass, Elea Bates, Margaret Atwood, Margaret Lowe, Hester Harkins B. Johnson, Mary Oliver, Alice Parmenter, Eva Diack, Mildred Diack, Anna Burns, Ebba Holteen, Violet Smith, Lillian Palmer and Dorothy Palmer.

The Boy Scouts in attendance were Arthur Smith J. Mellen, Clarence Mulligan, Idwal Jones, Lester New, Fred Spencer, Gunnar Carlson, Michael Gunnison, George Gardner and Henry Nelson.

Then there were the stately Puritan dancers who were Mabel Roche, Doris Peterson, Mary McKenzie, Fred Gibbs, Floyd McDonald and Svea Weston. Then came the Jockey Girls—Jennie Gibbs, Mabel Roche, Frances Ward, Eva Forest and Marion Peterson.

The program for the entertainment at America was a demonstration of modern dances in the main room of the club house, and fancy dancing by the Jockies and Puritans. Refreshments were served at Delmonico's.

The committee in charge at America were Mrs. J. N. Mellen, Mrs. Chandler W. Smith, hostess, Mrs. J. R. Richards, Mrs. John J. W. Sanborn, Mrs. H. S. Barker, Mrs. G. H. Ryder, Mrs. J. P. Prout, Mrs. J Peterson, Mrs. J. Christensen Mrs W. W. Jenness, Mrs. E. C. Sargent, Mrs. E. R. Stone, Mrs. E. R. Blanchard, Mrs. F. W. Austin, Mrs. J. Peterson, Mrs. F. A. Drake, Mrs. A. C. Foster, Mrs. T. Ray Blanchard, Mrs. William McCormick, Mrs. Z. S. Arnold, Mrs. N. S. Hunting, Mrs. G. B. Bates, Mrs. Fred VanDaLinda, Mrs. Walter Reid, Jr. Mrs. H. H. Schulze, Mrs. H. W. Pinkham, Mrs. Herbert Holmes, Mrs. J. T. Conway, Mrs. T. B. Crane, Miss Carrie Hatch and Miss M. Flora Underwood.

AT ITALY.

Leaving America the first stop made was at Italy the home of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Doble on South street. In keeping with the country the ladies wore Italian costumes, and darkened their faces in imitation of the daughters of Sunny Italy, and flags of that country were displayed.

On the lawn were tables at which Italian fruits of all kinds were offered for sale, as well as a real Italian beverage, sandwiches, etc. The entrance to the house was decorated with a large Italian flag while the piazza was screened off, and here one might find Madame Rosa Parlafino, who when her palm was crossed with coin of the realm, laid bare the future of the lady whose palm she was reading. It is hardly necessary to sdy that Madame was kept busy most of the time.

One of the treats visitors enjoyed was real Italian opera, both vocal and instrumental, for the victrola which was located inside the house was well supplied with rare records, among which were the famous Caruso and others. There was also an exhibition of modern dances by Allan Miller and Dorothy Stevens.

Mrs. Maurice Spillane was in charge here and was assisted by Mrs. W. H. Doble, as hostess, Mrs. George Fuller, Mrs. Horace W. Rice, Mrs. Charles C. Hearn, Mrs. John F. Hunt, Mrs. R. R. Smith, Mrs. Charles Griswold, Mrs. F. V. Barstow, Miss Florence Dearing, Miss Harriet W. Pierce, Mrs. W. Robbie, Mrs. Richard Gordon, Mrs. Fred Breslyn and Mrs. Dow of Braintree.

AT RUSSIA.

From Italy the trip took the tourists to Russia which was at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. E.Pfaffmann on Goffe street. The place was designated by Russian flags placed at the Goffe street drive while the lawn was hung with almost countless lanterns, and in addition special electric light wires had been run so that the night was made as light as day.

This country was particularly attractive during the evening when there was general dancing in the house, and although the evening air was hot and oppressive it in no way kept the young people from enjoying their favorite pastime.

Russian baskets, postal cards, brass and copper articles of various kinds were on sale, and Russian tea and frappe were served at the tables on the lawns by pretty Russian maidens.

The Russian dance Kanarinskaia was given by Miss Marguerite Davis, Miss Beatrice Lacy, Miss Florence Barker, Miss Eleanor Whittemore, Miss Peggy Johnson, Ryder Gay, Paul Blackmur, William Edwards, John Pfaffman and Karl Pfaffmann. There were also Russian songs by Miss Constance Sears and William P. Thompson. For the general dancing in the afternoon music was furnished by Mrs. Paul R. Blackmur and Samuel P. Sears. In the evening there was an orchestra consisting of piano, violin, cello and flute, the artists being P. A. Sears, piano, R. A. Sears violin, Ninon Lacy cello and A. F. Schenkelberger flute.

Miss Eleanor Whittemore and Ryder Gay also gave an exhibition of modern dancing, dancing the Maxixe.

The general assistants were the Katherine Crane club, and the servers of ice cream, frappe, etc., Miss Eleanor Gow, Miss Josephine Smith, Miss Betty Smith, Miss Louise Steele and Miss Maude McFarlane.

The ladies in attendance at the table where articles were on sale were Mrs. Clarence Burgin Mrs. J. B. Groose, Mrs. W. E. Cooper and Mrs. Russell A. Sears.

The ladies at the frappe table were Mrs. J. H. Slade, Mrs. George W. Abele, Mrs. John H. Johnson and Miss Dorothy Edwards, while at the ice cream and sandwich table was Miss Frenetta Sheppard.

AT ENGLAND.

"Upon whose domains the sun never sets," was the next stoping place. This country was located at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. T. King on Adams street. Entering the long drive and approaching the house the first thing noticed were the two pages, or heralds on guard at the entrance to the throne room, where their Royal Majesties were receiving the homage of their subjects. These pages were Miss Esther Sidelinger and Miss Hazel Livingston.

Entering the enclosed piazza one was at once presented to the King and Queen. It is not often that one has the oportunity to chat with persons of such royal blood, but in this case they were very cosmopolitan, showing that through their veins there ran some good old American blood. The floor of the throne room was covered with rich rugs while all about were the National emblems of this powerful nation.

Their majesties were impersonated by Mr. and Mrs. William W. Whicher, and they were certainly very gracious rulers. In these modern times, one sees the King of England wearing a Prince Albert coat and tall hat, but in keeping with olden times Mr. Whicher wore a King's costume of blue of the 15th century.

What was most admired however was the costume worn by Mrs. Whicher. Her costume was an exact reproduction of the costume of Queen Mary, as worn at the coronation. Thrown over the back of the divan, or throne, was also the scarlet robe with golden ornaments. This was also an exact reproduction of the coronation garments, as was the handsome ermine cape, whose value was estimated at $3,000. The crown worn by Mrs. Whicher was also a reproduction of that of Queen Mary.

One of the most pleasing forms of entertainment seen here was the minuet danced by young ladies from the Woodward Institute, and songs by Miss Marian Miller. The minuet dancers were Misses Helen Moulton, Helen Bishop, Isabell Crane, Marie Schenkelberger, Roxanna Schenkelberger, Catherine Adams, Margaret McPherson, Laurice Penniman, Ruth Whiton, Edith Bixby Louise Emery, Bertha Henery and Mary Goodhue. There was also general dancing for those who desired in the dining room.

Mrs. George Badger was chairman of the ladies in charge here with Mrs. T. King, as hostess. Other ladies who assisted were as follows: Refreshments, Mrs. Frank F. Prescott, Mrs. W. C. Hart, Mrs. B. A. Willmott, Mrs. W. E. Piper, Msis Addie Park; Postal cards, Mrs. H. W. Rice; Marmalade table, Mrs. Albert Sargent, Mrs. S. I. Wood, Mrs. Charles Baron; tickets,

DIEHL--TAYLOR WEDDING

Quincy Physician Marries An Arlington Girl

Dr. Harold Diehl of 1244 Hancock street, one of the youngest physicians of Quincy and Miss Helene M. Taylor of Arlington were married at Arlington on Wednesday evening. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's sister, Dr. Barbara Ring, 178 Oakland street, by Rev. Frederick A. Bisbee of the Universalist church of Arlington.

Miss Enid Taylor, a sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Dr. Howard M. Mowell of Boston, a classmate of the groom, was best man. Dorothy Ring of Arlington was flower girl and the ring bearer was Master Hallam Ring, nephew of the bride. Master Brenton Roberts of Arlington Heights was train bearer.

Many attended the reception which followed the ceremony, at which the ushers were Stanley Cummings of Wollaston and Raymond Taylor of Arlington Heights. Dr. and Mrs. Diehl were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Ring.

The bride wore a gown of white satin, draped with shadow lace, trimmed with pearls and orange blossoms, which extended over the right shoulder. Her train was draped cape style from the shoulders, with a bunch of orange blossoms at the extreme end. A crown of orange blossoms held her veil in place. The house was prettily decorated with yellow daisies on white backgrounds.

After an extensive wedding trip Dr. and Mrs. Diehl will reside at 1241 Hancock street, this city.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

So far none of the Senators have asked whether the Empress of Ireland went down by the stern or the rear end.

After three weeks of debate, the Mexican mediators have reached an agreement on the proposition that five o'clock tea should be served daily.

Many men feel that they do not have to take their wives on vacation, as the latter can hear them tell about it after they get home.

The college graduate can always avoid getting a job by signing his letters of aplication with a B. A. after his name.

The boys are generally willing to go on a Sunday school picnic, provided the business men will drop their work and mark out a baseball diamond for them.

If President Wilson keeps on cautioning his chauffeurs not to exceed the speed limits, he may have to drive his cars himself.

Although every one should learn to swim, there is consolation in the fact that if your boy doesn't he will never go out alone a quarter of a mile from shore and get cramps.

The dispatches report a scarcity of currency at Tampico, which probably means that every one has only a few barrels of paper money left.

The Senators feel that nothing helps them understand the trust bills quite so well as going out to the ball grounds and seeing Walter Johnson pitch.

Although the new high straw hats were evidently designed to hold a cabbage leaf, thereby helping one avoid sunstroke, yet the girls seem surprised when a fellow takes off his hat and wafts the leaf over toward them.

THE LOW-PRICED AUTOMOBILE.

This summer any man who can afford to keep a horse and carriage can afford to have an automobile. Reasonably comfortable machines capable of good honest work can be had for but litle more than a good team costs. And gasoline and tires need not cost as much as hay and oats.

But the purchase of an automobile is an extravagance for a great many men, because they demand a relatively higher degree of comfort in the machine than they formerly expected with the horse.

A few years ago a man might have been satisfied with a lazy old beast approaching superanuation. His buggy would be second hand, rickety in the j'ints, with a rattle that could be heard 300 yards away. Yet today the same man is discontented with an automobile costing less than a thousand dollars.

This is one of the many signs of the decline of the pioneer spirit. Discomfort is dreaded more and more. The slight jolting one gets from a low priced machine, its inability to climb hills at a high rate of speed, are too annoying for these pampered times.

EXPLODE BOMB UNDER THRONE

Militants Attempt to Wreck British Coronation Chair

RELIC IS SLIGHTLY INJURED

Seat Formed of Legendary Stone of Scone Taken From Scots and Used by Rulers For Hundreds of Years—Explosion Heard In Parliament and Causes Great Sensation

London, June 12.—Suffragettes exploded a bomb under the coronation chair in Westminster abbey. It is reported that the historic stone of Scone was chipped, but that otherwise no serious damage was wrought.

Two women were caught by the police cordon after the explosion as they were trying to leave Westminster abbey, but it was not certain that they were concerned in the outrage. There were two explosions in the abbey, one evidently premature, having occurred in the chapel of Edward the Confessor.

The stone of Scone probably broke the force of the explosion of the bomb set under the coronation chair, as the chair itself was only slightly injured.

The stone of Scone is the most famous relic of prehistoric days in the British empire. Its origin is lost in antiquity, but history reaches back to show that on it sat Malcolm Canmore, an almost mythological king of Picts, when he was invested with the crown.

For centuries the stone furnished a throne for Scottish kings in the abbey of Scone on the day of their coronation. It remained in Scotland until captured by Edward I. of England and taken to London.

Desperate resentment by the Scottish nation at their deprivation of a relic they held sacred was in great measure the cause of the uprising of William Wallace, the Scottish hero, and the crushing defeat suffered by the English at the battle of Bannockburn, when Robert Bruce riveted on his head the crown of Scotland.

Ever since Robert Bruce's day Scotland sought to recover the famous Scone boulder. But it had been incorporated into the coronation chair of the English kings and could not be recovered. It was specially mentioned in the act of union between Scotland and England and under the law no British king can reign unless he is crowned upon the sacred stone.

The explosion of the bomb was heard in parliament, and caused a great sensation. Many believed an attempt had been made to blow up the house of commons. Excitement was great, and the suffragettes were unsparingly denounced.

Just before the explosion in Westminster abbey Home Secretary McKenna defended the government's policy regarding the suffragettes. He told the commons the government objected to letting militants die in prison, deporting them or confining them in asylums, but announced that the government would institute civil suits against every subscriber to the Women's Social and Political union, the body from which the suffragettes draw their funds.

A list of those who have contributed to the suffragette cause was revealed in a search of one of the Women's Social and Political union headquarters, following a police raid, according to popular report.

UNREST BECOMES ACUTE

Turkey Believed to Be Forcing Another War Upon Greece

London, June 12.—Another war between Greece and Turkey is foreshadowed by The Times, which says the unrest in the Balkans has become acute. Several of the states, it says, recently have been employed in clearing their newly acquired territories of "undesirable" elements, and the Bulgarians have beeen the principal sufferers.

The unrest is attributed to the drastic policy of the Young Turks in expelling all Greeks from Asia Minor and Turkish Thrace. This policy, The Times believes, is a prelude to a declaration of war upon Greece, the main object being the reconquest by Turkey of Salonika and the reoccupation of Macedonia.

INSANE MEN IN CRASH

Old Soldiers Subdued With Difficulty When Train Is Ditched

Clarksburg, W. Va., June 12.—A score of persons were injured, but none fatally, when the fast Baltimore and Ohio limited was ditched by an open switch twenty miles east of here.

A panic occurred in a carload of insane old soldiers being taken from Dayton to the government hospital for the insane at Washington. They were subdued with difficulty by attendants.

BOUND AND STRANGLED

One Maine Boy Dead and Companion In Pitiable Plight

Presque Isle, Me., June 12.—Two 11-year-old lads, Victor Porter and Hartley Webb, were attacked by other boys while fishing, stripped of their clothes and left bound, with shoe strings tied tightly about their necks, according to the police.

Webb was dead when found and Porter's face and neck were so badly swollen that the string was strangling him when found. He will recover.

Two boys named Cote were arrested. The police allege that they had on the clothing and shoes of Porter and Webb.

Porter was found rolling on the ground in agony. Nearby was Webb, who, in his struggles, had fallen into the shallow water of the stream, where they had been fishing, and had drowned.

GIRL CLUBS ROBBER INTO SUBMISSION

Subdues One Thug While Officer Is Capturing Another

New York, June 12.—William Patterson, secretary of the social service commission of Philadelphia, while slumming through the lower East Side, was dragged into a hallway by two footpads, who hit him over the head and rifled his pockets.

The robbers were interrupted at their work by a policeman and a girl who had seen them hustle Patterson into the hallway. After a battle, during which the girl clubbed one of the robbers into submission with the policeman's billy, the pair were arrested. Patterson was sent to a hospital.

OFFERS LIFE FOR LOVER

Man Slays Destroyer of His Home In Presence of Bride

Camden, N. J., June 12.—Secretly returning to his home here after he had pretended to go to work, Enrico Gregory, a bridegroom, shot and killed another man whom he found with his wife in her bedroom, and then fled.

The shooting immediately followed a desperate duel between the two men, in which Gregory used a revolver, and his wife's friend a stiletto, the girl bride meanwhile begging her husband to spare the man's life and kill her instead.

The victim of the husband's jealous rage, Benjamin Derillo, was a frequent visitor at the Gregory home.

Derillo is said to have a wife and two children in Europe. He was 28 years old and Gregory is 24. The girl bride is 21.

Fate of Kentuckian Who Perhaps Fatally Shot Five Persons

Whitesburg, Ky., June 12.—Five of the eight persons who were shot at Neon by William Day, a mountaineer, are not expected to recover. Day himself was killed by a posse that pursued him to the mountains.

Day resisted arrest on a minor charge, broke from the officers, and, running to his home, obtained a shotgun and a supply of shells. He then returned to the main street and opened fire upon a crowd of men and boys.

HOPE FOR PEACE NOW RENEWED

Huerta Is Eliminated In New Plan of Government

UNITED STATES STANDS FIRM

Unalterably Opposed to Any Policy Allowing Dictator to Name Successor—Mediation Proceedings at Breaking Point When Mexican Delegates Yield After Long Wrestling

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 12.—At the moment when it appeared that all hope of a peaceful settlement of the Mexican problem was gone, when the mediators themselves were downcast and pessimistic as to the final outcome, a new impetus was given to further negotiations by the conciliatory spirit displayed by the Mexican delegates after conference with the American delegates and the A. B. C. mediators.

The unexpected yielding of the Mexicans and the mediators, who have been upholding them, came, therefore, as all the greater surprise, and it was with sighs of relief that everyone concerned realized that one more crisis was passed, that what had been a stumbling block for days had been safely negotiated.

The narrowness of the escape from total failure of all the mediation efforts was the principal subject of conversation among the conferees, and the mediators expressed their confidence that there may yet be hope of peaceful settlement of the difficulties—a consummation which had looked past hoping for.

In a full conference of the mediators and of the delegates of both countries, it was agreed that the transfer of authority from the present administration to the new provisional government should be accomplished in some other way than by General Huerta's appointment of a minister of foreign affairs, who would succeed to the provisional presidency.

It was the stand which the United States has taken in unalterably opposing any policy that would allow Huerta to name his successor that has almost brought all the work of the mediators to nothing, and when the Mexicans gave in on this point, a big point was gained by the United States. The contention of the representatives of this government all along has been that to allow Huerta the right to name his successor, as provided for in the Mexican constitution, would be tantamount to recognizing Huerta as well as his right to exercise constitutional functions.

The conference has been wrestling on this point for three weeks, and for three days there has been a deadlock in their position, and the mediators, on their side, argued vehemently from the Mexican viewpoint—so strongly that it seemed they would close the conference entirely unless this government did yield.

Affairs were in this state when mediators and representatives gathered for the conference. It was thought it would be the last, for the mediators themselves had lost confidence and, in a spirit of pique at General Carranza's delay in answering their last communication, had made public all the correspondence with the constitutionalists, declaring the incident closed.

Other points in the peace plan are expected to develop little difficulty. The question as to personnel, however, will prolong the proceedings. The necessity for communication through the Washington government with the constitutionalists will delay an early settlement, but some of the mediators now think an agreement may be reached in another fortnight.

RACE GOES TO RESOLUTE

Vanitie Leads In Thirty-Mile Spin, but Beaten by Allowance

Sandy Hook, N. J., June 12.—Her time allowance of 3 minutes and 13 seconds gave the Resolute the sixth cup class yacht race with the Vanitie, sailed in one of the lightest of airs over a thirty-mile triangular course.

The Vanitie led at the finish by 1 minute and 57 seconds, but the Resolute was awarded the race on corrected time by 1 minute and 16 seconds.

The Defiance, the third cup defender aspirant, made no effort to race, contenting herself with sail trial spins inside of Sandy Hook.

New York, June 12.—Al McCoy, middleweight champion, was decisively whipped by Billy Murray here last night. In perhaps eight of the ten rounds the crowd was "treated" to the spectacle of a title holder holding, cliching and running aawy.

NEW ISSUE OF GAS STOCK

Commi sioner Authorized Issue of $360,000

(Special from State House.)

In an order handed down Thursday by the State board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners, authority is given to the Citizens' Gas Light Company of Quincy to issue additional capital stock to an amount of $360,000 at $100 per share.

The company originally petitioned for the right to issue $390,000 of capital stock in two issues, one of $140,000 and the other of $250,000 to be used for the liquidation of indebtedness incurred for extensions to the physical properties of the company's plant, for the acquisition of additional plant and property and for further development of the properties.

Under a previous petition, the State board had ordered and authorized the issue of the capital stock amounting to $140,000 but the company overlooked a requirement. Therefore the order is reissued for the issuance of this amount of capital stock.

The commissioners find that between March 31, 1910, and December 31, 1913, the company appears to have expended upon extensions of its distribution system somewhat more than $210,000. Of the future additions described at the hearing as probably costing about $72,000, it appeared that a portion only had been definitely decided upon by the company to be undertaken during the present year. For this work stock to the amount of $35,000 is approved. On December 31, 1913, the company's outstanding promissory notes amounted to $355,000.

GENTLEMEN'S NIGHT.

Quincy Ladies circle, Loyal Order of Moose held its first gentlemen's night in Electa hall on Thursday evening with an attendance that included members of Quincy lodge and the Junior Order.

Dictator William Norrie of the senior lodge gave a short talk on the order for the benefit of the new members affiliated. Dancing was enjoyed during the evening, and piano solos were given by Mrs. Alice eWbber of Neponset. Refreshments were served and a choice assortment of cake which was not used was auctioned off with Frank Sampson as auctioneer. Music was by Provost's orchestra.

The committee in charge included: Mrs. Alice Bean, chairman, Miss Lucy Greenwood ,secretary; Mrs. Mary A. McNeil, Mrs. John Brown, Mrs. Walter Carman, Mrs. Jennie Webber, Mrs. Neil MacDonald.

RUSSIAN FLAGS.

One of the city employees employed on work being done on Goffe street Thursday afternoon spreading the dust preventative looked with disgust at the two Russian flags that marked the entrance to the home of George E. Pfaffmann. "Look at that will you" he remarked, "those ought to be American flags." The man evidently did not understand just what was going on, and his patriotism rather resented seeing a foreign flag flying here in good old Quincy.

ACCIDENT.

Peter Haroldson, 27 years, of Federal avenue, stepped from a moving car in City Square about 10.30 Thursday night and was thrown heavily to the street. He escaped injury but was badly shaken up. Haroldson attempted to leave the car by the wrong side. The bar to prevent passengers from entering on that side was down and he got under it. The car was travelling at slow speed but he was thrown the minute he put his foot to the street. He was able to go to his home.

AT JAPAN.

Next in order was Japan at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Stone on Grand View avenue, Wollaston. Tourists however, were landed at the Newport avenue entrance, the lawn between Newport avenue and the home being gaily decorated with innumerable Japanese lanterns. The ladies in attendance were also in Japanese costume and the tourist was privileged to hear choice bits sung from the Mikado, by a chorus of Japanese girls, while tea was served Japanese style on the piazza and American style on the terrace. Many Japanese novelties imported by Walter M. Hatch & Co. were on sale and there was dancing in the garage.

Mrs. W. S. Pinkham was chairman in charge here with Mrs. Stone as hostess. Other ladies were Mrs. F. A. Page, Mrs. Carroll C. Bates, novelties; and Mrs. Herbert Albee, refreshments.

The Japanese girls were Miss Catherine Follett, Miss Ruth Jones, Miss Ann Weston, Miss Gertrude Bullock, Miss Catherine Reed, Miss Charlotte Barstow, Miss Elizabeth Sayward and Miss Edna Sanborn.

There were also songs by Mrs. H. Y. Follett and violin solos by Miss Augusta Talbot.

AT GERMANY.

A short trip through Beale street brought the traveler to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Park, situated in a most sightly spot on the side of Third Hill. Here the guide said was Germany. Passing through a long path lined on either side with countless lanterns which at night made it as light as day, one came to the house on the hill. Stopping a minute to look about a most imposing and beautiful view met the eye. Many would have liked to linger here to enjoy the view but time would not permit.

The house was gaily decorated with roses arranged about the eves, while inside a victrola furnished constant music. On the lawn were the usual tables for the sale of cool drinks, including near beer, while in the rear of the main house was the little rustic building in which a Dutch lunch was served. Many made this their stopping place for supper and an appetizing menu of potato salad, sauerkraut, frankfurts, rye bread, sandwiches, pretzels, pickles, cheese and coffee was served.

The ladies in charge were dressed in the costumes of the country they represented. In addition to the victrola, there were vocal solos by Miss Dorothy Brokaw and Ernestine Hunt, and violin solos by Miss Beatrice Costello.

AT HOLLAND.

Holland, "the land of the windmills and tulips" was found at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fenno on Hancock street, Wollaston. On the front lawn was a true to life windmill, while scattered about in countless numbers were tulips. Over the main entrance to the house was the large sign Holland while festooned about the front and sides was the delft blue ribbon so common to that country. Scattered about the lawn were tables for the sale of confectionery and imported articles from Holland.

Mrs. W. F. Cummings was the chairman in charge and the entertainment committee was Mrs. Levi H. Turner, Mrs. Albert E. Hall, Mrs. Samuel J. Ripley, Mrs. Leonard Hewson, Mrs. Fred A. Bartlett. AT GREECE.

"The country of classic setting," was at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Kitson on Park lane, where a pleasing entertainment was given on the lawn, which included a number of beautiful tableaux under the direction of Miss Georgiana C. Lane. The several tableaux were as follows:—

Greek Maiden—Miss Margaret Paine
Poetry—Miss Florence Crowell, Miss Marion Snow.
Three Graces—Miss Margaret Magee Miss Ruth Bruce, Miss Florence Crowell.
Dancing Maidens—Miss Marion Wilson, Miss Josephine Aulbach, Miss Margaret Paine, Miss Florence Crowell, Miss Marion Snow, Miss Margaret Magee, Miss Ruth Bruce.

This was the stopping place for many on their journey, and here they had supper and obtained a little rest before going on. The menu of the supper included salads of all kinds, ice cream and iced tea.

There were the usual tables and these were presided over by the following ladies: Mrs. John D. Mackay, Mrs. Myron Ryder, Miss Dorothy Kitson, Mrs. George G. Saville, Miss Nan Ruggles.

There were also two water bearers who were Miss Josephine Albach and Miss Marion Wilson.

One of the attractive features here was the fortune teller who was impersonated by Mrs. Florence Ellsworth Constable.

AT JAMAICA.

This was the last country to be visited by the tourists, and arriving here one was glad of the opportunity to rest on the broad piazzas at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eben W. Sheppard, on Greenleaf street and enjoy the entertainment in progress in the house while enjoying the cool breeze that was wafted now and then across the piazza. This was Jamaica and true to its name it was a hot country but even heat can be overcome and so it was here by ice cream, a drink of cool refreshing punch, or a trip about Butlers pond in a canoe were all that could be desired.

The entertainment was one of the most pleasing and included songs by the pupils of Miss Helen Baxter, plantation dances by the pupils of Miss Oliver, and Spanish dances by the pupils of Miss Charlotte Bennett. Then there were readings by Mrs. A. I. Davis.

The boys looked very natty in their white duck trousers and red sashes and caps, and the young ladies very attractive in their bright yellow sashes and red caps, true Spanish colors.

The grounds about the house and the piazzas were prettily decorated with lanterns and bunting in which the Spanish yellow prevailed. Flags of all nations were also displayed.

Those in charge here were as follows:

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

THE SUBTLE ASIATIC.

His Illustration of the Saying That "Clothes Make the Man."

Some hundreds of years ago there lived in Agshelin, a little town in Asia Minor, an imam, or village parson, the Khoja Nasr-ed-Din Effendi. Concerning him Mr. H. C. Lukach tells some stories in his book, "The Fringe of the East."

One day a camel passed along the street in which the khoja lived, and one of the khoja's neighbors who had never seen a camel before ran to ask him what this strange beast might be.

"Don't you know what that is?" said the khoja, who also had never seen a camel, but would not betray his ignorance. "That is a hare a thousand years old."

A great man once gave a feast to which, with much condescension, he caused the khoja to be bidden. Accordingly on the appointed day the khoja repaired to the great man's house and found himself in the midst of a fashionable and richly clad company, which took no notice of the poor imam in his threadbare black gown. No one greeted him or spoke to him and eventually he was shown by a servant to the lowest seat. After a little while the khoja slipped away unobserved and went into the hall where some of the mighty ones had left their outer garments. Selecting a magnificent gown richly lined with fur, he put it on and returned to the room. Nobody recognized this resplendent personage, whose arrival excited universal attention. The company rose to salute him, and the host, who had previously ignored him, approached, bowing, and inquired after his honorable health.

The khoja stroked the sleeve of his borrowed garment. "Answer, fur!" he said.

STUCK TO HIS FAITH.

Anyhow It Paid the Young Prussian Not to Change It.

A king of Prussia who reigned about the beginning of last century was noted for his geniality, and often in the course of his walks through the streets would enter into conversation with his subjects.

One day he met a young man and asked him what his faith was. The youth, who was somewhat of a wag, answered, smiling, "I believe what my tailor believes." The king entered pleasantly into the joke and then asked again, "And what does your tailor believe in?" "Your majesty," replied the young man, "he believes that he will never get the 30 marks which I owe him, and I believe it also."

The king laughed heartily at the outspoken and unrestrained way in which he had answered him, and then gave him 30 marks. "Now, then, you can pay your tailor and so change his faith." The young man fancied, however, that he could use the money for a better purpose, and the tailor naturally went unpaid.

Not long afterward the king met the same youth, who, as he saw his majesty approaching, tried to escape down a side street. The king had, however, espied him and called after him. The youth, somewhat crestfallen and abashed, approached his majesty, who at once asked him if he had paid his tailor. A smile passed over the young man's face as he replied, "Your majesty, I could not change my faith for 30 marks."

Disraeli and Primroses.

Disraeli's alleged fondness for the primrose rests upon rather flimsy evidence. Lady Dorothy Nevill, who knew him intimately, has recorded that she "never heard him express any particular admiration for the primrose, which it is always said was his favorite flower, though a great admirer of his used to send him big bunches of them from Torquay every spring." Grant Duff, when discussing the primrose cult with Lord Pembroke, was told, "There are two stories about it, but certainly he once told Cory, 'I like to be in the country when the primroses are out.'" A consensus of opinion seems to favor the idea that in Queen Victoria's inscription, "His favorite flower," the pronoun referred not to Disraeli, but the prince consort. —London Mail.

In Their Own Coin.

When S. R. Crockett offered his first book to a certain firm of publishers they returned it with a curt note informing him that there was "no market for this sort of work." In the corner of the note was the index mark "No. 396C."

Some time later, when Mr. Crockett had become famous, this same firm wrote asking him to allow them to publish his next book. Mr. Crockett, who had carefully preserved their former rude letter, politely replied by asking them to refer to their own letter book under the sign "No. 396C." That closed the correspondence.

As You Like It.

Jimmy, who was no highbrow, had gone all alone to see one of those outdoor performances of Shakespeare He was telling his elders about it.

"Some class to Shakespeare," said Jimmy. "The show was fine."

"But what show was it?" asked Jimmy's big sister.

"Let Ev'rybody Do to Suit Hisself," replied Jimmy.—New York Post

MANY INTERESTED

ficiency in the performance of duty failing to carry out the reasonable orders and directions of the overseer of the poor; not maintaining discipline; the use of profane and abusive language; ill treatment of inmates.

The hearing took a sensational turn at times when witnesses, while testifying, repeated profanity alleged to have been used by Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn, and one witness told of seeing a scrap between the head of the almshouse and an employee of the Board of Health.

Mayor John L. Miller, one of the witnesses said he visited the premises and found it no place for a social gathering. He said the language used on that occasion by Mrs. Vaughn was profane and while he said he did not care to repeat it he did so at the request of counsel.

City Solicitor Pinkham was present and acted in an advisory capacity to Mr. Green. Mr. Vaughn was represented by J. J. McAnarney.

The hearing opened with the readings of the charges by Mr. Pinkham who later admitted that no written reply had been forwarded Mr. Vaughan in answer to a bill of interrogator's ruqeetsed.

After considerable discussion, Mr. McAnarney said he objected to any evidence being offered under any and each one of the charges read, on the ground that to the specifications here in question, no answer had been given. This stand, he said, may be assumed on the finding of the Supreme court that a man is entitled to know with what he is charged, and at what the time the incidents occurred so that he could prepare if the proceedings are to be carried out under the dignity of the Civil Service rules.

In view of the failure to answer these specifications Mr. McAnarney said he objected to any evidence being presented. This exception at his request was made part of the record of the proceedings.

Men formerly connected with departments at City Hall were called as witnesses, and about 12 inmates sat on the side of the Council chamber, waiting to be heard when the noon adjournment was ordered. About 100 citizens were present.

Mr. Pinkham did not conduct an examination of witnesses after Mr. McAnarney objected to his acting in what he termed a dual capacity, both as prosecutor and advisor to the administration. By agreement of counsel all witnesses were sworn.

Dr. F. Ramon Burke, former secretary of the Board of Health, the first witness, said his department had obtained permission to use a shed at the almshouse, and that his visits to the premises were frequent, often in response to telephone calls from his employees.

He said in July, 1911, an employee had trouble with Mr. Vaughn over a horse standing in the yard, and that later in the year baled hay was thrown into the yard and was damaged through exposure to winter weather. He also mentioned an argument that developed over the removing of manure and said further that on one call he arrived in time to see one of his employees sparring with Mr. Vaughn. He later characterized the incident as a scrap, but in cross examination said he arrived in time to be a peacemaker and not a pacemaker.

He said a man unable to do so was obliged to care for cows. That he ordered his men to help him and that the man was later found dead in the barn.

Mayor Miller said he made one visit to the premises and that Mrs. Vaughn used profanity which came so thick and fast he could not repeat it all.

In cross examination he said Vaughn had been dismissed two or three days before the visit, but denied that he told Mrs. Vaughn that he did not know when he sent the removal notice that it was a Civil Service position.

Dr. Fred A. Bartlett, city physician testified to the inefficiency of the management. He said he witnessed a clash between an inmate and Mrs. Vaughan in which the former was called a guttersnipe. He said the trouble blew over like a summer shower ,with Mrs. Vaughan shedding dry tears and sighing for her absent husband.He said less eggs were used in the house than produced on the premises. He was rigorously cross examined but did not change his statements.

John Reid, a blind man who has been an inmate for two years said when he first went there he was asked to rake hay but was unable to do so. He told how he wore one pair of socks for seven weeks without a change, and that when he spoke of his quarters being cold last winter, Mr. Vaughan informed him that the wood was not purchased for the benefit of inmates. He said he heard Mrs. Vaughan tell Mrs. Campbell an aged inmate that she would knock her block off and that Mr. Vaughan was gruff.

In cross examniation he said some inmates were deaf and that Mr. Vaughan was obliged to talk loud and boisterously in order to be heard.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL.

The contest on Fore River Park Saturday afternoon between a strong combination from Charlestown and the Fore River team is sure to be a thriller. The team representing Fore River will be the same which defeated Brockton so decisively. The game is in connection with the second round of the Williamson cup, and the Shipbuilders are determined to add the points, but they will have to go the limit to do so. That more interest is being taken in the game than formerly is clearly shown for on this occasion E. B. Hill, auditor, of the Shipbuilding Corporation will kick the ball off at the commencement of the contest. The game will start at 4 P. M. and the committee wish to announce that ladies are admitted free to all games in Fore River park.

ST. JOHN'S WIN.

The Holy Name base ball team of St. John's parish beat the freshmen class of Quincy High school at Merrymount Park on Thursday afternoon, 8 to 7, in a six inning game. The poor throwing of Rheinhalter and LeCain's error's enabled St. John's to pile up a lead in the first two innings. The freshmen made a strong bid to overcome the lead in the fifth and sixth innings which was nipped in the bud by a very fast double play. Mullen and Vern Arbuckle got doubles and Lundquist a triple. The double plays were executed by Galvin to Mahoney to A. Barry and Moynihan to A. Bary Galvin pitching for the winners fanned four, and Johnson two; Jenkins who succeeded him fanned three. The score by innings:

St. John	3	4	0	1	0	0	—8
Freshmen	0	0	1	0	6	6	—7

Batteries: Galvin and Mahoney; Johnson, Rheinhalter and Westland.

Miss Edna Miller, a sister of the groom, played Lohengrin's wedding march as the bridal party descended the stairs and took their stand at the folding doors between the parlor and dining room. Miss Jennie L. Manhire, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, while Raymond D. Miller, brother of the groom, was best man. The ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock by Rev. P. S. WAKEFIELD SHOP CLOSES

Rattan Company Becomes Tired of Tactics of Its Employes

Wakefield, Mass., June 12.—The Heywood Bros. & Wakefield Rattan company shut its factory, and announced that it will remain closed indefinitely. This action was precipitated by the strike of a number of Italians, who are connected with the I. W. W., and who went out in sympathy with the A. F. of L. people who struck again.

This forces idleness upon the 600 who are on strike again, 200 who were loyal to the company and continued at work, and about 200 more who were waiting to be taken in, and would have been re-engaged as quickly as work could be provided for them.

In explanation of its action, blaming the employes, the company issued a statement that it had made every possible effort to treat with its employes fairly and amicably. It has tried to work out a plan agreed upon with the state board of arbitration. In these efforts, the statement says, it has not received fair co-operation from the employes.

ROOSEVELT QUITS MADRID

Colonel Dances the Reel With Wife of Spanish Premier

Madrid, June 12.—After a strenuous day, including the events connected with the marriage of his son, ex-President Roosevelt left for Paris last night.

At the dance which followed the wedding the colonel stepped a Virginia reel with Senora Dato, wife of the premier, while Ambassador Willard had as his partner Marquise de Lema, wife of the minister of foreign affairs.

The famous collection in the salon of Velasquez, which is one of the finest in the world, greatly interested Roosevelt. Later he viewed the noted collection of armor, after which he was conducted through the palace at Madrid and made a call at the home of the Duke of Alba.

On account of the hostile attitude of the Spanish papers, Roosevelt's movements were not announced in advance. Detectives continued to guard the embassy and were at the station when the ex-president departed.

TOLLS REPEAL BILL PASSES IN SENATE

Measure Goes Back to House to Accept Amendment

Washington, June 12.—Repeal of Panama canal tolls exemption for American coastwise shipping passed the senate last night by a vote of 50 to 35.

The measure now goes back to the house, which is expected to accept the Simmons-Norris amendment, which specifically reserves all rights the United States may have under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

The passage of the bill, after a bitter struggle that has lasted for several months, is regarded as another victory for President Wilson.

Although thirteen Republicans came to the aid of the thirty-seven Democrats who voted for the bill in final passage, the president initiated the movement in his party for repeal, and it was behind him that many of the Democrats who voted "aye" lined up on the last test.

There has been no certain promise from the White House that the president will sign the bill with the qualifying amendment but there has been no declaration that he will veto it.

Prosecution Decides Fugitive May as Well Be Allowed to Testify In Proceedings Relating to Father's Estate as to Be Enjoying Life In New Hampshire Summer Resort

New York, June 12.—Merrill Shurtleff, counsel for Harry K. Thaw, and William T. Jerome, counsel for the state of New York, announced that it had been agreed to allow Thaw, who is now in New Hampshire, to go to Pittsburg to testify in the matter of his father's estate.

At the same time Shurtleff announced that in consideration of this concession on the part of the state, the application to the United States supreme court for Thaw's admission to bail would be temporarily withdrawn. Thaw's status, said Jerome, would remain the same.

"He will still be in the same custody. The only difference is that instead of being in Sheriff Drew's charge in New Hampshire he will be, if the United States supreme court approves, in Drew's charge in Pennsylvania.

"It makes no difference to the state of New York," continued Jerome, "whether he goes fishing in New Hampshire or testifies in court proceedings in Pittsburg."

Both attorneys went to Washington last night to present to the supreme court their petition that Thaw be transferred from New Hampshire to Pennsylvania.

While Thaw is being taken from one state to another all state authorities will be enjoined from interference with his custody. A time limit for his stay in Pittsburg would probably be specified by the supreme court, said Jerome. Neither attorney would express an opinion as to how long this would be or just how soon Thaw would leave New Hampshire.

Thaw is assured by these developments of immediate reunion with his mother and her family in the Thaw home, and a long residence there. He has not seen his home since a few days before he slew Stanford White on the Madison Square garden roof on the night of June 25, 1906, nearly eight years ago.

Thaw will not be free under bail when he goes to Pittsburg and will not enjoy the fulness of personal liberty which bail would afford.

Attorney General Carmody and Jerome are reported to have been moved by the superior protection against Thaw's possible outbreaks which the custody of the marshal will afford.

This action by Carmody and Jerome also is expected to present a conclusive answer to the charge so often made by the Thaws and the Thaw sympathizers that Jerome and the state officials are bent on "persecuting" Thaw. Thaw will be able to go anywhere in Pennsylvania, but the marshal must always be with him.

Thaw's request for permission to go to Pennsylvania is based upon affidavits that his presence is required as a witness in the orphans' court of Allegheny county, by which the estate of his father, William Thaw, is being administered.

In making an order permitting Thaw to go to Pittsburg, a liberal time is likely to be allowed so he may be available as a witness as long as there is any likelihood of his being required to testify. He also may collect $160,000 of his large inheritance which awaits him there.

Thaw is at present enjoying all the pleasures of Gorham, N. H., a summer resort, lives in his own quarters with his custodians, fishes for trout and takes automobile rides wherever within the state he desires to go.

RANGER'S ENGINES MUST BE REPAIRED

Nautical Schoolship Puts Back to Boston Under Sail

Boston, June 12.—The Massachusetts nautical schoolship Ranger, which left Boston three weeks ago on a 10,000-mile trip, put back into port with her engines out of commission.

Captain Atwater said serious engine trouble developed on May 25, when the ship was 900 miles east of Boston, and that three days later he had to turn back.

The Ranger had to use her sails, as her engines were capable of but one-third their normal speed. Because of unfavorable winds the vessel had to cover 1800 miles on its return trip. There were 103 cadets aboard, all of whom were disappointed by the accident.

The vessel was due in Ireland yesterday. The cadets will probably be given shore leave while repairs are being made.

Boston, June 12.—Without debate the house passed to be engrossed the bill to provide for 80-cent gas for East Boston. The bill places this section on a par with other parts of Boston.

THE REAL RUSSIA.

In "The Russian Empire, Today and Yesterday," Nevin O. Winter says:

"In a strict sense, real Russia covers only a portion of the more than 2,000,000 square miles that lie within the borders of the continent. This narrower definition would certainly eliminate Finland, Poland, the Baltic provinces, Bessarabia and the Caucasus and probably a part of the land of the Don Cossacks, the Crimea and the sections bordering on the Arctic ocean and the lower Volga. In other words, the real Russia has developed within this narrower section, and whatever of Russian characteristics appear in the eliminated sections have simply been imposed by the conquerors upon a people alien by birth and language.

"The actual visible influence of Tolstoy on Russia seems not to have been great. He was beloved and reverenced by many, but no party claims or has ever claimed him as a leader. The higher classes rejected him because of his opposition to all established government; the peasantry were repelled by his diatribes against religion; the revolutionists and anarchists repudiated his teaching because he had no definite plan to offer. His influence on thought and opinion in Russia will not compare with his influence in non-Russian nations."

PHOSPHITE NOT PHOSPHATE.

The Proper Sodium Solution to Use In Bichloride Poisoning.

In a recent issue of a well known medical journal the statement is made that mercuric chloride poisoning can be treated by the use of sodium phosphate with excess of sodium bicarbonate. Thus, editorially, the same journal says: "This solution, it is claimed, instantly converts the bichloride to the mild chloride, which can be removed by a dose of castor oil. It is very necessary that the sodium phosphate shall be chemically pure."

"Attention should therefore again be called to the fact," says the Journal of the American Medical Association, "that the names 'sodium phosphate' and 'sodium phosphite' are so similar that a serious error can be made by the misprinting or misinterpretation of a single letter. Sodium phosphite has been suggested as an antidote to mercuric chloride because it acts as a reducing agent to convert mercuric chloride into calomel—mercurous chloride—while the phosphite is changed to phosphate. Sodium phosphate will have no such action on mercuric chloride because it is already as highly oxidized as possible."

An Eccentric Russian Doctor.

The famous Russian, the late Dr. Zaharin, was noted for his eccentric methods. When summoned to attend Czar Alexander III. in his last illness Dr. Zaharin required the same preparation for his visit to the palace as to any of his patients' houses. That is to say, all dogs had to be kept out of the way, all clocks stopped and every door thrown wide open. He left his furs in the hall, his overcoat in the next room, his galoshes in the third and, continuing, arrived at the bedside in ordinary indoor costume. He sat down after walking every few yards and every eight steps in going upstairs. From the patient's relatives and every one else in the house he required absolute silence until he spoke to them, when his questions had to be answered by "Yes" or "No" and nothing more.

Tail of the Possum.

An old negro was out with a hunter one day. The two found a peculiar track. Following the line of what were plainly footprints was a small, continuous furrow.

"What kind of a track is that, Jim?" asked the puzzled hunter.

"Dat's a possum track, sah!" explained the old negro.

"But how does he make that furrow?"

"He makes dat furrer wid his tail."

"With his tail?"

"Yes, suh. He lets his tail drag."

"Why do you suppose he lets it drag?"

"Ah doan' know, boss. I jes' reckin he doan' pay no 'tention to dat tail. S'pose he thinks it'll come along, anyhow."—Louisville Times.

Couldn't Blame the Pump.

A lumberman having awakened on a Sunday morning in a "dry town" after a big spree of the night before searched his pockets in vain. Being very thirsty, he remembered stumbling over a pump in the alley back of the hotel.

He hastened to the pump and began pumping, but without results, as the pump had not been primed. He slowly backed away and, eyeing the pump, said: 'Well, I don't blame you for not working, anyhow. I wouldn't patronize you when I had money."—Exchange.

Plain Hint.

"Yes; I think you have," she said, looking at him steadily. "What prefix do you wish to substitute?"—London Tit-Bits.

The Ladies' Candidate

Result of Battle of Ballots In Quincy Harbor

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Of all the dratted impudence!" sputtered Captain Barnabas Fish, stamping into his cozy sitting room one October evening. "Here, I've brought my old mate, Ananias Sline, down to Quincy Harbor, got him a job as porter in the bank, fixed it so's if he loses his berth he can marry any one of several likely widder wimmen, all anxious to make another voyage on the sea of matter-money, and see what he's doing to me!" He tossed his blue cap in a corner and sat down.

Maria's eyes twinkled at me. "I suppose it's something about them politicks," she sighed.

"Politics?" I inquired. "Why, Captain Barnabas, I didn't know you had political aspirations."

"Miss Telham," he said, turning his kindly old face to me, "when a delegation of your townspeople wait upon you and ask you to run for member of the school board, you can't very well refuse, eh?"

"Not very well," I assented.

"I always stayed by my ship in time of danger—I never was no duck pond sailor," said the captain proudly. "When my country—that is, Quincy Harbor—asks me to run for member of the school board I'm going to run, and no man can run afoul of me without getting into trouble. When Ananias Sline runs up the black flag and tries to chase me off the political seas like the weakened little pirate that he is, why, I'll jest rake him fore and aft with the fire of my—my oratory and frizzle him till he looks like a piece of scorched plum duff! Blast my top lights, but I will!" roared the captain, pacing to and fro.

"Barnabas Fish!" cried Maria. "Stop swearing. You remember you promised me that you'd never swear no more after we was married."

The captain stared at her. "I reckon I made a lot of promises," he said doubtfully.

"Oh, go along, do!" chided Maria playfully. "Then you're not going to tell us what you're so mad about?"

"Only this, Miss Telham and Maria. Ananias Sline has announced himself as candidate to run opposition to me on—on the school board vacancy."

"The little rat!" said Maria contemptuously. "I can't see what party he represents. You're running Republican, David Finney's running Democrat and Deacon Punderson's running Prohibition candidate. There ain't no party left for him to represent!" she ended triumphantly.

"THERE AIN'T A MAN IN QUINCY HARBOR THAT AIN'T UNDER HIS WIFE'S THUMB," SAID THE CAPTAIN.

"There's one that you haven't reckoned on, Maria," said the captain sadly—"suffergette."

"Suffergette!" shrieked Maria. "Why, Barnabas, we ain't got the vote yet."

"That don't make no difference to a critter like Ananias Sline. He's calculating on performing his usual underhand trick to win this election, and I guess he's got me on the run now."

"Shucks!" ejaculated Maria. "He can't beat you if he had every woman in the township on his side, because they ain't got no right to vote. For land's sake, Barnabas Fish! Ain't you got no ginger?"

"Yes, I be," he retorted sourly, "but you don't know what tricks Ananias is up to. He made a speech before the suffergette wimmen of Quincy Harbor, and he enlisted their help this wise: They're to gain their p'int and 'lect their candidate, meaning Ananias Sline, by influencing the votes of the men in their families."

"But perhaps the men will decline to be influenced," objected Maria.

"There ain't a man in Quincy Harbor that ain't under his wife's thumb," announced the captain.

"Exceptin' Captain Barnabas Fish," added his spouse.

"Of course exceptin' me. And that proves jest what I said!" snorted the old sailor. "You driv me to say it, Maria. You would have your way, like every other one of them durn suffergettes. I wish every one of 'em would stay to home and take care of their children and their houses. Nobody wouldn't expect no more of 'em!" He jammed his cap on his head and stamped out of the room.

From the window where I was sitting I saw the captain shrugging his sturdy shoulders into his pea jacket as he went down the path to the front gate that opened directly on to the sandy beach road. Here, at a little landing, was tied his dory. In a jiffy he had flung oars into the bottom, tossed the painter into the bow and with a quick running jump had pushed the boat into deep water and was rapidly rowing in the direction of his old schooner, the Indus, which was spending the peaceful evening of a most eventful career in the quiet waters of Quincy Harbor.

"Well, Maria?" I voiced my curiosity.

"I'm going to put my finger in this political pie," said Maria, with an air of finality. "Do you want to come along with me, Miss Telham?"

"I shall be delighted," I cried eagerly, and it was the truth, for nothing is more entertaining than Quincy Harbor when her political pot is boiling.

"The first place we go to," said Maria as we walked across the beach road toward the village, "is Susannah Bean's; there's five votes in her family."

Mrs. Bean was raking the dead stalks in the frost killed vegetable garden. She had built a great fire, and she emerged from the pillar of smoke and met us near the front of the house. There was a bitter look on her long countenance.

"Howdy, Maria? Howdy, Miss Telham? You seem to think a powerful lot of Quincy Harbor, spending so much time here. I declare, if 'twas me I'd git as far from it as I could!"

"What's the matter, Susannah?" asked Maria as we went into Mrs. Bean's coldly formal parlor. "Ain't we friends enough to be invited into the sitting room by the fire?"

"I'm feeling low sperrited today," confessed Mrs. Bean moodily. "When I'm real blue I always entertain folks in the parlor—seems to fit into my mood, you know!"

"So I should suppose," remarked Maria dryly after one glance around the cheerless apartment. "Now, Susannah, I guess this room will do as well as any other to discuss business. Where's all your men folks that you have to clean up the garden?"

"They've gone duck shooting over to Thimble point," burst out Susannah Bean venomously, "the hull five of 'em—Alfred and the four boys—leaving me to do men's work!"

"No matter how hard we women folks try to be independent of 'em, we just have to acknowledge that we can't get along without men's help," remarked Maria practically.

Mrs. Bean sniffed scornfully.

"Get along without 'em!" she laughed. "You must understand, Maria Fish, that I could get along as nice as pie even if my husband and four boys all decided to stay on Thimble point the rest of their days. I feel pretty independent of the men, Maria." Susannah nodded her long head emphatically, and the little blue cap which she had perched on her grizzled hair jolted over one eye, where it poised rakishly.

Maria coughed. "Seems funny," she said pleasantly, "that a passal of independent wimmen ain't so independent but what they have to beg their men folks to vote for the suffrage candidate. Otherwise how can he be elected, wimmen not having no votes as yet, though I do believe it will come in time?"

"I want to know!" ejaculated Susannah aggressively. "Not elect Ananias Sline without the help of the men folks?"

"How you going to do it?" asked Maria quietly. "I should think the wimmen of the party would have more pride than to ask men to do for them what they're entitled to, but haven't got yet, though they will all in good time," she went on rapidly. "I tell you, Susannah Bean, the wimmen of this village will be the laughingstock of the hull township! Moreover, it's bribery and corruption to buy and sell votes even if they're bought by—by moral—what do you call 'em?"

"I want t' know!" gasped the astonished Mrs. Bean. "I never looked at it that way, and I don't believe any of the other suffrage ladies thought of that!"

"Folks are beginning to talk and laugh about it already," pursued Maria, warming up to her subject. "Nobody wants Ananias Sline on the school board—he can hardly spell cat. He never had chick nor child. What does he know about children?"

"Nothing," remarked Mrs. Bean sincerely. "I told Emma Bevis that the ladies had ought to use their influence toward electing a solid family man like Captain Barnabas Fish."

"So 'twas Em Bevis started it, eh?" asked Maria eagerly. "I knew 'twas either her or Hetty Rowell—both trying to please him to death."

Maria talked steadily for another half hour, and when we left the Bean abode it was with the understanding that Susannah Bean was to go at once to three influential women of the village and endeavor to dissuade them from trying to elect Ananias Sline to the school board by questionable methods.

"When we get the vote will be time enough to elect our own candidates," ended Maria, rising to go. "And we wimmen can't hold the men to scorn and tell how we're going to run things honestly and the way they ought to be run and then turn around and enter politics at the crooked end of the horn, not by no manner of means!"

"I should say not!" agreed Susannah warmly. "After the way my men folks have treated me today you can believe that I'm not going to ask no favors of 'em in the way of voting for Ananias Sline or any other wimmen's candidate."

Maria and I spent a busy afternoon, but Mrs. Bevis, who kept the dry goods store, was plainly annoyed at being discovered in earnest conversation with Mr. Sline himself. They were standing near the calico counter, and there was a marked contrast between the large framed, strong featured woman with the heavy chin and the little, fair haired, goggled eyes sailor man who had drifted into Quincy Harbor after a most adventurous life on the sea.

"As I was saying, Mr. Sline," Em Bevis was uttering in her deep voice when we entered the store—"as I was saying, you have the support of every right minded woman in Quincy Harbor."

"IF ELECTED I SHOULD DO MY DUTY," SAID MR. SLINE.

Mr. Sline blinked his eyes and smiled fishily at the buxom widow.

"If elected I should do my duty," he said, with a cold smile.

"No one doubts that," rejoined Mrs. Bevis warmly. "What can I do for you, Maria?" she asked reluctantly, compelled to notice our advent.

"I'd like to look at calico dresses," said Maria, drawing the storekeeper toward the back of the store.

"She's mad as a hornet and won't hear to a thing," said Maria as we left the store and went along to the Widow Rowell's house on Locust street. "Says she'll vote herself, law or no law!"

Mrs. Rowell met us with the sweet hospitality that was her chief characteristic. What if she did tear our characters to shreds the instant we had left her domicile? Honeyed words fell from the lips of the mature widow, and we were made to feel that our call that afternoon was an oasis in the desert of her daily life.

She enthusiastically agreed with Maria Fish on every point of the political situation in Quincy Harbor.

"Let them wimmen as want to vote!" she said pleasantly. "I've got my home to take care of and my bread and butter to earn, and I've not much time for gossip or talk of any kind, only, Mr. Sline being a boarder of mine, I will say that if I did have the vote I should feel it my bounden duty to cast a vote for him—not thinking no less of the captain, you understand, Maria?" she hastened to add.

"I understand," said Maria dryly.

"And I can't rid myself of the notion," went on Mrs. Rowell vaguely, "that if I did cast my vote tomorrow—that the law would be on my side, and my ballot would be upheld. Nobody can make me believe anything different when all's said and done," she ended obstinately.

As we went down the front steps, Maria caught my elbow firmly in her hand.

"I declare to man, I believe both of them critters will vote and think they're doing right," she whispered.

* * * * * * *

The next morning Captain Barnabas Fish emerged from the Indus and came ashore. He was shaven and shorn and neatly dressed in his Sunday suit of dark blue broadcloth.

He dutifully kissed his wife and shook hands with me, accepting our wishes for his success with gloomy gratitude. Then he disappeared toward the village, which was now in the throes of a local election.

At 9 o'clock that night he hurried into the house with red cheeks and sparkling eyes. He tossed aside cap and overcoat, and, throwing himself into his favorite chair, he went off into a silent fit of laughter.

"I reckon you're elected," smiled Maria, hovering over him.

He nodded helplessly. "By a good majority, Maria," he gasped.

"For the land's sake, what's happened?" demanded Maria.

"Nothing, only when they counted the votes there was just two for Ananias Sline. Ha, ha! One was voted by the widder Rowell and t'other by the widder Bevis. Ha, ha! And both throwed out!"

"What did I tell you?" asked Maria triumphantly as we joined in the captain's mirth.

MADRID'S ARID SITE.

Parched and Dusty Now, It Was Once a Watered Garden Spot.

Travelers find it hard to believe that Madrid ever abounded with water. The modern town stands on so bleak and arid an eminence, its surroundings, save in early spring, are so parched and dusty and the water peddler's cry of "Agua! Agua!" is so insistent and ubiquitous one fancies Madrid must have been thirsty from the beginning.

Yet its ancient coat of arms was a large flint half immersed in water, with steel hatchets striking it on either side, the ascending sparks forming a sort of canopy around it. Appended was the motto:

I was built on water.
My walls are of fire.
Such is my emblazonment.

This device was emblematic only of the city and its early days before Charles V. had started it on its headlong career of greatness merely because he credited its climate with having cured him of a fever.

At that time Madrid was a small town embowered in gardens and woods and meadows and with springs and wells lavishly supplied by nature. The Manzanares, now a melancholy, meager stream, was of a measurable depth. But with the apportioning of her territory into palaces and lodging houses for the royal hangers-on and the cutting down of the trees to swell the royal treasury the inevitable followed. The sun of well nigh 400 summers has burned and reburned the site of the old town and its bestripped suburbs and dried up the natural moisture. At present the climate of Madrid is nearly the most trying in all Europe.—From Calvert's "Madrid."

SCHOOLS IN ARABIA.

Pupils Sit Swaying on the Floor as They All Study Aloud.

In the schools of Arabia the children, with the schoolmaster, sit upon the floor or the ground in a semicircle, and each has a tablet of wood which is painted white and upon which the lessons are written. When the latter are learned they are washed out and replaced by other lessons.

During study hours the Arab schools remind one of the Chinese, for the children all study aloud, and as they chant they rock back and forth like trees in a storm, and this movement is continued for an hour or more at a time. The schoolmaster rocks back and forth also, and altogether the school presents a most novel appearance as well as sound. Worshipers in the mosques always move about while reciting the Koran, as this movement is believed to assist the memory.

The desks of the Arab schools are odd contrivances of palm sticks, upon which is placed the Koran or one of the thirty sections of it. After learning the alphabet the boys take up the study of the Koran, memorizing entire chapters of it until the sacred book is entirely familiar.

A peculiar method is followed in learning the Koran. The study begins with the opening chapter, and from this it skips to the last. The last but one is then learned, then the last but two, and so on in inverted order, ending finally with the second chapter.

Origin of the Word "Mustard."

Our English word "mustard" is traceable to the French "moutarde," the origin of which is curiously given. In 1382 Philip the Bold, duke of Burgundy, granted to the town of Dijon the privilege of bearing his armorial ensigns, with the motto "Moult me tarde" ("I wish ardently"), in return for a handsome contingent of a thousand men furnished to him at its expense. Pleased with the royal condescension, the authorities ordered the device to be affixed over the principal gates of the city. Time or accident at length obliterated the middle word, and the two remaining, moult tarde, were printed on the labels which the merchants of Dijon pasted on pots in which they sent this commodity all over the world.

Our Constitution.

The United States constitution is not modeled on any other; but, on the contrary, several are modeled on it, notably those of Canada, Australia, the Central and South American republics, Switzerland and, to a certain extent, China. It was drafted by a convention in 1787, ratified by nine states (the prescribed number) in 1788 and set to work under George Washington as first president in 1789. It is a very simple document, containing originally only seven articles.—Christian Herald.

As Good as His Word.

He—I always make it a point to profit by the mistakes of others.

She—I got weary of George Brixton because he never seemed to know when to go home.

He then bade her good night.—Cleveland Leader.

Optimist and Pessimist.

"What is the difference between an optimist and a pessimist?"

"A pessimist is always thinking of his liabilities, while an optimist thinks only of his assets."—Judge.

Natural Result.

"The magistrate in a Brooklyn court was injured yesterday when the ceiling fell."

"Yes. I heard he was all covered with court plaster."—Buffalo Express.

Loss of Sleep.

Medical authorities state that it takes fifteen days for the average human body to recover fully from the loss of two consecutive nights' sleep.

HIGH SCHOOL ALUMNI.

It has been called to the attention of the young men who compose the committee appointed for the purpose of forming a permanent Alumni Association for all the graduates of the Quincy High school, that a few years ago there existed such an association and that many of those members are still interested in all that pertains to the welfare or that which recalls the good old days so profitably spent at High school. The present committee will be only too glad to receive any help or assistance from any of these former members, and this can be done either in writing to the committee as a whole or to any individual member of the committee care Daily Ledger.

It is the wish of the present committee to go carefully and surely to establish on a strong basis as solid and substantial association as it is possible to form, and with this view in mind urges and calls on all High School graduates to join this movement.

Numerous attempts to form, or suggestions in past years, that such an association should exist, have been made but none of these attempts seem to have been carried through. Since the society that did exist some fifteen years ago there has been no representative body of all the graduates. To many, doubtless it may seem strange that a place the size of Quincy and growing as rapidly as Quincy should have no Alumni society, but the time has arrived when there should be an association, and with the present opportunity presenting itself it should behoove every graduate to do his or her share towards making the present effort one grand success.

TEACHERS IN AUTO ACCIDENT

The automobiles of John Lavers and of ex-Councilman John Richards, the latter being in charge of Howard Allison came together on Granite street, near the corner of School street this morning with the result that Miss Molly Parker, a teacher at the John Hancock school was thrown out and somewhat bruised. She fainted away and was taken into Piersons store and later taken to her home.

It appears that Allison offered to carry Miss Parker and Miss Donovan to their school. They got into the automobile and Allison started to back around. Before doing so he assured himself that the road was clear, but when part way around Mr. Lavers came along going toward West Quincy and attempted to pass. The result was that the two cars came together and Miss Parker was thrown out. Lavers car had the front axle sprained and the Richards car is at the garage undergoing repairs. The Lavers car gave no warning.

RIVADAVIA TEST.

The forty-eight hours test of the dynamos of the battleship Rivadavia ended at noon today. The dynamos run perfectly during the test. It is understood that this was practically the final test which the Rivadavia must undergo before being turned over to the Argentine government.

KERMIT HAS REAL ROOSEVELT SPIRIT

Like Father Like Son Applies to Young Bridegroom.

HIS EVENTFUL 24 YEARS.

As Fond of Adventure as the Colonel, With Whom He Undauntedly Shared Perils of Africa and Brazil—Full of Energy Ever Since He Was the "Cut Up" of the White House.

When Kermit Roosevelt reached Madrid for his marriage to Miss Belle Wyatt Willard, daughter of the American ambassador to Spain, he was an altogether different looking young man from what he was at the time of his departure for the Brazilian wilderness. The hardships he had gone through with his father seemed to have added several years to his appearance.

Kermit Roosevelt's love of adventure rivals that of his distinguished father, the former president, and he came through the greatest adventure of his life, that in the Brazilian jungle, with flying colors. He did his share of the big game hunting and faced the perils and privations that were encountered by the party with a fortitude that won the admiration of his father.

Kermit Roosevelt is twenty-four years old and for a young man of that age has seen considerable of the world. He accompanied Colonel Roosevelt on his famous big game hunt in Africa, and it is said that he proved to be even a better marksman than his father.

As "Cut Up" and Philosopher.

When the colonel was president Kermit often got into the newspapers through boyish pranks or bits of juvenile philosophy he uttered. Since he reached early manhood he has spent most of his time traveling in the woods or on trips of exploration and sightseeing with his father.

He spent most of his boyhood in Washington while his father was a member of the civil service commission, assistant secretary of the navy, vice president and later in the White House as president. He went to public school and was considered one of the most vigorous boys who attended.

At Groton, where he was educated preparatory to college, there was another student who prided himself upon his English birth and parentage. As Fourth of July approached young Roosevelt asked the boy mischievously:

"Are you English?"

The reply was emphatic.

"Well," said the president's son, "aren't you glad we whipped you so you can have a holiday on the 4th of July?"

Kermit entered Harvard in 1908. In March of the following year he started with his father for a long hunting trip in Africa, primarily as the official photographer of the caravan, but he killed some big game during the weeks that he remained there and had two narrow escapes from death. In September, 1911, he returned to Harvard.

Although in looks Kermit probably resembles his mother more than his father, he is in speech and manner his father over again. He has the family habit of rapid, distinct enunciation His gestures are jerky, decisive and muscular.

Who the Willards Are.

The young lady whose hand and heart the young explorer won is the elder of two daughters of Joseph Edward Willard, appointed ambassador to Spain by President Wilson July 11 last. She is of the blond type, rather small and with clear cut features. She was born in Richmond, Va., twenty-one years ago. Her mother was Miss Belle Layton Wyatt, a member of one of the oldest families in Baltimore.

Ambassador Willard is a lawyer by profession. He moved to Richmond more than twenty years ago and soon became active in Democratic politics.

Ambassador Willard was on the staff of General Fitzhugh Lee in Cuba in the war with Spain. He was in the house of representatives from 1894 to 1902 and lieutenant governor of Virginia from 1902 to 1906.

NEW ENGLAND STOMACH SUFFERERS FIND SHORT ROAD BACK TO HEALTH

Victims of Digestive Disorders Tell of Wonderful Effect of Mayr Remedy.

Many New England stomach sufferers and, in fact, people all over the United States have found remarkable results from the use of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy.

Hundreds in this state alone have taken this remedy and tell today of the benefits they received. Its effects come quickly—the first dose convinces; no long treatment. Here is what two who have taken it say:

MRS. S. E. JOHNSON, 61 Whitmore Street, Hartford, Conn., wrote: "My pains left me the next day after taking the treatment. It is simply wonderful how it relieved me."

MRS. CLARE SHAW, 21 Majestic Avenue, Norwood, R. I., wrote: "I received your sample treatment and it saved my life. I am better now than I have been for 20 years."

Mrs. Shaw had been treated both here and abroad and had undergone an operation. She found relief quickly. These statements come from letters among thousands. The remedy is known everywhere for its true merit.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many say it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox's drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

LEOPARD MOTH.

Better look over your trees carefully. The most dangerous foe you have now to combat and the one hardest to detect is the borer known as the leopard moth. Eternal vigilance alone will free the state from his ravages. He cannot be reached by the methods employed in the fight against the gypsy and the brown-tail. The public does not realize how dangerous he is to the smaller as well as the larger elms and maples and practically all kinds of shade trees, as well as to many shrubs.

Better get out the ladders, squirm up among the branches, armed with a sharp and flexible wire and an oil can or syringe, and better keep doing this at least once a month through the summer. Be sure, also, to tell the boys to let the yellow-bodied pigeon wood-peckers alone, for they are the inveterate foes of the skulking leopard moth.

The public has heard a lot about the leopard, but the experts declare that the people need to understand just now the borer does his work, and just how the battle against him must be fought.

If that fine tree is looking bad about the top, it ought to be examined with care, for the leopard works usually at the tops of the trees it attacks. If you find the branches at the top look worm-eaten, the only thing to do is to cut away the top altogether and burn the infected portions.

If some of the small boughs look fairly but show themselves pierced with minute borings, it is time to get to work with the wire and the oil can.

These leopard moths are rather large, the male measuring an inch and a half and the female two inches and a half between the tips of the wings. When the eggs hatch the young begin at once to feed and they eat their way through the bark and into the woody tissues of the bough. These are the borers.

The boring worms grow rapidly and work down towards the base of the bough upon which they have begun to feed. If the quarters prove too small they emerge and crawl about until a larger limb is found and that in turn they enter and continue their feeding. Sometimes the borer will drill a channel down through the centre of the branch; again it will eat out a large cavity, and at other times it will work around the branch and girdle it.

At the end of the first season the borer is but half grown, but it will have left behind one or two branches in such a weakened condition that the winter winds will snap them off. In the second summer the borers attain their maximum size of two or three inches and attack the larger branches or the main stem of their tree.

And, as a matter of general precaution, if a tree is found to be badly bored and heavily infested, it is wise to burn it entire to save the rest of the grove or orchard.

Yes, better look over the trees. And keep looking them over, month by month, through the summer. Follow the example of the park commission, which will have 11 workmen going from tree to tree in the Public Garden and on the Common throughout the summer.

Give the woodpecker, often called the "flicker," good nesting conditions and leave him unmolested and he will do much to save the trees of Massachusetts from the depredations of the borers. The small amount of harm which he has sometimes done by pecking at the woodwork of summer cottages is far more than balanced by the service he renders as an enemy of the leopard scourge.

FAREWELL PARTY.

Fred Peterson of 80 Cranch street, was tendered a surprise party Wednesday evening by his friends. It was also a farwell party as Mr. Peterson is leaving, Tuesday the 16th, for a trip to France, where he intends to continue his studies in the French language.

Richard Carlmark, chairman of the committee, presented him with a good large purse as a remembrance from his friends. A few selections were rendered by a male quartet after which refreshments were served.

INMATES CALLED AS WITNESSES

Another Day Will be Necessary at Hearing on Charges Against Keeper Vaughn

Several Clashes Between McAnarney and Pinkham

The hearing on the removal of William J. Vaughn as keeper of the almshouse was resumed at 1.30 Friday afternoon and new witnesses were introduced in defense of the administrator's action. Among those heard were inmates of the almshouse. When the hearing adjourned to Monday morning at 9.30 all these witnesses had not been heard. Spicy testimony is promised when the defense is opened.

The heat was almost oppressive but the spectators heard enough to amuse them. Several clashes between the counsel McAnarney for the defense and Walter S. Pinkham who is advisory counsel to Perry Green, presiding officer, enlivened the session.

The witnesses of the afternoon hardly offered anything new over the testimony of the morning witnesses. Those heard were Mrs. Ellen Deady, George Hobart, Philip Green, William Isaacs, Henry Dwelle, Harry B. Nurse Thomas Cooper, Patrick Glynn, Patrick Maddigan, William Rouleau ad Frank Sandbiom.

During the afternoon the condition of affairs under Overseer Fred P. Green, who appointed Mr. Vaughn, was brought up by a witness and mention was made of a new City Hall.

This proved to be a store known as Vaughn's spa, conducted by a son of Mr. Vaughn on Hancock street. The place was christened such by the inmates because Mr. Vaughn spent so much time there.

GEORGE HOBART.

George Hobart, an inmate said the horse when needed was at the new City Hall and that he made out the annual report for Mr. Vaughn for two years. He said it was his opinion that Mr. Vaughn was not capable of figuring when he took the position, and often heard him say two fives are ten, two sixes twelve.

Counsel McAnarney asked if it offended him, and an expert bookkeeper to hear Mr. Vaughn count that way, and he said it did. If a man is not competent to figure I cannot see how

INNOCENT MAN RELEASED

Quincy Man Sentenced for Crime of Another

Arrested for a crime which he never committed, found guilty at a trial, because his photograph resembled that of the man who had committed the crime, and sentenced to fourteen months in the house of correction, is the experience which Herbert T. Andrews, who was freed from prison Friday, where he had been since last February, by the confession of Earle Barnes of New York, who was arrested on Thursday. It only goes to show how easy it is to be mistaken, and that people can not be too careful how they identify persons by photographs, as it may result in sending an innocent man to jail as it did in this case.

The young man in question, Herbert T. Andrews is now at his home on Palmer street, Germantown, where he came Friday afternoon after being freed by the courts.

It was last February that Andrews was arrested for passing worthless checks, being identified by his photograph, and it was largely on account of his picture that he was sentenced, although all the time he stoutly protested his innocence.

To the credit of Capt. Armstrong of the bureau of criminal investigation, however, he lost no time in undoing what had been done, and in righting the great wrong as far as possible, and in the shortest possible time. As soon as Capt. Armstrong learned of the facts he went before the court, and interrupted a murder trial, that the judge who gave the sentence might be informed of the facts. The court also acted quickly, and it was not long after before Andrews was brought from Deer Island to the court where he was freed.

Overjoyed at being freed he visited police headquarters to personally express his thanks to Capt. Armstrong for what he had done for him, and then hastened to Quincy where he joined his wife and family. The scene here as the husband and father entered the home a free man, and his name fully cleared of the blotch, that had been put upon it, can better be pictured than described.

SHOWER FOR MISS HARRIS

Surprised by City Hall Girls Last Evening

"Molly! Molly! City Hall girls, here we are." This was the cry uttered in unison by the young lady clerical force at City Hall Friday evening as Miss Mary E. Harris, of the Assessors department entered the home of Miss Irma C. Tilton, Merryomunt road, where the young ladies had congregated to give Miss Harris a surprise linen shower. Miss Harris, it might be mentioned, severs her connection with the Assessors' office at the close of business today, to enter a more important position, which will be preceded by a ceremony next Saturday evening, at which time she becomes the bride of Haven Belcher a well known Braintree young man.

The shower was arranged by a committee which included Miss Irma C. Tilton, Miss Helen H. Gavin, Miss Mildred Tyler, Miss Marguerite S. Lyons and Miss Marion A. Bolster. It was aranged that Miss Harris should be brought to the home of Miss Tilton at 24 Merrymount road where the surprise was to take place. The house was dark when she approached and gave no signs of being occupied by a merry bunch of young ladies. It was some minutes before the house key could be made to work, but when the door finally opened, and Molly entered, she was immediately surrounded and greeted with the cry, noted above. The surprise was complete and for a minute Miss Harris did not know if she was going or coming.

She was then escorted to the parlor and confronted by a pink parasol which had been suspended from the wall between the two rooms. From each of the bows of the parasol was a white ribbon to which as attached a bundle containing a piece of linen which it might be added represented the handiwork of the giver. As each package was opened there were shouts of "Ohs" from the girls, which was followed by general laughter, as Miss Haris read aloud the verse of poetry which accompanied each package.

Later Miss Harris was escorted to the dining room which was prettily decorated with crepe paper, of pink and white color together with cut flowers from the greenhouses of Perry Green. One of the chairs at the table was decorated with pink and white crepe paper, and this Miss Harris was escorted to. Directly in front on the table was a large cake, upon the top of which was a kewpie bride gowned in pink. There was also a large white heart upon which was also a kewpie, while at each of the other plates was a pink basket containing pink candy.

It fell to Miss Harris to cut the cake and each of the surprisers received a generous slice. Light refreshments were then served, after which there were games and music for an hour or more.

As noted above it was a complete surprise to Miss Harris and withall it was a most enjoyable evening to all.

There was omitted from the list of those contributing the use of their autos for the "Trip Around the World" Thursday, the name of Fred A. Drake of Farnum street, Quincy Point, who rendered valiant service, being seemingly indefatigable in helpfulness.

REFERENDUM ON BOARD OF SURVEY

Representative Sullivan Would Allow City Council to Act on Acceptance of Bill

Would Also Take From Mayor the Right to Veto

Representative Sullivan has given notice in the House that he will move certain amendments to the Board of Survey bill for Quincy when it again comes up for a reading.

In section 2, by striking out, in lines 18 and 19, the words "whose refusal to sign shall be a veto;"

By striking out section 9 and inserting in place thereof the following.—"Section 9. This act shall be submitted to the city council of the city of Quincy, in the year nineteen hundred and fourteen, and if a majority of the members present and voting thereon cast their votes in the affirmative, this act shall take effect on January fourth, nineteen hundred and fifteen."

The committee on Bills in the Third Reading report recommending that the bill be amended by striking out the last line of section 2 and inserting in place thereof the following:—"The plans, as approved or modified by the board, shall then be signed by the members of the board, or by a majority of them, and filed in the office of the city engineer who shall attest thereon the date of filing; and thereafter no street or way in the territory to which the plans relate shall be laid out or constructed except in accordance with the said plans, or with such further plans as may subsequently be approved by the board."

The second amendment gives the City Council of 1914 the right to accept or reject the act.

The amendment proposed by the committee seems to eliminate the Mayor in section two. The original bill provides that the Mayor may approve all plans.

THE Y. M. C. A. DIRECTORS

Enjoy Outing and Dinner at Hotel Nantasket

For the first time in the history of the Y. M. C. A. the Board Directors together with their wives to the number of twenty-seven had an outing Friday afternoon. The party assembled at the building where they took autos to Nantasket.

After enjoying a bountiful shore dinner at the Nantasket Hotel, the after dinner festivities began under the direction of Theophilus King. Mr. King is a past master in this role and his introductions were certainly unique, particularly in view of the fact that neither he nor those upon whom he called had any warning that they were to be called upon.

The first response was from the "Has-Beens.", George H. Brown, Esq., the first president of the Association responded. It was largely due to Mr. Brown that the Association was organized nearly 25 years ago.

The next to respond was one of the "Is-ers," President Burgess. He received an ovation. In his introduction Mr. King referred to the fact that Mr. Burgess was physical director of the Detroit Association 34 years ago.

The "Will-Be-ers" were represented by Joseph Sedgwick, treasurer of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation and also chairman of the Boys' Work committee of the Association. Mr. Sedgwick referred to the need of the Association in the way of a camp which could not only be used in the summer but at times the year round. It is hoped that this may be realized in the near future.

Those who made up the party were President and Mrs. Burgess; Mr. and Mrs. George H. Brown; Mr. and Mrs. William F. Cummings; Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Ewertz; Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Hutchins r and Mrs. John F. Hunt; Mr. and Mrs. John L. Hamilton; Mr. and Mrs. T. King; Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Shaw; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Sedgwick; General Secretary and Mrs. Bromley and Messrs. R. D. Chase, D. King, Curtis W. Pierce Roy Prout, Francis Brown and John T Melville.

The night was a perfect one for the trip and everyone pronounced it a success. It will doubtless become an annual event.

Miss Kathryn Goeres gives a pupils recital on Monday evening at Alpha hall.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

The modern way for the college graduate to get a job is not to apply humbly for work as office boy, but to get next to the trust magnate on the golf links and touch him up for a directorship.

A Long Island minister invites the men to come in their golf clothes and hear him preach. The attendance would be better still if he could work in some advice on how to shoot over the bunkers.

Mexico is considered by many people a fine place to invest money. As either the Constitutionalists or the Federals come along about every day and ask for a loan, the funds never have to lie idle.

Hoist your flags tomorrow and keep them up the next day in honor of flag day which occurs Sunday but according to the usual custom in such matters will be celebrated Monday. While not a holiday in the accepted sense of the word it is nevertheless important to all lovers of the flag and what it symbolizes should not be allowed to pass unnoticed. There is to be a big celebration in Faneuil hall Monday evening, participated in by the allied patriotic societies and there will be many similar affairs roundabout, given on a much larger scale. So hoist the flag and meanwhile get out your encyclopaedia and read about the day and its meaning.

LITERARY SUCCESS.

An idea of the intense rivalry prevailing in the field of literature is given in the competition for the $10,000 prize offered by Winthrop Ames of Boston, for the best American play. Although any one must have realized that the capture of this prize was the merest gambler's chance, the judges had to consider 2646 manuscripts.

The many people who are constantly trying to break into literature entertain a widespread conviction that there is a conspiracy against the new writer among publishers. They consume large quantities of postage stamps and haunt the postoffice. When the manuscripts come tumbling back, it is because the publishers did not read them, or could not detect budding genius.

The award of this prize suggests that literary success takes long training. The judges did not know who wrote any of the manuscripts, so this contest was purely on merit. The money went to Miss Alice Brown, a familiar name in the field of fiction. Writing is a trade like shoe making or selling groceries, and one must serve his apprenticeship to win.

It is astonishing what an enormous number of people believe themselves to be possessed of literary genius. The slightest facility in use of language is hailed by admiring friends. Young people are urged to divert their energies from farming or book-keeping, where they live useful lives, into the scramble for literary success.

Most of the best authors in the United States won their way through newspaper work. There their talent was soon discovered, and they found helpful counsel. Aspirants who do not wish to adopt this method of learning the rudiments of the trade may well stick to the shop or the kitchen, where they are at least sure of daily bread.

EARLY MORNING FIRE.

Box 116 was rung at about 2.30 Wednesday morning for a fire at the Bluffs. The reflection was visible for some miles around, and many people rushed to the scene in autos and on foot expecting to see a large conflagration. An uncompleted house owned by Dr. Bradley a Boston dentist, and being constructed by James McDonald of this village, had taken fire in an unknown manner.

The residence of Mr. Snaith directly in the rear, on Rambler's way, became ignited and as the occupants had not been aroused it was necessary for the firemen to awaken them. The fire in this instance was confined to the roof and was extinguished with a line of garden hose before the arrival of the apparatus. The hose and truck of Ward One responded, also auto combination No. 3, of the Landing, but the house was a complete ruin before their arrival. This is another illustration of the need of a Central Fire station, to which residents may telephone for assistance.

TRIBUTE TO PROF. SEWALL

Address of Asa P. French at Thayer Academy

Asa P. French of Randolph was one of the speakers last Saturday at the Founders day exercises at Thayer Academy and his tribute to Prof. J. B. Sewall, the first master, will be read with interest by Quincy graduates of the school.

I know of no more difficult and yet no pleasanter task than of attempting to recall and portray, though necessarily in the merest outline, the distinguishing characteristics of a loved and honored friend who has gone, in the presence of those who also knew and loved and honored him.

So far as that task devolves upon me at this moment, I approach it with reverence and affection,—the same reverence with which, when a lad, I first came into Prof. Sewall's presence as his pupil in the fall of 1877, and the same affection with which I took my leave of him for the last time in the church in Brookline, a year ago.

I approach it, however, with a feeling which I cannot put aside, that I almost hear a gentle, familiar voice say, "Do not, I beg of you, drag into the light and make public parade of the qualities of which you approved in me. Your loving thoughts and memories, and the School, are my best eulogy and my greatest reward. They are all I crave."

"Dear friend," I would reply, "it is not for your sake but our own that we dwell for a few moments, today, upon what you represent in our lives and our surroundings, and that we link your name with that of the distinguished founder of this institution."

If there be those who think it futile and unprofitable to spend an hour, like this, in the contemplation of the life and character of one who has left the world in his debt, I am sorry. It seems to me, however, a digression which is conspicuously fitting, and infinitely worth while. A long, full, philergetic life, (and I purposely use a word coined from the tongue he loved so dearly; knew so thoroughly, and taught so admirably),—a few sentences of praise, and appreciation, and then—silence. When one stops to reflect, this appears to be selfish indifference. Nevertheless it is one of the inexorable laws of existence that we cannot long linger in the past, however deeply the roots of our beings and affections lie embedded there.

We have come here, today, to pay to the memory of the learned teacher and the upright man, our tribute of respect and love. Such expressions serve, not alone as a deserved recognition of the services and personal worth of the dead, but are of value as an inspiration to the living. A sincere public expression of attachment and veneration for the memory of one who has led a blameless and beneficent life is not without its moral uses. Indeed it would be almost an idle thing to contemplate and expatiate upon the life of a man unless there were to be found in the narrative of his achievements an incentive to those who survive him and particularly to those who have taken up and are carrying on, the work which he has laid down.

That work was the vocation of a classical scholar, an eminent teacher, and a Christian gentleman. An ideal life—is it not—measured by any right way of thinking? To the sordid and ambitious, money and honor; but happiness to oneself, and the respect, affection and commendation of one's fellow-men, come far more often from the kind of life Prof. Sewal led and the things which he accomplished.

Here and there along the highway of history there is met an exceptional genius such as Gladstone was, who in the midst of the highest and most absorbing public honors and achievements nevertheless found time (where and how it is difficult to conceive) not only for the study of the classics but for the production of valuable additions to scholastic lore.

A subject of this kind naturally suggests Thomas Arnold and I like to remember of the great head master of Rugby that though he died at the early age of forty-seven and though his task in this world was merely to give instruction and inspiration to the young, he stands, today, in the front rank of the famous men of his generation.

The thought may be more or less fantastic and yet it will find, I hope, a responsive assent in some of your minds, that the long contemplation and profound study which Prof. Sewall, from an early age, and during the greater part of his long career, gave to Greek life, literature, language and history, not only impressed upon him the better and more amiable mental and moral qualities of that virile and cultivated race but that there was even in his face and demeanor that which suggested the portraits which have come down to us of some of the ancient Greek worthies.

Recall with me for a moment you who knew him his face and his figure as he sat on the platform at the morning exercises of the school or strode up and down the corridor; a gracious presence, irradiating cheerfulness and calm courage, happiness and peace, the joy of goodness and virtue, the beauty of simplicity. His face is happy and serene. It breathes a lofty optimism, proclaiming that there is good in all things. Kind and tender, cultivated and pure, no taint of hypocrisy or sham, a lover of all men. "Homo sum et nihil humani a me alienum puto."

He lived and thought on a loftier plane than most men do. No man was more deeply interested in those about him than he, and yet he dwelt in an atmosphere of his own above the mists and vapors of the world. As has been said of another kindred character, "He was one of the rare souls sent here to leaven sordid humanity by the purifying and uplifting influence of a tranquil and blameless career in a turbulent and sinful world, making it better by his example in life, and leaving it richer by the heritage of his memory."

Schopenhauer said that in every man there is a three-fold personality: what he is, what he seems, and what he represents—often three very different things. Prof. Sewall was what he seemed, and stood for what he was, a scholarly and upright man.

He was a man of lofty ideals, useful achievements, and in him the proportion between the two was nearer equality than it is in most men.

These are some few of the attributes that havey been ascribed to him by intimate friends in an affectionate expression of their sense of loss:

"Full of the finest and tenderest sympathies." "Bright and courteous, dignified and sweet."

Many things will occur to you that I might have said that perhaps I ought to say—and that I have not said. To idealize and to embellish are alike repugnant to the faithful eulogist. It would be idle to claim for Prof. Sewall, and he would be the last person in the world to claim for himself, that he was a great scholar or a great teacher. He was nevertheless a profound scholar and an excellent teacher. But he was still more,—a good man and a stimulating teacher. We are in an atmosphere now which would not exist, and which could not have existed, except for his long presence and inspiration in this institution, and this afternoon each one of his many pupils who has survived him—each of his associates in the work of the school,—each of his friends who is aware that these exercises are being held, is contributing to his memory some loving individual thought, and the aggregate of these thoughts cannot help being a stimulus for good.

As General Thayer was "the father of West Point" so, in the same sense, Prof. Sewall may be said to be "the father of Thayer Academy." He gave to it the impetus which has made and kept it what it is, an excellent school. And for that, the generations to come who will know him only by name will be grateful to him.

To teach them to obey orders, and to make them see what those orders mean. We are all in the world to help forward the affairs of the whole world." The President pointed out the great possibilities of the navy as a world wide influence for good, and ended by saying that "the moral compulsion of conscience is greater than any outside force." The article in last weeks' Patriot under the head of "Public Library Notes"—Choosing a Career" reminds us of a little book on Vocophy (naming the vocation one is best fitted to follow,) published by our ex-townsman, Lysander S. Richards over thirty years ago.

Mr. Richards was 30 years ahead of his time. Vocational training which is now a popular movement throughout the country has just awakened to the fact that the choice of a vocation should be studied as thoroughly as any professional training.

An editorial in the Boston Herald a while ago recognized Mr. Richards as the founder and originator of the new movement. Prominent educators also recognized his work as the forerunner of the present agitation.

His book, "Vocophy" cannot be obtained except through libraries as it is becoming rare. There is one in the Crane Public Library.

MURDER VICTIM STABBED TWICE

Corpse Hidden Under the Stoop of Dwelling House

FOUND EIGHT MONTHS LATER

Police Think Former Tenants, Who Sailed For Hungary Last April, May Be Able to Throw Light on Mysterious Tragedy Finally Revealed by Foul Odor

Boston, June 13.—A murder mystery which may lead to an over-seas police hunt was unearthed in Chelsea when the body of a man, with two knife wounds close to the heart, was discovered buried beneath the front stoop of a dwelling house at 180 Arlington street.

The condition of the body indicated that the man had been dead about eight months. It was covered over with only a few inches of dirt and debris. The only clothing was a balbriggan undershirt pierced twice and stained with blood.

The police believe the victim was stabbed in his bed, perhaps while sleeping, and the body quickly buried in the dark little closet at the foot of the cellar stairs, partly under the sidewalk. A midnight burial is suspected.

Yesrail Manoogian, an Armenian barber shop broker, and his wife, who occupied the tenement on the first floor of the house, directly above the spot where the body was found, sailed for Hungary April 21. They had lived in the house for about ten months, the landlord says. It is also reported that Nishan Bedrossian, who lodged with them, accompanied them abroad.

There was another male lodger in the Manoogian household shortly before the family left this country, the police are informed, and they entertain some belief that he may prove to be the victim. His name is not yet known to the police. The body is believed to be that of an Armenian or a Bulgarian.

The police believe the Manoogians or Bedrossian might be able to throw some light on the tragedy.

The corpse was found by Joseph Oppenheim, owner of the house, who lives on the second floor, and Henry F. Logan, an inspector for the board of health. For five or six weeks Oppenheim had been trying to locate the cause of a foul odor that seemed to come from the cellar. Owing to the high temperature, it seemed worse and he complained to the board of health, thinking it came from a broken sewer pipe.

Oppenheim and Logan began a search of the cellar. They traced the odor to the little closet under the front stoop. Oppenheim knew a drain was located in the closet and they proceeded to dig around for it, uncovering, to their astonishment, the decomposed shoulder of a human being.

Medical Examiner Magrath was notified and he hastened to the scene. He dug carefully around the body, part of which had been shoved under the edge of the basement flooring. The rest was covered lightly with dirt and debris. Whoever buried the body had to break through a concrete flooring and work through a little trap door 2x3 feet, but the closet was never used and only the foul odor, probably, would ever have led to the discovery of the crime.

After he had removed and examined the body, Magrath stated that it was that of a man between 25 and 45 years of age, five feet seven inches tall, and weighing about 130 pounds.

HIGH SCHOOL VICTORY

Quincy Defeats Weymouth High 8 to 7

Quincy High won another game Friday when Weymouth High was defeated 8 to 7 at Merrymount Park. The game was a good one to watch. Ford, a freshmen member, was the star of the game. He played the hot corner, got three putouts, one hit, two assists. He made a scratchy error. Poor base running stopped Quincy from piling up runs several times. The feature play of the game was Mauro 's long throw to home, nailing a Quincy man, after making a long catch. The score.

BAIL APPLICATION OPPOSED BY JEROME

Abandons Plan to Send Thaw Home Under Guard

Washington, June 13.—William T. Jerome filed a brief in the supreme court for the state of New York opposing the application of Harry K. Thaw for release under bail pending hearing of the habeas corpus appeal.

Jerome abandoned a plan to have Thaw withdraw his application and permit Thaw to go to Pittsburg with a United States deputy marshal.

Jerome and counsel for Thaw failed to agree upon the compromise plan suggested for a court order allowing Thaw to return to Pittsburg in custody.

Deadlocked, Jerome took the only course of opposition left—the formal statement to the court fighting Thaw's request for bail.

A decision upon Thaw's application by the high court Monday is regarded certain.

Landor, Critic of Roosevelt, Is Exposed by Rondon

Paris, June 13.—Before leaving Paris for London late last night Theodore Roosevelt gave out a 2000-word report by Colonel Rondon, the Brazilian government's representative who went with Roosevelt on the latter's exploration trip in South America.

The report of Rondon, who is himself an explorer of note, says and claims to prove that "Mr. Landor (referring to Henry S. Landor, the British explorer) did not cross a palm of land in Brazil or Peru that had not been explored, the greater part of it, many centuries ago."

The report of Rondon, which has just been translated from Portuguese, was sent to Roosevelt on his request to Rondon for information concerning Landor's expedition from Rio Janeiro to Lima in 1910-12.

DANISH CABINET MAY QUIT

King Adds to Deadlock Concerning Proposed Electoral Reform

Copenhagen, June 13. — King Christian X. placed an unexpected obstacle in the way of the plan of the Danish cabinet to solve the deadlock in electoral reform by dissolving the upper house of parliament, whose members, by refusing to vote, have stopped the passage of the constitutional amendment bill.

The king has objected to the inclusion in the dissolution of the twelve members of the upper house nominated by himself, and declares that he wishes only the other fifty-four members to be affected. Radical politicians have advised the cabinet to resign unless the king gives way.

The bill, which abolishes all property qualifications for electors of members of the upper house and takes away from the crown its present right to nominate twelve members, passed the lower house on June 9.

HOUSE PASSES TOLLS REPEAL

Over Two Hundred Votes In Favor to Seventy-One Against

MEASURE SENT TO PRESIDENT

Leader Underwood Does Not Oppose It, but Thinks Original Position of House Was More Honest, Manly and Courageous—Debate Is Limited to Hour and a Half

Washington, June 13.—The final step in congress in repealing the provision of the Panama canal act exempting American coastwise vessels from tolls was taken when the house concurred in the senate amended repeal resolution, including the Simmons-Norris amendment, by a vote of 216 to 71. The repeal was then sent to President Wilson for approval.

Chairman Adamson of the commerce committee, in charge of the bill, moved that the house concur with the amendments instead of sending it to conference.

"The senate amendment," he said, "should be acceptable to all advocates of uniform tolls. It is exceedingly appropriate that the statement contained in the amendment should be made and promulgated in connection with the repeal bill itself—it is nothing but the truth and has been made by us on the floor of the house and elsewhere many times."

Adamson's motion was not objected to, and debate was limited by agreement to 1½ hours. Mr. Murdock declared he believed the president would veto the bill as amended.

Majority Leader Underwood, while he declared he would not oppose the amendment, said it was "negative and ineffective."

"The original position of the house," he said, "was more honest, more manly, more courageous. The senate, by this amendment, concedes everything that was conceded by the house bill, and then to satisfy their consciences or their fears, threw out this negative declaration as a sop to those who oppose the measure."

"Our act in surrendering our rights will be the point that is weighed in the future, and not an accompanying declaration of what it meant when we performed the act," said he, and added that congress should never have legislated directly on the question, but should have submitted the entire controversy to arbitration.

Before the final vote, by 174 to 108, on a rollcall, the house defeated an amendment by Mr. Moss of West Virginia, designed to annul the repeal measure entirely, and leave American vessels exempted.

The president is expected to sign the measure Monday. It was just a little more than three months ago that he addressed the house and senate in joint session, urgently asking for repeal of the exemption clause, that the nation might keep its treaty obligations.

Speaker Clark was out of the city yesterday, but he and Vice President Marshall will attach their signatures today and send the bill to the White House.

NO REST FOR DETECTIVES

Have Plenty to Do In Hunting For "Wild Women" In London

London, June 13.—Scotland Yard is hunting a tall woman in black, who is believed to have exploded a bomb beside the famous coronation chair with its ancient stone of Scone, in Edward the Confessor's chapel of Westminster abbey.

The arson squad of the militants continued its depredations on church property by setting fire to Chipstead church. The altar and pews were smeared with tar and petroleum, and the torch was applied to three different places.

All of the interior of the church was burned. Suffrage posters were scattered about the building.

Another secret meeting place of the militants was raided by the police yesterday. The house is situated in Camden Hill square. Detectives swooped down upon the building, seized a number of documents and books, but did not arrest any of the women.

FEARS FOR BALLOONISTS

At Least Two Racers Known to Have Met With Disaster

Portland, Ore., June 13.—A carrier pigeon arrived here with this message from the balloon Million Population Club:

"Balloon struck by lightning. Berry hurt. Come quick. Morrison."

The message did not say where the balloon had descended. John Berry was piloting the balloon. George Y. Morrison was his passenger.

Lack of previous information regarding the three balloons—Kansas City III.; Million Population Club and Springfield—which left here late Thursday in a race under the auspices of the Aero Club of America, caused apprehension. The fact that the fourth balloon, Uncle Sam, was driven to earth in a storm which wrecked it and endangered the lives of its occupants, led to fears that the others might have met disaster.

The prevailing winds were from the northwest and it is possible the gas bags crossed the Cascade range. Each balloon carried a pilot and a passenger.

Officials here are absolutely at sea where to look for the wrecked balloon and its injured pilot. The balloon may have alighted many miles from a habitation.

BROTHERS ARE HELD ON MURDER CHARGE

Youngsters Said to Have Strangled a Boy to Death

Presque Isle, Me., June 13.—Two small boys, Louis and Herbert Cote, were arrested and will be given a preliminary hearing on the charge of murder, on account of the death of Hartley Webb, 11 years of age, who, with a companion, Victor Porter, was attacked while fishing.

The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that Webb died of strangulation at the hands of the Cote brothers by shoestrings tied about his neck.

Porter, aged 13, who testified that he was also bound and nearly strangled, was the principal witness.

Louis Cote's age is 14 years, and that of his brother Herbert 9.

AUXILIARY DENOUNCED

Hot Time at Entertainment of Daughters of Veterans

The auxiliary to the Sons of Veterans was denounced by John Pierson of Braintree, treasurer of the Norfolk County Asociates and a prominent Grand Army man, at the entertainment of Rebecca Wiswell tent, No. 53, Daughters of Veterans, in Grand Army hall Friday evening.

The unexpected attack created consternation among those present, many of whom were affiliated with the auxiliary. Mr. Pierson charged that the auxiliary was unpatriotic and mercenary and affirmed that its members had been of but little assistance to the Grand Army veterans.

Mr. Pierson was not interrupted but at the conclusion of his tirade the members of the auxiliary jumped to their feet and soundly criticised his action. Their stalwart defense of the organization was roundly cheered by those present.

The entertainment was held to raise money to pay the expenses of the Grand Army delegates to the annual encampment. Nearly 75 were present. A supper was served at 6.30 under the direction of a committee headed by Mrs M. Christine Flynn.

The entertainment program included songs by Dr. C. M. Marstin, "The little bronze button" and "We are going down to Gettysburg," and by Miss Ruth Packard, speaking by Past Commander George Phillips of the Grand Army, and a sketch by Bert and Lillian Reed. "A Double Deception," a one act sketch was given by Miss Ella Packard, Miss Edna Grignon, Mrs. Exelis Nason, Lester Porter and Frank Chubuck.

STEVEDORES STRIKE.

The stevedores employed at Fallon's wharf went on strike Friday modning when their employer did not grant them an increase in wages. The men are receiving 30 cents and demanded 35. Their suspension tied up things in general. There were 20 men affected by the strike and at the time it was called they were loading lighters with stone. An attempt to secure strikebreakers in Boston proved unsuccessful.

CASH WANTED FOR FOURTH

Some Generous Contributions Already Made

In order to make the Fourth of July celebration the success which has marked the celebrations for the past few years, it means a large amount of work, but most of all, what is needed to carry out the program as arranged, is money. The collectors in the different wards of the city, outside of Ward Six, which has a celebration of its own, are hard at work and they will give the city a combing for funds such at is has never had before. It is not expected that any funds will be appropriated by the city this year so that the sum of nearly $1,000 derived from this source in other years will have to be made up from voluntary contribution.

The committee have laid out a fine program for the day, and in order to carry it out in all of its details, fully $2,000 will be needed, especially so if the crew of a battleship are to be entertained.

Word has been received from Senator Lodge, that if possible a battleship will be assigned to Quincy waters that day, and this feature alone has always proved a great incentive to citizens to contribute. Usually the Mayor has acted as chairman of the reception committee, and has received the officers of the battleship. This year however, owing to illness, Mayor Miller has said that he can not serve in that capacity, and the association has elected President Whiton of the City Council as chairman of the reception committee, and the genial Joe can be depended upon to furnish the necessary dignity to the occasion.

The program, as outlined, will include a morning parade, to be followed by sports at Merrymount park, and in the afternoon theatre parties for the children in City Square, and probably Houghs Neck and on the Wollaston boulevard.

In the evening there will be a grand display of fireworks at Merrymount Park. This feature, as in other years is in charge of George F. Elcock, and the reputation of other years, of the city having one of the best displays in the state, will be repeated. Several new features in the way of set pieces will be introduced this year.

As said before, however, funds are needed to make the affair a success, and this should be born in mind when the authorized collector comes around for your contribution . Every little helps, and the more collected, the more the committee will have to expend on the celebration.

That a celebration at home is a good thing for the city has been fully demonstrated, for in the year that the city has celebrated the fire loss has been reduced to a minimum, accidents have been very few and far between, and the arrests for drunkenness and crime have been very few; last year one arrest only being made. This is a record hard to beat, and is a good thing for the city, when it is remembered that the night before has been marked with rows of various kinds, and many arrests, dozens of fire alarms, many of which have been false alarms, when no celebration of any kind was held. It should be an incentive for the City Council as well as citizens in general to encourage by their contributions.

INMATES CALLED

he could pass an examination, he said. "Anyway I am not a believer in civil service." When asked if he had told Mr. Green about Mr. Vaughn's ability to figure he said he had told everyone in town.

Q—Yon helped make out lists?

A—Yes, as a High school graduate would.

Q—Mr. Vaughn kind of relied on you to do some of the work?

A—Yes, and I tried to save money for the city.

Q—And in your work you served the city well?

A—Yes, on my part.

Q—Do you know of Mr. Vaughn finding fault with you?

A—I don't know. You couldn't tell. Sometimes fault was found when a person's back was turned.

The witness then explained that instead of making out the annual report for Mr. Green he had totalled the value of the aid given outside poor which baskets he took care of.

THOMAS COOPER.

Thomas Cooper testified that Mr. Vaughn was always in a fighting mood and that Mrs. Vaughn was a very bold woman. He said she was hard to please.

His cross examination developed that there had been some talk between Mr. Cooper and Mrs. Vaughn relative to his taking a bath. He firmly denied he had ever objected to taking one, and that he did when asked to do so. When asked if Mrs. Vaughn ever gave him any trouble, he said that if she did he kept it to himself.

WILLIAM ISAAC.

William Isaac, for 17 years an inmate, said it is much quieter there now. There is not so much bullying around he said although everybody got it for nine years. Nothing ever was right and tongue thrashing was the regular order.

He said he had worked at the new City Hall, and in cross examination said it was voluntary on his part, and that broken boxes and other things were picked up by him and brought to the almshouse to be used for kindling wood.

He said he never heard Mr. Vaughn use much profanity toward inmates, but he often heard him say, "I will knock your block off." He told about cider being made from apples and wine from grapes, and when counsel McAnarney asked if he got any of it, he laughed heartily and finally said, "I guess not." He said the discipline was sometimes fair and sometimes rough, and that Mrs. Vaughn would not permit inmates to talk at the table.

In his direct testimony Mr. Isaac told of pork going bad, and with no hesitancy he told Counsel McAnarney it occurred when Fred Green was overseer.

When asked if any of the inmates were hard to control, he said Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn would keep the pot boiling:

Q—Since Mayor Miller and Overseer Perry Green came, has it been a place fit to live in?

A—It was a pretty bad place when Fred Green run it, and James Elcock stopped a lot of what went on.

Q—Did you know that Dr. Bartlett had instructed Mr. Vaughn to hold down John Wrenn and not let him run the house?

A—I do not know, sir.

When Mr. Isaac finished Overseer Green remarked that he was a paid inmate, but the witness expressed surprise at hearing it and asked how long it had been so. Although anxious to ask a string of questions he was obliged to leave the stand without the desired information.

PHILIP GREEN.

Philpi Green, aged 64, said he did general work including washing. He said he had washed white coats, and aprons, and on one occasion had washed a woman's collar. These articles he said were never used at the almshouse. He said he was obliged to work and for a long time his shoes had no soles on them, and that no notice was taken of his complaint.

In cross examination he said the language of Mr. Vaughn was not profane. He did speak loudly, he said, and always furiously rung the bell when he wanted the inmates. He said he did not know Mr. Vaughn tried to get shoes from Perry Green.

Q—Did Dr. Bartlett ever examine you? No, sir.

Q—Were you aware that he said you were capable of doing eight or ten hours work?

A—No, sir.

Counsel McAnarney then submitted a list from Dr. Bartlett, which stated the physical condition of inmates, and how long they could work in his opinion without injuring themselves. This was marked "Exhibit 1."

MRS. ELLEN DEADY.

Mrs. Ellen Deady said Mr. Vaughn refused to honor an order from the office of the overseer and her son returned home crying. An attempt was made to introduce the reason but Counsel McAnarney objected and was upheld. Mrs. Deady said that the goods were delivered next day by Mr. Vaughn.

Q—Outside of the boy making the complaint, every action toward you was proper and all right?

A—Yes, sir.

HENRY DWELLE.

Henry Dwelle said he had been called everything but a gentleman, and that he has been given but one pair of shoes in two years. He said John Wrenn practically run the place the last two years.

HARRY NURSE.

Harry Nurse said he had left the place after Mr. Vaughn had sworn at him and never wanted to go back.

In cross examination he said he planned to leave about the time he claimed to have been sworn at. He said he saw John Reed, the blind man trying to rake up the yard.

THOMAS PHELAN.

Thomas Phelan, over 60, an inmate three years, said moulded bread was served at the table, and that on May 5, last year, he noticed an unpleasant smell coming from the table. He said he found afterward it was poor hamburger steak. He said one day after things had gone wrong, Mr. Vaughn shrieked "is this place going to be run by me or the damn paupers?" He further said that he had been sent out, in winter weather, wearing poor shoes, to put up the horse and that Mr. Vaughn said he would have done it himself but he would dirty his new coat.

In cross examination he said Mr. Vaughn appeared to be very sorry for feeling obliged to have him do it, and that he spoke very feelingly too.

OTHER WITNESSES.

Patrick Glynn, a former inmate, now of the Sailors' Snug Harbor, said while there he had poor shoes but heard no abusive language.

Patrick Maddigan testified that one day Mr. Vaughn told him he ate too much, and that hardly a day passed without all getting a call down.

In cross examination he said he had refused to harness a horse and did so finally because he was afraid he would be sent to Bridgewater.

William Rouleau, an employee of the Board of Health, said he saw Vaughn shaking an inmate and at a distance of about 40 feet heard him swearing at others.

Frank Sandblom, an employee of the Board of Health, admitted in cross examination that he sometimes worked on holidays. He testified that he saw Mr. Vaughn shake his fist in a man's face and threaten to fix him.

Kilrain's Sued Railroad for Crescent Avenue Accident

Two suits brought by Elizabeth F. Kilrain of Somerville and by her husband, John J. Kilrain, better known as "Jake Kilrain," the famous prize fighter, the first for $50,000 for personal injuries and the second for $25,000 for consequential damages, against the New Haven road, were settled out of court Friday. The jury before Judge Lawton in the Suffolk Superior court had been empaneiled and taken to view.

Mrs. Kilrain was one of those injured in the wreck of the West Quincy train near Crescent avenue on Aug. 8 1912. She alleges her spine was broken. The terms of settlement were not made public but judgment of $1 for the plaintiffs will be entered.

Mrs. Kilrain is the mother of the wife of Dr. John T. Reynolds and is well known here. She was found in the debris after the wreck. For many weeks she was a patient at the home of Dr. Reynolds and has never recovered from the effects of the wreck.

The suit of Julia A. Minchin against the Bay State Street Railway before Judge Dana in the Norfolk Superior Court at Dedham has been taken from the jury and settled in favor of the plaintiff by agreement.

Evidence is being introduced in the suit of Mattie Mikkonen vs Harry Nicoll et al. The suit is to recover $5000 damages for personal injuries sustained July 10 1912 while at work in the defendent's granite yard and due to the parting of a rope used in hoisting and moving stone, allowing the plaintiff to fall against a stone or stones.

GLOWING TRIBUTES TO OLD GLORY

Flag Day Observed by Elks With Public Exercises at Kincaide Theatre

Addresses by Col. Kincaide and Col. Skelton

Seldom has there been paid a more glowing tribute to Old Glory, than on Sunday afternoon at the Flag day exercises of Quincy lodge of Elks. The observance took place at Kincaide's theatre before a large audience which included the Grand Army; Sons of Veterans; Spanish War Veterans, Boy Scouts; a detachment from Co. K. 5th Regiment of Hingham; the Woman's Relief Corps, Ladies' auxiliary and Daughters of Veterans.

The exercises opened with a selection by Wilson's orchestra at the close of which the curtain was raised disclosing a lodge room setting on the stage with the officers of the lodge at their several stations. On either side of the front of the stage was a large American flag, while in the frontwing on either side of the stage was a stack of smaller flags, and across the front a row of potted plants.

The program opened with the ritual service of the lodge by the officers headed by Exalted Ruler John Hildebrand, followed by a prayer by Chaplain C. P. Gould, and response, "Hear our Prayer" by the Temple quartet.

HISTORY OF FLAG.

Col. Henry L. Kincaide, a member of the Quincy lodge, gave a history of the flag, which was made all the more realistic, as the setting of the back of the stage was a group of all the various flags of this country from the very beginning down to the adoption of the stars and stripes. The first flag or banner he said was white, simple, yet expressive of the hope and aspirations of the men to loyalty. The first Roman flag had an eagle as an emblem, but the first American flag did not appear until 1707 which was the Colonial flag with a green tree on a white field. The flag of 1775 had thirteen alternate stripes, and on June 14, 1777, came the National flag of thirteen stripes and thirteen stars which was designed by Betsy Ross and declared by Congress to be the flag of the country. In 1795 two stripes and two stars were added and in 1818 the number of stripes was reduced to thirteen with a star for each state. At this time the stars were re-arranged. The red in the flag signified defiance to all forms of oppression; the blue, fidelity.

To the traveler in a foreign country the sight of the stars and stripes sends a thrill through the heart. The order of Elks is doing much to inculcate patriotism. America has never struck its colors proving that our cause was a just one.

It was fiting that we should contemplate for a minute what that flag represents. It represents fair play and equal justice to all and enforces respect wherever it waves. Col. Kincaide then spoke briefly of the different

HEARING CONTINUED

Several Witnesses Heard in Vaughn Case

All kinds of profanity was injected into the testimony of witnesses this morning at the continuation of the hearing on the removal of William Vaughn as keeper of the almshouse before Perry Green overseer of the poor. Mayor Miller was present.

The few spectators left when the circus parade passed through City Square and the noise of the bands caused a slight interruption.

The witnesses called were John P. Devaney, James P. Flanagan, Jeremiah Connolly and Christopher Foy. William Taylor, Charles Foster, John Jones and Hugh P. Tracy were not present to testify.

City Solicitor Pinkham conducted the hearing for the administration and Counsel McAnarney for the defense asked to have many objections noted in the records.

The hearing adjourned at noon and was resumed at one o'clock. The defense witnesses may be heard this afternoon.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

Manchester Unity Odd Fellows Decora'e Graves

Granite lodge, I. O. O. F., M. U., held its annual memorial services Sunday afternoon and decorated the graves of deceased members with handsome floral remembrances. The lodge since its institution has draped its charter 31 times.

The services were in St. Mary's cemetery, where 19 are interred, and were conducted by Past Grand Cornelius M. Driscoll. A delegation of members visited Milton, Calvary and Mt. Wollaston cemeteries. In the latter the grave of John Green who was a member of Green Mountain lodge of Barre, Vt., was decorated.

During the last year the lodge has lost one member, Charles Rossi, through death. All who participated in the services gathered at Hibernian hall, West Quincy, and marched from there to the cemetery. Noble Grand Charles Lefavor headed the line.

☞A. H. Dunham and his newsboys at Houghs Neck now sell the Daily Ledger. It will be delivered at the cottages in the afternoon.

MEMORIAL SUNDAY OF ODD FELLOWS

Rev. M. C. Ward of Universalist Church Gives Address on Sympathy

Appollo Quartet Assist With Appropriate Hymns

Seldom have the Odd Fellows responded in larger numbers than on Sunday at the union memorial services of Mt. Wollaston lodge, Manet encampment and George L. Gill Rebekah lodges held at the First Universalist church. It was the first time also that Mt. Wollaston lodge has carried a flag in parade, a beautiful new silk flag having recently been purchased.

The Memorial day proclamation of the grand master of the Grand lodge was read by Noble Grand William S. Esau. The necdologic address for members of Mt. Wollaston lodge was given by Noble Grand Esau. Four well known Quincy brothers have passed away during the past year, and he briefly sketched their lives and membership in the order. Charles L. Orne was a charter member and past grand, also a Civil war veteran and a government inspector. Joseph W. Hayden was also a Civil war veteran, and later chief of police. Newman A. Savage came to Quincy from Maine and joined the order soon after the lodge was nistituted, Napoleon B. Furnald joined Oct. 12, 1886, and always resided in Quincy, becoming prominent as a detective and constable.

Mrs. Sadie Wood noble grand of George L. Gill Rebekah lodge gave the necrologic address for the five members of her lodge. Miss Lauretta V. Lowe was a member less than two years but much interested. N. B. Furnald was a charter member. Mrs. Emma Lark and Joseph W. Hayden became members at institution, and Mary E. Stebbins joined in 1908. Mrs. Wood had a tribute for each and closed with a poem.

The address of the day was by the pastor Reev. Merrill C. Ward who paid a tribute to the worth of Odd Fellowship and the beauty and fitness of the memorial custom. He took up the story of the Good Samaritan, as illustrating sympathy. Pity is one person tugging at a heavy load and another person looking on. Sympathy is two hearts tugging together at the same load.

The robber spirit still exists. Graft in the State House, idling of paid workers, watering of stock, all these illustrate the robber spirit ready to "take advantage" of others. The Ten Commandments are all laws of nature also. "Only the golden rule of life can bring the golden age of man" was the dying message of Frances Willard.

All lives need sympathy, even those who hide behind cold hard faces. All have sufferings and disappointments. Napoleon as a young man was saved from a suicide's grave by the sympathy of Demasis.

Lack of sympathy between employer and employed causes strikes and loss. Lack of sympathy causes wars between nations, unworthy divisions of neighbors, and divides families. Selfishness creates unrest, while sympathy gives strength and stability to business and society.

The Samaritan illustrates Christ's own sympathy. You can always give something of great value in real sympathy. Social service means an effort to make the Jericho road safe for people to travel. Love is the greatest thing in the world and sympathy is the practical expression of love.

The addresses were interspersed with hymns by the Apollo quartette, including "Lead kindly light," "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," "Rock of Ages" and "Nearer My God to Thee." The services closed with the singing of the memorial hymn, "When the mists have rolled away," all uniting.

The lodges then marched back to Odd Fellows hall, and the memorial wreaths were taken to the graves of departed members.

ENJOY PICNIC AT MERRYMOUNT

The annual picnic of the First Parish Sunday School was held Saturday afternoon at Merrymount Park and was largely attended by the children as well as by many of the parents and friends of the school. During the first part of the afternoon there was a series of sports for the young people, which included running races for the boys and girls, etc., for which ribbons were given the winners.

The great event of the afternoon however was the game of ball between the men and the boys which resulted in the men being put to flight to the tune of 10 to 6. The game was full of brilliant plays and the umpires Paul R. Blackmur and F. H. Breslyn found it no easy job to render decisions that were satisfactory to both nines. The line-up of the two nines was as follows:

BOYS	MEN
J. Pfaffmann, p	G. E. Pfaffmann, p
P. Blackmur, c	Harry W. Porter, c
Karl Pfaffmann, 1	Harry W. Slade 1
H. H. Faxon, 2	Frederick Simpson, 2
Richard Blackmur, 3	Arthur Hall, 3
Kenneth Edwards, ss	Harold Davenport, ss
Willard Crocker, lf	Charles A. Price, lf
William Edwards, cf	Brooks Keyes, cf
Richard Davis, rf	W. A. Bradford, rf

Some of the mens team were old time ball twirlers, yet they were hardly a match for the younger athletes The game was replete with brilliant plays, but the victory of the boys was largely due to errors rather than to hits. After the game ice cream and tonics were served and there was a basket lunch.

Young Men's Styles Rule the Roost This Week

Copyright 1914 The House of Kuppenheimer

IN matters of clothes style, the young fellow always dictates—he never arbitrates or mediates with the mediocre. Fantastic fol-de-rols which are often offered as "clever style" he laughs out of court. Neither does he tolerate styles so straight-laced that they lean backward.

The reason why This Store is clothes headquarters for the young brigade is that we've caught the swing of the youthful spirit—we initiate where others imitate—create ideas that are six months new while others are copying ideas that are six months old.

This week we've mobilized a showing of young men's styles from the HOUSE OF KUPPENHEIMER — styles that look ahead, not backward. Here you find all the new summer fabrics — serges, worsted and tweeds — cut and tailored with the usual KUPFENHEIMER originalty.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

When President Wilson calls for a lot of newspapers this week, it is probably because he wants to see what the graduating essayists think about Mexico.

The Sunday Schools are adjourning for the summer. The pupils couldn't walk a half mile to the church as it would interfere with their three mile tramp to the swimming hole.

The fellow who walks up to the hotel register with rice dropping out of his coatsleeves never finds fault if the rate is a dollar or two more than usual.

The young men graduates do not ordinarily take great pains with their commencement clothes, but they should not forget to oil their hair.

When the back-yard kid players put a ball through the kitchen window, they are allowed a home run as a reward.

WATER RECEIPTS.

Should the City Council decide that it would be good policy to require each city department to pay the Water department for all water used, it is doubtful if it could put the same into effect, as an appropriation would be necessary, and the same must be raised within the $12 limit for current city expenses. When the annual city appropriations were voted in March this limit was exhausted and all this talk about supplementary budget seems like barking up the wrong tree.

The Water department should be put upon a paying basis without taxing the other city departments. Something is wrong when the water receipts decrease instead of increase. With the activity in building in the city, and the large number of new water takers each year there should be an increase in water receipts each year of nearly $5,000.

Commissioners of Public Works have told the people in their annual reports that extensions of mains would prove a most profitable investment to the city, but facts do not seem to prove it. They also told us that when meters were installed the leakage from house fixtures would prove a source of profit to the city, but figures show there is little or no increase in water receipts.

Because of leakage from water mains, not one-half of the water which is supplied to the city is actually sold, so that the cost per gallon to the city is really much more than usually estimated.

The fact is, probably, that considerable water for manufacturing purposes is now sold by the city below cost. Hence the inability to increase water receipts in the aggregate. Then our water debt and interest are too large, and require excessive annual payments. All water sold by meter, whether for manufacturing or house use, should be at one rate per 1000 gallons. Then it would not be necessary to raise $1 per $1000 by taxation and the tax rate would be $1 lower. Now a man with land valued at $1000 has to pay a water tax of $1; if he happens to have land valued at $5000 he pays $5 and if $10,000 he pays $10. Why should a land owner pay a water tax?

LAWN PARTY AND CABARET

Double Attractions at St. Chrysostom's Rectory

The vestry of St. Chrysostoms church held a lawn party Saturday afternoon and evening on the rectory grounds, all profits to be devoted to the parish house fund. There were things to interest everybody, as attractions of all kinds dotted the grounds.

Mrs. Walter E. Burke laid bare the future to all who crossed her palm with coin. Mrs. Theodore Parker presided at a gypsy pot which was filled with grabs. At the candy table were Gladys E. Parlee, Marion E. Orr, Dorothy Leech, Irene M. Coleman, and Miss Elsie A. Whitehead sold delicious punch. At the ice ice cream table were George J. Poch and George Horte.

Dinah dolls were looked after by Lawrence Wetmore and George Vibert. The shooting gallery was in charge of George E. Allen and Henry B. Barham, and auto rides by Theodore Parker. This was a feature enjoyed by many. The automobiles were loaned by Arthur Irving, Henry W. Kolstad, J. Willard Hallett and Miss Nellie M. Weeks.

A number of swings were greatly appreciated by the youngsters Mr. Macaroni furnished hurdy gurdy music during the entire show. John W. Atkins saw to it that all had tickets.

An exceptionally good cabaret show was given in the rectory during the evening by the Girls Friendly society. Mr. Bond of the Boston Globe gave a fine out door illustrated talk, relating adventures of getting distant or dangerous or difficult pictures for the paper at quickest possible time.

Mrs. William Klingenhagen, and Mrs. J. Willard Hallett were in charge of the children's supper table.

An excellent supper including lobster salad was in charge of members of the Womans Guild which included Mrs. Daniel C. Miller the president, Mrs. George J. Poch, Mrs. Frederick L. Bent, Mrs. William J. Croucher, Mrs. Edwin J. Coleman, Mrs. Benjamin Hobson, Mrs. Herbert H. Albee, Mrs. Alfred J. Fox, Mrs. Percy L. Davidson, Mrs. Herbert C. Lowe, L. Theodore Parlee, Mrs. Ellis M. McTear.

RECEPTION TO CARL BASTIN

Past President of Skandia Lodge, Vasa Orden

The members of Lodge Skandia, Vasa Orden, tendered Carl Bastin, past president, a monster reception in Electa hall on Saturday evening and presented him with a purse of gold.

President Carl Bonivier, in making the presentation said the reception and gift was in recognition of the progress made by the order under the direction of Mr. Bastin.

The guests of the evening included District Deputy Mrs. Eva Holmbers of Brockton, President Carl Frank of Klippan lodge of Boston, representatives from the Grand lodge and many friends.

A short musical program consisted of songs by Otto Olson, Richard Collins and William E. Pinel and dancing was enjoyed until midnight, music being furnished by the lodge orchestra. Refreshments were served in Protection hall.

The committee, headed by President Carl Bonivier, was Bernard Ericson, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hager, Mr. and Mrs. Anton Nelson, Eric Skoglund, William Anderson and Mrs. Carl Bonivier.

ANNUAL MINSTREL SHOW.

The second annual minstrel show of the Squantum Improvement association will be held in the Squantum Inn on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. All the preliminary work has been completed and it looks as if the show would be the best ever.

The main dining hall of the Inn will be used for the show. A stage 24 by 8 feet has been erected. The object of the show is to raise money for the mosquito fund of the association. It will require $55 to spray all the stagnant pools about Squantum marshes during the summer months. It is believed that even more than this amount will be raised by the minstrel show.

BATHING SEASON IS OPENED

The bathing season got its official start in this city on Saturday with the opening of the bathhouse at the Ward Two playground Quincy Point. Several hundred took advantage of the afternoon tide, most of them boys and girls, and Sunday many adults from various parts of the city took their first dip of the season.

John Starr commenced his tenth season as custodian of the bath house. Assisting him is Miss Evelyn Moriarty and Edward Berman. A life boat and several preservers are on shore but a telephone, a necessary connection in case of drowning and accidents has not been provided.

One has never been installed because in the opinion of Park Commissioners it was unnecessary expense. Public opinion strongly favors one this year.

FUNERAL SERVICES.

Christ church was crowded Sunday afternoon at the services for Adeline H. McDowell, a member of the freshmen class at Boston University. Her funeral was held from the home of her parents, Thomas J. and Martha McDowell on Quincy street. Many friends were in the procession to the church. Included in the floral remembrances were tributes from friends of this city and other places. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

The funeral of George Walker, a prominent granite cutter of this city, who died Friday after a long illness, was held from his home at 12 Maine street, Sunday afternoon. Present at the services was a delegation of 60 members of Clan MacGregor an many members of the Quincy branch of the Granite Cutters International Association, with both of which he was affiliated. Services were conducted by Rev. J. A. Matheson of the First Presbyterian church and music was by the choir of the Clan. The body was escorted to Mt. Wollaston cemetery by clansmen and granite cutters. The floral remembrances were profuse. Mr. Walker leaves his wife and nine children.

The funeral of John, beloved husband of Mary McDonald, was held Sunday afternoon from his home at 3 Revere street and was largely attended. Services were held in St. Mary's church by Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy who this morning said a high mass of requiem for the repose of his soul. So many were the floral remembrances that a landau was required to carry them to St. Mary's cemetery where interment took place. Mr. McDonald was a blacksmith by trade and a long time resident of West Quincy. He was a member of St. Francis court, M. C. O. F. Besides his wife he leaves two daughters, Cassie and Ruth, and three sons, Roderick, Fred and William.

The funeral of Reuben Chapman, an aged Wollaston resident, was held from his home on Pine street Sunday afternoon and was largely attended. Services were conducted by Rev. Isaiah W. Sneath of the Wollaston Cangregational church. The body was taken to Malden for burial.

SEVERELY BURNED.

William Farley, 28, an employee at the Fore River shipyard, is at his home on Washington street, Weymouth, suffering from severe burns received when gasoline exploded on his motor boat on Friday evening. He is resting comfortably.

Farley and a companion were working on the engine of the boat, which was moored near the power station, on the Fore river, East Braintree, when the explosion occured. He was badly burned about the face and hands.

His companion carried him to the Home for Aged Women on Quincy avenue and a nurse rendered him first aid and put pitkin oil on the burns. Dr. James V. Cook was called and removed him to his home.

It is thought that the fumes from the gasoline became pocketed and ignited from a lighted lantern.

QUINCY VIEWS.

Some idea of what Quincy has in the way of industries, as well as in the way of private residences and pretty views, may be seen at the exhibition of local views now at the Thomas Crane Public Library. The views shown, some 36 in number, are the work of C. Willis Garey, and have all been taken within the past few weeks. There is probably no amateur photographer who is doing better work than this young man, who has made it a special study for the past few years. The exhibition is one well worthy of special mention and should be seen by all interested in the growth and development of the city.

BOMB EXPLODES IN OLD CHURCH

Militants Endeavor to Blow Up St. George's In London

WINDOWS AND PEWS SMASHED

Famous Painting In Ancient Edifice In Which Roosevelt and Asquith Were Married Is Not Damaged—Services In St. Paul's Interrupted by Suffragettes Chained to Pews

London, June 15.—A bomb was exploded in St. George's church, Hanover square, last night. There is evidence to show that the explosion was the work of suffragettes, and coming so close upon the bomb outrage in Westminster abbey, the desecration of this famous edifice has increased alarm as to how far the militant women intend to go.

The caretaker of St. George's had locked the church after a careful inspection on the conclusion of the evening service. A few minutes after 10 o'clock a passerby heard an explosion and summoned the fire brigade. The firemen found the church filled with a dense white smoke. Three pews in the north aisle and three stained windows were damaged by the explosion, while a pew immediately in front of the lecterne was blown down.

Fortunately the famous painting of The Last Supper by Sir James Thornhill, which hangs over the altar, was not damaged, although the windows above it were splintered. The firemen found a square tin box and several pieces of candle in the overthrown pew and a member of the congregation said the pew was occupied at the evening service by a woman in a checked dress. An envelope was found in the church on which was written: "A protest against the torture of women."

St. George's church was built in 1713-24. It has long been a favorite church for fashionable weddings. Premier Asquith was married in this church in 1894, and ex-President Roosevelt was married there in 1886.

While the judges of the high courts and the lord mayor were attending services in St. Paul's cathedral yesterday, according to the annual custom, several suffragettes interrupted with protests against the torturing of women. The service was delayed several minutes while two women who were chained to seats were removed. As they were carried out they shouted: "God save Mrs. Pankhurst!"

A crowd yesterday afternoon overran a platform in Hyde Park, where a militant flag was raised, before four men who were holding a meeting were able to begin their speeches. The police with difficulty got the men to the station for protection. Two meetings in Hyde Park of non-militant suffragette organizations were broken up and it required a strong police force to quell the disturbances.

Those responsible for the explosion of the bomb in St. George's church have not been traced, and Scotland Yard is just as much at sea as in the case of previous outrages of a similar nature.

QUEEN MAY QUIT LONDON

"Furies" Drive Her to Condition of Nervous Apprehension

London, June 15.—Queen Mary has decided, in case of further suffrage demonstrations in the vicinity of royalty, to quit London and leave King George to finish the season alone, according to a source in close touch with the court and the government.

The queen is represented as being in a condition of nervous apprehension. She, it is said, has no intention of allowing her existence to be made unhappy by those she habitually calls the "furies."

Should the queen be forced to carry her threat into execution the step will create an unparalleled social sensation.

CUPID'S NEW RECORD

Big Demand For Marriage Licenses Continues at Boston

Boston, June 15.—Records for the number of applications for marriage licenses at the city's registry of marriages were again broken last week when City Registrar McGlenen recorded 315 applications. The preceeding week the total number was 316.

From the beginning of the year the total number of applications was 4446 against 3995 for the corresponding period of last year, making a gain thus far this year of 451 applications.

All of the delegates were in uniform and there were sixty-five brass bands to furnish sacred music. In all fifty-four different races were represented.

MANY REPORTS ARE READY

City Council Anxious to Have a Vacation

A regular meeting of the City Council is scheduled for this evening and will doubtless be followed by several special meetings between this evening and the regular meeting July 6, on which evening the Council hopes to be able to adjourn for the summer season. Several committee meetings have been held since the last regular meeting and several of the committees have practically acted upon all matters that have been referred to them, which means that a large number of reports will be received at the Monday night meeting. Between thirty and forty or more matters will be reported upon, which will include reports from the Finance, Street, Public Buildings and License committees. As it will be the first reading of most of these matters it is not expected that there wil be much or any debate.

Whether the Mayor will comply with the request of the Council made at the last meeting to send a supplementary budget, is not known, but it is reported about City Hall that he will not do so, in which event it is more than probable that the Council may take matters into their own hands, as they have a right to do, under authority granted by the new act of the legislature passed last year, and put in a supplemenary budge.

The one important matter in the Council calendar is the order appropriating $6,300 for granolithic sidewalks in the different sections of the city, which wil probably be passed without debate.

Among Our Churches

BETHANY CONGREGATIONAL.

Nineteen children were christened at the Sunday morning service at Bethany church, when Children's day and Flag day was observed. The program was in charge of Supt. Hayward of the Bible school and was almost wholly by the children. The choir loft was occupied by the children's chorus, which sang "We march to victory" as the Beginners and Primary department marched in escorted by the Knights of King Arthur and boys from the Intermediate and Junior departments. The Primary department was seated on the platform and made a pretty scene with the floral decorations. Considerable of the church was reserved for the Bible school and the church was filled to its capacity.

About midway in the program the parents with children to be christened entered by the centre aisle and were received in front of the desk by Rev. B. A. Willmott, the pastor. After each child was christened, Mrs. Fairvilla A. Branch, one of the deaconesses, presented each with a little bouquet of flowers. The children were:

Carrie Mae, daughter of Edward A. and Lucy M. Bohlken.

Helen Jane, daughter of Alexander N. and Agnes Marion Davidson.

George Theodore, son of George Theodore and Isabella Maria Gustafson.

Helen Baxter, daughter of Robert I. and Helen B. Hendry.

Etta May, daughter of Carl E. and Helen G. Holmes.

Ruth Anna, daughter of William F. and A. Louise Hussey.

Elizabeth Grant, daughter of James L. and Florence F. MacDonald.

James Tollend, son of James W. and Annie E. Mavers.

William Grover, son of William Grover and Gertrude Jilbert Nash.

Ida Mildred Evelyn, daughter of Peter A. and Ida M. Nelson.

Harry Edward, Carelton Halloweh and Wellington, children of Thomas H. and Alice J. Parsons.

Helen Lilian, daughter of George W. and Lilian M. Paulsen.

Nellie Elizabeth, daughter of George Alexander and Nellie Anita Thompson.

Walter Dickson, son of Walter B. and Mary E. Troup.

Norman Scott and Hazel Margaret, children of Andrew Duncan and Maggie Walker.

Ruth Alice, daughter of John Ellis and Amy Miller Williams.

The program of the day included responses, songs, Bible selections, choruses, readings, hymns, etc. It was the intention of the pastor to have spoken on the flag, but owing to the length of the program he postponed it until a later date. He spoke briefly, saying that the christening of the children dedicated their lives to Jesus. He urged parents to help the Sunday School in its work, by having the children prompt and regular in attendance.

The offertory was sung by the Cecillian quartette, and the program closed with "America."

It was announced that the annual picnic would be held June 30 at Glen Echo park.

The annual reception of Unity circle, Kings Daughters will be held Tuesday afternoon, from 3 to 5 in the chapel. As usual there will be an entertainment and light refreshments.

Sunday evening the pastor's subject was "Four fools," and singing was by the girls vested choir.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Sunday morning, the pastor, Rev. D. B. McLeod, preached from the text "With one accord in one place." In the evening he preached from Luke 22, 42, explaining what the Saviour must have meant by that request which has perplexed so many.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered at the evening service. Eight were admitted to communion, four of them on confession of faith and four by letter. The communion service, which was beautiful and impressive, was participated in by a large number; and was followed by the singing of the latter part of the 72d Psalm by the congregation to the tune of Coronation, as is the Presbyterian custom in the Highlands of Scotland and in the Canadian Provinces.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

This church was organized January 31, 1888 for the worship of God and the service of man in the spirit of Jesus Christ. The minister, Rev. Carl G. Horst, is ready and desirous to answer any calls that come within his province. You will confer a favor by making known to him any opportunity where he may be of service. Strangers and casual attendants are always welcome at our services and meetings and are invited to make themselves known to the hospitality committee or the minister.

The Book of Psalms was the subject of a helpful sermon by the pastor Sunday morning. "Blessed is the man," said Rev. Carl G. Horst, "that can say with all his heart and mind and soul and strength, the Lord is my shepherd; therefore I shall not want and need fear no evil, for my life is hid in God."

The parish committee has appointed G. Ernest Carr to fill the vacancy caused by the removal from town of Arthur W. Rohn. Mr. Carr has also been elected to take Mr. Rohn's place on the house committee of the church.

A special collection for the Fresh Air work of the Sunday School will be taken up in the church next Sunday morning.

Engagements of the auditorium or vestry by any of the allied societies in the church must be made through G. Ernest Carr, 311 Safford street.

June 21 will be observed as Children's Sunday. All parents, who wish to present children to receive the rite of baptism please notify the minister.

According to the custom, adopted several years ago, of presenting Bibles on Children's Sunday to the children that were baptized in our church ten years before, the following will receive Bibles, suitably inscribed, next Sunday morning in commemoration of their baptism—Frances Adams, Donald Cromwell, Collyer and Hope Robinson.

The members of the building committee of the new parish house to be erected this summer are: Charles T. Baker, Charles S. Adams, M. D., Roy Baker, John Merrill, D. M. D. and John Morgan.

The Isles of Shoals Unitarian summer meetings and Sunday School Institute will be held July 12 to 26.

The summer meetings at Andover, N. H., July 5 to 11, will be held in the buildings of Proctor Academy and the Unitarian church.

The Unitarian House at Chantauqua N. Y., will be open July 3 to August 30.

We recommend to the members and friends of our church not to purchase any copies of the hymn book now in use, as the church as soon as possible will vote to purchase the new hymnbook, one of the finest collections of hymns ever published.

WOLLASTON METHODIST.

Sunday was observed as Children's day at all the services. The pastor's sermon to the children being "Busy B's for boys and girls." Phyllis, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cornell and Harold, baby son of Mr. and Mrs. Cooper were baptized at this service by Rev. George M. Bailey. During the Sunday School hour special exercises were held for the Cradle Roll department, quite a number of the babies being present with their mothers.

At 6 o'clock the Sunday School concert was given, with recitations by Mildred Atwood, Gordon Ewertz, Myron Lane, Ruth Parker, Richard Scott, Maurice Raquet, Lilian Walters, Stanley Sutermeister, Ruth Proude, Mable McKiel, Louis Paul, William Thompson Lucile Belcher, Mildred Noyes, Ruth Cornell, Bertrice Thompson, Doris Miller and primary boys. There were also musical selections by the school and solos by Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook and little Miss Ione Higgins.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

"Children's Day" was observed at the Wollaston Baptist church on Sunday with appropriate exercises. There were various recitations by members from the Intermediate grades, and by the children in the Primary department. From the latter, showing that they had finished the work required and were now ready to enter the Intermediate department. There was special music by the choir. Mozart's "Gloria" and Stainer's "I am Alpha."

There were 382 present at the Sunday School session at 12.15, an increase of almost 50 over last year. The children were given plants, following a custom of long standing.

Charles M. Roach led the Christian Endeavor meeting at 6 in the chapel, subject—"How employers and employees should work together." The Juniors also attended this meeting, as their services have been discontinued for the summer.

A baptismal service was held at 7, two candidates receiving the rite. The choir sang, "Hark, hark my soul," and "God so loved the world," and there was special instrumental music.

PARK AND DOWNS.

Rev. William B. Ayers, pastor, delivered and exceedingly fine sermon at the Sunday morning service taking his text from St. Luke 10th chapter; "The sending and the return of the seventy." It was the first real test of the efficiency of the disciples. From a social or educational point of view they were but poor instruments upon which to found a kingdom.

Jesus gave his disciples no weapons and no money to build temples or to give alms but he taught them how to speak kind words and to do good deeds to forgive the sins of men and to help their weaknesses and to this day the outports of His kingdom advance and His missionaries encircle the world.

BUSY DAY IN COURT.

Upwards of fifty criminal cases occupied the attention of the district court this morning.

Rebekah Finkelman, who was arrested for violation of the liquor law at Quincy, was defaulted.

Edward Toland was fined $10 for violation of the auto law at Milton.

Mike John, David Gilman, Joseph Cariarty, Charles Kuriot, Louis Betsedt, George Solomon, Louis Shane, Alexander Modrisch, Zachary Daideski Joseph Yauinski, John Purpora, Walter Tiledeau, Edmund Ford, Soloman Hasson, Lewis Ferris, Louis Corriarty, Charles Josephs, Nicholas Kouri, George Kokouski, Andrew Hiluk and Mike Smith were arraigned for being present where gaming implements were found at Quincy, and Joseph Cariarty was arraigned for maintaining a gaming nuisance at Quincy.

While the case was being heard it developed that most of the evidence against the place was obtained by a man placed there for that purpose by the police. When he took the stand to testify he pointed out the different men he had played with in violation of the law, and as he gave name after name, the eyes of the arrested men began to bulge out and they were heard to be muttering to themselves. What they were saying was only known to those who understood their language, but it evidently was not complimentary to the witness testifying.

After the hearing Louis Betsedt, George Kokouski, Soloman Hassen, Walter Tiledeau, Mike John and Joseph Cariarty were held until June 19, for further hearing, and the remainder of the defendants were discharged.

TOM FOOL ERRAND.

It might have been the fellow who flew the bargain flag from City Hall or the fellow who sent three well known citizens to John Cavanagh's house for a conference over the commissionership for the police are all at sea when it comes to identifying the person who informed them that a base ball game was in progress at Houghs Neck at 5.15 Sunday morning Sergt. Larkin got the message from a person who gave the name of a representative man. He sent the auto with officers. Their search brought no results. Not even the natives were up, let alone chasing the small pin. An investigation is being made.

CONCERT AT ATLANTIC.

A very fine concert was given by the Sunday School in the Atlantic Memorial church on Sunday evening. The program which was in charge of Mrs. W. F. Cummings and Mrs. L. D. Gurney, included songs by the school, welcome by Earl Beeman, exercises by Primary department and others, recitations, anthems by the choir, remarks by pastor, distribution of flowers, etc., 32 numbers in all.

AMERICAN PLAN IS AGREED TO

First Protocol Tending to Peace In Mexico Is Signed

HUERTA ENTIRELY ELIMINATED

Action For Which United States Has Been Striving For Whole Year—Nothing to Which Constitutionalists Are Likely to Object—Provisional Presidency Next to Be Considered

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 13.—Delegates from the United States and the Huerta government formally affixed their signatures, in the presence of the mediating representatives of Argentine, Brazil and Chile, to the first protocol of the series through which it is hoped to restore peace in Mexico.

The agreement reached in relation to the manner of transferring the executive power from the hands of Huerta to the new provisional government stood the acid test of reduction to writing. It provides that:

"A government is to be constituted in Mexico of a character to be later provided, which shall be recognized by the United States on (date to be fixed), and which from that day forward shall exercise public functions until there shall be inaugurated a constitutional president."

This plank in the peace plan was protocolized after more than three weeks of discussion, in the last three days of which so serious a disagreement had arisen that the success of the entire mediation program was threatened. The brief protocol was significant of two things:

It makes no mention of General Huerta as the provisional president and it omits the method of transfer which the Mexican delegates and mediators suggested and to which the United States strenuously objected on the ground that its retention would be tantamount to recognition of the existing regime.

In the Mexican plan it was provided Huerta should name as minister of foreign affairs the man agreed upon here for provisional president; but the United States denied Huerta's right to exercise constitutional functions.

The omission of reference to the method of succession and the flat statement that on a certain date a provisional government shall arise in Mexico to which the United States will accord recognition satisfy the insistence of the American delegates that no steps should be taken that would be construed as a recognition of Huerta.

The Mexican delegates, on the other hand, while abandoning the constitutional form of succession as a part of the protocol, are satisfied because it does not specifically deny Huerta's right to name as minister of foreign affairs the man chosen here for provisional president if the latter sees fit to accept designation from him.

It is not considered probable that the new provisional president—since he is most likely to be a constitutionalist—would take the executive power directly from Huerta, but he might leave him in authority before the day arrives for the mediation-made government to take office.

The American delegates consider the method of transfer a closed incident. All parties are now concentrating on the second part of the peace plan, which will form another protocol. It relates to the name of the provisional president and possibly will include his cabinet of four. Names have not yet been suggested.

Though the protocol is composed of comparatively few words, it is the embodiment of that for which the United States has been striving for more than a year—the elimination of Huerta.

With the final statement by Huerta of his intention to withdraw when Mexico was politically pacified the protocol takes for granted that such a pacification will occur and arranges for the transition.

While the constitutionalists were not parties to the protocol there is nothing in it which they are likely to object, and if they are admitted to the conferences they may still attach their signatures to it. The question of constitutional representation, however, is still an open one.

The members of the mediation colony are united in optimistic spirit for the first time since the conferences opened. With one block laid and cemented firmly in place by the representatives of five governments, every one is hopeful that the work will prove to be the solid cornerstone from which the entire structure of the peace plan will rapidly arise.

The discharge of a cargo of ammunition at Tampico from the steamer Antilla without restraint from the United States did not please the Mexican delegates. They expressed approval, however, or the orders issued by President Wilson to the department of commerce which impose the embargo on exportations of arms to Mexico by sea just as it had been enforced on land by the treasury and war departments across the border line.

The fact that neither side will get arms while mediation is in progress is regarded by many as likely to bring the internal conflict to a quick conclusion through diplomatic channels.

FIRST CHURCH OF SQUANTUM

First Service on Newly Purchased Church Ground

A large congregation turned out Sunday to greet the Rev. F. E. Emrich, D. D., of Boston, when he preached at the First church of Christ in Squantum. It was the first service held on the church grounds since purchased by the church organization. The service was held on the spacious veranda of the former Vacation House which is being torn down and reconstructed for the first church in Squantum.

During his remarks Rev. Dr. Emrich recommended that the church be called the First Church of Christ in Squantum and this idea was cordially welcomed by the Rev. T. W. Davison, who is in charge of the church work in Squantum, and this name will be adopted.

The service opened with scripture reading and prayer by Rev. Mr. Davison, and a solo by Miss Jordine Davison, daughter of the pastor.

Rev. Mr. Emrich spoke of the rapid growth of Squantum and the needs of a church here. He spoke of the origin of church work, and said it meant to "gather." He spoke of the Pilgrims "gathering" at Plymouth and establishing the "First Church of Christ in Plymouth." Other pioneers gathered at various places and established "first churches."

He thought it a good idea for Squantum people to "gather" and form the First Church of Christ in Squantum. He said it need not be Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, or other demonination, but a meeting or gathering of all the people of whatever denomination, who looked upon Christ as their leader and Savior. He said that the people might not agree upon a thousand different minor details of religion, but as long as they loved Jesus Christ there was no reason why they could not "gather" in common for worship. The place is not large enough for denominational churches but it did need a church of some kind to lead in the religious work of the community.

He spoke of the great influence of church work for the good of a community. He referred to one city of 30,000 people where it was found that the hospitals, asylums, homes for the wayward, etc., were all supported by 300 residents of the city. Of this four hundred, three hundred and ninety were church members and 10 had been brought up in Christian homes. He said that this showed the influence and work done by active church members in a community. He said that community work should be "brotherhood life" and in this work a church should lead.

He spoke of the influence of Flag Day and said that the flag stood for peace, toleration and unity, and had brought to this country the largest measure of prosperity ever known by any single nation. He then spoke of the objects and aims of church work.

Plans of the new church were shown to the congregation and many looked over the building.

ST. JOHN'S WIN.

The Holy Name Society of St. Johns parish defeated the Norwoll Club of the Park and Downs Congregational church at the latter's field day at Highland Park Saturday afternoon. The score was 11 to 3. The game went seven innings and Swain secured 12 strikeouts.

The fielding feature of the game was Fay's running catch of a low liner in left field. The heavy hitter of St. John's was William Curtin whose stick work sent five runs over the plate. The score by innings:

St. Johns	1 0 0 6 1 2 1—11
Norwoll	2 0 0 0 1 0 0—3

Batteries—Swain and DiSenso; Franklin and Mullen.

QUINCY A. A. LOST.

Quincy A. A. lost to West Roxbury at Billings field Saturday afternoon, 7 to 3. Les Andrews pitched six innings and allowed eight hits. Pete Chapman of Williston Seminary took the box the rest of the game and allowed one.

Frank Hoyt and Bishop figured in a big league play in the sixth when Hoyt, scooped a grounded a few feet off first and drove it home fast enough to discourage a man attempting to score. Bishop returned the ball with lightning speed and threw out the runner. The score by innings:

W. Roxbury	0 2 1 0 0 3 1 0 x—7
Quincy	1 1 0 1 0 0 0 0 0—3

Batteries—Estelle and Jessau; Andrews, Chapman and Bishop.

DEFEAT FOR FORE RIVERS

United Shoe Take Lead in Manufactureres League

The United Shoe Machinery Co. beat the Fore Rivers at Beverly Saturday afternoon, 7 to 5, and took the lead in the Manufacturers league. Overconfidence and loose playing brought about Fore Rivers first defeat this season.

When rain interrupted in the fifth innings Fore River had scored five runs with out a hit. When play was resumed the United Shoe players found Knight weakened and pounded him unmercifully.

The score was tie in the eighth when Peterson steped to the bat with one on base. Knight, with three balls and two strikes, grooved the ball, and Peterson met it a terrific wallop. The ball sailed into left field and passed over Ted Galvins head by 20 feet.

The winning runs were scored before the ball was recovered.

Fore River gave a good exhibition of base running in the sixth which turned out to be poor base ball. Ed. Hoyt was on first when Frank Gillis batted. Hoyt sprinted round and was thrown out at home, and Gillis at third.

The game was featured by the brilliant work of Ada Hart the winning pitcher. Although Knight tied him with 12 strikeouts he loomed head and shoulders over the local boy.

SPORT BRIEFS

The Class C boats of the Quincy Yacht club, sometimes called the boys class, held a race off the clubhouse Saturday afternoon over a course of eight miles. Two of the boats failed to finish and the race was won by the Hush of John Kitson.

The base ball team of St. Mary's C. T. A. & M. R. Society traveled to Lowell on Saturday where it defeated the team of their host and member Rev. Fr. Thomas W. Buckley, 17 to 9. The poor condition of the field caused many errors and helped increase the score. After the game the boys entertained at luncheon. Father Buckley accepted an invitation to play a return game in West Quincy on or about Labor Day.

WON BY LOUISE.

A race for yachts of the 18-foot class was held Sunday under the auspices of the Squantum yacht club. The race was sailed in a light breeze. The Louise won, defeating the Dorcher by nearly two minutes. The summary:

Markers were placed at the graves of these two members of the department.

Needful Knowledge

Quincy People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are many. Disordered kidneys often excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, ful of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The back may ache, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighted down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger. Delay often proves fatal.

You can use no better endorsed kidney remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's Quincy proof of their merit.

Mrs. S. Nelson, 177 Washington St., Quincy, says: "One of my family had pains across the small of the back Four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills were used and they made a great improvement. Doan's Kidney Pills deserve great credit for what they have done in that case."

Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Nelson recommends. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

THAW'S PLEA BEFORE THE SUPREME COURT

Decision Sought In Bail Case and Trip to Pittsburg

Washington, June 15.—Counsel for Harry K. Thaw asked the supreme court of the United States to permit Thaw to be taken to Pittsburg in the custody of Sheriff Drew of New Hampshire, to appear in court in connection with the settlement of his father's estate, should the high court refuse to release Thaw on bail.

This action was taken despite the refusal of the New York state authorities to agree to such an agreement. The supreme court is considering this request in connection with the application for bail.

HOME IS DYNAMITED

Union Official's Family Endangered by Disgruntled Miners

Butte, Mont., June 15.—Hundreds of seceding members of the local miners' union, disgruntled because of heavy assessments levied for the recent strike in the Michigan copper mines and discontented with the card system, marched through the streets after a mass meeting.

Then the home of Patrick Casey, an officer of the union, was dynamited. Casey and his wife and three children escaped injury, although the windows were blown out and a porch was demolished.

The sheriff and deputies searched the gulches near Casey's house for the miscreants, but none was found. Several shots were heard near the place after the explosion. These shots were supposed to be fired by the dynamiters to frighten away pursuers.

Badly Beat American Polo Players In Opening Challenge Game

New York, June 15.—England's international four played all around the pick of available American poloists in the first game of the seventh challenge cup match at Meadowbrook.

The score was England 8½, the United States 3. In the aggregate the Britishers tallied 10 goals to the Americans' 4, fouls and safeties reducing the totals to the 8½ to 3 figures.

The Americans have no alibis to submit for the loss of the opening game, played before a crowd of close to 32,000. They were beaten at every turn.

ANOTHER ZEPPELIN AIRSHIP WRECKED

Machine With Military Crew on Board Breaks In Two

Diedenhofen, Ger., June 15.—Another of the Zeppelin airships of the German army, the "Z I," was wrecked near here. While trying to effect an emergency landing the air cruiser broke at right angles behind the rear gondola. A lieutenant was injured.

The accident occurred during a flight from Cologne to Metz. The "Z I," with a military crew on board, ran into a rainstorm, and the commander decided to descend. When the air vessel was within a few yards of the ground a gust of wind forced it violently to earth, and it broke virtually in two.

RIOTING WHEN HUERTA QUITS

None Other In Mexico City Capable of Preserving Order

WORK FOR AMERICAN TROOPS

May Be Forced to Act to Prevent Anarchy, According to Mexican General's Statement to Funston—Relations Between Carranza and Villa Said to Be Somewhat Strained

Washington, June 15.—Reports that Provisional President Huerta will lay down his office in a day or two are causing serious concern to the administration because of fears that following the dictator's action in itself a long step toward peace, there may arise a situation of chaos and anarchy in the Mexican capital which will call for prompt and forceful measures on the part of the American government.

Complete loss of prestige by Huerta, beginning with the fall of Torreon, as described by Brigadier General Mondragon, who has been in consultation with General Funston at Vera Cruz, indicates that when the present government of Mexico ends there will be no man or group in the capital capable of enforcing steps to preserve order.

Mondragon depicts Huerta as disheartened and as willing to act according to the advice of the Mexican peace delegates, now at Niagara Falls. Although the Mexican officer said he would greatly regret the presence of foreign soldiers in his country, he frankly declared that only through the employment of the American army could the provisional government be enabled to enforce its decrees and prevent serious disorders.

Concentration of rebels between Vera Cruz and Mexico City constitutes a grave menace, Mondragon declared. The rebel troops are believed to be in a position to destroy the railroad line between the two points at any time. This step would greatly delay the movement of American soldiers to the capital, and in the meantime, he said, there would be no force of sufficient strength in Mexico City to prevent rioting on the part of the infuriated population of the city.

It was because of his fears in this respect that Mondragon brought his family to Vera Cruz. He considered they would be entirely safe under American rule.

The mediators and peace delegates, in session at Niagara Falls, are endeavoring earnestly to find a basis of agreement that will be satisfactory to General Carranza. In this they see new hope of success in the fact that Huerta has greatly increased the powers originally given to the Mexican representatives. It is the hope of the peace conferees to select a man of such strength within the constitutional ranks that General Carranza will be forced to give his consent to the demands for a cessation of hostilities.

Carranza is already facing divisions within his own ranks. Advices from Juarez indicate that while General Villa has obeyed an order from his chief to go to the assistance of General Natera, who is besieging Zacatecas, it is not at all certain that the victor of a dozen battles in northern Mexico will continue to accept directions from the head of the constitutionalist cause without question.

Carranza has been greatly worried over the delay in taking Zacatecas and it was with great relief that he learned of the compliance of Villa with his instructions to aid Natera.

Carranza spoke in an optimistic tone in an interview with newspaper correspondents at Saltillo. He expressed hope for the success of the mediators, but he wished to make it plain that while the broad idea of mediation was acceptable to him, he did not purpose to place himself in a position where the decision of the conferees would be binding upon him. He added that the instructions to be given his representatives, who will present themselves at Niagara Falls, would not be made public at this time.

Manila, June 15.—Natives are much excited over a meeting here at which 5000 Filipinos met and denounced the administration of President Wilson, holding it responsible for the financial conditions which prevail throughout the islands.

The Copelands beat Div. 22 on the Ward Four playground Saturday afternoon 12 to 6. Had Egan, the juvenile pitcher for the winners, been accorded stronger support, the victory would have been more decisive.

Both teams were tied for second place and a large gallery was on hand to see the contest. The Hibernians urged their men to exert possible effort but they were forced into third place.

ST. JOHN'S WIN.

The Holy Name Society of St. Johns parish defeated the Norwoll Club of the Park and Downs Congregational church at the latter's field day at Highland Park Saturday afternoon. The score was 11 to 3. The game went seven innings and Swain secured 12 strikeouts.

The fielding feature of the game was Fay's running catch of a low liner in left field. The heavy hitter of St. John's was William Curtin whose stick work sent five runs over the plate. The score by innings:

St. Johns	1 0 0 6 1 2 1—11
Norwoll	2 0 0 0 1 0 0—3

Batteries—Swain and DiSenso; Franklin and Mullen.

QUINCY A. A. LOST.

Quincy A. A. lost to West Roxbury at Billings field Saturday afternoon, 7 to 3. Les Andrews pitched six innings and allowed eight hits. Pete Chapman of Williston Seminary took the box the rest of the game and allowed one.

Frank Hoyt and Bishop figured in a big league play in the sixth when Hoyt, scooped a grounded a few feet off first and drove it home fast enough to discourage a man attempting to score. Bishop returned the ball with lightning speed and threw out the runner. The score by innings:

Quincy	1 1 0 1 0 0 0 0 0—3

Batteries—Estelle and Jessau; Andrews, Chapman and Bishop.

DEFEAT FOR FORE RIVERS

United Shoe Take Lead in Manufactureres League

The United Shoe Machinery Co., beat the Fore Rivers at Beverly Saturday afternoon, 7 to 5, and took the lead in the Manufacturers league. Overconfidence and loose playing brought about Fore Rivers first defeat this season.

When rain interrupted in the fifth innings Fore River had scored five runs with out a hit. When play was resumed the United Shoe players found Knight weakened and pounded him unmercifully.

The score was tie in the eighth when Peterson steped to the bat with one on base. Knight, with three balls and two strikes, grooved the ball, and Peterson met it a terrific wallop. The ball sailed into left field and passed over Ted Galvins head by 20 feet.

The winning runs were scored before the ball was recovered.

Fore River gave a good exhibition of base running in the sixth which turned out to be poor base ball. Ed. Hoyt was on first when Frank Gillis bunted. Hoyt sprinted round and was thrown out at home, and Gillis at third.

The game was featured by the brilliant work of Ada Hart the winning pitcher. Although Knight tied him with 12 strikeouts he loomed head and shoulders over the local boy.

SPORT BRIEFS

The Class C boats of the Quincy Yacht club, sometimes called the boys class, held a race off the clubhouse Saturday afternoon over a course of eight miles. Two of the boats failed to finish and the race was won by the Hush of John Kitson.

The base ball team of St. Mary's C. T. A. & M. R. Society traveled to Lowell on Saturday where it defeated the team of their host and member Rev. Fr. Thomas W. Buckley, 17 to 9. The poor condition of the field caused many errors and helped increase the score. After the game the boys entertained at luncheon. Father Buckley accepted an invitation to play a return game in West Quincy on or about Labor Day.

WON BY LOUISE.

A race for yachts of the 18-foot class was held Sunday under the auspices of the Squantum yacht club. The race was sailed in a light breeze. The Louise won, defeating the Dorchen by nearly two minutes. The summary:

FIREMEN'S MEMORIAL SUNDAY.

The Quincy Firemen's Relief association observed Memorial Sunday by decorating the graves of the members of the association who lie buried in Quincy. This year two new graves were decorated, those of District Chief Daniel J. Nyhan and that of Benjamin J. Comeau, both of which are at St. Mary's cemetery. Markers were placed at the graves of these two members of the department.

Needful Knowledge

Quincy People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are many. Disordered kidneys often excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, ful of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The back may ache, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighted down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger. Delay often proves fatal.

You can use no better endorsed kidney remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's Quincy proof of their merit.

Mrs. S. Nelson, 177 Washington St., Quincy, says: "One of my family had pains across the small of the back Four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills were used and they made a great improvement. Doan's Kidney Pills deserve great credit for what they have done in that case."

Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Nelson recommends. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

THAW'S PLEA BEFORE THE SUPREME COURT

Decision Sought In Bail Case and Trip to Pittsburg

Washington, June 15.—Counsel for Harry K. Thaw asked the supreme court of the United States to permit Thaw to be taken to Pittsburg in the custody of Sheriff Drew of New Hampshire, to appear in court in connection with the settlement of his father's estate, should the high court refuse to release Thaw on bail.

This action was taken despite the refusal of the New York state authorities to agree to such an agreement. The supreme court is considering this request in connection with the application for bail.

HOME IS DYNAMITED

Union Official's Family Endangered by Disgruntled Miners

Butte, Mont., June 15.—Hundreds of seceding members of the local miners' union, disgruntled because of heavy assessments levied for the recent strike in the Michigan copper mines and discontented with the card system, marched through the streets after a mass meeting.

Then the home of Patrick Casey, an officer of the union, was dynamited. Casey and his wife and three children escaped injury, although the windows were blown out and a porch was demolished.

The sheriff and deputies searched the gulches near Casey's house for the miscreants, but none was found. Several shots were heard near the place after the explosion. These shots were supposed to be fired by the dynamiters to frighten away pursuers.

New York, June 15.—England's international four played all around the pick of available American poloists in the first game of the seventh challenge cup match at Meadowbrook.

The score was England 8½, the United States 3. In the aggregate the Britishers tallied 10 goals to the Americans' 4, fouls and safeties reducing the totals to the 8½ to 3 figures.

The Americans have no alibis to submit for the loss of the opening game, played before a crowd of close to 32,000. They were beaten at every turn.

Diedenhofen, Ger., June 15.—Another of the Zeppelin airships of the German army, the "Z I," was wrecked near here. While trying to effect an emergency landing the air cruiser broke at right angles behind the rear gondola. A lieutenant was injured.

The accident occurred during a flight from Cologne to Metz. The "Z I," with a military crew on board, ran into a rainstorm, and the commander decided to descend. When the air vessel was within a few yards of the ground a gust of wind forced it violently to earth, and it broke virtually in two.

RIOTING WHEN HUERTA QUITS

None Other In Mexico City Capable of Preserving Order

WORK FOR AMERICAN TROOPS

May Be Forced to Act to Prevent Anarchy, According to Mexican General's Statement to Funston—Relations Between Carranza and Villa Said to Be Somewhat Strained

Washington, June 15.—Reports that Provisional President Huerta will lay down his office in a day or two are causing serious concern to the administration because of fears that following the dictator's action in itself a long step toward peace, there may arise a situation of chaos and anarchy in the Mexican capital which will call for prompt and forceful measures on the part of the American government.

Complete loss of prestige by Huerta, beginning with the fall of Torreon, as described by Brigadier General Mondragon, who has been in consultation with General Funston at Vera Cruz, indicates that when the present government of Mexico ends there will be no man or group in the capital capable of enforcing steps to preserve order.

Mondragon depicts Huerta as disheartened and as willing to act according to the advice of the Mexican peace delegates, now at Niagara Falls. Although the Mexican officer said he would greatly regret the presence of foreign soldiers in his country, he frankly declared that only through the employment of the American army could the provisional government be enabled to enforce its decrees and prevent serious disorders.

Concentration of rebels between Vera Cruz and Mexico City constitutes a grave menace, Mondragon declared. The rebel troops are believed to be in a position to destroy the railroad line between the two points at any time. This step would greatly delay the movement of American soldiers to the capital, and in the meantime, he said, there would be no force of sufficient strength in Mexico City to prevent rioting on the part of the infuriated population of the city.

It was because of his fears in this respect that Mondragon brought his family to Vera Cruz. He considered they would be entirely safe under American rule.

The mediators and peace delegates, in session at Niagara Falls, are endeavoring earnestly to find a basis of agreement that will be satisfactory to General Carranza. In this they see new hope of success in the fact that Huerta has greatly increased the powers originally given to the Mexican representatives. It is the hope of the peace conferees to select a man of such strength within the constitutional ranks that General Carranza will be forced to give his consent to the demands for a cessation of hostilities.

Carranza is already facing divisions within his own ranks. Advices from Juarez indicate that while General Villa has obeyed an order from his chief to go to the assistance of General Natera, who is besieging Zacatecas, it is not at all certain that the victor of a dozen battles in northern Mexico will continue to accept directions from the head of the constitutionalist cause without question.

Carranza has been greatly worried over the delay in taking Zacatecas and it was with great relief that he learned of the compliance of Villa with his instructions to aid Natera.

Carranza spoke in an optimistic tone in an interview with newspaper correspondents at Saltillo. He expressed hope for the success of the mediators, but he wished to make it plain that while the broad idea of mediation was acceptable to him, he did not purpose to place himself in a position where the decision of the conferees would be binding upon him. He added that the instructions to be given his representatives, who will present themselves at Niagara Falls, would not be made public at this time.

Stevenson Held Many Public Positions of Trust

DIES AFTER A LONG ILLNESS

Breakdown Closely Followed Death of Wife—Had Been Vice President of United States, First Assistant Postmaster General, Congressman and Prominent in Courts In Illinois

Chicago, June 15.—Adlai E. Stevenson, Vice President of the United States during President Cleveland's second administration, died in a hospital in this city. At his bedside when he died were his three children.

His last illness began soon after the death of his wife, six months ago. The three children who survive him and who were at his bedside are Lewis G. Stevenson, Mrs. Martha D. Hardin and Miss Letitia Stevenson.

Adlai Ewing Stevenson was born in Christian county, Ky., Oct. 23, 1835. When his family moved to Bloomington, Ills., in 1852 he took up the study of law and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1857.

After ten years of private practice Stevenson was appointed to the office of master in chancery and after remaining in that office for a period of four years was elected district attorney. At the expiration of this term he formed a law partnership with James S. Ewing, and for twenty years this firm held a leading position in courts in Illinois.

In 1864 Stevenson canvassed the state as a candidate for presidential elector on the Democratic ticket. In 1874 he was nominated by the Democratic party for congress in the Bloomington district. This district had always been strongly Republican, but Stevenson was elected.

He was defeated for re-election to congress in 1876 and after resuming the practice of law for two years was again nominated and elected to congress. At the end of this term he returned to the practice of law and was a delegate in 1884 to the Democratic national convention which nominated Grover Cleveland for president.

When Cleveland was elected he appointed Stevenson first assistant postmaster general. Stevenson was a delegate at large to the national Democratic convention of 1892, which nominated Cleveland for a second term and placed Stevenson on the ticket for the position of vice president. He was a material factor in the election of Cleveland and himself.

Stevenson married, in 1866, Miss Letitia Green of Danville, Ky., who met the future vice president when he was at Centre college, of which Miss Green's father was president, and the romance which began then continued until the death of Mrs. Stevenson.

UPHELD BY COURT

Illinois Women's Suffrage Act Is Declared Constitutional

Springfield, Ills., June 15.—Suffrage won its fight before the supreme court of Illinois, the judges holding that the act of 1913 was constitutional.

The act grants limited suffrage to all women citizens of Illinois by permitting them to vote for statutory officers and upon propositions presented to the Illinois electorate.

The act made an exception of state and other officers named in the Illinois constitution, but left the women free to vote for municipal officers and for township officials. Under the act women in every part of the state participated in the spring elections, and in the township and municipal local option elections they were instrumental in voting out of existence approximately 1000 saloons. In the same election many women were elected to official places.

Liner New York Safely Reaches Port With Great Hole In Stem

New York, June 15.—With more than 650 persons on board, all thankful at having escaped a disaster similar to that in which the Empress of Ireland recently was sent to the bottom, the American liner New York, a gaping hole in her stem where the Hamburg-American liner Pretoria struck her in the fog off Nantucket, reached port safely.

As the steamer passed Fire island on her way into port an impressive service of thanksgiving was held. There was scarcely a dry eye among the congregation while "Nearer, My God, to Theee," was being sung in memory of those less fortunate than the New York's passengers in wrecks at sea.

That the Pretoria did not strike the New York at her most vulnerable point—between the funnels—was due to the skilful handling of the New York by Captain Roberts.

Poles Engage In Bloody Fight With Knives After a Picnic

Lawrence, Mass., June 15.—A fierce factional fight with knives, in which one man was fatally hurt and a score were slashed, marked the end of a picnic of Austrian Poles from this city in the South Lawrence woods, when they met a crowd of Russian Poles last evening.

Of five prisoners taken by the police every one was badly cut and had a knife which dripped blood.

The conditio of Ferdinand Tyzler, one of the picnickers, who was rushed to the hospital dying, was enough to show the bitterness of the fray. He had eight stab wounds, two through the lungs, two not so deep in the back, two in the chest and two in the right side.

SUSPECTS HEMMED IN BY HUB POLICE

Supposed Burglars Captured After Lively Gun Play

Boston, June 15.—In a wild daybreak chase, in which they were hemmed between the running revolver fire from a swift metropolitan police launch on one side and an auto patrol wagon loaded with Boston officers on the other, two out of a gang of three men suspected of breaking into the houses of Back Bay millionaires were caught in the Charlesgate section.

The captives gave their names as Joseph Rolla of East Dedham streeet ad Frank Inchey of Compton street. The addresses are false, the police say, and it is believed the names are the same. An effort to identify the men through the rogues' gallery will be made.

The pursuit through the river front and Charlesgate came on the heels of the discovery that the home of Thomas W. Lawson had been broken open.

MOVEMENT IS SPREADING

Irish Nationalists Say Home Rule Army Will Number 200,000

London, June 15.—Irish national volunteers as a factor in the settlement of the home rule question have become a stern, serious reality.

Irish leaders say they never have known any movement in Ireland to "catch on" and spread with such rapidity and enthusiasm as the establishing of this force. It now numbers roughly 130,000, and promises to grow to over 200,000 before the year is out.

Mt. Lassen Again Active

Redding, Cal., June 15.—The sixth eruption on Mt. Lassen occurred yesterday and shot a huge column of dense black smoke, steam and ashes 2000 feet into the air. The eruption lasted thirty minutes.

GLOWING TRIBUTES

wars. In closing he said let us pledge ourselves to follow the flag wherever it leads.

A selection of national airs by the orchestra followed after which the beautiful ceremony of erecting the bell of liberty was conducted by the officers of the lodge. First, the red base of roses was set upon the table; then the centre piece of white lilies; the top piece of blue violets, and the bar the Elks emblem of seven five-pointed stars. At its conclusion eleven strokes was sounded on the cathedral gong, a symbol among Elks to pay a silent tribute to those absent brothers who have gone before.

This toast was followed by the singing of "The vacant chair" by the quartet, a cornet solo, "Columbia the gem of the ocean" by Henry E. Wayne, and the Elks tribute to the flag which was delivered by Esteemed Leading Knight, George E. Walker of Wakefield.

GEORGE E. WALKER.

The cherished emblem of our America may be said to be of the most heroic origin, the conflict in which it was born. At first, a piece of bunting it has thrived and expanded until it gave to the world a new country, a new word, that of liberty, a true conception of the brotherhood of man. It was fore-ordained that it must lead all others in the flight of a century. It was the flag of George Washington, John Adams and Betsy Ross. Inspired by men and women like these the spirit of '76 has been the spirit of all succeeding years. It is the flag that waved at Hawaii, Santiago and China.

A flag that represented a people rather than a monarch. A flag that has never known surrender. Of all flags this is the greatest, the most beneficent and the most beautiful. It is the safeguard of the state, the nation and the races. The captain of all industries of learning. Its influence is immeasurable. At the home and the fireside it upholds the light of freedom. It appeals to every emotion and lights the way of progress. Across the continent it is hailed as the flag of all flags. Hail to the flag of liberty, of brothers, fathers and loving mothers, and of the republic. May she ever be the flag of the united union of state and territories of our country.

A selection by the quartet and a selection of songs of the sunny south by the orchestra followed, after which Col. Edward O. Skelton, patriotic instructor of the Grand Army was introduced to give the patriotic address.

COL. SKELTON.

In opening Col. Skelton said that there was not a heart in this audience but what must have been inspired by the tributes that had been paid to the flag. It was Macauley who said a people who take no pride in its achievements will never achieve anything to be remembered. Over three centuries ago a small band entered into a covenant when their liberties were interfered with. These were the Pilgrims. They sought relief first in Holland, and in 1620 they sailed in the Mayflower. Thmns was the beginning. When they reached the shores of God's republic a new nation was born. It was for a free born people with a representative government that was created by that wonderful compact, which became immortal as it gave to them a civic liberty which has endured for three hundred years, in all states of this grand union.

We must recognize it as a great inspiration of souls. It represents the right to state the truth and it gives the fullest expression of then faith. It represents that freedom or religion that has been handed down to us. As the doors of knowledge are opened there will come to us a new impulse to keep this world progressive.

It is proper therefore that we should recall all that they did for the posterity. We should remember with gratitude what they did for the development of the greatest humanitarian nation on the face of the globe. Yet we of the present generation look to it for an unfailing inspiration for our betterment. We must show those who are seeking our shores of this great republic that is not a sentimental tribute which we pay to the grand old flag. Go where you will the old flag is met with a respect no other flag receives. Today throughout the broad land the Elks are inculcating the seed of patriotism, a love for the flag and of the country. Wherever you go the hand of brotherhood is extended to you b ythe Elks. There is an inspiration to all America.

He then spoke of the millions that are coming to our shores and the element which is becoming the tool of the demagogue who at soul is an anachist. These we must educate and impress with the love of patriotism. They must learn to love and respect that flag. This can only be done by education. It is our duty to broaden them, so that they will receive it as a heritage. The flag is the one inspiration that fills the mind with the thoughts of liberty and justice. It has never been dishonored. Never has it been dragged in the dust of defeat but has always stood for human progress. No other nation has been represented by such a flag as affords such freedom to its people. We are not for war, but for peace and advancement of humanity. It spreads its beneficial blessing upon all people of the world. All hail to the stars and stripes.

After the singing of "America" by the audience, the pretty ceremony of trooping of the colors was given by the detachment from C. K and the Boy Scouts and taps by the bugler.

Earlier in the day Quincy Lodge of Elks raised a new flag in front of its clubhouse on Foster street.

SLIGHT FIRES.

There were two alarms of fire Sunday, the first being from 174 at 9.05 A. M. which was for a slight fire in the rear of the stable of Peter Hines on Broadway. There came near being a bad accident however while the apparatus was responding to the fire caused by one of the reins breaking on Combination 1. Edward Lane was driving the apparatus at the time and did his best to stop the team by applying the brake. The horses, without control however, dashed upon the sidewalk and tore down a section of fence at the corner of South and Sumner street in front of the premises of Carl Bonivier. Howard Anderson, aged about 7 years stood behind the fence to see the apparatus pass and noticing the horses coming toward him with rare presence of mind junmped just in time to save himself from being hit by the team. After striking the fence the horses were brought to a stop. The fire was a slight one and was extinguished with a chemical stream.

The second alarm sounded at 1.25 from Box 36 and was for a slight fire in a box in the rear of J. H. Gillis store on Franklin street. There was a can of gasoline near by but it did not explode. The firemen got between the gasoline can and the box and thus prevented the explosion. The loss was slight.

Hose three extinguished a fire in furniture on the truck of Hall & Wagner of Hull on Adams street Saturday noon. The fire was discovered by District Chief Louis K. Badger who sent an auto in pursuit and telephoned the Central station. The truck was stopped near the Eaton ice house. A mattress and a pillow were destroyed and furniture partly damaged.

SUNDAY RAIDS.

Saturday night and early Sunday morning were busy ones for the Police department whose officers under the direction of Chief Burrell raided several places in the Quincy Point district and seized liquor, and gaming implements, and placed twenty or more men under arrest. Some were arrested for being present where gaming implements were found, others for maintaining a gaming house and others for violation of the liquor law.

The pool room of Charles Cariarty at 70 Sumner street was visited shortly after midnight and the proprietor and twenty men arrested and four pool tables and all the accessories were seized. Three trips were required to convey the men and tables to the station.

At the house of Rebekah Finkelman, on Main street, nine quarts of whiskey, five pints of whiskey and three cases of beer were seized. At the premises of Ike Spector at 11 North street the police found a gallon of whiskey and a case of beer. At the premises of Harry Green on the other side of the same house, a gallon and two pints of whiskey were seized. The last place visited was that of Sam Quanton on Linden street where two pints of whiskey were seized.

In court this morning twenty-six men were arraigned in connection with the night's work.

CITY SQUARE RUNAWAYS.

There were two lively runaways in City Square this morning but fortunately no one was injured although there were some narrow escapes. The first was the team of Skelton Bros. of Quincy Point. This horse started from the Quincy Beef Co., plant on Dimock street and was coming through City Square at a lively gait when William Nelson climbed in over the back of the wagon and seizing the reins brought the animal to a stop near Pettengills store. Nelsen got in control of the horse just in time to prevent a collision with an automobile containing some ladies.

The second runaway took place just after 10 o'clock while the circus parade was passing. The team was that of Cornelius Duggan of Holbrook. It stood in front of a store on Hancock street while the driver was delivering strawberries. While Mr. Duggan was in the store the horse became frightened at the music and broke away from Charles Flynn and John Graham who were holding him, and dashed toward Bethany church where the team collided with an automobile of the Eletcric Light company smashing it somewhat and throwing a crate of strawberries about the street. The animal was stopped after the collision.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

William Campbell, the new keeper of the Almshouse, and his son Edmund had a narrow escape in a runaway accident Saturday afternoon. While driving in the vicinity of Faxon hall, Cutler, the junk man, crowded him and their wheels locked. His horse made a dash and after circling about went between the houses of George W. Jones and John T. Hunt. Both Mr. Campbell and his son were thrown out and the former was with difficulty rescued from beneath the wreck. His forehead was cut and he received several bruises. The boy was unhurt. The wagon and harness were damaged.

WOLLASTON OPEN REGATTA

Fleet of 71 Yachts Entered in Saturday Race

The first open race in Quincy waters this season was sailed under the auspices of the Wollaston Yacht club Saturday afternoon, when the largest feet of boats ever gathered under the auspices of this club took part, 71 starting. The wind at times was almost a calm, and the wind swung entirely around the compass twice, which required quick work on the part of the skippers. The Harpoon, formerly owned by Charlie Adams and the defender and challenger of the Quincy Yacht club challenge cup during the past two years, was entered in the sonder class and won by nearly three minutes. The yachtsmen were given a super at the club house after the race. The summary:

John P. Devaney, of Dysart street, a former employee of the Board of Health at the city stables, said Mr. Vaughn used to bark and holler at the inmates every day, and that he saw him slap John Wrenn and knock his hat off. He said he saw Mrs. Vaughn shake Thomas Butler, an inmate. It was his opinion that Mr. Vaughn did not treat members very good.

The horse he said was constantly in use by the Vaughn family. He said when he remarked a child at the almshouse had no shoes, Mr. Vaughn answered, "I wish a hole come in the ground and took him through."

In cross examination he said he hollered at inmates when the distance was 150 yards. Counsel McAnarney asked to have several answers stricken from the records and reminded the witness he was present to testify and not argue the question. Devaney said John Wrenn and Senator Hobart swore while quarreling with Mr. Vaughn and that it was fun to listen to it.

He said that one occasion for swearing was a dispute over rotten beef.

James P. Flanagan of 42 Field street, formerly a foreman of the Board of Health, said Mr. Vaughn always was loud spoken and boisterous, and frequently swore at inmates. He told of how Mr. Vaughn swapped oaths with John Wrenn when the latter was sobering up after a drunk, and that on another occasion Thomas Butler as pushed up an incline by Mr. Vaughn and that Mrs. Vaughn pulled him into the house.

In July, 1911 he had an argument over a an overheated horse, which Mr. Vaughn ordered a man to take from the yard. He repeated strong oaths uttered by Mr. Vaughn at the time. Mrs. Vaughn who was present left, saying this wont continue for long and then her daughter asked her father to go into the house but he only continued swearing.

Dr. F. R. Bucke arrived while Mr Vaughn was giving an eloquent arrangement of profanity, according to Mr. Flanagan, and counseled him to be cool. In July, 1912, blows were struck. He said he helped an infirm man who was later found dead in the stable, shake out hay.

In cross examination he said the man died shortly after the Board of Health took the stable.

Q.—Did the trouble arise over Mr. Vaughn wanting you to take the horse away.

A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did he use any force other than strong language to make you move the horse.

A.—Had he been gentlemanly I would have done so.

Q.—How many times did you speak in the 20 minutes Mr. Vaughn was there?

A.—Twice.

Q.—Was there ever another occasion when you only spoke twice in 20 minutes?

A.—Yes. One other.

Q.—When?

A.—That is a personal matter.

In telling about a quarrel over a sleigh, he said if he had known the poor department owned it he never would have taken it.

Mr. Flanagan said as far as he knew there was no feling existing between department heads, but that Mr. Vaughn had very little use for him.

Q.—When did you re-enter the employ of the city?

A.—May, 1912.

Q.—Did you tell Perry Green what you knew about the happenings at the almshouse in which Mr. Vaughn was concerned.

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—And you have no feeling toward Mr. Vaughn?

A.—No personal feeling, sir.

The severe strain of the hearing has begun to tell on Mrs. Vaughn, and this morning while James P. Flanagan was testifying, she burst into tears. Her son who sat just back of her got up from his seat and placing his arms about his mother's neck attempted to console her. She recovered in a few minutes and the hearing was not interrupted. It could be seen however that Mrs. Vaughn was bearing up with difficulty.

CIRCUS DAY ROBBINS HERE

There was a large crowd about City Sqaure this morning to see the circus parade. There was some doubt just what time the parade would pass or there might have been a still larger crowd. The parade was an exceptionally good one and included some of the largest elephants in the world, handsome ponies, beautiful horses, cleverly trained dogs, zebras, giraffes and hundreds of performers.

The show played to a large audience this afternoon and it is expected that a large crowd will attend the concluding performane tonight.

Tonight's show will start at eight o'clock and the doors will open an hour earlier giving the public an opportunity of enjoying an exceptionally fine band concert. Among the features with the show this season are Frank A. Robbin's performing elephants, graduates in decidedly new and novel tricks under Mr. Thompson: equilibristic skill and grace on a thread-like wire by James and Jessie Burns, Chargins and Decastolo in the slide of death, one of the finest equilibristic acts before the public.

Utilizing Air Space.

It is proposed to span a 2,500-foot gully at Akron, Ohio, by the erection of a series of industrial buildings, the roofs of which are to be used as a passageway.

ACCIDENT TO FIVE-YEAR-OLD

Arthur Best, five years, tripped while running to his home at 28 Revere road, Saturday noon, and just escaped falling between the wheels of a slowly moving ice wagon. As it was his right hand went under a rear wheel and the fingers were badly crushed.

The team was passing Mechanic street when little Arthur started to cross Revere road. As he turned to avoid the team his shoe caught in the grating on a catch basin and he was pitched forward. The wagon wheel passed over his fingers but he uttered no cry, and although suffering intense pain he regained his feet and started to run away. A witness caught him and carried him to his home and rendered first aid while the doctors were arriving.

When Dr. McCauseland and Dr. George M. Sheahan examined the hand they found one finger so badly crushed they amputated it.

The wagon was owned by J. F. Sheppard & Sons and was partially loaded. According to a witness the driver was not in a position to see the child start to run.

Collective.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that one John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

BIG LOAN ORDERS REPORTED IN CITY COUNCIL

TWO SCHOOLHOUSE ADDITIONS FAVORED

Also $70,000 for Hancock Street Widening and Other Street Building

Two Supplementary Budgets Aggregating Over $31,000

In a space of less than an hour, the City Council on Monday night transacted a large amount of business. It is seldom that the Council has put through so much business in so short a time. There were something like forty committee reports in all, some of which carried large appropriations. For instance orders for new streets carried an appropriation of $40,700. Then there was an order for an addition to the Washington school building, calling for an appropriation of $38,000 which sum will doubtless have to be increased to $43,000 if the order is passed.

In addition to these two orders, Councilman Bailey offered two supplementary budgets, one carrying a total of something like $19,000 and the other $12,668.30 for water used by the several city departments. Orders carrying an appropriation of $6,300 for permanent sidewalks and $1,000 for surface drains were passed and sent to the Mayor for his approval or disapproval.

AGAINST REFUNDING.

Every member was present, and there was but one discussion, and that was brief. This discussion came on the order to reimburse David Silverman and I. Cutler $10 each, the amounts which they had paid in fines on an ordinance which it was declared was illegal. The Finance Committee reported ought not to pass on the order, and Councilman Thompson offered a minority report, that the order ought to pass.

Councilman Craig moved the order be recommitted which motion was lost on a rising vote of 11 yes and 11 no. By a vote of 3 yes and 15 no, the minority report was rejected and the committee report accepted.

Councilman Thompson in support of his report said that they had been fined for violation of an ordinance which was illegal, and the money should be refunded.

Councilman Beeman asked the City Solicitor as to the legality of the ordinance, who in reply said that the men were fined $10 each and appealed, and later had paid. That in a later case, counsel for the defendants, moved to quash as the ordinance was illegal. The court, however, had ordered the case to proceed with the hearing after which it had suggested to him as counsel for the city, that the complaints be withdrawn which he had done. The court however did not pass on the motion as to the legality of the ordinance, but suggested that further complaints be brought under another ordinance.

Councilman Beeman said that if the men had been fined on an illegal ordinance they should get their money back.

Councilman Bailey said it made no difference what happened in the latter case ,that it was the first cases in which the two men mentioned had been fined. There was some question if the amount of these two fines did come to the city.

The motions mentioned above were then made and the report of the committee accepted:

LETTER OF THANKS.

A communication was received thanking the Council for flowers sent to the funeral of the mother of the clerk of the Council, which was placed on file.

PETITIONS.

A number of applications for minor licenses were received and referred to the License committe.

Petitions were received from Electric Light Co. and Street Railway Co. for re-locations which were granted.

Petitions from the Electric Light, Telephone and Street Railway companies for locations for poles were referred to the Committee on Streets.

A petition from A. H. Dunham, to keep gasoline, was laid on the table until later when an order for a hearing was adopted.

STREET REPORTS.

The Committee on Streets reported upon practically all of the matters that had been referred to them. Their reports in brief were as follows:

Orders accepting Huckins avenue, Apthrop street, Winthrop street to Rock Island, widening Goffe street at its junction with Adams street, accepting Hamilton, Dysart and Davis streets, a part of Glendale road, and a part of Edison street, a part of Phillips street, Federal avenue extension, Montclair avenue, Greene street, Roselin avenue, part of Park lane and accepting a footway on Saville street, all of which were referred to the Finance Committee.

A loan order for $40,700 to provide funds for the acceptance of the new streets named above. Referred to Finance Committee.

HANCOCK STREET.

A substitute order was reported for $30,500 for widening and paving Hancock street between Granite and School streets, and building a granolithic sidewalk on the east side. Referred to Finance Committee.

BAYFIELD ROAD.

An order was reported releasing part of the easement which the city holds on Bayfield road. The city now has an easement of a strip of land forty feet wide. The order authorizes the Mayor and Commissioner to release all but a strip fifteen feet wide. To Finance Committee.

NO CROSSING.

Leave to withdraw was reported on the petition to take land for a foot bridge or subway beneath the tracks from Federal avenue.

Leave to withdraw on the petition of the American Telephone Co. for a location for a stub on Willard street.

An order changing the grade of Columbia street at its junction with

NEPONSET BRIDGE HEARING

(Special from State House.)

The committee on ways and means of the House of Representatives conducted a hearing this morning on the Neponset bridge bill. The feature of the hearing was an assurance from Mayor Curley of Boston that if the legislature would refer the matter to the next general court he would withdraw his opposition to the bill. The letter was read by James A. Devlin from the office of the corporation counsel.

Mr Devlin said the City of Boston is overloaded with expenses, that the State tax rate would be unusually high and the city will not be able to go through with the Neponset bridge work because it will create a burden it cannot afford to bear.

Representative M. T. Sullivan, Representative Sanford Bates and ex-Representative Peter T. Fallon appeared for the bill. After Mr. Devlin read the letter, Mr. Bates said if there was any definite assurance that the letter was sincere, and that the mayor would not oppose it next year, he would be willing to stand, but in order to make the assurance doubly sure he recommended the passage of a bill operative next year.

Messrs. Sullivan and Fallon in their arguments said the structure was worn out, had outlived its usefulness was too narrow on one end for teams to pass, and was the principal avenue of traffic for the South Shore.

Representative Damon of the committee on roads and bridges appeared against the bill. The bridge he said is not in such bad condition as people would have us believe. There are other bridges that should be reconstructed. He said the Neponset bridge served principally for pleasure rather than business traffic.

VIOLIN RECITAL.

A most enjoyable violin recital was held Monday evening at Alpha hall by the Quincy pupils of Miss Katherine Goeres. The recital was largely attended by parents and friends of the pupils. Recitals of this kind are usually tiresome, but not so with that of Monday evening for the numbers were so finely executed that they did not tire the audience. The class, an unusually large one, each of whom took part in the recital included Virginia Aiken, Marjorie Blanchard Elizabeth Berry, Minot Beal, Roger Burgoyne, Katherine Davis, Mary Davis, Billy Evans, Frederick Granger, Frederick Gibb, Margery Griffin, Beatrice Griffin, Mary Hanley, Gilbert Herwood, Rosalynde Hammons, Peter Levowich, Morris Neumann, Lenora O'Rourke, Alice Pinel, Doris Prout, Beth Ryder, Florence Robie, Jeanette Shaw, Helena Studley, Emma Savoie, and Marion White.

Wednesday will be observed as a holiday by the local banks as well as the stores, as they will be closed to business all day.

COLONEL IN CIVIL WAR

William B. White Passes Away in 79th Year

Col. William B. White, a well known resident of this city, died at his home 68 Elm street early this morning in his 79th year. For several years he has been a manufacturer on Baxter street. He was an invalid for several months.

Col. White was born Aug. 28, 1835, at South Paris, Me., but as a young man he came to Massachusetts and settled in Abington, where he learned the trade of shoemaker.

When the Civil war broke out he joined the 12th Massachusetts Infantry as lieutenant of Co. G. On Aug. 20, 1861, he was transferred to the 20th Massachusetts as a captain, and was promoted to major May 1, 1863, and lieutenant colonel Oct. 15, 1863. He was mustered out as colonel May 2, 1864.

After the war he established himself in Boston as a manufacturer of shoe patterns, and in 1898 he moved to Quincy where he made eyeshades, spectacle cases and leather novelties. He was twice married and had three children, but all are dead, and he leaves no near relatives.

Col. White was public-spirited, and last year equipped the Quincy City Hospital with its excellent X-ray room. He was a member of Hartsuff Post, G. A. R. of Rockland, and of the Loyal Legion, and president of the 18th Massachusetts Regiment Association.

Several flags in the city are at half mast in his honor.

ADAMS STREET LOTS AT AUCTION

Comencing tomorrow and continuing each day for the balance of the week, lots on the newly developed property known as East Milton terrace will be sold at auction. Although known as East Milton Terrace, the property is situated in the city of Quincy, being what is better known as the Joseph W. Robertson farm on Adams street. This is one of the most desirable locations for a home to be found in this vicinity. It is situated within a few minutes walk of the East Milton railway station, and the electric cars for Quincy, while it is but a short distance via Beale street to the Wollaston station. It also abuts the Metropolitan Reservation.

The property which contains 1,500,000 square feet has been sub-divided into lots of the regular size, suitable for a home with garden, each lot making an ideal home site.

At this sale 100 lots will be offered at auction at exceedingly favorable terms. That is 10 percent of purchase price down. 10 percent on the delivery of the deeds, and $5 a month with a minimum deposit of $25 on each purchase. Quincy is fast growing and the opportunity to secure a desirable home site should not be missed.

MRS. VAUGHN STAR WITNESS MONDAY

Says Overseer Green Swore on His First Visit to Almshouse

Says Mayor Miller Belied Her In His Statement

The respondents at the hearing on the removal of Mr. Vaughn as keeper of the almshouse announced at the resumption of the hearing, through City Solicitor Pinkham, that Mr. Green, unless the defense wished it, would not take the stand.

Counsel McAnarney said he felt it was not his duty to indicate one way or the other whether or not Mr. Green should take the stand. He said we take the position that he having preferred the charges, the initiative being on him, it is for he and his counsel to decide what his course will be, and not to await any intimation as to the course to pursue.

Mr. Pinkham said, I don't know whether counsel feels at liberty now to say whether Mr. Green will take the stand. Circumstances may arise that it might be well for him to do so.

Further conference between the attorneys resulted in Counsel McAnarney saying that with the understanding that you have closed with the exception of one witness, will you indicate who he is, and Mr. Pinkham announced the name of Hugo Jones. Counsel McAnarney in opening for the defense said, having in mind our objection to going forward on the ground that no answers had been made to the request filed for specifications set forth in the respondents complaint, we now renew our objection to proceeding to present our evidence. I will offer this evidence under protest, under the objection made.

Mr. Pinkham then said, I understand now that you do not in presenting your evidence waive your objections.

It was exactly 1.05 when Mrs. Vaughn took the stand as the first witness for the defense. Unemotional and dignified she stood facing presiding officer Perry Green whose charges brought about the removal of her husband, and in a clear voice testified to things entirely the reverse of the testimony of the witnesses for the respondent.

Counsel McAnarney conducted the examination of Mrs. Vaughn. She said her husband and she had been at the almshouse about nine years, three under F. F. Green and six under J. H. Elcock, and that John Wrenn was there as an inmate, but Thomas Butler was not when they took charge.

The affirmations of respondent witnesses that Wrenn was the victim of hardships was explained when Mrs. Vaughn answered a question as to how he behaved himself, by saying that he would be drunk holidays and be drunk for a week more or less, sometimes from three to six days. He would be abusive to the inmates and to me, and I would have to call Mr. Vaughn to take him from the dining room. He would use profane language everywhere.

In identifying Thomas Butler, who also figured in the testimony of the respondent as being the centre of much abuse, Mrs. Vaughn said he is a small dwarf and that she always took charge of him. He would stand near a post in the yard and watch people passing by but never for more than an hour any day.

Q.—You did not know Mr. Green until after he came into office?

A.—Never saw or heard of him.

Q.—What took place when he first introduced himself?

A.—He didn't talk much about the inmates. He talked more about the officials of Quincy. He told us when he took charge it would be different from the Elcock administration, and he Mr. Green) used profane language the first day he came in front of Mr. Vaughn and myself.

Q.—What was the occasion of Mr. Green finding any fault with you or Mr. Vaughn so far as you recall?

A.—The first I remember was when we three went into the store room and he told us, "I want to ask you both a question. I want to ask you if you ever saw Mike Shea, former foreman of streets previous to the Miller administration, having beer or rum in his auto." I said no.

Mrs. Vaughn said she then remarked "Isn't he under civil service?" and he said he didn't give a —— —— if he was. He was going to get Mike Shea."

Q.—Did he say anything to you about it?

A.—He seemed to be very mad, and said if you don't know, well, all right.

Q.—How has he treated you.

A.—He always treated us mean since the first day he put his foot in the almshouse. He said, "Mrs. Vaughn I want you, tomorrow morning to go down to that smoke house and tell the men what to do, and if they don't" and he used vile language, "you take those inmates and slam them against the building and you holler and curse them, do anything as long as you get the work out of them, but don't leave a mark." He came into the office, and there told me the state inspector said I was a smart woman. He advised me to take inmates into the office and if they don't do as ordered to slam them and bang them around the office, and he said, "Mrs. Vaughn, (and she dropped her voice,) use the flat of your hand, because your fist will leave a mark."

Mrs. Vaughn then told of the visit of Mayor Miller and Overseer Green to the premises. She said she showed the Mayor over the house. They did not say for what purpose they came. It was three o'clock, the day after we had our notice to leave.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

If Gen. Villa will move to England and assume charge of the militant Suffragettes, a liberal reward will be paid and no questions asked.

Some people are imprudent enough to water the garden through the dry weather, in spite of the fact that this makes the weeds grow much faster than the vegetables.

As rioting is reported from the mines of West Virginia, conditions there seem perfectly normal.

Once in a while the Congressional Record gets short of campaign literature for the members, and has nothing left to print but the debates occurring in Congress.

The Niagara Falls mediators achieved a great triumph when they got both parties to agree to fight only when they feel like it.

If any one wore a plug hat the day the first liner went through the canal, it wasn't Col. Goethals.

Even if the Congressmen are prohibited from lecturing for pay, the Congressional Record will print all their Chautauqua addresses.

SOLICITING BUSINESS.

One of the recent progressive steps in the religious world has been what is called the "Every Member" campaign. It is based on the idea that there are a great many people who attend church who would be willing to give to the work of the church, if their contributions were solicited.

Most churches have not been conducted in a business-like way. Regular and thorough soliciting of subscriptions is very rare. As the result of the new idea referred to, many churches that always used to have a deficit, have been put on a prosperous financial basis. In one church of about 300 members known to the writer, about 125 new subscribers were secured by this kind of a campaign, with increases of contributions from about 75 others, and a total gain in revenue of $1500.

It is not often that the churches can teach a lesson in business efficiency to the business man. Yet here is a case in point. Many merchants are conducting their business with a lack of enterprise which is just as marked as the hap-hazard way in which church finances are often run.

It goes to show that if you want financial support for any kind of a proposition, you have got to get out and hustle for it. The business man has no force of unpaid workers, which like a body of church adherents can get out from house to house and solicit help. But the newspaper furnishes the means by which he can tell his story to the entire public.

The mere fact that he appears in the public prints with a story of his business spreads abroad the opinion that he is a pusher. The public values enterprise. It will pass by the old timer, and go down in some side street to hunt out the man who shows initiative. If in addition the merchant can talk convincingly about his goods, and give the idea that he really has bargains, there will be no trouble about his success.

MRS. VAUGHN STAR WITNESS

The Mayor stood just like this, and Mrs. Vaughn with arms akimbo illustrated his pose, and he said, "Everything seems to be clean and neat, and seems so beautiful." I said Mayor, it seems too bad we have been put out, and Mr. Vaughn said I suppose we are entitled to a hearing. Mayor Miller quickly said, "For what? You are not under civil service here are you?" and Mr. Vaughn answered yes.

Mrs. Vaughn said we came to the lower floor and Overseer Green said we will go into the office and thrash it out. We did and Mr. Green said I had a complaint about you this morning. I said I will tell the Mayor about that complaint. Mrs. Vaughn then introduced what she told the Mayor about Jim McDonald an inmate, kicking about his oatmeal and how she had taken it from the table and set it in the ice box. She said it happened after McDonald and Mr. Green had a talk in the office. McDonald made a rough house afterward and refused to drink milk he said was watered. I denied it and he said it was. I had taken the milk from the table and put it into the ice chest as I knew he would go to the Overseer about it.

Q.—When you showed the milk to his honor what did he say?

A.—He said it had a lot of cream in it.

Then Mrs. Vaughn, with all the dignity she possessed, said she absolutely denied what was said in the presence of Mayor as given in testimony by him.

City Solicitor Pinkham asked if she said the mayor of Quincy was a liar, and she said "the Mayor belied me in his statement.

Then she said Mr. Green called Tim Shea vile names in her presence and vile language was used by Mr. Green in speaking of Mary Lane, both inmates.

She said that the preceding incident took place in March, and that it was Mr. Vaughn who told the Mayor for her about that profane language, She said she did not want to use those words.

Q—While your conference was going on between the four of you, did Mr. Green say anything.

A.—He interrupted once, and I asked him to stop. The Mayor then jumped up and said, I did not come down for this row and he went out.

Q—Have you had other talks with Mr. Green?

A—In March he came and stood in the doorway and said "Bring Jack Wrenn to me" and I did. He took Jack into the office and shortly after Jack came out. Then Mr. Green became confidential. We went into the the office, and Mr. Green said, Mrs. Vaughn, you and I will have a quite a talk here, and I will admit I was afraid of the man that day.

He said, Mrs. Vaughn I have talked with the State inspector and he told me you carried your husband over for years, and that your husband is practically no good. I asked if the State inspector said that, and he said yes. He said the inspector said, nothing but weeds were raised in the garden, and I said Mr. Green the State inspector knows nothing about Mr. Vaughn.

He then remarked, you worry me, and he looked out of the window and I said I will have to do something if things keep up. I said, Mr. Green, what is the matter. He answered there is a couple of pounds of sugar missing, and other things from here and there.

Q.—Was anything said about feeding the inmates?

A——Mr. Green came about four one afternoon, and he said Mrs. Vaughn, shut the door. He used bad language of course, he always does. I shut the door and he said, now Mrs. Vaughn I am giving an order to the beef company to have some bologna and sausage and frankforts and blood sausage, and I want you to pile it into them, so they will gas around and say this administration is feeding better than preceeding ones. Now he said, I am doing this for you. Then I gave him one of my home-made doughnuts.

On another day he said, Bob Johnson charged us 30 cents for stew beef and I know you never got it, and he was mad.

That was the same day he said, Mrs. Vaughn last night I stayed listening to all those dirty, rotten pups of Councilmen.

Mrs. Vaughn then said her egg supply was laid by about 50 hens that were bought in Fred Green's time, and that the supply only amounted to five or six eggs a day.

I asked Overseer Perry Green what I would do with the eggs; will they be given to inmates? He said no, don't give the damn things the eggs. You take them up to Bob Johnson's and get delicacies for yourself. Afterward he said I couldn't do that.

Q—Have you ever heard Mr. Vaughn refuse to carry out orders.

A—No, sir.

Q—Have you heard your husband use profane language?

A—No, sir. My husband is not that kind of a man.

Q—Has there been a lack of discipline?

A—We have always had good discipline except when Mr. Green came in. He pulled them into the house and they were unruly afterwards.

She said Mr. Green gave her orders to keep Herbie Colby busy because Mr. Green believed he was one of the men that went gassing around. I was ordered to keep Herbie running back and forth so he will be worn out and won't be able to gas. She explained how Herbie was out in all kinds of weather and eventually took sick.

In speaking of the horse incident mentioned by other witnesses, Mrs. Vaughn said her 13 year old daughter and herself were sitting under the tree mentioned, and Mr. Flanagan almost drove the horse on them.

Mrs. Vaughn had no recollection of the inmates washing white coats and told about her weekly distribution of clean flannels. She said Thomas Cooper left once because he wouldn't wash his room and once because he would not take a bath.

In cross examination by Mr. Pinkham, Mrs. Vaughn said the inmate Reed lied when he said he went seven weeks without changing his stockings and that all the inmates that testified to ill treatment lied. She said she did not use profanity and never heard her husband use it to inamtes or others, and that all the inmates that said he swore didn't tell the truth. She said she counted eggs after Mr. Green took office, and that occasionally she sold a can of milk, and that it was so infrequent she never kept track of it.

INMATE TESTIFIES.

Mrs. Ellen Shea, an inmate, introduced as a witness for the defense, under cross examination became a strong opposing witness. She said inmates were afraid to complain, and even to cough, and closed by remarking "thanks be to God she (Mrs. Vaughn) is away and that a good christian woman through influence of Mr. Green is in her place.

Counsel McAnarney attempted to have her verify a conversation he had the day before but was unsuccessful. Mrs. Shea is 62 years of age.

FORMER OVERSEER.

Fred Green seized the opportunity to vindicate himself after seven long years, and made the best of it, and in a speech said he could not too strongly recommend the work of Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn. He told how he became qualified to testify and how he was one of five men who passed a Civil service examination and one of three appointed to the State Board. As soon as the present Overseer has more experience, he will realize it is not right to place inmates in charge.

Mr. Green said when he was appointed the Quincy almshouse, in the list of the State inspector, was near the bottom, but that it rose to a position of prominence during his regime. He said if Mr. Vaughn was not competent he would not have remained as keeper.

When he told how the inmates, men and women, congregated in a room, drank liquor, and told smutty stories, Mr. Pinkham objected unless opposing counsel wanted to admit Mr. Green was there, and Mr. McAnarney retorted it became incompetent only through objection. An Alphonse and Gaston stunt was enacted, and suddenly Mr. Green admitted he was present, and Mr. McAnarney said, all right, I will have to turn you loose.

And loose he did go. He started a long story of the reform necessary, and how they were brought about. He said he knew Mr. Vaughn never ill treated inmates. He told of the frequency of his visits, and said he didn't want Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn to shoulder responsibility as he was responsible. What they did I ordered them to do, and I am willing to stand all of the circumstances.

He said Mrs. Vaughn was solicitous about the welfare of her inmates and there is no question she had their interests at heart.

When asked about profanity, he said "any man or women that says Mrs. Vaughn used profane language, I say he is a liar, and he gave force to his statement by pounding the table with his clenched fist.

He said Mr. Vaughn had the highest recommendations, Hon. John O. Hall.

EX-OVERSEER ELCOCK.

James Elcock, who succeeded Fred Green as overseer in Feb. 5, 1908, succeeded him as a witness, and said Mr. Vaughn was fully competent, never failed to carry out orders, and that discipline was maintained. He had never heard either Mr. or Mrs. Vaughn use profane language. I think she is too much of a lady for that. He believed Mr. Vaughn never abused inmates, and told how an orphan girl returned on a visit and hugged and kissed Mrs. Vaughn in his presence. He said if Mr. Vaughn stopped the removal of manure, mentioned in the first day's testimony by the administration witnesses he was carrying out his orders.

When he closed Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn had been given clean bills, and Mr. Pinkham started a short cross examination.

Q.—What records were turned over to you when you came into office?

A.—The inventories.

Q.—Any balance sheets?

A.—No, only the inventories.

At this point the attorneys conferred and owing to engagements both agreed to a postponement to next Monday at nine o'clock, when Hugo Jones may be introduced for the respondents, the other witnesses for the defense, and the closing arguments made.

E. O. Pierson Raises Controversy Between Organizations

Three communications have been received relative to the remarks of E. O. Pierson at the entertainment of the Daughters of Veterans on June 12, which are given in full:

Editor Daily Ledger:

Will you please allow me a small space in the paper. I would like to say, after reading the piece in the Saturday Ledger where the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary was denounced at the Daughters of Veterans entertainment last Friday night, that I guess John Pierson of Braintree does not know our auxiliary. Although for years we worked without a camp to help us, we did our mite for Post 88, also this Memorial day we tried to do our part in making wreaths and assisting at the Memorial day dinner, and financially, although it did not go direct to them. The auxiliary has always felt that what we have done, and what we will do, is appreciated by the Quincy post if not by outside veterans.

Patriotic Instructor,
Sons of Veterans Auxiliary 3

SHOULD BE ONLY FOUR.

Editors Daily Ledger:

Regarding the article appearing in Saturday's paper, we would like to say that as the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary was very conspicuous by its absence Friday evening, there were no cheers for the member who made herself disagreeable.

Comrade Pierson said: "I have never before had the opportunity to say "Daughters." I think there should be four organizations:—The Grand Army first, of course; the Women's Relief Corps, second; the Sons of Veterans third; the Daughters of Veterans fourth and no other organization."

This is nothing new. In fact it is an old story. What Comrade Pierson's remarks mean are, that those ladies who are not eligible to the Daughters of Veterans should become members of the Woman's Relief Corps The Sons of Veterans Auxiliary is not organized to benefit the Grand Army, and thus far has been unable to become recognized by the National department of the G. A. R.

Comrade Pierson was our guest and he has a right to his own opinion, and certainly a perfect right to express it. Perhaps we may not all agree with him in his opinion, but that is no reason for his making any change in it.

We very much regret to acknowledge that the person who took it on herself to be disrespectful to any member of the Grand Army, aside from the fact that she was discourteous to one of our guests, is a member of our organization. We are very anxious to impress on the public that we are not all of the same mind, and take advantage of this opportunity to defend Comrade Pierson and any other comrade, against reproach of any kind.

Sincerely yours in F. C. & L.
Emma L. Ela, President.
M. Christine Flynn, secretary and press correspondent.

AUXILIARY APPRECIATED.

Editor Quincy Daily Ledger:

My attention has been called to an item which appeared in the issue of the Ledger of June 13, under the heading of "Auxiliary Denounced," in which it is stated that one John Pierson of Braintree, treasurer of the Norfolk County Association, made an attack on the auxiliary to the Sons of Veterans. No one of the name of John Pierson is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic of Braintree, nor do we know any organization known as the "Norfolk County Associates," and any person speaking as representing the Grand Army of the Republic of Braintree in any way detrimental to the credit of the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary or of any other organization affiliated with General S. Thayer Post No. 87, G. A. R., does so without authority.

I wish to state that for the number of years that Post 87 of Braintree has had connected with it the Woman's Relief Corps, the Sons of Veterans, and the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary, we have had their undivided support and assistance, and we have only the most pleasant relations with them and feel under deep obligation to them for good work they have done for us.

Will you kindly give this letter the same prominence in your columns as you did the item above mentioned and relieve the Auxiliary to the Sons of Veterans of any discredit that may have attached to them by the publication of the said item.

The Fly's Stabilizers.

"On either side of the waist line of a fly is a stabilizer," says Dr. Bellesme, a famous entomologist. "This looks something like a base drum stick. These are extremely small, not more than one-fifteenth as long as the fly's wings, and while in flight they may be moved about, much as a tight rope walker uses a long pole for balancing himself.

"In experimenting with flies these little stabilizers have been removed. When released the fly begins his flight but without these stabilizers he describes a sort of semicircle and invariably lands on his back.

"Wasps and bees keep their balance while in flight by shifting the center of inflection of the abdomen and legs." —Exchange.

Would Have Made No Difference.

Sir Edward Cook in his "Life of Florence Nightingale" tells a story of a wounded soldier who picked up another wounded soldier and stumbled back into camp with him.

The rescued man turned out to be a general, no less, and when he went to see his rescuer in hospital the latter exclaimed:

"I'm glad I didn't know it was your honor. But if I'd known it was you I'd have saved you all the same!"

Young Men's Styles Rule the Roost This Week

Copyright 1914 The House of Kuppenheimer

In matters of clothes style, the young fellow always dictates--he never arbitrates or mediates with the mediocre. Fantastic fol-de-rols which are often offered as "clever style" he laughs out of court. Neither does he tolerate styles so straight-laced that they lean backward.

The reason why This Store is clothes headquarters for the young brigade is that we've caught the swing of the youthful spirit—we initiate where others imitate—create ideas that are six months new while others are copying ideas that are six months old.

This week we've mobilized a showing of young men's styles from the HOUSE OF KUPPENHEIMER — styles that look ahead, not backward. Here you find all the new summer fabrics— serges, worsted and tweeds — cut and tailored with the usual KUPFENHEIMER originalty.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

HALL PLACE M. E.

The text for the Sunday morning sermon by Rev. P. S. Neldon of the Hall Place M. E. church was taken from Jeremiah 7-11—"Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the Lord." After giving the setting for the lesson as given by Jeremiah, Mr. Neldon said that our reverence for God's house will depend on our reverence for God. If we have true reverence for God we will reverence His house.

The text for the evening service was St. John 12: 20 to 23, taking as the thought the 21st verse "Sir, we would see Jesus."

The "roll of honor" in the Sunday school will close the last Sunday in June the standing of the classes for the next two Sundays being reserved until the roll is closed.

GAMES FOR FOURTH OF JULY

An enthusiastic meeting of the Fourth of July committee was held Saturday evening and the program for the days celebration laid out as far as possible. This will include a parade in the early morning, under the direction of John Phelan, chief marshal, theatre parties for the children in two theatres in City Square, at Houghs Neck and at Wollaston beach, and a grand display of fireworks in the evening at Merrymount park.

Nothing definite has as yet been heard in regard to a battleship for Quincy on the Fourth, although President Stone of the association says that it looks very promising for one of Uncle Sams big fighters to be here on that day.

According to the present plans of the Fourth of July Athletic Committee there will be a ball game at each one of the playgrounds on the Fourth of July, the games being played either in the morning after the parade or in the afternoon. About 18 teams applied for games, and after much deliberation the committee decided on the following teams to play.

Morning games to be called at 10.30

Ward 2, Bigelow vs Holy Name Society.

Ward 3, Orients vs Red Men.

Ward 4, St. Mary's vs. Ave Maria, West Quincy league.

Merrymount, Div. 22 vs Copelands, West Quincy league.

Afernoon games, time to be decided:

Ward 3, Clark Class vs Hayes Class, Sunday School League.

Ward 4, Wampatucks vs Atlantic All Stars.

Merrymount Park, Quincy A. A. vs West Quincy League All Stars.

Fore River vs Beverly U. M. S. C.

The teams which were protested will have their cases decided tonight when the Athletic committee meets at the Y. M. C. A.

PICNICED AT HIGHLAND PARK

On Saturday, the Park and Downs Sunday School enjoyed their third consecutive outing at Highland Park. Two special cars left the junction of East and West Elm avenues at 8.30 A. M., containing from 150 to 175 children and parents out for a good time. On the way out, and also coming back the cars stopped in front of Dr. Anderson's residence in Randolph, a personal friend of Mr. Ayers, and the school gave him three rousing cheers.

The cars arrived at the park at 10.15 and the swings and the ball ground immediately claimed attention. Sides were quickly chosen on the ball field, ranging from fourteen year old boys to ones of forty-five. After enjoying two hours of this sport, there followed an hour of comparative quiet during which everybody fortified themselves for the afternoon by means of substantial lunches. After the dinner hour, the roller coaster started and with its numerous penny side shows quickly became the center of attraction with the merry-go-round a close second.

A base ball game between the classes of Mr. Fair and Mr. Blake was called off in the sixth inning with the score well advanced in favor of the latter team.

The two carousals then raked in more money until three o'clock when the principal event of the day took place, being a ball game between the Norwoll club and the St. John's Parochial school, the game resulting in a 9--2 victory for the visiting team.

The cars arrived in Wollaston at 7 P. M. bringing with them a crowd of tired though happy youngsters.

Four Governors Review Manchester's Flag Day Parade

Manchester, N. H., June 16.—Thirty thousand members of military and fraternal organizations, supplemented by scores of bands and floats, passed in review before Governors Felker, Walsh, Pothier and Fletcher and their staffs in the Flag Day parade—the greatest patriotic demonstration in the history of the city.

The parade took three hours to pass. It was preceded by flag raising exercises on Hanover common by the school children of Manchester. Representatives of nearly every city and town in New England were present.

Band concerts were held throughout the city and fireworks and a baquet were enjoyed last evening.

KILLS CHILD AND SELF

Death of Parents Probably Upset the Mind of Maine Woman

Livermore Falls, Me., June 16.—Franklin county officials were called to the A. D. Brown farm in the town of Jay to investigate what proved to be a murder and suicide.

They found that Mrs. William Brown, aged 38, in a fit of melancholia, hanged her only child, a boy of 6, and committed suicide by shooting while they were alone on the farm.

Mrs. Brown's father, Augustus D. Brown, was the first veteran to die at the Gettysburg reunion last summer. His death and that of her mother, shortly afterward, are believed to have affected her mind.

Senators Overman and Chilton to Have Themselves Investigated

Washington, June 16.—The way was opened in the senate for an investigation of the use of senate stationery and the alleged employment of government officials in connection with the promotion of a North Carolina gold mine.

Senator Overman, one of those mentioned in connection with the mine, introduced a resolution calling for such an inquiry and it was indorsed by Senator Chilton, whose name figured in the same way.

The resolution was referred to the committee on contingent expenses, and probably will be reported for action within a few days.

Over 4700 pounds in weight has been taken from the Defiance, which will be hauled out today at City island. Her sails are now being recut in Boston. It is hoped to have the Defiance out for a spin next Saturday.

DRIVEN BACK BY KING

Rebels Make Unsuccessful Attack on Capital of Albania

Durazzo, Albania, June 16.—Albanian rebels, who attacked this city, were repulsed in a battle that raged fifteen hours.

During the greater part of the fight the defenders were led by Prince William of Wied, the new King of Albania, who took command when Major Thompson, the Dutch commander of the gendarmerie, was killed early in the fight.

At one time the rebels were within 500 yards of the city. Three attacks were made on the capital at 4 o'clock in the morning, and throughout the day the conflict went on fiercely. The rebels finally withdrew at 7 o'clock last evening.

BOMB FOR ITALIAN CONSUL

Fuse Fails to Work on High-Powered Infernal Machine

New York, June 14.—A high-powered bomb, with a powder fuse, which had been lighted, was found in the porter's room on the third floor of 212 Lafayette street, across a narrow hallway from the office of Count Faroni, Italian consul in New York.

Detectives investigating the case declare that an attempt had been made to assassinate the count, but that the fuse had been extinguished by the dampness of the room and the inexpertness with which it had been made.

The Italian consul has been active recently in having Italian criminals deported.

WILL STICK TO HIS PROGRAM

Wilson Will Not Be Routed by Efforts of the "Interests"

MOVE AGAINST LEGISLATION

President Sees Conspiracy to Defeat Trust Measure In Correspondence to Cabinet Officers, Senators and Representatives Urging Congress to Adjourn—Says Efforts Will Fail

Washington, June 16.—A sensation rivalling President Wilson's remarkable lobby charges of a combine to defeat the tariff bill was launched by the president himself. He bluntly charged that a combination of business interests is behind the agitation to compel congress to adjourn without enacting trust legislation.

The president caused to be made public correspondence which he said "speaks for itself" and proves his contention that the so-called country-wide business depression is "purely psychological."

In support of that view, the White House made public copies of such letters and telegrams which have been brought in by friends of the administration. One of the letters which fell into the hands of White House officials in that way was circulated by the Simmons Hardware company of St. Louis, under date of June 9. Just prior to that date, President Wilson had offered to E. C. Simmons, president of that company, a place on the federal reserve board.

Monday, just before the president expressed his views on the trust program, it was announced that Simmons had declined the appointment and that Charles S. Hamlin of Boston would be nominated in his stead.

White House officials denied that the Simmons letter had to do with the declination of the appointment. It was said, however, that the president did not know of the letter when he offered Simmons the place.

The president's declaration and the publication of the letters created a mild sensation, approaching that which followed the president's denunciation of the "insidious lobby" which, he said, was threatening the tariff bill last year. Senators and representatives discussed the incident with avidity, but no action was taken.

The correspondence includes a letter sent out by W. P. Abnelt, president of the Pictorial Review company of New York, asking its representatives and correspondents to send form letters to the president and leading legislators demanding that all proposed trust legislation be abandoned for the present.

"The correspondence speaks for itself," was the only comment on the subject the president would make at this time.

He insisted, however, that this is only a single instance of the way in which business interests have attempted to create opposition to his anti-trust plan and declared their efforts would fail. He told callers he is prepared to stay here all summer, if necessary, to get his trust program completed.

The Pictorial Review letter to business men said:

"Prosperity has been lost somewhere in this country, owing to the mischievous activities of the politicians." Enclosed was a circular letter and a night lettergram which the recipients were asked to send to President Wilson, Vice President Marshall, Attorney General McReynolds, Speaker Clark, their senators and congressmen and members of the interstate commerce commission.

TO PREVENT GANGRENE

Surgeons Reverse Flow of Blood In Leg of Their Patient

Richmond, June 16.—Surgeons here are watching closely the effect of a rare operation performed upon F. D. Luck, a railroad man.

The arteries of Luck's right leg becoming choked by an overgrowth of their walls, an amputation because of gangrene being in prospect, surgeons opened the patient's thigh and reversed the blood currents by turning the arterial blood into the veins, and vice versa.

The leg now seems to be coming very slowly back to normal.

MARKHEIM IS SENTENCED

New York Man Gets Prison Term For Fire Insurance Frauds

New York, June 16.—For defrauding twenty insurance companies out of $131,000 on fire claims, Louis Markheim was sentenced to serve not less than two years nor more than three and one-half years in Sing Sing prison.

Markheim's claims were for losses in a fire in his embroidery establishment on April 12, 1913. He was convicted of grand larceny.

Tolls Repeal Bill Signed

Washington, June 16.—President Wilson has signed the Panama canal tolls repeal bill.

DEFENDS SUPREME COURT

Taft Declares It a Great Bulwark In Age of Extremists

Cambridge, Mass., June 16.—At the annual meeting of the Harvard chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, William H. Taft, Yale '78, delivered the oration.

"The Supreme Court of the United States and Popular Self-Government" was the subject of the address of the former President of the United States. For years it was his cherished ambition some day to serve on that tribunal, but in order to do what he conceived to be his whole duty by the Filipinos, Taft thrice declined an appointment.

He defended the court as a bulwark against our own hasty action and a tribunal urgently needed in this age of extremists and reformers. The will of the people, he demonstrated, has never been defeated by that court, but its acts have beeen generally acquiesced in by the people and its decisions vindicated by subsequent events.

CHASING TAX DODGERS

Treasury Department Has Many Secret Sources of Information

Washington, June 16.—Treasury agents are making ready to take the trail of income tax dodgers.

The time for payment of this tax does not expire until July 1, but it is known that the treasury department already has the information necessary for the prosecution of many persons who made false retprns.

It may take months, or even years, to catch up with some of the tax dodgers, but the officials say the chase will be relentless. The records of all banks and business concerns are open to the department and its agents have many secret sources of information.

SAYS THAW MUST REMAIN IN CUSTODY

Supreme Court Denies Bail to Matteawan Fugitive

Washington, June 16.—Harry K. Thaw was denied release on bail pending consideration by the supreme court of his extradition from New Hampshire to New York.

The court also declined to grant the request that Thaw be taken to Pittsburg in the custody of Sheriff Drew of Coos county, N. H., to testify in the settlement of his father's estate.

Judge Aldrich of the federal court in New Hampshire ordered Thaw's release on habeas corpus proceedings. The supreme court will next pass upon that.

NEW MARCH ON CAPITAL

Mrs. Wiley Will Head Large Deputation of Suffragists

Washington, June 16.—Another suffragist march on the White House is being planned as the result of the indorsement of woman suffrage by the Federation of Women's clubs at Chicago.

President Wilson will be asked to receive a deputation of suffrage club women headed by Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley on June 30. The deputation will be composed of several hundred representative club women from all the states.

The demonstration will come as the climax of a campaign for favorable action on the suffrage amendment by the house rules committee on July 1.

KING WINS HIS POINT

New Elections For All but His Members of Danish Parliament

Copenhagen, June 16.—A compromise was reached on the question of the dissolution of the upper house of the Danish parliament. The premier desired dissolution but the king maintained that the twelve life members appointed by himself should not be included.

In a way the king has carried his point, because by the present arrangement new elections will be ordered for the fifty-four ordinary members of the upper house, and the burning question of the twelve members nominated by the king has been postponed.

PASSES THIRD READING

Plural Voting Bill Gets by In British House of Commons

London, June 16.—The plural voting bill passed its third reading in the house of commons last night by a vote of 320 to 242.

It embodies the principle of "one man, one vote," and provides that before a general election a plural voter must select which of his votes he wishes to register.

Two Murders by Gunmen

New York, June 16.—Gunmen killed two men in the East Side, seriously wounded a third and stray bullets struck two children, causing superficial wounds. Revenge is assigned as the cause for both murders.

CURTIS GAINS OVER NEWBERT

Leads Gubernatorial Contest In the Maine Primaries

BIG CITIES CLINCH VICTORY

Bunker Defeats Sullivan For Democratic Nomination For State Auditor—McGillicuddy, State's Only Democratic Congressman, Named Without Opposition

Portland, Me., June 16.—Mayor Oakley C. Curtis of Portland has won the Democratic nomination for governor. While returns are incomplete and the vote between Curtis and Mayor Elmer E. Newbert of Augusta is close, there is margin enough to assure Curtis' victory.

Returns from 400 out of 522 cities, towns and plantations give Curtis 5292, Newbert 4389, Bertrand C. McIntire of Waterford 3670, and Peter C. Keegan of Van Buren 1210.

It is figured that the Democratic strength of Portland and nearby places will clinch Curtis' victory and that neither Newbert or McIntire can hope to catch him. South Berwick, for example, gives Curtis 245 to 7 for Newbert and 5 for McIntire.

In the contest for the Democratic nomination for state auditor, J. E. Bunker of Eden led J. E. Sullivan of Bangor in those towns by 1290. Bunker had 6061 and Sullivan 4771.

J. C. Scates of Westbrook and Mayor Mullen of Bangor are leading with small margins in the contests for the Democratic nominations for congress in the First and Fourth districts.

Governor Haines and four of the representatives in congress, three of whom are Republicans, were nominated without opposition.

Daniel J. McGillicuddy, the only Democratic Maine congressman, was renominated without opposition in the second district, and Harold M. Sewell of Bath will be the Republican candidate there. W. R. Pattangall is unopposed for the Democratic nomination for congress in the Third district.

Percy F. Morse of Portland was nominated for governor on the Socialist ticket. There were no contests for any nominations in that party.

CURLEY SWINGS THE AXE

Hub Mayor Lops Off Heads and Makes Reductions In Salaries

Boston, June 16.—Five employes of the city collecting department, including Richard F. Field, ex-Mayor Fitzgerald's old assistant secretary, were summarily dismissed from the city's service by Mayor Curley last night.

In addition to discharging five employes of this department, the mayor swung his axe at the general payroll of the department. He reduced one Fitzgerald lieutenant both in position and salary, took a big slice off the salary of another, and cut the salaries of all the rest who were receiving $1200 a year or more. This latter cut was a 5 percent one, like he has administered in most other city departments.

CHURCHES DESTROYED

Fourteen Burned and Many Others Damaged by Italian Strikers

Rome, June 16.—Church property suffered severely during the riots accompanying the general strike in Italy, according to reports presented to Pope Pius.

These show that fourteen churches were burned and thirty-nine damaged, while twenty-three others were looted.

At Bologna, however, rioters set fire to the cathedral, the Church of Peace and the Church of the Holy Cross in Senigallia on the Adriatic, after they had sprinkled the floors with petroleum. Cavalry arrived in time to prevent the destruction of the cathedral, but the interiors of the other churches were devastated.

Lighted Cigaret Is Believed to Have Ignited Gas In Trench

Columbus, O., June 16.—Five men are dead and ten are probably fatally injured as the result of a gas explosion, which occurred in a trench in which a gang of laborers were laying a gas main.

The cause of the accident has not been fully determined, but it is believed that a cap on a joint of gas pipe was blown off and that the escaping gas was ignited by a lighted cigaret.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The graduation exercises of the Belcher Gramamr school will be held this evening in the school hall.

The Junior class of the High school are to hold a picnic. The date is probably this week Friday at Glen Echo lake.

The class day exercises of the High school are being held this afternoon on the school grounds. A very large attendance is expected. The chorus has been trained by Miss Harriet Whittier and the music is splendid:

Children's day was observed in general throughout Milton on Sunday. The exercises at the East Congregational church were beautiful. Much credit is due to Mrs. Hurd for the splendid singing of the children. The singing of Miss Dorothy Fuller was very good.

The exercises at the First Baptist church were very well attended. The graduation of members of the Primary department was very impressive. The youngsters had learned their parts well and it was wonderful to hear the graduates say from memory the Lord's Prayer, The Beatitudes, the Disciples, the Ten Commandments and the 23rd Psalm. The other pieces and songs were beautiful. George Tocher, directed the music of the school.

PAY ROLL HELD UP.

The hundreds of city employees in the street, sewer and water departments of the city, who are usually paid off once a week on Wednesdays, will have to wait this week a day longer, because the Mayor refused to sign the pay roll. Usually these city employees are paid on Wednesday but as City Hall will close tomorrow it was planned to pay off the men tonight.

According to the City Auditor the pay rolls were placed on the Mayor's desk Monday afternoon. It was supposed that the Mayor would approve them this morning or Monday afternoon. His Honor however claims that he is allowed twenty-four hours in which to consider the pay rolls before signing them, according to reports about City Hall this morning he intends this time to take his full time in considering the pay roll.

Under the law all bills, and warrants for the payment of bills are first made out by the City Auditor and then go to the Mayor for his approval ,and until he approves the warrant the City Treasurer can not pay out money on any bills or money for labor performed. The Mayor is supposed to have twenty-four hours in which to consider these warrants but no Mayor has hertofore claimed the full limit of the time until today.

WON IN THE FIFTH.

The crack Saturday Evening Post team showed their class on the diamond once more Saturday when they defeated the West Quincy Club 7 to 4 at the Ward Four playground.

The West End aggregation of ball tossers were generally conceded as the winners before the game, as the Post team was minus the services of its regular battery. The Post team, by giving their pitcher gilt edge support found the West Quincy boys easy victims however.

The Industrious Chinaman.

Of all oriental workmen the Chinese are undoubtedly the best, though there may be some with experience of both races who may be disposed to give the palm to the Japanese. A European who thoroughly understands his business, and who is able to impart his knowledge and his instructions in a clear manner to his Chinese subordinate, and who moreover is blessed with a little patience and tact, will find little difficulty in the management and control of Chinese labor of whatever kind. Speaking generally, they are good and conscientious workmen, and many indeed are very clever fellows. The quality of the work turned out by a good Chinese fitter, turner, or machine man varies little from that of the average good British workman of the same class, but the latter would beat him in point of time.—London Express

100 LOTS AT PUBLIC AUCTION

ON EASY TERMS

EAST MILTON TERRACE

EAST MILTON TERRACE comprises 1,500,000 sq. ft., of land which we have subdivided into lots of the regular size suitable for a home and garden. This property was formerly known as the Robertson Estate, and was more recently used by Mr. Fearing as a dairy farm. The soil is therefore very rich and free from stone, and each lot makes an ideal home site.

EAST MILTON TERRACE is located on Adams Street, which is the main thoroughfare between East Milton and Quincy. The trolley line connecting East Milton and Quincy passes Robertson Street, which is on the property.

THE REASON FOR THIS SALE

When Mr. Fearing decided to give up this property, we purchased the entire place at a very low figure. We now hold nearly all the available building land in this section, but we realize that the keynote of our success is the rapid growth of this neighborhood which means increase in value. And we realize that it is impossible to get this rapid growth without having the public as owners of a large portion of the available building land. For this reason we are offering 100 lots at Public Auction, and on the following terms : 10 per cent. down ; 10 per cent. on the delivery of papers and $5 per month, with a minimum deposit of $25 on each purchase.

TO GET TO EAST MILTON TERRACE

From Quincy---Take East Milton cars to Robertson Street, or walk up Adams Street from Quincy to East Milton Terrace 15 minutes.

From Boston---Take train to East Milton from South Station at 1.36.

THE SALE WILL BE HELD ON THE PROPERTY AT 2 O'CLOCK on each of the following days

MERGER IS NOT POPULAR

(Special from State House.)

Alarmed by the comprehensive nature of the plan which involves the merger of the trolley lines in the metropolitan district, opponents of that plan who favor a thorough investigation of its scope, have requested the legislative committees on street railways and metropolitan affairs, which now has the matter under advisement, to delay the final decision until the plan is approved or disapproved by the officials, civic organizations and labor organizations in every city and town of the commonwealth in which the companies to be merged are located.

The salient recommendations of these people are that the matter be referred to the Public Service Commission for investigation. During his investigation these people would have the city officials, the Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce, the labor unions and all other organizations interested in the welfare of communities advise the commission as to whether or not the merger, in their opinion was satisfactory.

The possibility of an increase of fare after the amalgamation of these vast interests has disturbed the opponents. It is contended by them that the provisions of the new bill do not confine the new company to the fares now in existence but would enable the amalgamated lines to increase fares for the purpose of paying all its overhead charges, in addition to depreciation of property and, finally, a dividend of 6 per cent.

ELECTRIC CARS IN COLLISION

Car from Weymouth Crashes Into Car from Quincy at Newcomb Square

Several Employees of Shipyard Hurt on Way to Work

No statement has been issued by the officials of the Bay State Street Railway Co. who are investigating why one car sileswiped another at the entrance to the Fore River shipyard at 7.30 Wednesday morning, endangering the lives of 50 passengers, but it is thought to have been due to defective brakes.

Of the eight injured none were seriously hurt and John Robery of Weymouth and John Lawrie of Weymouth who were treated at Quincy City Hospital are now at their homes. Duncan Currie of 103 Phillips street, Weymouth, and John E. Bates of Pennington road, Weymouth, who were treated at the office of Dr. C. W. Garey, the former for a fractured rib and the latter for a shock to his system, are doing well today. Four others whose names were not taken were treated at the Red Cross Hospital in the shipyard.

The fact that both cars were open giving the men a chance to jump accounts for the few reported injured although several had narrow escapes.

The runaway car was in charge of Motorman John Daley, and was coming down Haywards hill. When it got beyond control and hit a car entering the spur track which had come to a dead stop because the trolley slipped from the wires. It was in charge of Motorman John Connolly.

The runaway hit the stalled car with terrific force and lifted its rear end from the track, causing its sides to buckle. The front of Daleys car was twisted.

The noise from the collision and the shouts of the passengers aroused the neighborhood. An emergency call for doctors was sent out and many responded only to find their services were not needed.

MAY RECEIVE MEDAL OF HONOR

Rear Admiral Fletcher Recommends One for Gisburn

A dispatch from Washington says that Rear Admiral Fletcher has recommended Edward A. Gisburn, the Quincy boy injured at the taking of Vera Cruz, for a medal of honor and a gratuity of $100 in gold for "extraordinary heroism in battle."

Young Gisburn who was at one time in the employ of the Daily Ledger and left his position to enlist in the navy, is about 20 years of age. He was attached to the battleship Florida as an electrician, third class, and at the occupation of Vera Cruz was stationed on the top of the Terminal hotel signaling when he was shot by a snipper. He was taken aboard the hospital ship Solace, where it was necessary later to amputate his leg, in order to save his life, just at the knee. Later he was removed to Washington where he is at present living with an aunt.

The bravery of these signal men, who are constantly exposed to fire by the snippers has been recognized in general orders. Several of them were wounded during the engagement.

Temperature of 47 degrees was reported on the early morning of the Seventeenth of June.

JUMPED INTO QUARRY

Suicide of Mrs. Frederick W. Williams

The finding of a woman's gray skirt blue coat and a pair of gold bowed spectacles near Wendell's quarry at Quincy Neck on Tuesday afternoon gave the impression that some one had committed suicide by jumping into the quarry. Inquiry in the neighborhood by the police brought out the information that a woman had been seen earlier in the morning going in that direction. Parties who saw the woman say that she wore a gray skirt and blue coat.

Wednesday morning, Chief Burrell with Officers Malone, Phillips and Cahill visited the quarry with grappling irons and after an hour or more dragging succeeded in bringing the body to the surface. The body proved to be that of Mrs. Frederick W. Williams of 168 Federal avenue, the wife of a carpenter, employed by Henry M. Faxon.

Mrs. Williams has been in poor health for some time, and this coupled with a surgical operation which she underwent recently is supposed to have unbalanced her mind. She left her home about 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, and this was the last seen of her. She was missed that afternoon and a search was being made for her, but her husband was unable to find any trace of her whereabouts. After the body had been viewed by Medical Examiner Jones it was given in charge of an undertaker.

PAY ROLL NOT HELD UP

City Treasurer Does Not Wait for the Mayor

Although Mayor Miller declined to approve the pay roll of the city laborers until it had been in his possession 24 hours, the men did not have to wait until Thursday for their pay, as City Treasurer Curtis went ahead Tuesday afternoon and paid the men what was due them. The pay roll was for work done up to last Friday. Usually these men are paid on Wednesdays, but this week on account of Wednesday being a holiday it was decided to pay them on Tuesday. The City Auditor placed the pay roll warrant on the Mayor's desk for approval Monday afternoon, but it is understood that His Honor did not notice them until Tuesday morning.

As he had notified all departments that their pay rolls must be in his hands 24 hours before the time of payment, he evidently intended to teach someone a lesson. City Treasurer Curtis, however, held that since the men had worked last week and their payroll had been approved by the heads of the several departments, there was no justice in keeping their money from them over the holiday, so he paid off.

The question now is, what action if any the Mayor will take in the premises. When the Chief Engineer of the Fire department did something before the Mayor gave the word, he was punished by being suspended for three days. Perhaps the Mayor will seek to punish the City Treasurer in the same way.

Some of the city laborers, who had been summoned to testify before the hearing in the Vaughn case, found that their envelopes did not contain a full week's pay, the day they were at the hearing having been deducted.

It appears that the head of the departments where these men were employed marked them as absent the day they were off duty, not officially knowing that they had been summoned as witnesses. The question now is, who is to pay them for the day lost?

PIPE PRESENTED AT FAREWELL

Theodore Hermanson, considered Quincy's strong man for several years was given a farewell reception at the home of Representative and Mrs. Edward J. Sandberg on Buckley street, Tuesday evening. For several years he has been assistant foreman at the Blake and Knowles pump works at Cambridge and leaves today to be a foreman at the Eppin Carpenter pump works in Pittsburg, Penn. A handsome meerschaum pipe, hand carved was presented in behalf of his many friends. The speech was made by ex-Representative Peter T. Fallon.

The long arborway was electrically illuminated and a banquet was served in the open air, after which dancing was enjoyed in the garage. Music was by graphaphone. Many were present to extend their farewell to Mr. Hermanson.

MINSTRELS AT SQUANTUM

Lots of Good Talent and Show a Big Success

Squantum enjoyed a minstrel show Tuesday and Wednesday nights at the Squantum Inn by the members of the Squantum Improvement association. The affair was to raise funds for improvements in Squantum, including money for oiling all stagnant pools this summer to prevent the breeding of mosquitoes.

The show was a great success, by far the best amateur show that Squantum has ever seen. A great deal of hard work had been put into the show to make it a success and great credi is due all who took part. It is believed that close to $100 was raised toward improvements for the benefi of the entire community.

The accompanist of the evening wa Mrs. Ethel Jones Bostwick, who de serves a good deal of credit for th evenings success. J. Hackel of Bos ton was the violinist. The musi was arranged by Charles Bostwic who also acted in the capacity of di rector. The end men who put th punch into the jokes were John Jep son, Jr., James Allen, James Foster Charles Bostwick, Charles Singleton and David Olson.

After the opening chorus which wa well rendered, James Allen sang " love the ladies." He sang in a clear voice and was warmly applauded and responded to the encore. C. S. Pur cell sang a tenor solo "A little love, a little kiss," which was well received David Olson hal one of the catchies songs of the evening, "All aboard for Dixie land." It was well sung and he had to respond to an encore.

"Where the red, red roses grow," sung by Master Frederick Bean was a gem, and the little lad received such an ovation that he had to sing "Rebecca of Sunny-brook farm," which was the hit of the evening. Charles Bostwick was a scream in his song "Constantly." Mr. Bostwick is some comedian and did his solo in a very droll manner.

Lester Wallace one of Squantum's favorite singers, who has a charming bass voice of wide range, sang "Shall I, wasting in despair." He received a great reception and responded with "A little grey house in the West." "Just a touch of love" was well rendered by Martin Kirby. C. S. Singleton got a good laugh with his song "I am saving up coupons to buy one of those." For an encore he sung a parody on the Women's clubhouse John Jepson, Jr., made a hit in his song "He's a devil," He put vim and color into it that went well.

Herbert A. Smith, president of the Squantum Improvement association was the interlocutor. The opening number of the olio was a reading entitled "The soldier and his pard," by B. Sturgis Wood. Mr. Wood is a well known reader and his rendition of this piece showed the marks of a finished elocutionist. Mr. Wood received long applause which brought him back to give two comic recitations. Mr. Westlake in an original skit was entertaining, and his tricks proved that he is a professional. John Jepson, the sketch artist, drew several pictures that were take-off's on local people and was very entertaining.

An intermission of ten minutes followed while stage settings for the play "At the Junction" coached by Louise Osborne Holt, were placed. The cast of characters included; Fanny Quick, Letitia McCarty, Clara Cute, Thelma Holt, Jack Sharp, James Allen, Percy Kean, Charles Cullen and Jotham Spotts, Edward Carlson. The play was bright and witty and the situations was laughable. The artists showed that they had put lots of hard work into it and it would be hard to say that one took their part better than the other as it all was so cleverly done. The success was partly due to Mrs. Holt who has been a well known vaudeville artist.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

For sixteen years the Weymouth Firemn's Relief Association has, on the second Sunday in June of each year, tendered a memorial to their deceased members, and attended divine service in a body. This year the graves in various parts of the town were decorated in the early morning by detail except the Village cemetery at North Weymouth.

Special cars conveyed members and guests to Thomas's Corner at nine o'clock where a line of march was formed as follows: President Edgar S. Wright; platoon of police in command of Chief Patrick Butler; Stetson Shoe band, George White, leader; Fire Chief Walter W. Pratt and District Chiefs, John Q. Hunt of East Weymouth, Russell B. Worster of the Landing, Mathew O'Dowd of South Weymouth and Philip W. Wolfe of North Weymouth; one hundred and three members and ex-firemen. The line of march was North, Bridge and Sea streets, back to North and thence to the Village cemetery.

After the graves were decorated, the line formed and proceeded to the Old North church, where a portion of the auditorium had been reserved and a special service arranged, as follows: Organ voluntary, "Grand Offertory" Mrs. Fred G. McDowell; anthem, "Great and Glorious," with solo by Myron G. Ford and chorus choir; invocation, Rev. Mr. Yaegar; sermon, subject "Immortality," Rev. Edward J. Yaegar; solo, "The Earth is the Lord's," Fred McDowell and choir; postlude, "Grand Choruses," Mrs. McDowell. Miss Minnie Hunt had charge of the decorations which were potted plants, cut flowers and wild blossoms of red, white and blue, in honor of the firemen and Flag day. President Edgar S. Wright and Walter Pratt, district chief, occupied the pulpit with the pastor. A silver offering was made to the church by the firemen.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

PREPARATION FOR BUYING.

If a business man has an important purchase to make, he looks in the market news or his trade paper to see what the prices are, and what the chances are that the market will rise or fall. Then he is in a position to know how far he can bargain with a salesman.

One of the principal reasons why household buying used to be unscientific was that it was conducted without this preliminary preparation. A customer went into a store, and if she saw something she liked, she bought it on the spot. But very likely the store next door was offering the same goods for 25 per cent less money.

This principle is so thoroughly realized today, that most people turn to the newspaper advertising before making purchases of any importance.

Market and trade conditions change so rapidly, that it is not enough for a customer to have general intelligence about shopping. The good purchase of today is the bad one of tomorrow. The news of the stores needs to be followed from week to week in the newspaper advertising.

PHILOSOPHY OF WEDDINGS.

The social philosopher who, interested in the ways of men and women, sets out to analyze the human traits seen in modern weddings, of course finds the most abundant material in June, the month of high tide of nature's beauty.

Perhaps the first impression is the amount of horse play which the humor loving American people tolerate. Probably in no other country do women in delicate silk gowns crawl down dirty coal holes in order to get admission to churches where notables are being married.

In no other country are bridegrooms kidnapped. Nowhere else is it considered good form to pursue a retreating couple to the hotel where they encounter the embarrassing mysteries of the wedding night. It is partly for this reason, partly on account of fuss and feathers, that father and the bridegroom are growing more and more favorable to elopements.

In the circles supposed to belong to "society," all the paraphernalia of bridesmaids and flowers, and spreads and favors, are but little outside the regular machinery of life. They are comfortably handled, if the price can be raised or borrowed. But among many simple hearted people, a splurge is made that is remote and foreign to the ordinary habits of life.

Houses are thrown into turmoil, until father can scarcely find a closet free from encumbrance of fluffy brifound that the best damask sofa is dal material. After it is over, it is ruined by a mayonnaise sandwich. It takes about a year for the furniture and decorations to recover.

Young men from the country make furtive trips to the old clothes man to hire dress uits. There is anxious searching of the etiquette books by the feminine element. Probably more and more people are now realizing the bad form of an elaboration out of line with one's ordinary habits. But a great many people spend more on eddings than they can afford.

GAVE ORDER TO PORT THE HELM

Storstad's Mate on Board When She Hit Empress of Ireland

SPEEDY TRIP WAS PLANNED

Witness Does Not Know Whether Collier Was to Get Bonus—Failed to Call Captain When Fog Settled—Believed He Had Right of Way When Crash Occurred

Quebec, June 18.—Every effort was being made for a speedy trip on the Storstad on the voyage when she rammed and sunk the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence, according to the testimony given by Alfred Tuftenes, first officer of the collier, when he took the witness stand in the official inquiry being conducted into the disaster.

Tuftenes did not know if Captain Andersen of the Storstad got a bonus for a quick trip, but he admitted that time appeared to be important, as the Storstad was unloaded at night upon her arrival at Montreal.

Captain Kendall of the Empress of Ireland had previously testified that in his opinion the disaster had been caused by the Storstad porting her helm when she bore down upon the liner.

Tuftenes, who was on the bridge when the Empress was sighted, admitted that he had given an order to port the helm on the night of the accident. He had done so, he said, to keep his ship from swinging around in the opposite direction.

The witness denied hearing the long blasts from the whistle of the Empress, but admitted seeing the lights of the Empress almost upon his bows when he ordered his ship ahead and gave the order to port helm.

Tuftenes became confused on the stand and contradicted some of his previous replies. When asked why he had violated rules and not called Andersen when fog began to settle on the night of the disaster he said he wanted to be sure that thick weather had settled down before arousing the captain.

Tuftenes insisted that there was no explosion and no sheet of flame from the side of the Empress when she was struck, as Kendall had described. Tuftenes swore that all he saw were sparks such as might have been expected from the impact of steel on steel.

The first officer said he believed the Storstad had the right of way and that he was entitled to keep his course at reduced speed, even though he had signalled previously to the Empress that he had stopped. He blamed the current for swinging the ship and said she had not sufficient headway to give quick response to her helm.

Tuftenes declared that, when the steamers collided the Empress was making ten knots and the Storstad only one knot. It was the speed of the Empress, he explained, which caused the Storstad's bow to sink twelve feet into the side of the passenger vessel.

DECLARED EXCESSIVE

Boston Man Loses $154,216 Verdict Against English Wool Concern

Boston, June 18.—Frank Edwards of Boston loses a $154,216.89 verdict awarded him a year ago by a Suffolk county jury in his suit against Francis Wooley & Co., wool merchants of Bradford, Eng., by a decision of the full bench of the supreme court.

Edwards was suing for commissions on sales as United States representative of the English concern for eleven years. The decree was granted on the grounds that the amount was excessive.

ARMY FLIER KILLED

Head of Aeroplane Depot Was Testing Self-Righting Machine

Chartres, France, June 18.—Major Felix, commanding the aeroplane depot here, was killed while testing a new self-righting aeroplane. At a height of sixty feet the machine fell.

The cause of the accident is a mystery, as the aeroplane was found to be in perfect order. It is thought Felix stopped his engine with the intention of testing the machine at planing, and that while doing so he attempted to turn too sharply and the aeroplane capsized.

OBJECTION TO "REGRET"

United States Treaty With Colombia Runs Against a Snag

Washington, June 18.—The effort of the administration to obtain the ratification of treaties with Colombia and Nicaragua ran into a snag in the senate foreign relations committee, and there was evidence that the opposition would prove sufficiently strong to bring on a lively fight in the committee and a harder battle on the senate floor.

Objection to the proposed pact with Nicaragua was outspoken, some senators making it plain that they would insist that the state department agree to radical changes in its construction.

The word "regret" in the treaty, suggesting an apology to Colombia from the United States, is the basis of their opposition.

KAISER WILHELM II IS BADLY DAMAGED

Great Hole Torn In Her Side by Freight Steamer

Southampton, Eng., June 18.—The North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II., from Southampton for New York with 1000 passengers, lies at anchor off Netley, three miles to the southeast, with a big hole in her side amidships, caused by a collision with the Liverpool grain steamer Incemore, from a Black sea port for Antwerp.

The Incemore, a much smaller steamer, of 3000 odd tons, is in dock here with her bows badly smashed.

The collision occurred in the English channel in a dense fog. Just how it occurred and on which vessel lies the responsibility cannot be ascertained at present.

The officers of the Kaiser Wilhelm II. have permitted no communication to be held with anyone on board, and they themselves have refused to give out any information whatever. Such scant details as have been obtained came from the Incemore.

Would-Be Rescuers Share Fate of Boy Who First Fell In

Driftwood, Pa., June 18.—While playing near his home here Harold Jordan, aged 11, fell into an abandoned well. His cries attracted the attention of Rodney Ives, aged 17, who climbed into the well in an attempt to save him.

Finding he could not bring the boy to the surface, Ives called for help, and was answered by John Jordan. When he reached the boys they clung to him so that his hold on the rough sides of the well was broken and the three, slipping down into the water, were drowned.

WON'T SPEAK IN FALL CAMPAIGN

Roosevelt Is Handicapped by an Affection of the Larynx

YIELDS TO DOCTOR'S ORDER

Told by London Specialist That He Must Exercise Greatest Care For Months to Come—Brazilian Fever Added to Trouble Caused by His Last Hard Campaign

London, June 18.—Theodore Roosevelt is suffering from an affection of the larynx as a direct result of the hardships he endured in his recent Brazilian trip, which will effectually prevent him from taking part as an orator in the political campaign in the United States this fall and compel him to exercise the greatest care for some months to come.

"This is my answer to those who wanted me to go into a campaign," said Roosevelt in describing the condition of his throat. "If anyone expected me to do so, I cannot now."

The announcement of Roosevelt's disability was made public after he had paid a visit to Sir St. Clair Thomson, professor of laryngology and physician for diseases of the nose and throat in King's College hospital, a specialist whom he had consulted when he was in London in 1910.

The exertion of addressing the Royal Geographical society brought about a culmination of the weakness which Roosevelt's friends observed on his arrival in London.

Thomson, after a thorough examination, pronounced the verdict that Roosevelt must not attempt to speak in the open air, or indulge in extended speech-making under any circumstances for several months. He said the condition was the result of Roosevelt's last hard campaign as a primary cause, and that the Brazilian fever, from which the colonel had suffered, affected his throat, settling on the patient's weakest spot.

The ex-president accepted the situation cheerfully. He announced that he would obey the doctor's orders, with the object of sparing his throat.

Concluding an audience with newspaper representatives, Roosevelt said emphatically, emphasizing his declaration with familiar beatings of the right hand on the left:

"If any statement on political subjects purporting to come from me should be sent from the ship by wireless, you may put it down as a fabrication. I will make none."

The colonel may, however, make an occasional speech to small gatherings during the course of the season.

"I shall make certain speeches after my return to the United States, but nothing like a continuous compaign, and none of the speeches will be made out of doors," he said. "This naturally means a change in my plans, but I am going to follow the specialist's advice."

NO BATTLESHIP SALE

Congress Opposes Proposition and the Measure Is Withdrawn

Washington, June 18.—The proposal to sell the battleships Idaho and Mississippi to a foreign power, unofficially said to be Greece, and devote the proceeds of the sale to the construction of an up-to-date dreadnought was abandoned by congress and the navy departmet.

From the first there had been strong opposition. It had been proposed to sell these two ships for just what they cost, and the whole proposition was considered to be of an excellent business character. Nevertheless the membership of the house did not take to it and the leaders reluctantly withdrew it after a filibuster.

GOTHAM ELECTION FRAUDS

CHILD LABOR LAW VIOLATED

A decision of considerable importance relative to the enforcement of the labor laws was given Monday afternoon by Judge Avery in the case of the State Board of Labor against the Edmund S. Hunt Sons Co., of Weymouth, fireworks manufacturers.

It was alleged by the State Board that Messrs Hunt employed three minors in violation of the child labor law, while the Hunt Co., through its counsel, George L. Barnes, claimed that because the minors were not employed in the building where explosives were compounded, they were not employed in a manufacturing establishment.

Judge Avery decided that the law prohibits the employment of minors under 18 years of age in any part of the premises wherein gunpowder, nitro glycerin, dynamite or other high explosives are manufactured or compounded, even though such employment is in a building somewhat removed from that in which the process is carried on, and although minors are not permitted to enter the latter building.

The decision therefore means, the board points out, that every part of any premises used for industrial purposes, comes within the word "establishment" as used in the child labor law.

The State Board was represented by Luther Hill and by Deputy Commissioner William H. Coburn, Inspector Andrew M. Goff and Elmer I. Christensen.

FIRE AT MERRYMOUNT.

The beautiful pine grove at Merrymount just beyond the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Homans was threatened Wednesday by fire which started from a spark from a clambake on the shores of Quincy bay some distance away.

Mrs. Homans telephoned Central fire station and as the auto chemical and a squad of men left the house another message was received from the lookout station in the Blue Hills. Volunteers assisted in quenching the spread of the flames. Several hours later, the department was again summoned, and on their arrival found the fire had broken out afresh and was rapidly eating its way through the thick bed of dried pine needles. Through hard work they prevented the destruction of the grove.

East St. Louis Sets Pace For Go to Church Movement—Great Enthusiasm Shown

EAST ST. LOUIS had a banner GO TO CHURCH Sunday. Eighty-two per cent of the population went to divine service. "How did you do it?" was the question asked by hundreds of other cities throughout the country. The answer came:

ALL CITY OFFICIALS ASKED THEIR EMPLOYEES TO GO TO CHURCH. THE CHIEF OF POLICE ASSEMBLED ALL THE POLICEMEN AT ROLL CALL AND ASKED THEM TO GO TO SOME CHURCH. JUST BEFORE GOING HOME SATURDAY NIGHT HE REVISED THE PATROL SCHEDULE OF ALL THE PATROLMEN AND DETECTIVES SO THAT THEY COULD GET AWAY TO SOME CHURCH SERVICE SUNDAY. IN THE PRESENCE OF MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF POLICE COMMISSIONERS HE HANDED THE SCHEDULE TO THE SERGEANT IN CHARGE.

The chief of the fire department just after returning from a fire run Saturday afternoon assembled the entire fire department and told the men the schedule would be arranged so they could GO TO CHURCH. The superintendent of public instruction assembled all the teachers and asked them to GO TO SOME CHURCH. He also instructed them to tell their pupils to GO TO CHURCH.

THE RETAIL MERCHANTS ENTERED THE SPIRIT OF THE THING. THEY INVITED THEIR PATRONS TO ATTEND SERVICES. WHEN A WOMAN WENT TO A STORE TO MAKE A PURCHASE THE GROCER WOULD ASK HER IF SHE WOULD BE IN CHURCH NEXT DAY, OR HE WOULD SAY PLEASANTLY, "WILL I SEE YOU IN CHURCH TOMORROW?" THE DELIVERY BOYS ALSO EXTENDED CHURCH INVITATIONS. "SEE YOU IN CHURCH TOMORROW!" WAS HEARD IN MORE HOMES IN EAST ST. LOUIS THAN EVER BEFORE. THE STREET CAR COMPANIES CARRIED SIGNS GRATIS ADVERTISING THE MOVEMENT.

That's how East St. Louis did it. Other cities and towns are planning the same kind of a campaign.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The Children's room has been made very attractive by interesting arrangements of the bulletins. One has pictures of different kinds of boats; another gives a full description of the ease and freedom of camp life. And in this month of June we must not forget the birds, so some colored pictures showing several varieties make up a third bulletin. In observance of Bunker Hill day there is a patriotic bulletin with a list of books on the Revolution, including the history of the day, biographical accounts of LaFayette and Washington and many interesting war stories.

Not only will the bulletin attract attention, but many new and interesting books have been recently added. For the younger children "Little Master" by Laura E. Richards, "Peter and Polly in winter" and two of the "Little cousin" series (Brazilian and Hungarian.) New books by Barbour, Altsheler, Camp, Dudley, Paine and one in the "Henley schoolboy series" will be especially interesting to the boys. "Wonderful escapes by Americans" by W. S. Booth contains many true and interesting stories. During the summer days the boys will appreciate "How to make things" by Archibald Williams. The girls will be glad to hear that a new book is added to the "Glenloch series" and also one to the "Sidney Books," and as amateur theatricals are always attractive in vacation time, we have added "Little plays for little people" by Sowerby.

DELEGATES TO COUNCIL

Elected by Granite Cutters and Polishers

The Granite Cutters, Tool Sharpeners and Polishers branches of G. C. I. A. held a special meeting Wednesday evening at Clan MacGregor hall, and elected three delegates to serve for one year on executive council of the International Association. Daniel Scully, polisher, Charles Osborne and Fred Steinbrenner granite cutters, were elected. It was a re-election in the case of Charles Osborne.

The three men selected are well known in Quincy and have served their respective branches in many capacities. Their intimate knowledge of the affairs of the organization will help in the deliberations and decisions of the executive council.

Business Agent Arthur Tremayne was re-elected for six months.

After the special meeting adjourned, the granite cutters' branch went into session. Much international and local business was attended to.

The election of branch officers resulted as follows: Edward Brault, president; Wm. Magee, vice president, James F. Reid, corresponding secretary; Patrick Crimmins, financial secretary; Martin O'Shaughnessy treasurer; auditors, Edward Powers, Alex Kiloh and Costanza Pagnani. Adjustment committee, Edward Brault, Luigi Quintillianni and Alex W. Russell.

The reports of shop stewards from the various granite cutting plants showed that business is very good and appears to be very steady.

In cases of sick and distressed members, the branch made liberal donations from its local fund, and decided to have a benefit for the widow of a deceased member who had the misfortune to die while his account was in bad standing. Meeting adjourned at 10 o'clock.

A reception was held at the home of the bride, 292 Common street, from 8 until 10 o'clock, the couple being assisted in receiving by the parents of the bride and groom. The ushers were B. W. Reilly, and P. Joseph Cahill, Jr. The house was decorated with potted plants and cut flowers, and the bride and groom stood under a bower of ferns and cut flowers.

DENIES SPLIT WITH CARRANZA

But Villa Still Holds Officials Arrested In Juarez

SENT TO HIS HEAQUARTERS

Declares Seizure Due to "Misinterpretation of Orders"—Constitutionalist Chief's Effort to Sidetrack Fighter Due to Jealousy Among Generals—Conference In Danger of Disruption

Washington, June 18.—It is difficult to pick the wheat from the chaff in the Mexican situation. General Villa denies that there is any split between him and General Carranza, but Villa controls the wires of north Mexico.

Also, although he explains that the seizure of between twenty and thirty Carranza officials at Juarez was a "misinterpretation of orders," it must be noted that the men arrested have been taken to Torreon, Villa's headquarters.

That there is friction between Villa and Carranza has been indicated in the dispatches for some time. Accepting the general trend of dispatches from the border, it would appear that Carranza, having discovered that there was jealousy among the rebel generals over the credit given Villa for victories over the federals, at last felt safe in planning to sidetrack him.

The first step in this scheme was the appointment of Natera to the central military division, which, if sustained, would make Villa subordinate in the contemplated advance on Mexico City. Villa pretended to acquiesce, and Natera was sent to take Zacatecas. He failed to capture the city, and Villa is said to have been ordered to his aid. Villa, however, is still in Torreon, and Carranza's officials in northern Mexico are his prisoners.

Constitutionalist agents in Washington, however, say that Villa's resignation and imprisonment of Carranza leaders does not mean a permanent breach between the two chiefs. They explain that Villa determined to rid himself of troublesome politicians who have been associated with Carranza, issuing orders without authority which embarrass his movements and made trouble between Villa and Carranza. Villa insisted that his authority in northern Mexico should be supreme. Carranza felt the trouble would adjust itself, but Villa took the initiative.

It is now thought Villa will proceed to take supreme command in the north of Mexico and that Carranza will acquiesce.

At the peace conference the utmost pessimism prevails. The constitutionalists refuse absolutely to declare an armistice. They argue that a cessation of hostilities would result only in advantages to Huerta. They consider that they have the military situation well in hand and refuse to loosen their grip.

The setback at Zacatecas and the destruction of their gunboat, the Tampico, on the west coast, are only incidents that do not affect the general proposition that, given ammunition in the future as in the past, they eventually will take the capital. Officials in Washington are considerably impressed by the turn in events.

REBEL GUNBOAT TAKEN

Distinct Victory For Federals In Naval Battle Off West Coast

Washington, June 18.—In the first decisive naval engagement of the present Mexican rebellion, the constitutionalist gunboat Tampico was defeated by the federal gunboat Guerrero in a battle near Topolobampo, according to a report to the navy department from Admiral Howard. The battle was a distinct victory for the federals.

The Tampico, formerly a federal vessel, was seized by the constitutionalists about three months ago. Its loss leaves the constitutionalists practically without naval power.

That the casualties were heavy was believed at the navy department. The captain and chief engineer of the Tampico committed suicide when they saw the battle turning against them.

The United States vessels New Orleans, Perry and Preble witnessed the conflict. The New Orleans stood by to rescue the crew of the disabled Tampico after the officers had killed themselves.

Surgical assistance was given to the crew of the Guerrero by the New Orleans.

The Tampico and Guerrero each carried crews of between ninety and 120 men.

Exciting Time at Boston Fire

Boston, June 18.—Scores were driven from their homes, shots were fired in a burglar chase through the vast crowd, a woman was trampled on and nine horses were burned to death in a three-alarm fire which destroyed the stable of the Bay View Bottling company in South Boston last night.

Father Killed and Son Injured

Saugus, Mass., June 18.—Frank Cirilio was instantly killed and his son, Angelo, aged 9, was seriously injured when the motorcycle on which they were riding struck the rear wheel of a bicycle and both were thrown from their seats.

Sailor Hats Are Popular For Tourists and Business Women

BECOMING SAILOR HAT.

HAPPY is the season that brings in the sailor hat. It is a model whose simplicity and neatness make it a treasure for the business woman or traveler. The chic of the outing or tailored suit can be greatly emphasized by the quality of the hat. The style illustrated here is a favored model of straw with ribbon band.

FIGURED EFFECTS.

Their Popularity Increases With the Advance of the Season.

The smart woman's partiality for figured fabrics is shown in the afternoon gown of pussy willow taffeta illustrated here. The prevailing tone of the costume is green. In a neutral shade it is used for the background of the figured silk, which is matched by the plain silk of the skirt.

Sashes are to be seen on most of the afternoon models, at least, on those launched by the best houses And the curious thing is that many of these sashes are like those used to hold children's pinafores in place—long lengths of broad ribbon simply passed round the waist and tied in a loose bow at the back.

Some of the newest sashes recall the ribbons of long ago days, when our mothers, and even our grandmothers, were young—flowered ribbons in which velvet and satin designs are mixed, blurred ribbons with velvet borders, plaid ribbons of all kinds.

SUMMER SALAD.

Take a cucumber, two seeded green peppers, two tomatoes, two tablespoonfuls of cream, two tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise, with vinegar, salt and pepper. Slice cucumber and peppers fine, add the tomatoes, skinned and cut in quarters. Beat the cream until stiff. Add the mayonnaise, with vinegar, salt and pepper to taste. Mix with the vegetables and arrange on a bed of escarole.

STRAWBERRY CREAM.

A nice way of serving strawberries calls for one pint of ripe strawberries and one-half a cupful of sugar. The berries should be mixed and mashed together and put through a sieve. Then whip stiff a pint of cream and add to the strawberries, with a tablespoonful of gelatin dissolved in a third of a cupful of cold water. Mix together, pour in a mold and set on the ice till ready to serve.

FASHIONS FOR FALL.

Predictions by Authorities In Style of Coats, Skirts and Suits.

Those who like to take a look ahead may be glad to know what fashion experts are predicting for fall wear. These predictions may or may not come to pass in full, but it is quite likely that many of them will be successfully introduced, since they emanate from no less authorities than the National Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' association.

Suits, it is said, will have jackets of finger tip length and longer, set in sleeves, sloping shoulder effects, a tendency toward normal waist line, with fullness at sides or back.

Skirts will be plaited, flaring and of long tunic designs and somewhat shorter.

Coats of three-quarter length will predominate; many will be cut shorter in front. The coat cape will be a prominent feature. Separate capes will be desirable. The waistcoat effect will appear in capes.

Materials in suits and coats will include mixtures, checks, zibelines, broadcloths and a variety of new pile fabrics.

The principal changes in dresses will be additional fullness in the skirt, which will be shorter, and the extensive use of the long tunic, either from a yoke or the waist line, which will tend to normal in tailored effects and be either high or low in evening gowns. Sleeves will be very long in street dresses and either short or entirely absent in evening gowns. Accordion plaiting will feature dancing frocks. Stripes, plaids and printed fabrics will be used extensively.

A Simple Sachet.

A satisfactory sachet for scenting powder or putting into little bags among your clothes or household linen is made for the most part of ordinary spices from the pantry shelf. It calls for equal quantities of ground mace, nutmeg, cloves, cinnamon and caraway seeds. All these spices should be freshly ground, so that they will be full of spicy odor. Weigh the combined ingredients and add the same amount of orris root, ground.

Newly Painted Rooms.

After a room has been painted an excellent way to remove the smell of the paint from the room is to place a pail of water, to which have been added three or four slices of raw onion, in the room and leave it there overnight. Keep the doors and windows closed and the smell will be entirely gone by morning, the onion and water having absorbed it.

Leghorn Hats.

Leghorn hats are being made up with yellow dahlias and lacquered black ribbon. Some of the Italian straw plateaus are worn over one ear and trimmed with minute pink roses and blue ribbons in the style of Louis XV.

The timely hitting of Hebert for St. Mary's and McTiernan and O'Brien for the Councilors increased the scores. The star fielding features were by Egan who took four drives in deep left. The summary:—

Burleigh Had Fought and Written From America to Ashanti

London, June 18.—The death of Bennet Burleigh, oldest and most widely known of war correspondents, occurred here. Born in Glasgow nearly seventy years ago, he jointed the ranks of the confederates in the American Civil war and fought through the entire campaign, being twice captured and sentenced to death by the northern troops.

Later he turned to newspaper work and reported several campaigns for a news agency. In 1882 he began the connection with the London Daily Telegraph, which lasted till his death. He followed the Egyptian war and the various Soudan campaigns, the French annexation of Madagascar, the Ashanti war, the Spanish expedition in Morocco, the first Greco-Turkish war, the Tripolitan war, the Transvaal war, the Somali war, the Russo-Japanese war and the recent Balkan war.

Outside of his newspaper writing he was the author of a number of books which were widely read.

HOSPITAL SHIP ASHORE

Maine, Given to England by Americans, May Be Total Wreck

Glasgow, June 18.—The hospital ship Maine, presented to the British nation by American women during the South African war, went ashore in the Firth of Lorne in a fog. It is feared she will become a total wreck.

The Maine, which was attached to the home fleet of the British navy, had a large number of patients on board at the time of the accident. All were placed in the ship's boats, where they remained until the arrival of other vessels, summoned by wireless telegraphy.

In the South African war, in charge of American doctors, the Maine did good service in caring for both British and Boer wounded. Afterward she did similar service in China in the Boxer uprising.

DROPS FROM BRIDGE TO RAILROAD TRACK

Workmen Buried In Debris From Collapsed Fruit Store

Lowell, Mass., June 18.—Irving Barlow's store, a wooden structure on the Chelmsford street bridge above the Boston and Maine railroad station, suddenly collapsed and fell to the tracks below.

A number of workmen were buried in the debris, seven being severely injured. Arnold Lemire and Edward Bouchard, boys employed in the store, and a customer, went down with the wreckage. The tracks were partially blocked.

For several weeks past workmen have been engaged in reinforcing the bridge supports. Their work was completed, except for the supports directly under the store. The old supports were in the process of being removed when the store collapsed.

Danger In "Chocolate Drunks" Indulged In by the Matinee Girl

Indianapolis, June 18.—"The matinee girl on her chocolate drunk," was described by Dr. J. C. Mitchell of Louisville, addressing the National Eclectic Medical association in session here.

Mitchell said the matinee girl who eats a pound of chocolates and goes to a doctor the next day with a severe headache was merely getting over the effects of a "drunk."

"Too much sugar in the stomach will ferment as surely as in a distiller's vat," he said.

CLOSES SEASON WITH VICTORY

Quincy High Puts It All Over Braintree

Quincy High school celebrated the closing of its base ball season by getting nine runs in the sixth inning and defeating Braintree High 11 to 2 at Merrymount park Tuesday afternoon. Few spectators were on hand to see Quincy show real class after an up-and-down season.

After two innings of right base ball Quincy slipped across its first two runs, when Thayer, the Braintree catcher, threw wild over third base Two more innings of real base ball followed.

In the sixth inning Quincy sent 15 men to the bat and got nine runs. Bates singled and Dolan and Jenkins tripled, scoring three runs, and the Braintree coach re-arranged his defense. Smith succeeded Reardon in the box but had no better luck, and through two passes, hitting a man, three singles and a wild pitch six more tallies were scored.

The feature of the game was the work of Hamlin, who returned to the pitcher's box after an absence of four games. Allowing but three hits, he also fanned 14 visitors and got five assists. The error credited against him was a low throw to first.

At no time did he lack control, and it was generally admitted at the close of the game that if he had been able to perform all season, with the infield placed as on Wednesday, Quincy would have easily won more than four games.

A sharp wind swept the field making it difficult to spear high flies, and all such catches on the part of both teams was commendable.

The few Quincy pupils on the bleachers were jubilant with the sudden big league showing of their team and none, more than they regretted that the season was not in its infancy.

Braintree, with the exception of the sixth inning played sterling ball, Pratt, their second base man giving the best exhibition. A photographer snapped both teams between the innings. The summary:

POLO CUP WILL GO TO ENGLAND

Lost by Americans After Making Desperate Stand

SURPRISING FORM IS SHOWN

But Desperate Style of Play and Lack of Perfect Team Work Lead to Defeat—Thrilling Rushes In Closing Minutes of Struggle Stir Forty Thousand People to Frenzy

Westbury, L. I., June 17.—The international polo cup, emblematic of the world's championship, will cross the ocean again, having been won here by the English team in the second game of the series, by a score of 4 to 2¾.

Although the American defenders made a desperate last-ditch stand they were not quite equal to winning, and thus forcing the challengers into a third and and deciding contest.

Their thrilling rushes, both individually and as a team in the closing minutes of the struggle, aroused the 40,000 spectators to a frenzy, however, and no previous international polo struggle ever closed under such tense and exciting conditions.

When the eighth and final period opened the Americans were leading by a fraction of a point, but despite their desperate efforts, they could not quite hold the advantage. Each team scored a goal in this period, but the defenders in their anxiety to clinch the victory transgressed the rules by sharp crossing and were penalized for fouling.

Although the trophy regained from England in 1909 goes back as the result of the defeat, the members of the team gathered by Lord Wimbourne know that Americans can still play the game, even though the Big Four is no longer in existence.

Outplayed and utterly routed in the opening contest, when they went down to defeat by a score of 8½ to 3, the Americans came back in surprisform and scored an equal number of goals to those made by the winners.

It was the desperate style of their play and the lack of perfect team work that finally wrought their downfall, for they lost in penalties 2¼ points out of a gross five, while the English were penalized but one point, retaining four of their five goals.

Friends of Minister Patmont Appeal to Police to Find Him

Patmont was brought to Detroit to recuperate after his release. He started from the house where he had been staying to attend services at a church about two miles distant. He failed to reach the church.

Patmont was prominent in working for "dry" forces in Illinois and, according to his story, was seized by men representing the "wets." He was missing for nearly two months. When found in the cellar he was almost a physical wreck.

A Strange Deadlock

And How It Was Broken

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

My childhood till I was six years old is very hazy. I cannot go back of that period except for a dim remembrance of my mother. I must have been without any child to play with, for I remember my aunt, by whom I was brought up, coming into my lonely playroom one day leading a little girl and saying:

"Here's a little sister for you."

My childhood from Ethel's coming was very different from what it was before. Why we did not meet other children I do not know, but I think it was because my aunt lived in the country, with no one of her own class living near her. But neither Ethel nor I seemed to need other associates, studying together under a tutor and playing together in perfect contentment. From this continued association with a girl I did not become effeminate, but Ethel formed a taste for boyish sports. Indeed, as a girl she was quite a tomboy, rivaling me in tree climbing, horseback riding and other exercises pertaining rather to boys than to girls. One of our favorite sports was to toss a baseball to each other. Ethel being as good a catcher as I. But she never learned to throw a ball like a boy. I presume that this peculiarity in a woman is owing to the difference in the masculine and feminine figures.

There was no well defined reason why Ethel and I were permitted to grow up with the understanding that we were brother and sister. My aunt was responsible for it, and she never made her reasons clear to either of us.

The supposed relationship certainly gave us a freedom when we were emerging from childhood into youth that we would not otherwise have experienced. Up to the time when I was sixteen and Ethel fourteen there was not the faintest suspicion that we were not brother and sister. Then I was required to go to a lawyer's office about some property of which I was possessed, and a paper was presented to me in which I saw it stated that I had no brothers or sisters living. The secret was out, but I was so pained that I pretended not to notice it and asked no questions about it.

When I met Ethel again I said nothing to her about my discovery, but felt that a great change had come over me.

When I came back from the city, where I had gone to the lawyer's office, Ethel threw her arms around my neck and kissed me. I had lost the brotherly feeling I had had for her, but it had not been replaced by any feeling differing from what I might have had for any other girl. I was filled with a deep regret. Ethel noticed it and asked me what was the matter, but I gave her no satisfaction. I did not care to distress her as I was distressed. I preferred that she should discover the truth herself.

From this time till I went to college Ethel was still my sister, but I was not her brother—at least, that describes our feelings toward each other. I wrote her regularly, addressing her as "Dear Sis," as I had always been used to doing, while she, replying, would begin with "Dear Brother" or "Dear Dick," sometimes one and sometimes the other.

During the four years I was in college I often wondered if Ethel had acquired the secret that I possessed. It seemed to me that she surely must know it, but I could not detect the slightest change in her treatment of me to indicate that she did. By the time I came home for my vacation between my sophomore and junior year she had grown to be a lovely girl, between seventeen and eighteen years of age.

I had recovered from the shock I had received in learning that I was not her brother and was now beginning to be rather pleased that some other fellow need not take her away from me. Indeed, if we chose we could enter upon a far closer relationship than brother and sister.

But I found myself in rather a peculiar position. I knew that there was no obstacle in the way of Ethel's being my wife, but she did not. At least, if she did she gave no evidence of such knowledge.

Meanwhile I was desirous of acting toward Ethel as a lover and not as a brother. But how could I do that while she supposed our relationship to be what we had grown up to consider it? She treated me precisely as she had always treated me. There was the same freedom that had always been between us—anyway, on her part.

Another year passed. I was twenty years old and had one more year in college before me. Ethel was eighteen and had returned from a seminary with her education completed. I was no longer able to treat her as a sister, and since I did not dare treat her as a lover I fell, so to speak, between the two. My treatment of her, being neither the one nor the other, was constrained. She made no complaint, but it seemed to me that the change in me had produced an equivalent in her. We played tennis and took long walks together, getting on well enough at the tennis, but on our walks there was none of that easy chat, mingled with jokes and laughter, of former times. I walked beside her with the secret between us, talking in that philosophic vein one is apt to fancy about the time he leaves his teens, while Ethel seemed at times a trifle bored.

Why did I not break the ice by telling her the secret? There were many reasons from one point of view and none from another. Why are certain events in families never referred to? For the same reason that I shrank from telling Ethel that I was not her brother, and, as to telling her that the spark of love for her had been kindled within me, how could I say such a thing to one who believed herself to be my sister?

This condition continued during my senior year in college. My letters to Ethel were bereft of either brotherly or lover-like expression, and hers to me were also neutral. But when I returned home a graduate a new element had been injected into the problem that was bound very soon to change the situation. I found a young man hanging about Ethel whose intentions were as plain as the sun in heaven.

His presence threw me into a fever at once. I found it difficult to treat him with ordinary civility. If Ethel had been my sister I should doubtless have freely discussed the matter of the attentions of this young man with her. As it was, I did not feel the right even to mention the matter. Besides, I was so inordinately jealous of her suitor that I should have doubtless spoken offensively.

In Ethel there was no change toward me. She was the same as she had been for the past two years. She must have known that there were fires burning within me, but she did not appear to notice them. She said nothing to me about the attentions of Mr. Jackanapes, as I considered him, but a sister is not likely to speak of a suitor to a brother until the brother first speaks to her.

My pentup feelings kept rising until the dam burst. One day, coming unexpectedly upon Mr. Jackanapes pleading his suit with Ethel, I lost my grip on myself and blurted out:

"What do you mean, sir, by wooing my—my sister without first asking permission from me, her natural guardian?"

He looked at me in astonishment, then said: "I beg a thousand pardons. If it is not too late may I now have that permission?"

"I prefer before giving my permission to consult with her."

"That being the case, I will withdraw."

Rising, he left Ethel and me together. I stood with my back half turned to her, scowling. I should have been conscious of having made a guy of myself, but I was not.

"Dick," said Ethel, "what's the matter with you?"

"Don't you think I should be consulted in a love affair of yours?"

"How do you know that this is a love affair of mine?"

"It certainly is one if this fellow who has intruded upon"—

"I can't help what he may feel for me. I have not accepted him and don't intend to."

"Thank God!"

"Why are you so concerned about whom I marry? For some years past you have acted coldly toward me."

"That was because"—

"Because what?"

"I discovered"—

"What did you discover?"

"That you and I are not brother and sister. We are no relation."

"I have known that for a long while."

"You have known it a long while! Why didn't you tell me?"

"Why didn't you tell me?"

I went to Ethel. Now that the barrier between us was broken down, my former brotherly treatment of her was a help. Sitting beside her, I took her to my arms, and, beginning as a brother, I rapidly developed into a lover.

Ethel and I were the children of two bosom friends. My mother died when I was a baby, and I was turned over to my aunt. Ethel's mother died when Ethel was four years old, and my aunt, being a near friend of her family, was prevailed upon to take the child, being chiefly moved by a desire to furnish me with a playmate. She gave me in addition a companion for life.

I have never been sure but that Ethel encouraged Mr. Jackanapes in order to break the deadlock there was between her and me.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

How to Chase Away Many Ills.

THERE are so many excellent remedies among the common, inexpensive articles found in every kitchen pantry that we might save ourselves the expenditure of many dollars by using them and possibly gain even better results than we can with high priced remedies.

Are you tired and nervous? Is your circulation below par, and are chilly sensations chasing each other up and down your spine? The best possible remedy is found on the pantry shelf in your can of ground mustard. Dissolve a tablespoonful of the mustard—make it a generous one—and mix it with a tubful of hot water, then rest in this bath for from ten to twenty minutes. You will feel like a new individual, rested, refreshed, toned up generally and fit for a big day's work.

Do you feel rheumatic twinges that are elusive as to location but very apparent as to unpleasant sensations? Here is a mixture which has proved its worth in such cases times innumerable! Draw a tubful of hot water and have ready these ingredients, which must be thoroughly mixed and completely dissolved in the water before you get into the bath: One small cupful sal soda, or ordinary washing soda, one big tablespoonful ground mustard, one teaspoonful laundry ammonia. Now empty half the package of bran you have on hand for bran bread into a piece of course muslin or double cheesecloth, and tie it up tightly, then soak it for a few minutes in the water and after you are in the tub squeeze the bag of bran until every bit of the gluten is out of it. Remain in the bath from ten to twenty minutes. You will be likely to lose all the aches and pains and will come out of the bath with your skin as soft as velvet.

Have you come home sunburned from a long walk or ride? Grate up a raw potato and spread thickly on the reddened skin. It will take out the fire and relieve the irritation very quickly.

Has your skin a tendency to break out in heat rashes when the hot weather becomes settled? Bicarbonate of soda, or, in other words, ordinary baking soda, dissolved in the bath will soon relieve the trouble. You can use a half pound of the soda in an ordinary tub of water or vary the quantity as seems best for your needs. It is absolutely harmless and can be used as frequently as desired and will be found to make a cooling and refreshing bath at the close of a hot and humid day.

Is your liver out of order? Do you have trouble with your digestion and a generally sluggish condition of your system? Dissolve a half teaspoonful of ordinary table salt in a glass of water, either hot or cold, and drink a half hour before breakfast, or at bedtime, if you prefer. This simple remedy acts like magic and has no ill effects afterward, as many medicines have.

FOR A GIFT.

How to Make Linen Covers For Card Tables.

The woman who plays cards or who has friends who play is interested in making linen covers for card tables. These may be hemstitched or scalloped and either initialed or numbered on one side of the corner so that the mark shows on top of the table, but yet is not in the way of the players.

These initials or numbers are worked in hand embroidery and often represent considerable labor. They should measure about three inches. On white linen the markings look better worked in white mercerized cotton, but on tan linen, which many people prefer because it does not soil so readily, colored embroidery gives a most artistic finish. Shades of delft blue, greens and golden browns all show off well on the tan linen.

A pretty set prepared as a gift for a linen wedding anniversary consisted of four cloths marked 1, 2, 3 and 4. The numbers were quite large and fat and were filled in entirely with French knots of a rather light delft blue outlined around the edge with a darker thread. The cloths which were tan, hemstitched, were folded into triangles with the embroidered numbers in the apex. Put together in a box, they formed a square (fitted into each other with the numbers toward the center); then they were held in place by delft ribbon meeting in the center with a bow of many loops.

How to Make a Palm Thrive.

Almost every housewife complains that it is impossible to keep a palm in the ordinary steam heated apartment. The remedy all lies in its watering.

Once a week the leaves should be sponged off with lukewarm water, to which a little milk has been added.

Once a week also the plant should be placed for two hours in enough lukewarm water to cover the pot entirely. This is the right way to water palms, and it will be found that they thrive under the treatment.

How to Remove the Disfiguring Shine.

To treat, sponge the suit or dress with hot vinegar and press in the usual manner. No odor of vinegar will remain, all the shine caused by wear will disappear, and the garment will look like new. The vinegar leaves no stain.

BUSINESS IS SUSPENDED

Bloomington In Mourning as Former Vice President Is Buried

Bloomington, Ills., June 17.—With business suspended and the city draped in mourning, Bloomington paid final honors to former Vice President Adlai E. Stevenson. The body lay in state in the rotunda of the courthouse for two hours while thousands filed past.

The procession to the Second Presbyterian church was headed by a band, a troop of the Illinois national guard and surviving members of the Stevenson Escort club, an organization of the campaign of 1892, which accompanied the vice president-elect to the inauguration at Washington.

Then followed 300 miners from the McLean county mine, of which Stevenson was for many years president; members of the bar association, the mayor and city officials and numerous local organizations. Burial at the Bloomington cemetery was private.

REJOICING AT HOUGHS NECK

Addition to Schoolhouse Sent to the Mayor

There is great rejoicing at Houghs Neck over the passage of the order appropriating $23,000 for a four-room addition to their school building. Not only are the residents and children rejoicing over this, but they are also happy over the prospects of the accepting and building of Winthrop street to Rock Island. The residents of this section have been fighting for the acceptance of this street for several years, and now that it seems probable that the order for the street is going through they have reason to feel elated.

Houghs Neck however is hardly satisfied, for now they are putting up a cry for the city to purchase land for a playground, and there is talk of the school children marching to City Hall and demanding it.

The two matters contemplated however mean an expenditure of $28,000 which is quite a sum for any one small section of the city to get in any one year, and the residents should be willing to wait another year before pressing their claim for a playground.

The finance Committee of the City Council paid a visit to Houghs Neck Wednesday afternoon and looked over the site of the proposed Winthrop street to Houghs Neck.

PRIZE WINNERS.

Because they traded in Quincy, the following have been awarded prizes of $2 each: George A. Hobart, 280 Washington street, Braintree, Ben Carter, 1380 Hancock street; Mr. A Hough, Hobart street, East Braintree; and James Barton, 186 Phipps street.

MOTHER OF E. P. POWERS.

Edward P. Powers, the City Square barber, has the sympathy of his many friends in the loss of his mother, who died at Brockton, Tuesday aged 75 years. Mrs. Powers was the widow of William H. Powers and has been in poor health for some time. Funeral services were held this morning, her four sons acting as bearers. Mrs Powers leaves a large family consisting of four sons and four daughters. Two sons Edward P. and John J. Powers live in Quincy.

ROSS—STEWART.

At the residence of the pastor, 40 Bradford street, Wednesday evening by the Rev. D. B. McLeod, M. A., William Ross and Miss Christina Anna Stewart both of Quincy were united in marriage. The bridesmaid was Miss Grace B. McKinnon. The groom was supported by John S. McLeod. The numerous and beautiful presents testify to the popularity of the contracting parties.

DAVID FLOWERS

David Flowers, a long time resident of this city, died this morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. George Williams at 29 Goddard street. He was a granite cutter by trade but retired several years ago. He was a brother of Frank Flowers and leaves two daughters, Mrs. George Williams and Mrs. Robert Hardwick.

MUST PAY OR GO TO JAIL.

A Boston paper reports that unless Dr. Horace A. Jones of Quincy pays $50 on or before Saturday next a sentence of 30 days in the jail at Dedham will be imposed. This decision was reached by Judge Wait of the superior court after he heard matters on a petition to adjudge the doctor in contempt for failure to pay his wife alimony under a decree of the superior court made Feb. 7, 1910. Mrs. Florence A. Jones in 1909 obtained a divorce from the doctor on the grounds of infidelity. She was awarded the custody of her minor daughter and he was ordered to pay $12 a week. It was stated to the court that the doctor was in arrears to the amount of over $700 and that Mrs. Jones was in actual need of money. The case was continued two weeks.

SEVEN LIVES ARE LOST

Firebug Believed to Have Caused Destruction of Boarding House

Milford, Mass., June 17.—In the belief that the boarding house fire here, which cost seven lives and innumerable injuries, was of incendiary origin, twenty Armenians who left the place ten days ago because they declared the food was not "fit for pigs" will be subjected to a rigid examination as to their whereabouts Monday night.

The town officials, local police, fire engineers and others who investigated the fire believe the fire was set by someone who was anxious to revenge themselves upon the owners or tenants of the building.

Outside of the question of incendiarism, the building was one of the worst firetraps possible. There were no fire escapes of any kind on it.

It was a huge, boxlike structure four stories in height, though very few of the men were on the upper story. In addition, it had formerly been used as a shoeshop and machine shop, so that the wood was saturated with oil and consequently decidedly inflammable.

EXPECTS PROGRAM TO GO THROUGH

Wilson Hopes Congress May Adjourn by End of July

Washington, June 17.—President Wilson is hopeful that the administration trust legislation program will be passed so congress may adjourn by the end of July. He was optimistic as a result of a conference with several senators and the chairmen of working committees.

According to officials close to the president, he believes there is no prospect of any organized opposition by Republicans in the senate and that a filibuster is improbable.

The president expects the railroad securities and the omnibus anti-trust bills to be reported out of committee within the next two weeks.

SCORE PERHAPS KILLED

Paris Digging Dead From Streets Caved In by a Great Storm

Paris, June 17.—Nine bodies of those who perished in the rain storm here have been recovered. The work of excavation to unearth streets undermined by overtaxed sewers has not been completed, and it is feared many more bodies will be recovered.

The flooding of the sewers and conduits is believed to have formed underground passages of considerable magnitude in several sections of the city and fears are felt for more cave-ins.

Belief that the death list will reach nearly a score was expressed when workmen began digging in the debris of several streets, sunken by the terrific deluge of rain.

ACTED IN SELF-DEFENSE

Woman Who Killed Her Husband Is Freed by Grand Jury

Charleston, W. Va., June 17.—Mrs. Polly McSurley, who recently walked into the sheriff's office and announced that two days before she had killed her husband and hid his body in the cellar of their home, walked out of the county jail here a free woman.

The Kanawha county grand jury refused to return an indictment against her. Mrs. McSurley declared she struck her husband with a hatchet after he tried to kill her.

Mount Lassen Scares Settlers

Red Bluff, Cal., June 17.—Steam and smoke in great quantities continue to pour from Mount Lassen. Settlers for miles around have fled outside the danger zone.

Vaudeville House For Negroes

Washington, June 17.—An historic theatre on Pennsylvania avenue, opposite the postoffice, has been leased by negroes as an exculsive "colored" vaudeville house.

servance of Children's Sunday nearly fifty years ago in a Universalist church in Chelsea, and it seems particularly fitting that the Universalist churches should lay great stress on the fact that we must have the little ones, as a future asset, was a thought expressed by Rev. R. H. Dix at the North Weymouth church Sunday afternoon.

The pulpit was prettily decorated with wild and garden flowers, and a flag was in a prominent position nearby, in keeping with Flag day. A chorus choir, composed of Mrs. Minnie Thayer, Miss Ruth, Miss Olive Blake, Miss Doris Torrey, Miss Bertha Estes, Mrs. Clara Holbrook, John Taylor sang under the direction of Stephen Pratt, chorister, Mrs. John Taylor presiding at the organ, and an orchestra comprising J. H. Leighton, flute; Percy Ames, violin; and Charles Brown, violin; added much to the musical numbers.

There was a violin solo by Percy Ames, and songs by the school. Recitations and song exercises were given by Thomas Heese, Elizabeth Keene, Theodore Wolfe, Alice Morgan, James Henry Glidden, Leonard Wolfe, Leo Garfield, Kenneth Poulin, Lloyd Blackwell, Marjorie Torrey, Elaine Ross, Eleanor Poulin, John Thompson, Mary Garfield, Kathryn Garfield, Bernice Sherman, Frances Bailey, Esther Horton, Delia Grandell, Evelyn Coombs, Margaret Thompson, Raymond Nash, Viola Sherman, Dorothy Blackwell, Rosamond Garfield, Margaret Killen, Elizabeth Thompson, Lillian Wood, Olive Williams, Gladys Macomber, Harold Morgan, Clarence Rudolph, Ethel French, Irving Keene, Bernice Stiles, Greta Garfield, Evelyn Bailey, Elizabeth Holbrook, Mary Hesse, Hazel Smith, Dorothy Hilton, Alice Gay, Viola Wolfe.

Commander Pierson Explains Relative to Auxiliary

Editor Daily Ledger:

Will you kindly allow me space in your paper in order to try and straighten out this tangle relative to the Auxiliary. It was not until Monday evening, the 15th that my attention was directed to the article in your paper under the date of Saturday.

I wish to say that in "the tirade" that I am accused of saying: (first, that the auxiliary was unpatriotic, and mercenary; and, that its members had been of but little assistance to the G. A. R. veterans). I most emphatically deny saying. I never used the words or anything that might be construed as such. I consider the writer of that article as unjust and very unkind in making such a statement.

Secondly, that at the conclusion of my "tirade" the members of the auxiliary jumped to their feet and soundly criticised my action. Now at the conclusion of my remarks the program, which was a fine one, continued without interruption to the end. It was then that one of company, presumably a member of the auxiliary, did approach me on the subject.

What I did say, and what I did not intend to say, nor should have said, which I very much regret, was:—that there should be four organizations,—the G. A. R., the W. R. C., the S. of V., and the Daughters of Veterans. In that connection the point that I wished to bring out was the fact to my mind the daughters were by their close lineal and blood relationship a little nearer to the G. A. R.

In conclusion, I wish to emphasize the fact, that all of the patriotic societies have other spheres in this world to fill and I never have had any cause to criticise their work, nor what they have not done, nor should do, as I know only too well what they have done for Braintree in the past and stand ready at all times when called upon.

So bearing in mind the fact that we must at all times be forgiving, I have already forgiven the writer of that article, but cannot forget the wrong that was done in the charity I accord.

Yours most kindly in F. C. & L.,

GIRL STRUCK BY TRAIN

Attempted to Cross Track to Take Boston Train

Miss Martha Ellison of Ryden street while crossing the tracks to the 8.03 train for Boston at the Quincy station this morning, was picked up by the engine of the southbound train and badly injured. Her left leg was severed at the knee and her right leg badley gashed.

The train which struck Miss Ellison was slowly moving, but an investigation is being made to determine if orders to stop while another train is in a station were disregarded.

Miss Ellison who was hurrying to take the Boston train had stepped under the gates and was almost over the tracks when she was struck.

An emergency call was sent out for physicians, and the ambulance was called. Dr. George M. Sheahan was the first to arrive and learning there would be a delay in securing an ambulance he put her in his small Ford auto and started for the Quincy City Hospital.

Miss Ellison when struck uttered a slight cry and did not become unconscious until on her way to the hospital, about half an hour later. She was put on the operating table immediately and is resting as well as can be expected.

The girl lives with her aunt, Miss Hilda Nelson directly opposite the hospital. The girls father and two brothers are in Oregon.

North Weymouth people can now secure a copy of the Quincy Daily Ledger at the store of D. A. Jones, Thomas Corner. Beside North Weymouth and Quincy news they will find much interesting reading and also some advertisements that it will pay them to read as Quincy merchants can save them money. tf

ATTIC FIRE ON TAYLOR STREET

The fire department made a good stop Thursday afternoon at what at first promised to be a bad fire in the house at 58 Taylor street owned by Alex. N. Morrissey and occupied by G. S. Hamlin on the upper floor and by G. E. Burne on the street floor. The family on the upper floor were away at the time, and the fire was discovered by Mrs. Burne. It evidently started in a couch on the upper piazza and worked through the building into a small blind attic. Mrs. Burne after discovering the fire telephoned the fire station, and then went up stairs and attempted to remove some of the things from the attic. In doing so she was partly overcome by smoke in which condition she was found by the firemen attached to the Wollaston apparatus when they arrived on the scene, and they carried her from the building.

As soon as the firement arrived on the still alarm a call was sent in from Box 52 which sounded at 3.03. The Central station auto chemical had nearly arrived on the scene by this time having been called on the still alarm.

The fire was confined to the attic although it had burned through in places to a sleeping room adjoining. The loss will be several hundred dollars.

CHRIST CHURCH PICNIC.

The annual picnic of Christ church will be held, Wednesday, June 24, or if stormy, the following day. Special cars will leave from the church at 8.50 A. M. for Glen Echo park, Stoughton. Ribbons mounted in gilt and marked with the event and date will be awarded to those winning first and second places in all events. In the afternoon the Galahad Club of Christ Church will play a game of ball with their invited guests the grand Athletic club.

SCHOOL LETERS.

Ernest L. Collins, principal of Quincy High school presented the members of the base ball team with the school letters at an athletic meeting held Thursday. Herbert Merrill was elected manager for 1915. The only man given a second team letter was Ivar Anderson, a pitcher, who filed in for the first team during the season. Those awarded first team letters were Capt. Paul Larkin, Manager Edward Berman, Henry Ford, Henry Dolan, Peter Creedon, Wesley Browne, Chester Stedman, James O'Connor, Gilbert Hamlin, Arthur Sawyer, James Jenkins, Earl Bates, Lawrence Martin.

VERA CRUZ HERO IN QUINCY

Will Return Shortly for Public Reception

Edward C. Gisburn, who was so badly wounded at Vera Curz that his right leg was amputated above the knee, unexpectedly visited his grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Allan of 54 Summer street on Friday evening and as her guest overnight. Today he is at the Naval hospital at Chelsea where he will be under the care of surgeons until he was entirely recovered from the effects of a snippers bullet which smashed his right knee.

The first intimation Mrs. Allan had that she might see her hero soon was a postal, and last night his cheery "Hello Gram," sounded under the window of her sitting room brought her to the door on the run. The meeting between them was affecting and after a recital of his experiences they sat down and talked over old times.

Neighbors dropped in to welcome him, the boys at the Central fire station with whom he was intimate terms of friendship sent over their greetings, and two reporters called before he retired. Before midnight it was known in all parts of the city that he was at home.

His quiet arrival was intentional "Gissie" having heard that a reception was being planned on his return to this city.

He told a Ledger reporter it seemed good to be back in Quincy. At times, he said, I feel as though I was never away, and then again it seems as though I was away for years." And then he told of the circumstances which brought about his being on shore and how he was nipped while on the roof of the hotel from which he was preparing to signal.

Modest to an extreme degree, it is only because of association of the past that he repeated his story. He complained of being rather nervous due to the excitement of getting here, and on this account had not read a paper for several days.

The facts that he had been specially mentioned by Admiral Fletcher in a message to congress recommending a medal of honor and a gratuity of $100 for extraordinary heroism in battle,"

DR. PERRIN ON AMERICAN IDEALS

Tells Woodward Parents Not to Let Children Have Their Own Way in Everything

Class of Thirty Graduated From the Institute

Woodward hall was filled to its capacity Thursday evening on the occasion of the annual graduating exercises of the class of 1914. Fortunately the evening was cool so that the hall was more comfortable than usual, although it was beginning to get rather close before adjournment. The address of the evening was given by Dr. Marshall L. Perrin of Boston University and was a scholarly address, the only criticism that could be made was its length. Someone had forgotten to tell the speaker to confine his address to a twenty minute talk, with the result that he talked for a solid hour. By this time the students and audience were both becoming a little uneasy and the air was getting somewhat oppressive. It was a fine address however.

As usual the feature of the exercises was the singing by the school under the direction of John D. Buckingham, supervisor of music. The school marched in to the music of the piano with military-like precision to the seats which had been assigned to them in front of the platform.

The musical numbers included two choruses by the entire school and a solo by Miss Nora Cecilia Reardon, who sang in an exquisite manner "The Hills of Skye."

The graduating class then marched to the platform where seats had been arranged for them. Dr. Perrin was introduced by Head Master Rice.

Dr. Perrin's subject was "American Ideals." He spoke of the need of understanding the conditions of life in which we live, so that we may be efficient workers for our development, and be able to adapt ourselves to the conditions in which we live. He or she who makes a success in life is he or she who adapts ones self best to the conditions.

In the early times people had no self activity except such as the rulers decided. The individual was nothing but a slave. Until our modern times the king, emperor, potentate or overlord was the conscience as well as the power of the people. It was for his interest that his subjects should be well fed and groomed. It was not their will but the conscience of others who decided for them. In our modern times one may be just as wretched as he chooses. If we are to do as we will we must see to it that we do wisely. Socialism means still further the emphasis of the individual. It is foolish to say that every man shall have all he wants. If it was so, society would go to pieces.

Speaking to the parents he said. Do you let your children have their own way in everything? If you do your children will sometime rue the day. Some parents wait until the children have a good impulse. Society would surely go to ruin if we gave people all they wanted. If in your power assist them, if they need it, and they will need it. But there must be a must in growing life.

Every man, woman and child should have the opportunity to make the most of himself or herself. That is the idea that is coming. It is that emphasis of individualism that is coming. Women as individuals feel that they ought to have what is coming to them. It is a divided opinion just what should come to her. But the time is coming however when she will have what is coming to her.

In politics we vote for a man because it is him, not knowing what will happen. We take someone's word for it. We elect men because they are men of strong personality, and influence.

Men are not in office long enough to carry out their ideas or purposes. The best thing for a man in office is to set at work to be retained there that he may be in office long enough to accomplish something.

The American idea is to succeed, one must be successful. He must let the world know he is successful, and in this line the speaker spoke of the value of experience.

The American idea is to be active To get where there is something doing. We do more in one day and have more experiences than we can think about, and learn lessons from, in two or three days. We rush from one thing to another, but do not have time to learn the lesson. Is it any wonder we are mentally, morally and physically dyspeptic? We should be thankful for the high cost of living. It is doing us much good. It means more wholesome food. In the rush we need time to carry out what we have planned. People would hail with delight the invention which would allow them to be in two different places at the same time. There is one ray of hope That is the coming to our shores of the orientals with their slow thinking powers. The mingling of these two elements will bring good and from the mingling of these to extremes will

CHEATING IN GAMES.

English court society is upset over a charge that a member of the royal household has been caught cheating at poker. This indicates much feeling against gambling crookedness. The craze of playing bridge for money has swept through English society, until a girl can not even get a job as governess without knowing the game. Women seem to compromise their good name by borrowing money to pay gambling debts, yet rarely is an accusation of cheating made.

In this country, the man with the marked pack may earn his living. But he makes no social ties. In high society women are said to have loose ideas. One result is that some men say they never play for money with women. As a whole one would be slow to believe that American women play crooked.

In lawn tennis and golf, a high standard of honor seems to prevail. A fellow who had once been caught could positively count on blackballs at almost any country club.

Yet many men are found who deliberately justify cheating in baseball. Many famous players in the big leagues have no hesitation in cutting straight from first to third base, provided the umpire is not looking. Half of the bleachers will rise and yell to applaud their cleverness, including many of the same men who would throw down a friend who shuffled in a marked card at poker.

Yet everything of that kind is all of the same piece, and is all yellow. Perhaps the many college fellows who are entering baseball may help create higher standards. Yet the freedom with which they play under assumed names to dodge the rules against summer ball, suggests that they too may have their crooked streaks. If one believes in fair play, a player having agreed to conduct a game according to certain rules should be willing to abide by the rules he has helped to establish.

A TEN-MINUTE HUNGER STRIKE

Forces Asquith to Agree to Conference With Suffragettes

SYLVIA PANKHURST'S VICTORY

Comes Quickly After She Is Freed From Jail and Taken Directly to House of Commons Steps—Hardie Aids Militant Leader In Securing Her Long-Sought Object

London, June 19.—Premier Asquith has capitulated to the suffragettes. He consented to receive a deputation of East End working women in Downing street tomorrow.

Miss Sylvia Pankhurst's attempt to carry out her threat of a hunger strike at the entrance to the house of commons until the premier yielded to the demand that he listen to a delegation of women was largely responsible for the prime minister's decision.

The efforts of James K. Hardie, the Socialist independent member of parliament, and George Lansbury, an ex-member, with the premier, helped the militant suffragette leader to bring him to his knees.

The victory is distinct, because Sylvia Pankhkurst was arrested about a week ago for attempting to lead a procession of East End women to Westminster to demand the audience which Asquith has now promised.

Holloway jail opened its doors last night to release Miss Pankhurst, who was weak and pale after her eighth successive hunger strike, but still determined.

She drove to Westminster immediately, in a motor car with a woman chauffeur, and rebuffed Hardie's efforts to persuade her to go home.

She had been sitting on the steps of the central entrance to parliament house for ten minutes, propped up with cushions and supported in the arms of friends, when Mr. Lansbury came out with the news that Premier Asquith had surrendered.

PERHAPS WORK OF FIREBUG

Fire on East Boston Waterfront Causes a Loss of $125,000

Boston, June 19.—Whether or not the big fire, which destroyed a section of the East Boston waterfront, covering an area of 500 by 400 feet, was of incendiary origin is a priblem the authorities are endeavoring to solve.

The blaze originated in a small unoccupied one-story building. Whether matches were carlessly thrown into the building or if it was deliberately set is hard to establish. The building contained nothing that would start a fire, there were no lights or fires in it and nothing, it is said, that would cause spontaneous combustion.

The losses will probably reach $125,000 and are covered by insurance.

TO CHECK GUN-RUNNING

British Torpedo Boats Are Patrolling Coasts of Ireland

Dublin, June 19.—A squadron of British torpedo boats was sent to patrol the west and southwest coasts of Ireland to prevent further gun-running operations following the discovery that a quantity of rifles and ammunition had been secretly landed on the Conenmara coast for the use of the Nationalist volunteers.

The rifles are of the latest United States army pattern. They are to be used by the Nationals in the event that Irish civil war breaks out between the home rule and anti-home rule forces.

RIVER SET ON FIRE

Fire Chief Deaf to Earnest Requests to "Let It Burn"

New York, June 19.—Chief Breen and his East Newark firemen put out a fire in the Passaic river, although hundreds of long-suffering residents along its banks begged them to "let it burn."

The stream is covered with several inches of oily scum from the New Jersey factories. Somebody dropped a match on this. When the firemen answered a call, the blaze was high in the air and roaring like a tenement blaze. It was checked after burning two miles of the "river top."

Southampton, Eng., June 19.—Passengers on the North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II. when she suffered her accident in the English channel will not be late in their return to the United States, but as a matter of fact will be ahead of their schedule.

The first, second and third class passengers were all transferred to the Hamburg-American liner Imperator, together with the mails, so that they might undergo as little delay as possible.

We of today are apt to take our opinions second hand from the newspapers. Do not take the predigested matter but stop and think it over. We are sacrificing our thinking in our strenuous activity.

The day is coming when the religion of love shall reign on earth. No people are so full of love as the Russians. By that he did not mean the royalty or aristocracy, but the middle classes.

IN MEMORY OF MISS GOLDING

Banner Presented to Girls Friendly Society

At the final meeting of the season of St. Chrysostom's branch of the Girls' Friendly society there was a special service in the church. Mrs. Howard D. Fowler, a former branch secretary, gave a most beautiful banner to the society as a memorial to Rachel Mosher Golding.

One side of the banner is of heavy brocaded old gold satin and is inscribed as follows with golden brown silk outlined with gold: "St. Chrysostom's G. F. S. 1906." The reverse is of heavy white grosgrain silk with the Latin cross in gold. On the mahogany staff from which it is suspended is a brass plate with this wording: "Presented by Mr. and Mrs. Howard D. Fowler and family in loving memory of Rachel M. Golding."

After Mrs. Fowler in a few well chosen words had presented the banner the rector, Rev. Frederick H. Steenstra, accepted it for the branch. The Rev. Leander C. Manchester, a parishioner and who assisted the Rev. Albert Edwin Clattenburg, then rector, at the funeral of Miss Golding, March, 1910, gave a brief talk on the objects of the G. F. S., and emphasized the fact that it was not entirely for the social side. Dr. Manchester knew Miss Golding's worth and spoke of her warm hearted personality and generous nature, her tact and sweet kindliness that made her much beloved by all who knew her. The choir were members of Fowler family, Carl Fowler at the organ, and the hymns sung were "The saints of God," "Their conflict past," "For all the saints who from their labors rest," and "Peace, perfect peace." Several members of Miss Golding's family were present, including her brother Benjamin M. Golding and sister Mrs. Alfred O. Spinney and daughters.

FUNERAL OF COL. WHITE

Delegation From Old 18th in Attendance

The funeral of Col. William B. White was held from the First Parish church Thursday afternoon. The services while not a full military service were somewhat military, as besides a large attendance of friends, which included all of the employees at the White factory, there was a delegation of fifteen comrades from the Military Order of the Loyal Legion in charge of Capt. C. W. C. Rhoades; a delegation from Hartsuff Post, G. A. R., of Rockland, of which he was a member, and a delegation from the 18th Regiment association of which Col. White was president.

The pulpit was banked with many beautiful floral tributes, in front of which were the colors of the Loyal Legion. The Stars and Stripes and the white State flag in the centre and the blue artillery and yelow infantry flags on the outside, while in one corner was the Loyal Legion banner, draped in mourning.

The services were conducted by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson, minister of the church and were of a simple nature. Meeting the body at the entrance of the church, Rev. Mr. Hudson preceded it down the centre aisle reading from the scriptures. The services included a poem and prayer. Music was rendered by the Weber male quartet who sang, "Lead kindly light," "Sometime we'll understand," and the hymn, "For all thy Saints." At the close of the service bugler John Flockton of the Loyal Legion played the "Lost Chord" and the service closed with taps by the bugler.

The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery, the bearers being Walter M. Packard, B. F. Hodgkinson, Jr., Willie Stoddard and Charles Hart of Abner S. Packard camp, Sons of Veterans and Capt. George A. Wardwell and Senior Vice Commander Thomas Gould of Boyd camp, United Spanish War Veterans.

MASSACHUSETTS WOMAN SAYS MAYR STOMACH REMEDY CAME AS BLESSING

Mrs. W. H. Brown Tells How She Was Relieved After Long Suffering.

Mrs. W. H. Brown of Danvers, Mass., was a victim of stomach trouble which tortured her for years. She tried many treatments and medicines and got little relief.

Then she took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and got results right away. In telling of her case she wrote:

"For years I have suffered terribly with stomach trouble. I could find no relief. Then like a blessing from above, I heard of your remedy; sent for it, and after a few treatments am being cured. I am going to tell all my friends of your miraculous remedy."

Such letters come from stomach sufferers all over New England. This remedy is known everywhere because of its genuine merit. The first dose convinces—no long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitator, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox's drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know about—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful results.

MADE IT HOT FOR OFFICER

Intending to jump overboard to escape arrest, an attractively dressed woman, giving the name of Grace Thompson and claiming to be a chief witness in the Becker trial, was captured by patrolman George Fallon on the steamboat pier at Houghs Neck Wednesday evening after a short chase.

Grace, with another, had created a disturbance and as the officer approached stood her ground. Her companion left on the run. She answered the first question by sending a right to the face, and when advised to quiet down, she crossed another to the jaw. She then delivered several body punches, broke away and headed for the end of the pier and Quincy bay.

Officer Fallon sprinted and overtook her a few feet from the edge. A friend summoned the police auto and while waiting for her ride, Grace said she had been to Peddock's on an outing. She shrieked this information and made another attempt to escape.

Hundreds were attracted by her shrill yells among them being Capt. Daniel R. Mackay and Inspector Alfred W. Goodhue. She took a liking to the latter and firmly gripping his coat asked for protection. The combined efforts of the three officers were required to put her in the auto. At the station she was booked on a charge of drunkenness. She was released this morning.

FIELD DAY AT BRAINTREE

An event for which the children and parents of South Braintree have labored earnestly was the first field day of the Noah Torrey School Association which was given Wednesday afternoon and evening on French's common. About 600 children took active part in the patriotic program which opened with a flag raising at the Pond street school house. The flag was presented to the school by Miss Josephine Colbert in behalf of Gen. Sylvanus Thayer Woman's Relief Corps. Miss Colbert is patriotic instructor for the corps and her remarks were appropriate and interesting.

Miss Claire Shay, principal accepted the gift for the Pond school and the raising was accompanied by patriotic selections played by the Avelino band of Boston.

After the presentation the assembled pupils of the Noah Torrey and Pond schools, the teachers, members of the Relief Corps and members of the Noah Torrey school association marched to the Common accompanied by the band. There were given a series of calisthenics and athletic events. The pupils of the Noah Torrey school were first on the program for a flag drill which was given under the direction of Chester A. Maddocks, principal of the school.

The doll carriage parade arranged by Miss Hattie Hill was a most attractive feature. Those winning in this competition were Margery Smith, Marion G. Moulton and Mary A. Magazer. The children taking part were from Grade A in the Pond school. The Maypole dance given by the pupils of Grade one Pond school was well done and was under the direction of Miss Helen Cuff.

A series of folk-dances and games by grades two and three followed, Miss Claire Shay directing their progress. A flag drill by the girls of grades six, seven and eight concluded that portion of the entertainment Miss Josephine Colbert was the director.

Under the trees in the grove the members of the association had arranged tables and booths for the sale of refreshments and souvenirs. These were attractively decorated with flowers and the national colors and were liberally patronized by a generous public.

Mrs. Albert F. Hollis, president of the association was chairman of the general committee and was ably assisted by a corps of earnest workers, who left no stone unturned to make the affair the financial success it became. Those serving on the various committees were as follows:

VILLA DICTATES HIS OWN TERMS

Rebel General Absolute Master of Northern Mexico

DEMANDS CONTROL OF ARMY

Carranza Must Confine Himself to Control of Civil Government and Foreign Relations—White House Admits Possibility of Failure of Mediation Negotiations

Washington, June 19.—General Villa seems to have crushed the attempt of General Carranza to suppress him and, if the dispatches are to be credited, is absolutely master of northern Mexico, with the "First Chief" of the constitutionalists resting securely in the hollow of his hand.

Carranza's civil officers are prisoners of Villa and he has seized the available "money" in their possession. Coincident with these events comes the news that the much-advertised Antilla cargo of munitons of war has been seized by Villa for his army. According to the story Carranza's adherents get none of it.

Villa has presented an ultimatum to Carranza, demanding the absolute separation of civil and military branches of the constitutionalist government. This is the substance of dispatches received at constitutionalist headquarters in Piedras Negras, Mex.

A committee of three officers was said now to be in conference with Carranza at Saltillo, presenting Villa's plan.

According to constitutionalist officials at Piedras Negras, his plan is as follows:

First—Villa to have complete control of the army and to direct the military policy without interference, while Carranza is to have control of the civil government and foreign relations.

Second—Villa agrees to recognize Carranza as his superior provided Carranza accords him recognition as supreme military chief.

Third—The promotion of officers and the disposition of their commands to be in Villa's hands.

Constitutionalists expressed their belief that if these demands were granted Villa would proceed with the campaign and take personal command of the forces in the field. Otherwise, they said, they thought he would persist in his resignation and retire to Chihuahua to await such time as he could serve the constitutionalist cause without friction.

The third clause of Villa's alleged ultimatum was accepted as a direct answer to Carranza's promotion of General Natera to command the division of the centre.

The success or failure of the constitutionalist cause depends upon a complete settlement of the difficulties between Cararnza, political head of the Mexican revolutionists, and Villa, his chief military leader, is the opinion of prominent members of both factions.

Carranza Reported Ready to Flee

Washington, June 19.—Representative Kent of California told the president and Secretary Bryan he had telegraphic information from Mexico that General Carranza was about to leave his headquarters and flee to Laredo, Tex. Kent did not give the name of his informant.

No word confirming this report has been received from the United States consul in Laredo. Kent's information is said to have come in a code telegram received by him from a close friend in northern Mexico.

TO THE PUBLIC:

THE State of New York, through its Department of Insurance, has completed the examination of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company which it is required by law to make every three years. The Chief Examiner, in concluding the report, said:

"The treatment by this Company of its policy-holders in the prompt payment of their claims, in the voluntary payment of millions of dollars in bonuses, and in its social welfare work—are features of the Company's business which deserve commendation."

The Superintendent of Insurance, the Hon. William Temple Emmet, in approving the report, wrote an extended review from which we make extracts:

THE COMPANY'S GROWTH AND MANAGEMENT.

"The administrative officers of the Company * * * have so increased the assets of the Company as to make these equal the resources of many states and even nations. They have at the same time steadily cheapened the cost of insurance to policy-holders, both by direct means and by the distribution of bonuses."

[The report shows that the Company has given back $35,367,293 in bonuses to Industrial policy-holders in nineteen years.]

"They have extended the Company's business to such an extent as to bring it into contact now with approximately one-eighth of the population of the United States."

[The number of policies outstanding December 31, 1913, was 13,957,748.]

"That this notable growth has involved no sacrifice of efficiency in the handling of administrative details, but, on the contrary, has been the direct result of constantly increasing efficiency, is shown by the comparatively small losses sustained by the Company in proportion to the large investments made."

ITS POLICY-HOLDERS SATISFIED.

"The fact that the percentage of lapses due to the abandonment of their insurance by policy-holders is constantly decreasing, speaks eloquently to the same effect."

[The lapse ratio of Industrial policies has decreased 31.7 per cent. in eight years.]

"This last mentioned development is perhaps the most convincing evidence which could be offered that the Company's policy-holders are, broadly speaking, very well satisfied indeed with what they get in return for the premiums they pay. A very remarkable showing altogether."

ITS SOCIAL SERVICE.

"This Company waited for no changes in existing law before striking out as a pioneer among insurance companies along the pathway of social service on a huge scale.

"For years it has maintained for its policy-holders a nursing service upon a great scale; this has latterly become a veritable marvel of efficiency and practical helpfulness.".

[Metropolitan nurses made 1,127,022 visits to sick policy-holders in 1913, for which the Company paid the bills.]

"Leaving out of consideration the mere numbers of those who have been directly benefited by these activities, I think that the example which the Metropolitan has set to other great business organizations by its early recognition of the new responsibilities attaching to all business enterprises which have attained a certain size, is one of the most beneficial of recent occurrences in the field of American business. For years it has through its publications upon the question of health conservation been serving multitudes of people as a sort of University of beneficial instruction upon this most important subject."

ABREAST OF MODERN THOUGHT.

"This great institution, having so very recently been under our critical scrutiny and presenting so many admirable illustrations of what an efficient and enlightened modern business organization on a large scale can do in the way of keeping abreast of modern thought, seems to be in a position where I may properly use it as an illustration * * * that private initiative and enterprise are at their best still capable of doing the finest possible work in fields from which, latterly, all the talk has been that these agencies should be compelled to retire."

AMUSEMENTS

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

On Monday "Under Cover" will begin the last week but one of its engagement at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston. The long and successful run of this extraordinary play will mark an epoch in Boston's theatrical history. First because it will have achieved the longest consecutive run for that city, a phenomenal record of 28 weeks, and secondly because it will have scored the record for weekly gross receipts of any play produced in recent years. When you consider the fact that the play was practically new and unheard of when it opened at the Plymouth last Christmas you will have little difficulty to realize the enormous success of the piece. Those who have yet to witness the play had better do so now. These are the last remaining opportunities as the engagement positively terminates on Saturday night July 4th. There will be no extension of time whatever, as several of the leading members of the company have already arranged to sail for Europe for a brief period, for a much needed rest. This is a fair warning to those that are unfortunately possessed with the faculty of putting off things until the very last minute. "Under Cover" will be the chief topic of discussion in theatrical matters for many months to come. To see it is to enjoy the greatest pleasure in a long time, while to miss it is the regret of a lifetime. It is planned to have Governor Walsh and his entire staff, and other prominent State officials present on the closing night in recognition of its remarkable run. The seats for this performance are now on sale. The regular Thursday and Saturday matinees.

SCOLLAY SQUARE OLYMPIA.

It doesn't matter what the season is patrons of Gordon and Lord's Scollay Square Olympia are bound to get the highest quality of entertainment at this popular playhouse. This fact has been repeatedly demonstrated with the result that many new patrons have come to realize that in order to get the best and most for the least money the Olympia is the place to go. Moreover, theatregoers should bear in mind the fact that no expense was spared when this magnificent playhouse was constructed and among its many facilities is a wonderful air-cooling system. You needn't mind how warm it may happen to be on the street you are bound to be comfortable in the theatre. This system is so arranged that the theatre can be cooled to any desired degree. The Olympia's policy is continuous, the program opening at 9.30 in the morning and there is always something doing until 10.30 at night. A complete bill, without a change, generally runs nearly four hours. This should be enough to satisfy most any one. The big bargain Fridays are still in vogue while the Sunday night concerts have always a long list of attractive features.

THE POPS.

The season of Pop concerts in Symphony hall, Boston, is nearing its end next week, beginning June 22, being the eighth and last, but one. Mr. Lenon, who is now conductor, has confirmed the pleasant impression he made a year ago and his programs have found wide favor with the patrons of the concerts. For the eighth week of the season and his second week, he has arranged some especially interesting events. Monday night, June 22d, he will give a program of dance music. The numbers will run from the Gavotte and Minuet of old days into the modern tango. There will be waltzes, polkas jigs, mazurkas and polonnises. In fact, this is one of the most fascinating programs that has ever been presented at a Pop concert. Thursday evening, June 28, there will be a Swedish program. This program is given at the request of the Swedish societies of Boston and vicinity who will be represented by many of their members and the Swedish Glee club and Harmonie under their conductors, Mr. Robert Svedemann and Mr. Gustaf Sundelius will sing Swedish songs. The other programs will be up to the usual mark of attractiveness.

MODERN LIFE INSURANCE SCOPE.

The report of the New York State Department of Insurance on the triennial examination of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has just been published by the State. Under the law, revised by Governor Hughes, this examination must be made every three years. About twenty examiners of the Insurance Department devoted nearly a year to the work, and Mr. Emmet, as Superintendent of the Department, wrote an extended review of the report. In this review Commissioner Emmet not only made an analysis of the Company's condition as a business corporation, but of its activities along the broader lines of social service among industrial workers, health education and the conservation of human life. He points out that the Company, now having more than thirteen million policies outstanding, has assumed such proportions that it is practically brought into immediate contact with approximately one-eighth of the population of the United States.

Here are extracts from Superintendent Emmet's report:

"If the men in charge of such a Company grow reactionary in their tendencies, or blind to the social progress of the age, the movement toward an absorption of their powers by the State itself will, as matters stand, proceed very rapidly. But in the case of the Company under consideration there has been such a frank and fearless recognition of its new responsibilities that it is easy enough, after all, to understand how it has happened that in the field of Industrial insurance the movement toward State operation and ownership has experienced a setback.

"Having very promptly recognized what the public may rightfully require from institutions engaged in the industrial insurance business—having in fact been largely instrumental in educating the public to a full realization of what it might rightfully require—this Company waited for no changes in existing law before striking out as a pioneer among insurance companies along the pathway of social service on a huge scale.

"Leaving out of consideration the mere numbers of those who have been directly benefited by these activities, I think that the example which the Metropolitan has set to other great business organizations by its early recognition of the new responsibilities ataching to all business enterprises which have attained a certain size, is one of the most beneficial of recent occurrences in the field of American business.

"I believe that private initiative and enterprise, are at their best still capable of doing the finest possible work in fields from which, latterly, all the talk has been that these agencies should be compelled to retire."

An axminster rug was presented by Nelson M. Ackerson after which a general good time was enjoyed and refreshments served. THE HARVARD-YALE RACES

Crimsons Are Picked to Win In the Great Varsity Contest

New London, Conn., June 19.—Harvard is picked to beat Yale in the main race of the varsity eight-oared shells in today's regatta on the Thames river. The crew which Coach Wray has brought to the top form this year looks stronger than the Blue combination which has been instructed in English oarsmanship by Guy Nickalls, in spite of the exceptionally fast time trial that Yale has made in down-stream rowing during the past fortnight.

A repetition of the clean-sweep victory that Harvard executed a year ago is not looked for, however, since the Yale freshman eight has developed into a speedy and strong crew which the Crimson 1917 men will have difficulty in beating to the finish line of the four-mile course.

The race of the second varsity eights, which is a new feature in this year's program, is given over to Harvard before the start, for the second string Crimson oarsmen are nearly on par with the varsity sweepsters. Yale's second best material, on the other hand, is not of the best, and a Harvard win in this event has already been booked.

MUST TURN OVER MONEY

Contributions to Strikers Not Accounted For by I. W. W. Leaders

Boston, June 19.—Money contributed to the relief of the strikers during the textile strike at Lawrence in 1912 constituted a public charitable trust, and members of the strike committee are personally liable for its expenditure, under a decision of the full bench of the supreme court.

The court orders Joseph Bedard, William Trautmann, Joseph Shasheen and William Yates, members of the committee, to pay to the clerk of the supreme court at Boston the sum of $5800 with interest, and Bedard, Trautman and Shasheen are ordered to pay in the further sum of $9579.85, representing moneys received by them and not accounted for.

The receipts during the strike were $62,564.40. The sum of $46,188.72 was deposited in the Lawrence Trust company in the name of the I. W. W., Local 20, and $16,375.68 received by the committee did not pass through the bank.

FLAMES CONSUME GLASGOW DOCKS

Total Loss Is Estimated at About $2,500,000

Glasgow, June 19.—The greatest conflagration in the history of Glasgow swept the harbor front, doing damage estimated at $2,500,000.

The fire started upon the great Kingstown docks on the banks of the Clyde, and soon these enormous piers with their freight sheds and thousands of tons of freight were destroyed.

Half a dozen ships moored alongside of the docks caught fire, and two of them were burned to the waterline.

The origin of the blaze is not definitely known, but indications are that it was started by suffragettes. Fully a score of the fire fighters were overcome by great clouds of smoke.

MUNDAY CONCERNS FAIL

Close Their Doors as Result of Bank Crash In Chicago

Chicago, June 19.—Two more companies, headed by Charles B. Munday, vice president of the LaSalle Street Trust and Savings bank, closed their doors just as Attorney General Lucey was filing a petition in the courts here asking the appointment of a receiver for the LaSalle Street bank, and charging that the bank was irretrievably insolvent. His petition was taken under advisement.

The latest institutions to be hurt by the bank crash were the People's bank of East Alton and the Litchfield Mill and Elevator company. The bank was a private concern with Munday as president.

RELEASE IS SOUGHT BY FOSTER MOTHER

Girl Whom She Adopted Proves to Be Defective

New York, June 19.—Mrs. James Hickey of College Point, L. I., who eight years ago adopted a little girl from an orphan asylum, has asked Surrogate Noble in Jamaica to set aside the adoption.

Mrs. Hickey said the child had proved to be mentally defective and of criminal tendencies, and although it grieved her greatly to do so, she did not feel that she could continue to consider the child hers.

Mrs. Hickey's disappointment in the little girl, Mary R. Hickey, touched those who heard how she had tried by care, discipline and kind treatment to correct Mary's mental deficiency, only to fail. Mrs. Hickey had an unsuccessful operation on the child's skull performed as a last effort.

Surrogate Noble reserved decision.

The Four Post Bedstead

Or the Mysterious Workings of Providence

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mrs. Henry Dowd stared coldly at Philippa Fancher, who was sitting on the other side of Lawyer Weems' office. Philippa looked expectantly at the little sandy haired lawyer, who was reading the last will and testament of the late Susan Fancher to the heirs.

"'And lastly,'" droned Mr. Weems, reading, "'I give and bequeath to my nieces, Amanda Fancher Dowd and Philippa Fancher, my mahogany four post bedstead, to be divided as follows.'" Here Mr. Weems blew his thin nose violently and coughed nervously before concluding the important document:

"'To be divided as follows: The two head posts, the headboard and one side rail to my niece Amanda Fancher Dowd; the two foot posts, one side rail and the foot piece to my niece Philippa Fancher, theirs to have and to hold forever.'

"That's all," said Mr. Weems, busying himself with his papers.

The six nieces from Planeville, who equally shared the meager bank deposits and the house and furniture of their deceased aunt, smiled furtively at one another as Mrs. Dowd and her cousin Philippa rose stiffly from their chairs and, without a word to the others, carried their bitter disappointment out of the office.

Although Philippa and her cousin Amanda had not been good friends for many years, now a common cause for complaint united them for a brief time.

"It's an insult!" declared Amanda Dowd, her stout form quivering with indignation.

"It is indeed," agreed Philippa primly. "After all I've done for Aunt Susan too. The winter when she had pneumonia I stayed with her day and night for two months, and when I went home she told me, says she: 'Phil, you'll be rewarded for this when I'm gone. I shall remember you generously in my will.'

"Says I, 'Aunt Susan, I'm not doing it for reward'"— Philippa stopped short and got very red when she saw the sarcastic smile quivering around Amanda's lips.

"Aunt Susan was fond of making promises," said Amanda hastily. "The time when I sewed for her two months steady so that she could make that visit to New York she promised I would be remembered first in her will."

"And you were last!" ejaculated Philippa sweetly.

"Except for your name I was," reminded Mrs. Dowd.

"And each of us only half of a four post bedstead!"

"It's an insult!" repeated Mrs. Dowd.

"I don't understand Aunt Susan's promising us, who have done so much for her, and then leaving us nothing after all, when the Planeville nieces, who hardly noticed her, got everything worth while."

"Except half an old four post bedstead," muttered Amanda Dowd. "I've a good mind to burn my half up or give it away."

"You might give yours to Ida Finney, and I'll do the same," said Philippa. "She told me the other day that if she had another double bed she could take some city boarders. She needs the money."

"And then folks can see that we don't care a snap about the old bedstead," agreed Mrs. Dowd.

So it happened that little Miss Finney, whose hands, crippled by rheumatism, could no longer trim hats, came into possession of the four post bedstead which Aunt Susan Fancher had eccentrically divided between two of her nieces.

Ida Finney put the bed in her sitting room and rented it to boarders from the city.

One autumn day Ida hurried up the path that led to Philippa's side door Philippa Fancher, who put up fruit and pickles for a living, was stirring a spicy mixture in a huge kettle on the stove.

"Come in, Ida," she called to the little milliner. "Your boarders gone?" she inquired after Miss Finney was seated.

"Not yet, though they are all ready to go on the 2 o'clock stage. Now, Philippa," went on Ida earnestly, "the folks who have been sleeping on that four poster want to buy it from me. They offered me—what do you think?"

Philippa added more sugar to her pickles and tasted them delicately.

"Five dollars?" she hazarded.

Ida Finney laughed excitedly.

"Fifty dollars! There, I knew you'd jump, Phil Fancher! Fifty dollars for the old bedstead that your Aunt Susan left you and that you despised."

Philippa reddened. "Did you accept the offer, Ida?" she asked stiffly.

"I did not. I told them that it didn't belong to me, being only borrowed from you and Amandy, and if it had been mine I wouldn't have sold it because it had belonged to your Aunt Susan."

"We gave it to you, Ida. You can sell it if you want to."

"I'm proud to have anything that belonged to Susan Fancher," said Ida Finney. "She was very kind to my folks once, and when I learned the millinery trade she loaned me the money to go into business. I paid it all back, too, but I ain't forgot her goodness."

Ida Finney arose and moved toward the door. "Well, I must hurry home again. I just thought I'd let you know about the offer."

"And you won't sell the bed and keep the money? We don't care," said Philippa.

"No; I'd rather not sell it. I know Miss Susan set great store by that bed. She said it belonged to her great-grandmother and it had a history."

Ida went out and closed the door rather sharply, as was her wont. She had a way of stirring one's conscience without actually preaching.

Philippa finished her pickles and then, changing her dress, went across the street to see her cousin, Amanda Dowd.

In a few words Philippa related what Ida Finney had told her about the four post bed which the city people valued at $50.

"Something Ida said made me feel ashamed of giving the bed away," ended Philippa sadly. "You see, I was very angry the day Mr. Weems read that letter, and so I didn't care about the bed or my share of it. I've been thinking that Aunt Susan was very kind to me. She did lots of nice things for me when I was a girl, and I ought not to have calculated on her leaving me any money."

Amanda Dowd nodded her head. "I feel the same way, Philippa. Aunt Susan helped my brother Jim to study for the ministry, and I guess I'll get my half of the bed back from Ida Finney. I'll give her $5 toward another one."

"So will I," said Philippa, who could ill afford it.

A week later Amanda Dowd and Philippa Fancher went over to see Ida Finney.

After an hour of lively persuasion the independent Miss Finney reluctantly consented to accept $10 for the bed, which the remorseful owners had given her some time before.

"I feel as mean as getout," said Ida as she placed the money in her worn pocketbook and led the way upstairs.

"As a punishment for my meanness I shall carry my half home piecemeal," said Philippa firmly as they proceeded to dismantle the ancient bed of its spotless coverings.

"And I shall do the same," said Amanda, her broad face grave with regret. "Now, Phil, do you know how to uncord the thing?"

Philippa worked with deft fingers, and presently the bed was apart and divided according to the last will and testament of Susan Fancher.

Philippa lifted one heavy post. "It looks as if it could be unscrewed here. See where the joining is quite plain. It will be easier to carry if it does come apart." She twisted the end of the post, and it moved easily around and around until she lifted the carved top and disclosed a deep, cuplike hollow. The hollow was filled with white tissue paper, which, pulled out and unfolded, revealed a packet of money—ten $100 bills.

In dazed silence her companions watched Philippa while she unscrewed the top of her second bedpost and found a similar sum of money.

Then it was Amanda Dowd's turn, and she, too, was remembered in the same manner by eccentric, kind hearted Aunt Susan.

Little Ida Finney watched them in tearful delight as they made these astounding discoveries, but Ida was to make a discovery on her own account.

"Ida Finney," said Amanda after a short consultation with Philippa, "Philippa and I would never have found this money if it hadn't been for you. You made us ashamed of ourselves, and, Ida, you've got to take this. If you won't do it gracefully I'll have it put to your credit in the Little River bank." She extended a packet of bills toward the little milliner.

"I don't dare decline it because I need it so badly," half sobbed Ida.

"Take it!" ordered Philippa and Amanda, and Ida Finney took the packet and cried over it like a baby, for it contained ten $100 bills.

As for the cousins, they bore the sections of the four poster home, and it is a credit to them both that each one was thinking more of the past kindnesses of Aunt Susan and of the mysterious workings of Providence, which through their own awakened consciences had brought them to a degree of prosperity.

DETAILS GIVEN BY PASSENGER

Confirms Statement of Kendall at Wreck Investigation

SAYS SHIP WAS STATIONARY

Saw Storstad Close at Hand and at Right Angles to Hull of Empress of Ireland—Engineers Testify as to Signals Received by Telegraph From Bridge of Ill-Fated Vessel

Quebec, June 19.—After devoting two days to the testimony of officers and sailors the commission investigating the loss of the Empress of Ireland created a diversion by calling as a witness George Smart, a passenger on the wrecked steamship. Smart was put on the stand at the request of Edward L. Newcombe, attorney for the Dominion marine department.

The witness confirmed Captain Kendall's assertion that the Empress was standing virtually stationary at the time of the collision. Smart said he was awakened by the shock of the collision, and that when he put his head out of his porthole he saw the Storstad close at hand and at right angles to the hull of the Empress. The impact of the collision, he said, was not severe.

Lord Mersey asked Newcombe to prepare plans of the construction of the Empress and the Storstad for the use of the commission and to get evidence regarding the life belts, life rafts, life boats and general equipment of the Empress.

After John W. Black, a second cabin passenger on the Empress, had testified briefly, Lord Mersey ruled that it would be of no value to examine any more passengers.

Robert H. Brennan, second engineer on the Empress, gave an account of the signals received by telegraph from the bridge. He said soon after leaving Father Point they were ordered full speed ahead. This order was carried out. They then received orders to stop and go full speed astern. The two commands came almost simultaneously. The ship had been going astern for three minutes when they were ordered to stop.

The impact occurred four or five minutes afterward. Almost immediately after the impact there was a rush of water in the stokehold. An order was given to close all watertight bulkheads as soon as water appeared, and as far as he could see this order was carried out successfully and effectively. When the lights went out there was nothing more to be done and the engineers left the engine room.

The witness admitted that it would take about an hour to gather full speed from a dead stop. The throttle had never been thrown wide open after leaving Father Point, he said, as the ship had not gained sufficient headway to permit it.

Counsel asked how long it was before the ship was going full speed astern after the order had been received from the bridge. The witness said three minutes. The witness' questioner pointed out that the vessel could not possibly have been going full speed astern in so short a time, especially as the throttle was never wide open. Lord Mersey pressed the witness with the same question, and Brennan explained that the reverse was introduced gradually.

Robert Liddell, senior third engineer of the Empress, who had charge of the engines on the starboard side of the ship, corroborated the testimony of Brennon in regard to the orders received.

PUMICE AND SULPHUR

Give Evidence of Great Volcanic Disturbances In Alaska

Valdez, Alaska, June 19.—Additional evidence of volcanic disturbances in southwestern Alaska was brought here in reports which stated that areas of the surface of Prince William sound and the shores of the sound are covered with powdered pumice and sulphur.

The powder is colored yellow, and is unlike the ash from the volcano of Mount Katmai, the only known large crater in the district. It is believed it was brought down by the recent heavy rains.

VERA CRUZ HERO

was told him by the Ledger reporter.

"Gee," he said, smiling from ear to ear, "I am surprised agreeably so, but honestly, I didn't expect anything like that. I only did my duty."

"Gissie is obliged to use crutches and this morning while on his way to the station he was the centre of attraction. All his old friends and people he never saw before stopped to pay honor to the young man who occupied such a prominent position in news dispatches.

His term of enlistment in the navy expires on Aug. 29, this year, and under instructions recently issued by the Naval department he will be permitted to re-enlist if he cares to, and will practically have his choice of berth.

When wounded he was attached to the Florida, one of the first ships to reach Vera Cruz. He is its wireless operator, and is rated as an electrician-radio.

On his first enlistment he did yeoman work and then took up signalling When Admiral Fletcher was in charge of the fourth division of the Atlantic fleet, with a rank of junior rear admiral, "Gissie was on his signal staff, and when the call for a signal boy to go ashore at Vera Cruz was issued his offer was accepted.

He left New York on the Metropolitan steamer Bunker Hill on Tuesday and had a good passage to Boston.

PUBLIC RECEPTION.

Tentative plans for a reception to Edward C. Gisburne, wounded at Vera Cruz, were formulated this morning and the event will be held in the Council chamber within the next three weeks. A committee of representative men have been appointed to the committee in charge by Mayor John L. Miller.

The announcement that the contemplated reception would be held was received with joy by the people about City Square who knew "Gissie" when he did reporting. Many of these had the chance of renewing acquaintances today while he was on his way to the naval hospital at Chelsea.

The committee is as follows—Mayor John L. Miller, chairman, Col. Henry L. Kincaide, Clarence Burgin, Alfred O. Diack, Charles C. Hearn, Timothy J. Collins, Frank F. Prescott, Charles W. Bailey, Frank Burgess, John D. Mackay, Alfred N. LeBrecque, Joseph F. McPherson.

When it was first known that Mr. Gisburn had been wounded and would survive the effects, a hero fund was started and it now totals almost $300. In order that the fund may reach the amount that should be given the Quincy hero on the night of the reception, the Daily Ledger will cooperate and subscriptions received will be forwarded to Clarence Burgin, treasurer of the fund.

POLISHERS UNION.

Quincy Polishers branch held its regular meeting Thursday evening and transacted international and local business.

The principal business was election of officers which resulted as follows:

President—Alex Phillips.

Vice President—John McLean.

Corresponding Secretary — Alex Ross.

Financial Secretary—Stephen Tinney.

Treasurer—John McLennan.

Auditors—Alex McPhail, Malcolm McLeod, and Robert McLean.

Adjustment Committee — George MacDonald.

Past Pres. George MacDonald installed the officers after which a general good time was in order.

Easy Method.

"I'm tired of life." "That being the case, go out to California and shout 'Banzai!'"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

IN DEFAULT.

Inspector Goodhue was somewhat in a quandary this morning when one of his most important witnesses in a liquor case was sent to jail in default of being able to furnish bonds to keep the peace. The man in question was John Calendor who had been summond in the case of Sam Quantor whose case for the violation of the liquor law was to come up this morning for hearing. Calendor had an idea that Andrew Kiluck had given his name to the police and he proceeded to take vengance on Andrew by punching him which he did. He was brought into court this morning and fined $10 for the assault and put under $50 bonds to keep the peace for three months. In default of bonds he was committed.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL GRADUATIONS

Members of the School Committee, Mayor and Others Address the Graduates

Exercises Held in Five of the School Halls

Statistics and the names of the grammar school graduates of the city appeared in the Daily Ledger of yesterday. Joint exercises were held in five of the school halls, all largely attended and are reported at length:

CODDINGTON HALL.

The graduates of the Coddington, Atherton Hough and Washington schools held their exercises in the Coddington School hall and were honored by the presence of Mayor Miller, who was one of the speakers. The decorations were confined mostly to daisies which banked the front of the platform.

The processional march was a feature of the program. The chorus gave five numbers under the direction of Thomas B. Pollard, singing with expression "The gallant troubadour," "Morn-rise," "Carmena," "The American hymn" and "America." Miss Helen M. Lincoln was the accompanist.

On the program were three declamations, but Arthur E. Goodwin of the Atherton Hough has hardly recovered from pneumonia and was excused. Henry B. Carlson of the Coddington recited Henry Cabot Lodge's "Tribute to Massachusetts," and Mabel Taylor Roache of the Washington recited "Mice at Play," both heartily applauded.

Arthur B. Foster and Dr. Edward H. Bushnell of the School Committee presented the diplomas, and briefly addressed the graduates. They hoped that today would not be the end of school life for any. That next September they would be found at the High or Woodward, still pressing forward eager to learn.

Mayor Miller noted the fact that the city was expending $12,000 more this year for schools than ever before, a total of nearly $200,000. No money however brought greater returns and he hoped that all the graduates would make the best of their opportunities. Quincy today offers an industrial course, as well as academic and business courses, and we have school buildings of which we may be proud.

The salute to the flag by the graduates was well executed, and there was applause when the graduates marched out.

The class of 1914 has presented the Coddington school with a bas relief of "Girls playing on the lyre" the second of a group of ten. They also remembered the teachers at the school. Kind wishes were exchanged in parting.

The Washington school gave a reception on Tuesday evening to its base ball team which made such a showing. It was a social occasion, and ice cream and cake were served.

HIGH SCHOOL HALL.

There was a good attendance at the graduating exercises of the John Hancock, Lincoln and Willard schools which was held at the High School hall. Promptly at 3 o'clock the graduates of the three schools marched in, each carrying aloft its school banner. Each pupil also wore a ribbon bow of his or her school colors. The program opened with a processional after which there was singing by the graduates under the direction of Miss S. Maude Amsden, supervisor of music with Miss Rosalie Du Temple as accompanist.

The speakers were Arthur W. Newcomb chairman of the John Hancock and Lincoln schools, and Joseph H. McPherson chairman of the Willard school. Mr. Newcomb speaking to the graduates of the John Hancock school gave a brief outline of the history of Gov. Hancock for whom the school was named.

He said that there was but one statue of Hancock, and he wanted to urge the graduates to form Hancock clubs and raise subscriptions so that sometime a statue of Gov. Hancock might be erected in Hancock square

To the pupils of the Lincoln school he said that when the school was named the late Col. Charles H. Porter called it "The Lincoln," which meant that there was but one Lincoln, Abraham. He urged the children to obtain a copy of Lincoln's life and study it carefully. To the girls of the class, he counselled that they try and emulate the example of the beautiful character of Lincoln.

Mr. McPherson speaking to the Willard graduates said that eight years ago when he was graduated from the High school the city was appropriating $122,000 for the support of the schools. This year it was nearly $200,000 and was constantly increasing. He considered it however money well expended if it will teach you children obedience to the law, for obedience to the law means liberty. He urged that when they entered the High school that they take up the physical studies rather than Greek or Latin which was of no use to them. He said that he believed that the time had come when the schools should teach Spanish. There was a great prospect of future business with South America which was now lacking only because our young men were unable to speak the Spanish language. He also said a word about the movement to form a High school alumni and hoped that all interested would leave their names with him.

The diplomas were presented following the two addresses, and the exercises closed with the singing of the American Hymn, a salute to the flag, and the repeating in unison of the oath of allegiance, and closing with America.

ADAMS SCHOOL HALL.

Graduating exercises were held for the first time in the new Adams school hall on Friday afternoon for 38 graduates of the Adams and 38 graduates of the Cranch school. There was a large attendance of parents.

The program was well carried out and included musical selections by the pupils under the direction of Miss Mary Egan, master's assistant, with Miss Martha E. Isaac as the accompanist.

Arthur S. Townsend, principal of both schools, made the introductory remarks. He called the class one of the most remarkable ever graduated inasmuch as none were kept back, it frequently happening that one sixth to one tenth fail to graduate.

Two could not receive their diplomas because of sickness and one because of a death in the family. He read the statistics of the class, showing that two had completed their course in seven years. The youngest graduate is 12 years, 8 months and the oldest 16 years and two months.

The graduates marched to the platform at 3 o'clock, Norma Johnson heading the Cranch and Everett Roberts the Adams schools. Both carried banners and in closing the program they stood with American flags in the centre of the platform while the salute to the flag was given.

The ushers were Roxanna Schenkel-

FIRST REUNION CLASS OF 1913

Headmaster Collins and Miss Thompson as Guests

Meeting for the first time for a year in a social way, the members of the class of 1913 of the Quincy High school gathered in Alpha hall Friday evening for the first of their annual reunions and dancing parites. The attendance was a good representation of one of the most notable classes ever graduated.

Ernest L. Collins, headmaster of Quincy High school, Mrs. E. L. Collins, and Miss Clara Thompson, a teacher, presided over the festivities. During the evening they occupied the matrons corner which was prettily decorated with potted plants and palms with a large American flag as the background.

The program opened with the grand march, headed by President Richard Z. Crane, Harvard '17, and Miss Dorothy Edwards, after which the first waltz of the evening commenced. The modern dances prevailed until just before midnight.

Attached to the front of the platform was the motto of the class, "Esse, non Videre"—To be, not to seem. Frappe were served.

The floor was in charge of Roland Estey assisted by the committee headed by Allan Miller, chairman, Miss Mary Morrison, Miss Eva Linton, Miss Millicent Chapman, Ralph Prout and Edward Brown.

RADCLIFFE GRADUATE.

On Wednesday, June 17, Radcliffe College conferred upon Adelia Ethel Borden, daughter of H. W. Borden of Franklin street, South Braintree, the degree of Bachelor of Arts, with special distinction for her work in Greek and French literature. Miss Borden prepared for college at Thayer Academy where she maintained a high record in her studies, graduating in June 1909. After a post graduate year there, in which she acted as assistant to Miss Anna Boynton Thompson, she entered college in the fall of 1910. The high quality of her work throughout her college course has been recognized in three different years by award of scholarships, and in her Senior year, by her election to the Honorary Fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa.

Not only has she excelled in scholarly achievements, however; for, in athletics, dramatics, and other phases of college life she has been equally prominent. The freshman class elected her captain of their basketball team; she has been treasurer of the Radcliffe Choral Society, Business Manager and treasurer of Glee Club and a member of Dramatic Committee, which called upon her ability to coach plays. But she also had a number of opportunities to display her histrionic talent, taking several important roles in the college plays. Moreover, Miss Borden was appointed one of the editors of the 1914 Class Book.

Last, but not least, however, as a practical result of her college course, Miss Borden has accepted an unusually good position as teacher in a private institution The Santa Barbara School for Girls, Santa Barbara, California, where her work will begin next fall. The good wishes of this community go with her for success in her chosen work.

WOODWARD ALUMNAE

Class of 1914 Have Dinner and Sail

The seniors who received their award of merit at the graduating exercises of Woodward Institute Wednesday evening are now dignified alumnae, the official announcement being made Friday evening when the Class of 1914 was admitted to membership in the Woodward Institute Alumnae Association.

Miss Elsie Patterson of Wollaston was elected president of the association for the coming year and Miss Mary Geary of West Quincy, who served as president the past year, is the new vice president. Miss Amy Fallon of Quincy Point is secretary and Miss Esther Beckford of Quincy Point was chosen treasurer. There was no contest for the offices, the report of the nominating committee being unanimously accepted.

A committee one representing each class, was appointed to serve notice on the members of meetings which are held twice each year and several other important items were considered. Retiring president Miss Mary Geary presided.

Dancing was enjoyed after the meeting, music being furnished by Miss Amy Fallon and Miss Helen Crane. Punch was served.

It was a busy day for the graduates for in the afternoon they had a class dinner at the clubhouse of the Quincy Yacht club and later enjoyed a sail in the harbor. Principal and Mrs. Rice Mr. Buckingham, Miss Lane and the teachers were guests. A pleasing part of the program was the class prophecy read by Miss Beal.

BAND CONCERT APPRECIATED

There was a large and appreciative audience in City Square last evening to listen to the band concert by the Italian band. In addition to the many people who stood about the band stand in front of the fountain there were hundreds of automobile parties lined up at every vantage point about the square. The concert was a most excellent one, and that it was enjoyed and appreciated was shown by the spontaneous applause that greeted every selection. Most citizens appreciate the good will of the band in giving the citizens a free concert, and the only regret is that the city has not the necessary funds to provide band concerts in every ward of the city. The concert was also a surprise to many as comparatively few were aware that Quincy had such an excellent band of musicians.

INJURED GIRL MAY RECOVER

Still on the dangerous list but fairly comfortable was the report given out today at the Quincy City Hospital about Martha Ellingson, the 16 year old girl who was badly injured at the Quincy station Friday morning when hit by a train. Some of the girls in the company of Miss Ellingson, who just escaped, returned home Friday afternoon weakened and fatigued as a result of having seen their chum drawn beneath the front wheels of a heavy engine.

Provides for New Commission and Depression of the Railroad Tracks

City Shall Indemnify People For All Losses

(Special from State House.)

At the conclusion of an extended debate, the House of Representatives yesterday passed to be engrosesd the bill for the aboliton of Quincy grade crossings by depression. This bill carries with it a referendum to the people of Quincy.

The bill found Representative Michael T. Sullivan of Quincy its heartiest supporter. Representative Edward J. Sandberg of Quincy favored the bill because it contained the referendum. He stated his belief that the people of Quincy should be allowed to determine for themselves which form of elimination is, preferable. Representative McAnarney of Boston and Representative Davis of Boston also added to the support of the Quincy members.

The opposition was voiced principally by Representatives Channing H. Cox of Boston, Thomas W. White of Newton and Essex S. Abbott of Haverhill. Mr. Abbott read a letter from

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

Now that Huerta has got a shipment of arms and ammunition, Villa knows where he can renew his supply without paying for them.

Baccalaureate Sunday is appreciated by the girl graduates, as it provides opportunity for trying on and planning alterations in their gowns before commencement.

Considering what an inconspicuous part the June bridegroom plays, it is not surprising that the reporters occasionlly forget to mention him.

The graduating essays are so very well written that it is evident that many of the teachers and parents have literary skill.

The governors are discussing the regular work of their office while they are in formal session, but it is suspected when they get into a quiet place they exchange information about how to get into the United States Senate.

King Alfonso got a three hours' talk with Col. Roosevelt, and he couldn't have done better if he had raised a family of 10 children.

THE BACCALAUREATE.

The Sunday before the graduating exercises of schools and academies, as well as colleges, is now quite generally observed as a time for the senior class to attend some church. Amid the rush of final examinations and social gaiety, the prospective graduate is not oblivious to the real meanings of the hour. He must be unusually dull if he does not realize himself to be on the brink of one of the great changes of life. At this parting of the ways, the heart is open to new ideas.

In our American life, one great ideal is cherished by the young person about to knock at the open door of fate and opportunity. That ideal is success. But the ideal of service is better.

Most business men strive and fret to grasp some advantage over competitors, meanwhile nerving their rivals to strive and fret to get ahead on their part. The net result is that no one advances very much. Meanwhile a common effort to build up the community would increase every one's success through a high tide of general growth. But boards of trade and busines men's organizations are usually carried on by a few large minded workers. Most of the others still dig away at the blind alley of mere isolated effort.

The boy or girl who has had an education has in effect borrowed from the tax-payers, or generous givers of the past. It is expected that the young people who have been given this loan of training and information will be more efficient producers. The education is given that they may have a better grasp of the modern movement for social betterment, and will be wiser leaders of human effort through study of the successes and failures of past history.

Let the baccalaureate preacher then explain this obligation which the graduate has incurred, and urge the meanness of a life that makes no fit return.

YALE WINS BY SCANT MARGIN

Beats Harvard In Sensational Finish Spurt

LOW STROKE OF CRIMSONS

Blamed For Their Being Trimmed by Crew of Much Lighter Weight—Consolation In Winning Both the Varsity Second and Freshman In Early Races on the Thames

New London, Conn., June 20.—The Yale varsity defeated Harvard by one foot of distance in the main event of the regatta on the Thames, in the most magnificent race that was ever rowed over the four-mile course. The time was 21 minutes 16 seconds, which is almost an up-stream record. By the victory the English stroke taught by Guy Nickalls, the Yale head coach, gets its vindication, and standing of the two rival universities in crew racing reverts to a tie, with each having won twenty-four times.

The vigor that Yale's physically inferior crew put into its strokes, and the low stroke that Sargent, the Harvard coxswain, kept his men at, are responsible for the gladsome victory that Yale men are celebrating.

The finish of the race was a swift spurt that looked like a dead heat to all except the judges, who proved that the nose of the Eli shell cleaved the water inches in advance of the Harvard boat's tip. The Harvard and Yale adherents in the observation trains, as well as the thousands who stood on the banks to watch the finish, did not know who had won the race, as the cannon boom announced that one of the two competing craft had won the day of glory.

The signal man on the committee yacht reached for the Harvard flag to signalize a Crimson triumph, and the close watching partisans unloosed a shout, but the man quickly dropped the red flag and hoisted the one of blue. It was Yale's turn to cheer.

The day was not a clean sweep for Yale, however, for in the morning Harvard gathered in the two scheduled races of two miles each between the second varsity eight-oared crews and the freshman eight-oared crews, and at luncheon time Harvard men were making ready for supper parties to celebrate another clean sweep for the men of Cambridge.

The Harvard freshmen trmmed the Yale 1917 crew by four lengths in rowing over the two-mile course down stream, while the invincible Harvard second varsity eight passed the beaker of defeat to the Eli seconds by a margin of seven lengths. The day of complete glory for the Crimson was lost by the few inches that sparated the tips of the two shells as they skimmed across the finish line off Red Top.

Yale students and graduates celebrated their first break in luck with shouts and sheckels for the first occasion in seven years, the last time a Blue crew won the varsity race against Harvard being in 1907.

Guy Nickalls, coach of the Yale crew, who was imported from England to do the trick, was tested in the first four-mile race, and his system was found to have the necessary punch. It is virtually certain that Nickalls will be invited to sign the papers for an extended contract to be Yale's head coach, now that his teaching has brought the sweet fruit of victory.

Harvard has an alibi for its defeat. The crew that outweighed the Yale nearly five pounds to a man has everything that was necessary, insofar as rowing form and staying qualities are concerned.

But the low stroke that Harvard's coxswain maintained during the early stages of the contest, when Yale got the jump on the Crimson, with the lack of snap and vim in the Harvard oarsmen, gave Yale the opportunity to forge ahead at the start and maintain leadership throughout the whole course, except in the first half of the last mile, when the Crimson skiff leaped ahead by eight feet.

HANSEL AND GRETEL PARTY

Christ Church Guild Entertained at Adams Shore

Mrs. William Torey of Adams Shore entertained the Women's Guild of Christ church at a Hansel and Gretel party, at her home Thursday. The ladies arrived in the forenoon and were greeted by Dutch girls in native costume. At noon the guests were escorted into the dining room where there was a spread of bologna, frankfurts, potato salad, pretzels and many other German dishes, which were heartily enjoyed. The rooms were quaintly decorated with Dutch flags and scenes and on a large table was a real gingerbread house with sugar coated roof and stick candy fence.

After lunch the play of "Hansel and Gretel" with music and dances from the opera, were given under the direction of Mrs. Chaplin. The children taking part were.

Hansel—Mary Turtle.
Gretel—Marion Hewson.
Mother—Amy Torrey.
Father, Augusta Labrecque.
Witch—Frances Turtle.
Sandman—Ethel Smith.
Two fairies—Odille LaBrecque and Isabelle Walker.
Birds—Edith McCarthy, Jessie Turtle and Madeline Hewson.
Angels—Odille LaBrecque, Agnes McCarthy, Elizabeth Haslett and Frances Turtle.

Mrs. Turtle was in charge of the music, and Miss Walker sang several of the songs from the opera charmingly.

The rest of the afternoon was spent in pleasant chatting on a large breezy porch facing the water. Those present were Rev. R. E. Armstrong, Mrs. Chase, Mrs. Leighton, Mrs. Buck, Mrs. Lawsey, Mrs. Tutton, Mrs. Bosworth, Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Crosby, Mrs. Emery, Mrs. McConnell, Mrs. Deacon, Mrs. Hector, Mrs. Sexton, Mrs. Higgins, Mrs. Jenness, Mrs. Turtle, Mrs. Oxford, Mrs. Haslett, Mrs. Newcomb, Mrs. MacLeod, Mrs. Hewson, Mrs. Chaplin and Mrs. Fletcher.

CHOIRS ENTERTAINED.

The choirs of Memorial church Atlantic were given a banquet by the ladies Benevolent Society Thursday evening. At 6.30 the fifty singers marched into the vestry led by John T. Ward and Spencer Apollonio who have had much to do with the success of the music.

After supper Rev. T. W. Davison acted as toastmaster, and in behalf of the music committee of the church made a speech wording the appreciation of the music committee for the excellent work of the choirs the past year. He presented Mr. Ward with a handsome gold watch which had been purchased by the music committee, stating that the church and the singers fully appreciated the earnest devoted spirit in which he had carried on the work for over three years.

Mr. Ward was surprised, and so deeply touched that for an instant he found it difficult to respond. He reviewed the work of the choirs for years and the few such times as these when others had been taken by surprise when they were either getting married or leaving town.

Short speeches were made by Messrs. Apollonio Hargrave, Heap, Deacons, Tucker and LeTour, Clifton Whitney, Mrs. A. H. Hall, Miss Jessie French, Miss Lora Churchill, Miss Hazel Davison, Norton Stetson, Miss Edith Abbott and Mrs. L. T. Gurney and Miss Maud E. Read read "I Just Came Down."

As people came to prayer meeting they were invited to the vestry where ice cream and cake were served.

Th committee in charge were Mrs. A. H. Hall, Mrs. L. T. Gurney, Mrs. C. F. Letteney, Mrs. Harry W. Read, Mrs. Alvin T. Beede, Mrs. George W. Hight, Mrs. Robert Harding and Mrs. T. W. Davison.

Tongue Charms.

The tongues of animals have been and still are in some parts of the world favorite amulets. A tongue cut from a living fox is said to ward off disease of all kinds, but as the person carrying one will surely die if he happens to meet a fox at any crossroads the charm is seldom used. The tongue of the vulture plucked out with iron and hung about a man's neck in a new cloth will bring him what he desires, and some East Indians believe that if they do not bite off the tip of the tongue of any wild animal they kill they will not have good luck in hunting.—London Tit-Bits.

SOUTH—BRACKETT.

Miss Faustine Craig Brackett of 10 Elm Terrace, Braintree, daughter of the late Foster Hodges and Annie Nason Brackett and Harold Thomas South, Amherst 1912, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Foster South of 181 Shaw street, East Braintree were married at the Union Congregational church of East Braintree and Weymouth Tuesday evening at eight o'clock by the Rev. Albert P. Watson of the Union church.

The matron of honor was Mrs. C. Edward Newhall of Swampscott, Mass. and the best man was Leighton S. Vorhees of Weymouth. The ushers were: Theodore R. South, brother of the groom, Harold W. Brackett, brother of the bride; William B. Morgan of East Braintree and Clinton Scollard of East Braintree.

The church was magnificently decorated with large bouquets of poppies and daisies that encircled the entire platform while overhead an arbor completely covered with white roses entangled in the hanging vines made a very pretty background for the bridal group.

Four ushers headed the bridal procession and they were followed by the matron of honor and the bride on the arm of her cousin. The bride's costume was of white crepe meteor, trimmed with duchess lace and pearls. The bridal veil was held with orange blossoms and she carried a shower bouquet of white sweet peas. The matron of honor was gowned in white duchess satin with overdress of pink chiffon and she carried a bouquet of pink sweet peas. The groom's present to the bride was a pearl pendant.

The ceremony was of the double ring type and the bride was given away by Richard B. Penin of Roxbury, cousin of the bride. Music was furnished by Dr. W. Porter Pratt.

After the ceremony a reception was held in the church parlors which were handsomely decorated. The bride and groom were assisted in receiving by Miss Jeannie Brackett, sister of the bride, Richard B. Penin, Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. South, Leighton S. Voorhees and Mrs. C. Edward Newhall. The receiving line stood directly in front of a bank of evergreen intermingled with pink roses while in front of them the large parlor resembled a flower garden with its numerous hanging plants, evergreen, and bouquets so prettily arranged. After meeting the receiving line the guests were invited to the banquet room where refreshments were served.

About fifty of the three hundred guests present accompanied the bride and groom to Elm Terrace, Braintree. No confetti or tin cans, white strips of cloth, etc., were in sight, but when the bride and groom in travelling dress made the final dash for the auto awaiting them confetti was showered as by a cloudburst and the car was soon decorated to the taste of the guests.

The newlyweds left for New York Wednesday morning and will go from there to Baltimore where they expect to visit Midshipman Emerson of Bellevue road East Braintree at the Naval Academy. From there they will go to Washington and return to their future residence in Braintree where they will be at home October first.

ROWSON—KELLEY.

A very pretty private wedding was solemnized Wednesday afternoon at 84 Front street, East Braintree, the contracting parties being Walter Rowson of East Braintree, and Miss Gertrude Kelley of Weymouth. The ceremony was performed by Rev. N. A. Price of the East Braintree M. E. church. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for an extended wedding tour to New York, Atlantic City and Philadelphia. They will be at home to their friends after July first, at 357 Sea street, Quincy.

GRIM TRAGEDY IN BOSTON CAFE

Police Inspector Killed by Man With Very Bad Record.

HAD ARRESTED EX-CONVICT

Officer Receives Wound In Abdomen In Desperate Gun Fight, While His Slayer, Alleged to Have Killed Three Men In Michigan, Is Hit by Three Bullets During the Melee

Boston, June 20.—Inspector Thomas J. Norton of police headquarters was shot late yesterday afternoon in the Boylston cafe, Boylston and Washington streets, by Lawrence Robinson, an ex-convict, wanted in Grand Rapids, Mich., for the murder of three men, and died within a half-hour from the time he received the bullet wound, which penetrated his abdomen just below the beart.

Robinson was shot three times as he fled from the scene of the tragedy, and was finally captured in Bumstead court, a short distance away. He was taken to the city hospital, where his condition is not serious.

Joseph F. Daniels, who was with Robinson in the cafe, was arrested and booked at headquarters on a charge of murder. The police will not say if he is wanted for any other offense elsewhere.

Norton, together with Detectives Claflin and McCarthy of headquarters and Detectives Packard and Greene of the Pinkertons, went to the cafe to arrest Robinson and his companion.

They entered the cafe and found both men sitting in a corner of the place at a table. With Norton in the lead they approached the table and Norton put his hand on Robinson's shoulder and told him he was from headquarters and wanted him.

At the same time the other detectives took Daniels into custody. The announcement of Norton met with immediate action on the part of Robinson and his companion. Both of them sprang to their feet and started to battle with the officers.

They grappled and rolled over and over on the floor of the cafe, upsetting two tables and a number of chairs and scattering dishes and glasses over the floor. While Norton and Robinson were on the floor the latter drew a magazine revolver from his pocket and placing the muzzle of it against the abdomen of the inspector, fired one shot.

The desperado then jumped to his feet and started for the door. Claflin and Packard both drew their revolvers and fired at the fleeing man, striking him three times, once in the elbow, once in the side of the neck and a third time in the left side. As the bullet hit Robinson's elbow he dropped his 32-calibre automatic pistol, still with its nine undischarged cartridges, which is now in possession of the police.

Robinson fled out the side door of the cafe into Boylston street. Mounted Officer Dickson, who had heard the sound of the shots, had started for the cafe and saw Robinson come out. He chased him across the street and, jumping from from his horse, ran into the narrow passageway. Robinson stopped after he had gone a few feet inside the alleyway and the mounted officer clutched him from behind and told him not to resist. He commanded a passing pedestrian to search the pockets of the prisoner to ascertain if he had any weapons on him, and when he did not find any took him to a police station. He was later taken to the city hospital.

After Robinson had escaped from the cafe Norton was rushed at top speed to the hospital. He was conscious during the trip and asked that his wife be notified and sent to the hospital. She was called but before she arrived there he had expired.

Both Robinson and Daniels had stopped at the Commonwealth hotel since May 15. They had been traced here by Pinkerton detectives from Grand Rapids, Mich.

It is said at the cafe that the men had nothing to drink while they were in there. They had been served with food.

There is a reward of $2000 for the arrest of Robinson. The circular which the local police received described him as 32 years of age, six feet in height and weighing 175 pounds. He, on Sept. 18, 1913, it was claimed in the circular, had held up and robbed a jewelry store in Grand Rapids, and when the clerks in the store tried to interfere, had shot and killed three of them. He was described as a pickpocket, a circus grafter and a hold-up man and was given a bad reputation.

Norton had an excellent record in the police department, having advanced steadily since he joined the force on June 8, 1897. He leaves a widow and eight children.

Tongue Charms.

The tongues of animals have been and still are in some parts of the world favorite amulets. A tongue cut from a living fox is said to ward off disease of all kinds, but as the person carrying one will surely die if he happens to meet a fox at any crossroads the charm is seldom used. The tongue of the vulture plucked out with iron and hung about a man's neck in a new cloth will bring him what he desires, and some East Indians believe that if they do not bite off the tip of the tongue of any wild animal they kill they will not have good luck in hunting.—London Tit Bits.

SOUTH—BRACKETT.

Miss Faustine Craig Brackett of 10 Elm Terrace, Braintree, daughter of the late Foster Hodges and Annie Nason Brackett and Harold Thomas South, Amherst 1912, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Foster South of 181 Shaw street, East Braintree were married at the Union Congregational church of East Braintree and Weymouth Tuesday evening at eight o'clock by the Rev. Albert P. Watson of the Union church.

The matron of honor was Mrs. C. Edward Newhall of Swampscott, Mass. and the best man was Leighton S. Vorhees of Weymouth. The ushers were: Theodore R. South, brother of the groom, Harold W. Brackett, brother of the bride; William B. Morgan of East Braintree and Clinton Scollard of East Braintree.

The church was magnificently decorated with large bouquets of poppies and daisies that encircled the entire platform while overhead an arbor completely covered with white roses entangled in the hanging vines made a very pretty background for the bridal group.

Four ushers headed the bridal procession and they were followed by the matron of honor and the bride on the arm of her cousin. The bride's costume was of white crepe meteor, trimmed with duchess lace and pearls. The bridal veil was held with orange blossoms and she carried a showe, bouquet of white sweet peas. The matron of honor was gowned in white duchess satin with overdress of pink chiffon and she carried a bouquet of pink sweet peas. The groom's present to the bride was a pearl pendant.

The ceremony was of the double ring type and the bride was given away by Richard B. Penin of Roxbury, cousin of the bride. Music was furnished by Dr. W. Porter Pratt.

After the ceremony a reception was held in the church parlors which were handsomely decorated. The bride and groom were assisted in receiving by Miss Jeannie Brackett, sister of the bride, Richard B. Penin, Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. South, Leighton S. Voorhees and Mrs. C. Edward Newhall. The receiving line stood directly in front of a bank of evergreen intermingled with pink roses while in front of them the large parlor resembled a flower garden with its numerous hanging plants, evergreen, and bouquets so prettily arranged. After meeting the receiving line the guests were invited to the banquet room where refreshments were served.

About fifty of the three hundred guests present accompanied the bride and groom to Elm Terrace, Braintree. No confetti or tin cans, white strips of cloth, etc., were in sight, but when the bride and groom in travelling dress made the final dash for the auto awaiting them confetti was showered as by a cloudburst and the car was soon decorated to the taste of the guests.

The newlyweds left for New York Wednesday morning and will go from there to Baltimore where they expect to visit Midshipman Emerson of Bellevue road East Braintree at the Naval Academy. From there they will go to Washington and return to their future residence in Braintree where they will be at home October first.

ROWSON—KELLEY.

A very pretty private wedding was solemnized Wednesday afternoon at 84 Front street, East Braintree, the contracting parties being Walter Rowson of East Braintree, and Miss Gertrude Kelley of Weymouth. The ceremony was performed by Rev. N. A. Price of the East Braintree M. E. church. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for an extended wedding tour to New York, Atlantic City and Philadelphia. They will be at home to their friends after July first, at 357 Sea street, Quincy.

GRIM TRAGEDY IN BOSTON CAFE

Police Inspector Killed by Man With Very Bad Record

HAD ARRESTED EX-CONVICT

Officer Receives Wound In Abdomen In Desperate Gun Fight, While His Slayer, Alleged to Have Killed Three Men In Michigan, Is Hit by Three Bullets During the Melee

Boston, June 20.—Inspector Thomas J. Norton of police headquarters was shot late yesterday afternoon in the Boylston cafe, Boylston and Washington streets, by Lawrence Robinson, an ex-convict, wanted in Grand Rapids, Mich., for the murder of three men, and died within a half-hour from the time he received the bullet wound, which penetrated his abdomen just below the beart.

Robinson was shot three times as he fled from the scene of the tragedy, and was finally captured in Bumstead court, a short distance away. He was taken to the city hospital, where his condition is not serious.

Joseph F. Daniels, who was with Robinson in the cafe, was arrested and booked at headquarters on a charge of murder. The police will not say if he is wanted for any other offense elsewhere.

Norton, together with Detectives Claflin and McCarthy of headquarters and Detectives Packard and Greene of the Pinkertons, went to the cafe to arrest Robinson and his companion.

They entered the cafe and found both men sitting in a corner of the place at a table. With Norton in the lead they approached the table and Norton put his hand on Robinson's shoulder and told him he was from headquarters and wanted him.

At the same time the other detectives took Daniels into custody. The announcement of Norton met with immediate action on the part of Robinson and his companion. Both of them sprang to their feet and started to battle with the officers.

They grappled and rolled over and over on the floor of the cafe, upsetting two tables and a number of chairs and scattering dishes and glasses over the floor. While Norton and Robinson were on the floor the latter drew a magazine revolver from his pocket and placing the muzzle of it against the abdomen of the inspector, fired one shot.

The desperado then jumped to his feet and started for the door. Claflin and Packard both drew their revolvers and fired at the fleeing man, striking him three times, once in the elbow, once in the side of the neck and a third time in the left side. As the bullet hit Robinson's elbow he dropped his 32-calibre automatic pistol, still with its nine undischarged cartridges, which is now in possession of the police.

Robinson fled out the side door of the cafe into Boylston street. Mounted Officer Dickson, who had heard the sound of the shots, had started for the cafe and saw Robinson come out. He chased him across the street and, jumping from his horse, ran into the narrow passageway. Robinson stopped after he had gone a few feet inside the alleyway and the mounted officer clutched him from behind and told him not to resist. He commanded a passing pedestrian to search the pockets of the prisoner to ascertain if he had any weapons on him, and when he did not find any took him to a police station. He was later taken to the city hospital.

After Robinson had escaped from the cafe Norton was rushed at top speed to the hospital. He was conscious during the trip and asked that his wife be notified and sent to the hospital. She was called but before she arrived there he had expired.

Both Robinson and Daniels had stopped at the Commonwealth hotel since May 15. They had been traced here by Pinkerton detectives from Grand Rapids, Mich.

It is said at the cafe that the men had nothing to drink while they were in there. They had been served with food.

There is a reward of $2000 for the arrest of Robinson. The circular which the local police received described him as 32 years of age, six feet in height and weighing 175 pounds. He, on Sept. 18, 1913, it was claimed in the circular, had held up and robbed a jewelry store in Grand Rapids, and when the clerks in the store tried to interfere, had shot and killed three of them. He was described as a pickpocket, a circus grafter and a hold-up man and was given a bad reputation.

Norton had an excellent record in the police department, having advanced steadily since he joined the force on June 8, 1897. He leaves a widow and eight children.

Arrangements are completed for Grand Fourth of July celebration given by the Braintree Athletic Asso., on the Hollis field. Last Monday evening, the governing board of the association appointed a large committee who will have charge of the entertainment, the fireworks, music and refreshments. The refreshments on the field will be in charge of Clarence L. Smith, who will serve the ice cream, tonics, peanuts and tobacco to all who desire.

The First Corps Cadet Full Military band assures the best of music. Remember that there is a game of ball in the forenoon at 10 o'clock—Weymouth A. C. vs. B. A. A. In the afternoon, there will be a game between Fort Andrews and the B. A. A. There will be a band concert in the afternoon, commencing at 2.30. In the evening the band concert will start at 7 o'clock.

The grand display of fireworks will start at 8 o'clock and continue till 10 o'clock. The grounds will be lighted with specially arranged red, white and blue electric lights, with group lights at the entrance to the ground. The band stand will be lighted by electricity. As far as possible, seats will be provided. If you live handy and have a camp stool, it would be wise to take it along as a large crowd is expected.

No arrangements have been made for speaking of any kind, the intention of the committee was to have this day a purely enjoyable one to all of the citizens of Braintree and surrounding towns, and to have something doing every minute.

The proceeds will go toward the new parish house which the society is to build and with good weather a goodly sum should be realized.

There ill be a large out-door moving picture theatre with some of the latest films; band concerts afternoon and evenings and a "great light way" where one can try his skill at numberless, mirth- provoking devices.

Ice cream, candy, lunch and other refreshments will be on sale and Saturday afternoon the children's entertainment includes a parade in which suitable prizes will be given for the best costumes. See ad.

MAN WITH FEATURES RESEMBLING APE

Doctor Finds the "Missing Link" Described by Darwin

New York, June 20.—The "missing link" has at last been found, and on Ellis island, according to Dr. Howard A. Knox, assistant surgeon in the United States public health service.

"The man Darwin wrote about but never saw" came to America from Finland and was deported because of "constitutional inferiority." He said his name was Johan; he knew no other.

Johan was of average height, but his strength was prodigious. His long arms, his ponderous abdomen and other physical features strongly resembled those of the ape. He never laughed. The big toe of each foot could be used like a thumb.

OLEO PLANTS SEIZED

Internal Revenue Officers Charge Law Has Been Violated

Providence, June 20.—Internal revenue officers seized the plant of the New England Manufacturing company. The charge against the concern, it is said, is using artificial coloring matter in oleomargarine without paying the required tax.

The action followed a similar seizure when internal revenue officers took charge of the plant of the Vermont Manufacturing company under the provisions of the law regarding the manufacture of oleomargarine.

CRUELTY TO INDIANS

Head of Reservation School Charged With Brutal Flogging

San Francisco, June 20.—Charges of cruelty to Indian children are made against Thomas B. Wilson, superintendent of the Round Valley reservation Indian school of Mendocina county, Cal.

The charges have been forwarded to the bureau of Indian affairs at Washington by the attorney for the Indian board of co-operation. Forty affidavits by Indians are on file, alleging that Indian boys were flogged until blood ran down their backs.

GRADE CROSSING

Carle R. Hayward of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a resident of Quincy, who said that regardless of whatever action may be taken by the people of Quincy, the elevation of tracks is the best method to be followed in the abolition of the crossings.

The proponents of the bill were brief but effectual in their arguments. Mr. Sullivan contended that a vast majority of the citizens favor the elimination by depression of the tracks and that their desire should be granted. Mr. Sandberg said that the people should not be forbidden the right to express their choice.

Mr. Abbott contended that the legislature should not be moved by sentimentalities, but should consider the proposition from a scientific and economical standpoint. He said that men of technical training competent to pass upon the question have decided that elevation is essential.

Mr. Sullivan, in closing the argument for the bill, said that the opinion of Mr. Hayward was no better than that of any other interested citizen of Quincy.

On a show of hands the bill was lost 52 to 51, but Mr. Sullivan secured a roll call, and the vote on engrossment was 107 yea to 82 nay, a majority of 25

The Act which is known as House bill No. 2757 has matured since first presented to the Legislature, and contains some provisions unknown to the people of Quincy. Perhaps the taxpayers of the city may object to Section 5. The Act in full as reported by the Committee on bills in third reading, as it passed the House reads:

Section 1. The crossings at grade of Saville and Water streets in the city of Quincy with the location of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and the Old Colony Railroad shall, as expeditiously as possible after the acceptance of this act, as hereinafter provided, be abolished by depressing the tracks of said railroads from Norfolk Downs to South Quincy at the Braintree line.

Section 2. The superior court sitting in and for the county of Norfolk shall have jurisdiction in equity upon a petition by the city council of Quincy or by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, after notice by the petitioners to the public service commission of the entry of such petition, to appoint a commission of three disinterested persons.

Section 3. Except as herein otherwise provided the said commission of three persons shall have all the powers and duties and all proceedings shall be had by and before said commission and the public service commission and in the said court, as if said commission were appointed under a petition filed under section twenty-nine of chapter four hundred and sixty-three of the acts of the year nineteen hundred and six and acts in addition thereto and in amendment thereof.

Section 4. Upon the passage of this act all proceedings or acts for the abolition of the crossings at grade of Saville and Water streets with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and the Old Colony Railroad under the decree of the superior court which has heretofore been entered upon the petition of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad or for the assessment of damages thereunder, shall be suspended until the question of the acceptance of this act by the city of Quincy shall be determined as hereinafter provided.

Section 5. All easements, rights and interests in land taken under the proceedings heretofore had in the superior court for the abolition of the said grade crossings at Saville and Water streets shall, upon the acceptance of this act, be deemed to be restored to the persons from whom they were taken or to the persons entitled thereto. A person who has suffered loss or been put to expense by the proceedings heretofore had in the superior court for the abolition of the said grade crossings at Saville and Water streets shall be indemnified therefor by the city of Quincy. If the amount of said damages cannot be agreed upon they shall be determined by a jury upon a petition filed in the superior court by either the city of Quincy or the person so damaged and paid in the manner provided by law for the determination and payment of damages suffered by the laying out or discontinuance of highways.

Section 6. Except as is otherwise provided in section four, this act shall not take effect until it is accepted by the city of Quincy in the manner hereinafter provided.

Section 7. At the annual municipal election to be held at the city of Quincy in nineteen hundred and fourteen there shall be placed on the official ballot the following question: "Shall chapter——of the acts of the year nineteen hundred and fourteen, being an act relative to the abolition of grade crossings in the city of Quincy by depressing the tracks be accepted?" Yes—No.

If a majority of the votes cast upon the said question are in the affirmative, this act shall take full effect.

Section 8. Section four of this act shall take effect upon the passage of this act.

AMERICA REACHES PORT

Impressive Greeting Given Biggest Ship Ever n Boston Harbor

Boston, June 20.—The largest steamship that ever entered Boston harbor, the giant Amerika of the Hamburg-American line, 700 feet long and having a tonnage of 23,000, docked at the new Commonwealth pier from Hamburg and Southampton.

The Amerika is the latest addition to the "Sail from Boston" fleet and will ply regularly hereafter between this port and Europe. Exceptionally fine weather was enjoyed on the trip across.

Coming up the harbor the Amerika was given an impressive greeting. The United States scout cruiser Chester, returning from southern waters, also came into port. As the Chester was passing the Amerikka the bluejackets aboard were lined up the length of the cruiser at salute. When the war craft was abreast the liner her flags were dipped. The Amerika returned the courtesy by dipping her flags, and simultaneously, the Amerika band broke forth with "America." Passengers on the liner joined in the national hymn and cheered heartily.

BOY PLAYS WITH MATCHES

Results In Fire Which Burns Church and Eight Houses

Saugus, Mass., June 20.—The Cliftondale Methodist church was destroyed, eight houses partly or entirely burned, and Rev. A. F. Reimer, pastor of the church, was overcome when attempting to rescue church records in a fire which did damage estimated at $30,000.

But for the timely arrival of aid from Revere and Lynn the entire Cliftondale section of the town might have been swept away in the high wind.

The fire started in the garage of Dr. Danforth. His son, Harland, 9 years old, played with matches until he started a small fire. In a moment it swept over the oil-soaked floor and enveloped the doctor's touring car.

Five-year-old Marie Reimer discovered the fire and called men, who sent in an alarm. The church next door caught fire and then the residence of the doctor. By the time outside aid arrived, the church and eight houses were in flames.

LORIMER'S BANK IS $3,000,000 SHORT

Receiver Is Named For Defunct Chicago Institution

Chicago, June 20.—Loss in the failure of the LaSalle Street Trust and Savings bank may reach $3,000,000, according to the declaration of Attorney General Lucey.

He asked Judge Windes to name W. C. Niblack as received for the defunct Lorimer institution, and stated that the assets of the bank probably would not exceed $2,000,000, against $5,000,000 liabilities.

The receiver was appointed after request by depositors, one of them, ex-Mayor Busse, informing the court that he had $136,000 on deposit in the LaSalle bank.

WILSON WON'T CHANGE MIND

He Stands Squarely For Rebel President of Mexico

MEXICANS WANT A "NEUTRAL"

Little Hope That Deadlock In Mediation Proceedings Will Be Broken—Carranza Submits to Villa Now, but Hints at Fighting When Armies Meet Before Mexico City

Washington, June 20.—Not at any moment since the beginning of the peace conference at Niagara Falls has the outlook for a successful termination of its labors been so dark. It is openly charged by the Mexican envoys that the attitude of the United States is that if a rebel is not to be selected for provisional president to succeed Huerta there is nothing to mediate about.

Minister Naon, one of the mediators, is in Washington in a last effort to save the conference from disruption. He will see Secretary Bryan and probably will see President Wilson, but as it is announced at the White House that the president stands squarely on the principles enunciated in the statement of the American delegates, his visit is likely to be of little effect.

The firm attitude of the Huerta delegates for a so-called "neutral" holds out no hope of a break in the deadlock. The situation was discussed in the cabinet meeting and some sort of an official statement from the president informing the public fully, in case the mediation fails, is promised.

Officials closest to the president declare that all talk of further armed intervention or of recognition of General Carranza of General Villa at this stage is unfounded. Carranza's attempt to suppress Villa has failed signally and has resulted not only in weakening the position of the "first chief" but also in creating factions in the constitutionalist army that may prove disastrous in the end.

In his submission to Villa, Carranza says he gives way now, but all misunderstandings will be adjusted when the "three armies meet before Mexico City." That there is a threat in this will be seen when it is understood that Villa retains command only of his own army, which will move southward along the lines of the central railroads, while the armies of the east and west will be under command or control of Carranza.

As Villa's army, however, is the strongest and best-equipped in Mexico and has most of war supplies, it may be assumed that he will maintain his ascendency.

SERVIA IS WITH GREECE

Intends to Help Latter In the Event of War With Turkey

London, June 20.—The reply of the Turkish government to the note of Greece is conciliatory. It expresses the hope that Greece, like Turkey, will take steps to restore order, but it evades the specific demands of Greece for the reinstatement of Greek emigrants and the restoration of the property of Greeks.

Servia has warned the porte that she would not be able to remain on friendly terms with Turkey in the event of a war with Greece. It is believed that this warning will have a calming effect on the extremist parties which are urging the Turkish government to hostilities.

With the aid of a field glass, Myers finally located a rapidly vanishing speck in the heavens, which he decided must be Kashiara and his biplane. After waiting several hours he gave up, to try again.

TROLLEY CARS CRASH

Fifteen Persons Hurt When Collision Occurs at a Fast Clip

Providence, June 20.—Fifteen persons were injured, several of them seriously, when a Providence and Brockton street freight car and a Providence and Taunton passenger car came together in a head-on collision in the woods a quarter of a mile west of Rehoboth village.

The freight car tore a quarter way through the passenger car. Both cars were going at a fast clip and there was no chance for the motorman on either to slow down before the crash.

Though officials of the company are unwilling to make any statement, it is believed that the freight car overran a switch.

CLAIM STEERING WHEEL DEFECTIVE

Testimony to Corroborate Quartermaster of Empress

Quebec, June 20.—Odin Sabje, second made of the steamship Alden, testified at the Empress of Ireland inquiry that when the Empress passed his ship in the St. Lawrence shortly before the fatal collision with the collier Storstad he noticed that the Empress was steering badly and had to port his helm to avoid her.

This testimony was introduced by counsel for the Storstad's owners in corroboration of the previous testimony of James Galway, a quartermaster on the Empress, who said the vessel's steering gear was defective.

George O'Donovan, an engineer of the Empress, said he was in charge of the steering gear. He inspected it every day and had never found anything wrong with it and had never had any complaints.

SIBILANTS AND SONG.

A Combination That Does Not Produce Satisfactory Results.

"Writing verses for the printed page and writing 'words' to be set to music and sung," remarked a gentleman who has won laurels in both departments of industry, "are two very different matters. You can take liberties in the first case which you cannot in the case of 'lyrics,' as with these you have to consider the 'singableness' of the words used.

"To avoid sibilants like a pestilence and to use open vowels such as A and O wherever possible are the two golden rules. English has been called an unsingable language, and certainly Italian and French are more liquid and easier to vocalize in. Open vowels are very important. Compare, for instance, the word 'thee,' which is breathed out between the teeth, with its plural 'you,' which enables the singer to open the mouth widely. The relative singableness is apparent at once.

"An excessive use of sibilants produces a ludicrous hissing sound. (Read the last sentence aloud, and note the effect.) Nevertheless a well known dramatist was once careless enough to give an actor a speech in which he described 'Dick sitting still as a stone and steering the horse splendidly.'—London Answers.

BIRDS AND BRAINS.

The Canary Well Supplied, While the Poor Hen Is Sadly Lacking.

Naturalists have arrived at the conclusion that the brain in birds is large in proportion to the body. If it is admitted that intelligence depends upon the weight of the brain then the goldfinch must be placed at the top of the list of birds. The brain weighs one-fourteenth of its whole body.

It must be remembered, however, that attempts to draw conclusions as to the intelligence of certain birds from a comparison of the weight of the brain with that of the body have been considered futile.

In man the brain forms from one-twenty-second to one-thirty-third of the whole body; in the canary, one-fourteenth; the sparrow, one-twenty-fifth; the chaffinch, one-twenty-seventh; the redbreast, one-thirty-second; the blackbird, one-sixty-eighth; the duck, one-two-hundred-and-fifty-seventh; the eagle, one-two-hundred-and-sixtieth; the goose, one-three-hundred-and-sixtieth; the domestic hen, one-four-hundred-and-twelfth.

By some the preternaturally cunning raven is supposed to be the most highly developed of birds. His courage is so great that the eagle respects it, and his intelligence prevents him from getting into unseen though suspected dangers.—London Spectator.

WEST QUINCY GIRL MISSING.

Pretty 15 year old Antonia DiBona of Copeland street, West Quincy, has disappeared and her parents, frantically declare she has been abducted by her uncle Joseph Lo Presti. An appeal has been made to the police. Officers are watching all of the steamers leaving Boston and New York and a keen search is being made in Boston for the couple.

Orders have been issued to arrest Lo Presti on sight, and it is generally believed that when he is apprehended little Antonia will be found.

Her parents run a fruit store on Copeland street and while she worked there Lo Presti sold fruit on the road. They became intimate and suddenly disappeared on Tuesday.

Friends of the couple say they have eloped and that it will be but a few days before uncle and niece return from a honeymoon trip and ask the forgiveness of Ma and Pa DiBona.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL

berger, Maria Schenkelberger, Lillian Craig, Edward Bixbee and Dorothy Mc Lellan.

Albert L. Barbour, superintendent was an unexpected guest, and had a seat on the platform with Miss Crane master's assistant at the Cranch school.

Alfred O. Diack of the School Committee presented the diplomas to the Adams school class, Grace Laing was the page. Dr. Nathaniel S. Hunting gave the Cranch school graduates their diplomas and Helen Galvin was his page.

Mr. Diack in a short speech thanked the people for his election to the School board and told the little men and women that part of their early education had finished and to remember nothing is gained without work. The sluggard, he informed them, is never successful, and there is no room for them in the business world where all is hurry and bustle from morning until night.

Mr. Diack said Quincy High school was second to none and our industrial school offers the opportunity to travel further in educational lines. He dwelt at great length on opportunity, and closed by saying always remember that what is worth doing is worth doing well. Be diligent, he said, and I hope you will be a credit to your teachers, your parents who love you and are anxious about your welfare and to the glorious stars and stripes which you will I know, honor, love and salute at all times.

Dr. Hunting in his remarks was very plain spoken. He told the graduates that because they had a diploma, it didn't mean they knew anything. Your apprenticeship is only partly finished, he said, and you know how to use some tools the city has furnished. It has cost several hundred dollars to get each of you here today, and I hope you are worth it.

Whether you go to school or not, don't feel you have completed your education. Those who work, learn something and can learn something. The Public Library with its fine stock of books on all subjects is at your beck and call. Keep growing and form character, for that is what people judge you by. It depends on you and on you alone if you get ahead. Above all be honest to everyone. "You may fool some of the people all of the time, all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all of the time." Though you fool your parents longer than others, you will be found out and humiliated. Be true to yourselves, boys and girls, and you cannot be false to anyone.

QUINCY SCHOOL HALL.

Every seat was taken in the Quincy School hall Friday afternoon when the exercises of three of the grammar schools took place. Promptly at three o'clock, the first of the graduates appeared at northerly door of the hall. First, the Gridley Bryant school, small in numbers, having only 18 graduates this year, preceded by the school banner. Next the Montclair a large and fine appearing body from the newest school of this group that was holding exercises together. And lastly the Quincy school. Every young lady in white, and only one other distinguishing color, that a small rosette pinned to the dress, representing the school color and the same appearing on the lapels of the boys. Purple for the Gridley Bryant, green for Montclair, and pink for Quincy. The scholars were loudly applauded as they marched across the hall.

Under the careful direction of Miss Hennigar the schools together rendered in fine form several choruses. There were declamations by Royal S. Weymouth of Montclair school, John H. Mitchell of Quincy and Josephine Bennett of Gridley Bryant all well given and loudly applauded.

Charles Sampson, master of Quincy school, then called on John D. Mackay chairman of School board for a few remarks.

He was glad to be present and say a few words, of congratulation to the scholars who after 7 or 8 years of toil had with the faithful work of teachers and many sacrifices of the parents reached this glad day. Most of the graduates he was pleased to note, were to enter High school and few found it necessary to enter the business world. But he hoped all of them would start out to do good and obtain as much wisdom as was possible for those two things were far better than the race for money, or even gust for fame by ay of politics where the result was generally bricks thrown.

The speaker touched on the sacrifice thus far by the parents and in fact all the citziens of Quincy, for you young people are debtors to even the foreigners who contribute to the support of the city, for it takes nearly $200,000 to maintain the schools today. He hoped the scholars felt the sense of responsibility that rested on them and what Quincy expects of them after the expenditure of this vast amount.

The scholars then marched across the platform and received their diplomas. Those of Gridley Bryant were passed by Principal Greene to Chairman Mackay who handed them to the graduates.

Principal Sampson and Dr. Bruce presented those to the Quincy school graduates.

Mr. Greene, announced that seven scholars of Gridley Bryant had excelled in handwriting the past year and were to receive special diplomas and these were given by Mr. Mackay to Josephine Bennett, Ellen M. Fitzgerald, Caroline G. Hicks, Johanna Manning, Helen C. Mullarkey, Mona B Norris and Mary V. Fitzgerald.

WOLLASTON SCHOOL HALL.

A large audience assembled in the Wollaston school hall in the evening to see the grammar classes of the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields schools graduate. The exercises in common with other grammar school graduations were of a simple nature consisting largely of music by the combined classes and three brief addresses. The choruses by the two classes were rendered with a snap and precission that called for well earned applause. The music was under the direction of Miss S. Maude Amsden supervisor of music with Miss Margaret Tuthill as accompanist.

The classes were seated on the large platform, the entire seating capacity of the main hall being given over to spectators. On the platform in addition to the classes were Supt. of Schools Albert L. Barbour, John D. Mackay chairman of the School Committee, and Messrs Newcomb, Bruce, and McPherson of the School Committee, Senator Langelier and Head Master Goodspeed.

David H. Goodspeed, the master of the two schools, had charge of the program and in opening the exercises made a few introductory remarks during which he gave some interesting statistics of the two classes. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said when asked when a child's education began said, 100 years before he was born. If this is so, we are today training a race for good or evil for a hundred years to come. Our great problem therefore is to train the boys and girls for the future, and the city of Quincy wishes to give them the best possible training and education. He then spoke of the statistics of the grammar graduates of the city as a whole following with some statistics of the Wollaston and Massachusetts Fields classes. Wollaston he said had 36 and the Massachusetts Fields school 34. Of the Wollaston class 24 were boys and 12 girls, and of the Massachusetts 15 boys and 19 girls. A very large part of these are to take higher courses, Wollaston sending 29 and the Massachusetts Fields 26 to the High school. Of these, 13 of the Wollaston have selected college courses and eight technology courses, while of the Massachusetts Fields, 4 have selected college courses and 5 technology courses.

Of the Wollaston class one had spent six years in the grammar school, 3 seven years, 22 eight years, 9 nine years, and 1 ten years. Of the Massachusetts Fields 2 had spent six years, 3 seven years, 14 eight years, 12 nine years and 3 ten years.

The youngest Wollaston graduate was 12 years, 5 months, and the oldest 16 years, 1 month. Of the Massachusetts Fields the youngest was 12 years, 1 month, and the oldest 15 years 5 months. Mr. Goodspeed also gave the number of each class by ages.

Senator Langelier was introduced as one having a child in the Massachusetts Fields school. He said that it was one of the disadvantages of being a public man who being called upon for a speech, but he had gladly accepted the opportunity to speak to these graduates. First of all he wondered if all appreciated what the City of Quincy was doing for them in the line of education. During the present year the city appropriated nearly $200,000 for schools or nearly one third of all the money appropriated. Then the state of Massachusetts is also spending a lot of money for you, many thousands of dollars, to give you a higher education, if you show due appreciation of what the city is doing for you.

To be a success in life you must have self confidence. You are now in the formation period and it will not take much to turn you right or wrong. Set your minds to do the things you have a right to do and do them. In the business world we have hard work to get boys and girls that will do things they ought to do.

When given a thing to do, do it without asking question as to why. Think it out for yourself and you will benefit by it. The state needs strong men and women.

The diplomas were then presented to the graduates Dr. Bruce presenting them to the Wollaston class and Mr. McPherson to the Massachusetts Fields class.

Mr. Goodspeed then introduced Chairman McKay of the School board for a few remarks. Mr. McKay was not down on the printed program but Mr. Goodspeed took the opportunity of having him say a few words.

After a few words of greeting Chairman Mackay said:

"It always requires hardihood to address a Wollaston audience, and it requires hardihood in a peculiar degree to address a class of school graduates. So you see my position is trying in a double sense, and my consciousness of the situation makes my position trying in a treble sense. But right here the law of compensation comes to my aid. No matter how critical these young graduates might be of another speaker, they will be charitable towards me; for we have had a great deal in common during the past few years. They have been studying while my associates and I have been doing the heavy, sympathetic looking on. As for the rest of you, all I need say is that in Wollaston I am in the house of my friends, for reasons known to some of you.

"On an occasion like this it is quite the custom to load down the graduates with advice as to what to do and how to do it, an error into which happily the previous speakers haven't fallen. It never does any good. Those bright boys and bright, pretty girls will henceforth do as they please so far as we are concerned, but they will of course be regulated in their conduct by the restraints of law, morality and religion. They will prove every proposition by their own experience after this rather than by our advice, even if such advice be born of our own experience. This is an age of individualism, and a practical, one at that and every theory must come to the testing ground of individual experience.

"So about all I desire to do is to congratulate you, my young friends, upon having been graduated from this building, which expresses the latest word in school-house architecture. And were it not for the fact that Mr. Barbour himself is upon the platform, I should congratulate you upon receiving your training under the superintendance of a man whose ability is equalled only by his zeal. I know whereof I speak when I say that he is making an enviable record in Quincy and you are his debtors and the debtors of the teachers under him to a degree which you will appreciate more fully later in life. You have received the best that he and they could devise for you and impart to you in the way of education.

"Now let me caution you against thinking you are really educated. You have taken only one serious step. I hope you will move heaven and earth to get through the High school, but if you cannot do so you have open to you what Carlyle called the university of books where you can add much to your education. It will be largely your own fault if a few years hence you are very much behind the High school graduate in mental power or knowledge, even if your schooling should cease tonight.

"The ocean of life is full of wreckage, human flotsam and jetsam, the ne'er-do-wells, the men who didn't deserve to succeed and the men who deserved to succeed but could not. And right here let me digress and say that you need not expect that the deserving person will receive his just dues in all cases, for he will not. You will often see injustice on top and apparently there to stay, for the mills of the gods grind slowly. You therefore need not be surprised to find that many people whose efforts and intents merit success fail utterly according to worldly standards.

"So, if any of you should be so unfortunate as not to succeed, it may be your fault and it may not. It may be on account of conditions which you could not control. If, on the other hand, you make a success of life you will be applauded, although as a matter of fact your efforts may not have been as heroic or deserving as those of the man who failed. Be that as it may, the taxpayers of Quincy by maintaining this school since you entered it have done much to prevent your becoming part of the wreckage to which I have referred and insure for you success in life. It is not demanded of you that you succeed, but it is expected of you that you do your level best. It is on effort and motive rather than on achievement that we will all receive our final markings. The most complete approval of human endeavor which we find recorded is in these six words: "She hath done what she could."

DISTRICT COURT.

It was late Friday before the cases of the men arrested a week ago by the police for gaming and keeping liquor nuisances were finished at the district court. Inspector Goodhue, who had charge of the cases, told the court that Some of his witnesses had been intimidated and that one of ihs witnesses had been beaten the night before, and he desired a further continuance.

Counsel Buttimer attorney for Quantor one of the defendents denied that his client had intimidated or threatened any one. Quantor was being tried for selling intoxicating liquor and with keeping and exposing liquor for sale. Quantor was found not guilty on the charge of keeping and exposing and the case for a sale was further continued to enable Inspector Goodhue to obtain the witnesses he desired. The case will come up again on July 1.

Of the other cases Charles Cariarty was fined $50 for maintaining a gaming nuisance at 70 Sumner street and was put under bonds not to engage in gaming for a period of three years.

The case against Rebekka Finkelman of Main street for violating the liquor law was also heard and she was fined $50, and Ike Spector of 11 North street was fined $75 for violation of the liquor law, and Harry Green was fined $50 for violation of the liquor law.

Of the other cases the following were fined $25 each for being present where gaming implements ere found: Louis Bestedt, Walter B. Thibodeau, Mike John, Soloman Hassan, George Kakowski.

BRIEFS

There is a movement to organize a brass band among employees of the shipyard.

Lee Morrison, who was seriously injured on the railroad at Buffalo is on the road to recovery and able to be out of doors.

Henry W. Tirrell of Bennington, Vt., is in town for a few days.

The City Council Committee on Finance will meet Monday evening before the Council meeting.

One of the reasons why Rebecca Finkelstein was let off with a fine of $75. for a second conviction of violation of the liquor law, in court Friday was because she agreed according to the police to change her abode to some other town. Usually on a second conviction the fine is large and often times accompanied by a jail sentence as well.

The funeral of David Flowers was held Friday afternoon from the home of his daughter, Mrs. George Williams at 83 Goddard street, conducted by Rev. Richard E. Armstrong of Christ church. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery. There were many floral remembrances.

A party of members of the Boston University Law school, who are holding their annual outing, passed through Quincy this morning in automobiles. Each member wore a large tag so that if lost, the finder would ship them back home again without difficulty.

RAINBOW WEDDING.

One of the largest church weddings of the season was solemnized Saturday evening at the Wollaston Baptist church when Marion Estelle Corey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Henry Corey of 704 Commonwealth avenue, Boston, became the wife of Otis Chester Wheeler of Boston, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter A. Wheeler of Berlin Mass.

The church was beautifully decorated with palms and ferns arranged on the background and clusters of pink roses and a hedge of field daisies. The church parlor decorations were rubber plants, palms and mountain laurel.

MR. VAUGHN A WITNESS

Says Overseer Green Took Supplies to His Home

William Vaughn, deposed keeper of the almshouse, charged that Perry Green, overseer of the poor, took canned goods, tobacco, tea and coffee from the store room to his home after he became overseer and that on one occasion he shared some of the tea with Dr. Bartlett, the city physician.

City Solicitor Pinkham asked if it was not samples, and Mr. Vaughn, replied in his opinion they were big ones. On one occasion, he said Mr. Green did up a bundle of goods that was 8 foot by 18 inches by 10 inches. He said this happened every time Mr. Green visited the premises and that the stuff taken was what was left from the Elcock administration.

In a meagre way he enumerated the articles taken, and in direct testimony said that kindling wood was also taken by Mr. Green.

These charges by Mr. Vaughn were unexpected and when the noon adjournment was called Mr. Vaughn was still under cross examination.

Mr. Vaughn took the stand in his own defense at 11 o'clock, and told of the details of management. Bills that had been O. K., showing the amount of meats purchased were shown him and he explained the purchases. On Jan. 17 he acknowledged that 26 pounds of roast beef at 20 cents, 12 pound of roast beef at 32 cents, had been purchased at Johnson Brothers for his own use and 25 pounds of stew beef at 15 cents, 17 pounds of lamb at 20 cents was for inmates. He said the destination of 11 pounds of pork at 20 was unknown.

Mr. Vaughn said he purchased his supplies for the week on Saturday, and that he assumed all the responsibility for the cows and chickens and hens. He said one cow gave only six qarts, and that in summer the hens loafed but braced up in the fall.

He said the only order he refused to obey was to slam the inmates. He reviewed the call of Mayor Miller and said he told the Mayor what Mr. Green had called an inmate, but that Mr. Green himself at that time did not use the words.

He said Senator Hobart never had access to his books, that Henry Dwelle had only two pairs of shoes in one year because he never moved around to wear them out and needed them no oftener; that Thomas Cooper was going to strike his wife one day. He said hamburg steak, as testified to by a previous witness, had never been served, and that inmates were not permitted to talk at the table because of a rule made by his predecessor which he had never changed.

Mr. Vaughn told of a conversation between Overseer Green and himself early in the year, when Mr. Green said "we are trying to get something on Mike Shea." After we said we knew nothing about anything, Mrs. Vaughn said he was under civil service. He said "we don't give a damn, we are going to get him and he brought his fist down on the desk."

He corroborated the testimony of his wife in which she spoke of the inmates asking about the food given in this administration.

He further said Mr. Green instructed him to get Jack Wrenn into the cellar some day and give him one good licking, one he would never forget, and after that, said Mr. Green, he will never refuse you.

During the cross examination, City Solicitor Pinkham asked about Mr. Vaughn wanting a cell at the almshouse, but Mr. McAnarney objected and while they were discussing the question, Mr. Vaughn suddenly remarked to Mr. Pinkham "Do you think there would be any harm in that?" Mr. Pinkham immediately said yes, and on the objection of counsel allowed his remark to be stricken from the record, but insisted on Mr. Vaughn's voluntary statement remaining.

The examination of Mr. Vaughn was detailed and covered his entire term of service as keeper. A more detailed report of the hearing in Ledger tomorrow.

Warren Edwards of Washington, who has been at Cape Cod for the past few weeks, is in town for a few days.

DOES QUINCY FAVOR THE BILL?

Shall Grade Crossing Question Be Submitted to Voters As Proposed in New Draft?

Is Section 5 More Important Than Section 7?

Editor Daily Ledger:

In your issue of June 20, commenting on the Quincy Grade Crossing bill, you featured the matter by emphasizing in scare-head type at the top and across the front page of your paper, Section 5 of the bill, relating to damages. This section is a legal requirement.

By editorial or otherwise you have never to my knowledge, enlightened the public as to your opinion on this very important matter. If the bill is enacted into law, its several sections can be discussed during the coming five months.

The all important section at present is Section 7, relating to the matter being submitted to the voters of Quincy in December next. His Honor the Mayor, according to an interview in a local paper, of Saturday last, is against submitting the matter to the voters.

A newspaper is generally supposed to be a leader of public opinion and I therefore respectfully ask that you enlighten the public by an editorial or otherwise, whether or not you favor the submission of this very important matter to the voters.

Very respectfully yours

M. T. SULLIVAN,

Representative Fifth Norfolk District.

The editor of the Daily Ledger is pleased to comment on the grade crossing problem as requested by Representative Sullivan. We were

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

If the June bride would bite off a hunk of gum, her wedding kisses would not seem quite so dry.

Contrary to the impression held by some, it is perfectly proper for the directors of a railroad to inquire what the company's money is being spent for.

SHORT CUTS TO JUSTICE.

The Nihilists of Russia may be justified in leaving bombs around where they will set a medieval court and Czar to thinking. Also, in the twilight dawn of Western civilization, the Vigilantes might be excused for hasty stringing up of cut-throats that infested the fringes of pioneer life.

So a good many people apologize for the fiendish campaign of assault, slaughter of works of art, and arson, conducted by English Suffragettes. Whenever any atrocious crime is committed plenty of men in any town in the United States—right here in Quincy—commend the noose and a tall telegraph pole as the most efficient method of putting the fear of God in the hearts of the unruly.

A price has to be paid for short cuts to justice. The lynchers often find afterward that the wrong man was done for. Reparation may be made by eloquent funeral addresses, or fulsome epitaphs, but that is little consolation to a family left without a breadwinner. Also punishing an innocent man produces results far more reaching than the escape of the guilty. Virtue and order appear without reward, and the moral order is set topsy-turvy.

The result of the Suffragette campaign may be to defer the granting of the franchise to women. Or if the English people are hazed into conceding it, every lawless mind is incited to agitate with the torch and the gun. If the women can burn buildings to get what they conceive is their right, the I. W. W. can burn factories to get higher wages.

Violence is a two edged sword, which save in the most extreme cases, cuts the hand that draws it. Our orderly civilization gives eventual redress for wrongs through public discussion. In the end it is the cheapest way.

ROBINSON IS A MAN OF MYSTERY

Slayer of Norton a Wonderfully Accomplished Criminal

FIRST THOUGHT TO BE YEGG

Found to Be Possessor of Extensive Wardrobe, Pure Silk Underwear and Diamonds of "First Water"—Extra Precautions to Prevent His Escape From Clutches of Police

Boston, June 22.—"Diamond Chip" Robinson, master criminal, murderer of Inspector Thomas Norton, enigmatic Beau Brummel and an actual pickpocket king, will be taken today from his cot in the city hospital, where he has been cleverly feigning insanity, and brought to police headquarters where, after an exhaustive examination by Chief McGarr and Captain Armstrong, will be arraigned in the police court on a charge of murder.

"A more wonderfully accomplished criminal than ever figured in fiction," is the broad characterization given the "mystery prisoner" by the police, who have not yet succeeded in fully probing into the past of Robinson.

Thought to be a desperado of the yegg type, making his way around country, sleeping with roustabouts on circus flat cars, Robinson was sought by detectives after the triple murder following the hold-up of a Grand Rapids, Mich., jewelry store in vain. It was not until he had been in Boston for six weeks that a realization of the true calibre of the wanted man was found.

Here is what the police discovered about Robinson after he had shot Norton when cornered in the basement of the Boylston cafe:

He wore pure silk underwear, which must have cost $50 a garment.

Perfumed tablets were always used in his daily baths.

His feet were regularly pedicured and his fingernails and toenails powdered and polished.

Years of practice had been spent to draw a revolver in a flash and fire it on the draw.

An hour each day was devoted to gymnastic exercises, that he might be physically perfect in case of a battle.

Worked with indefatiguable enthusiasm to become proficient in the Maxixe in order to mingle with the exclusive and rob them of their jewels.

Wore silk gloves in summer, that cost $12 a pair in Paris.

Was a trained vocalist and an expert pianist, his long, slender fingers trained to pocket picking making him especially accomplished.

Had his shoes made to order from kangaroo skin on lasts of striking design and wore nothing but white silk stockings to avoid staining his skin.

Had a suit of clothes for every day of the week, and in each were constructed secret chamois pockets in which were carried jewelry and $100 banknotes.

Never used drugs as do most "gentleman criminals" and drank only rare vintage wines in moderation while giving his frequent lavish entertainments.

Talked fluently of high art and advanced literature, including the "New Thought" tenets.

In his garments were sewed seven diamonds of "first water" which are the finest gems ever seen at police headquarters.

This is the man, whose muscles of steel made the surgeons at the city hospital gasp when he was stripped for the operating table, who will be brought to police headquarters guarded more carefully than was any desperado in the history of the commonwealth.

Confined in room 19 of ward K in the city hospital, stripped of every garment except a short bed garment, Robinson has been guarded every second, day and night, by two headquarters men with revolvers by their sides. Room 19 has iron bars on its windows. In addition, linen ropes, constructed from sheets, are wound around the bed above his waist, in order to make impossible any precipitous dash through the hospital.

"It will be shoot to kill if he tries to escape," one inspector said at the hospital.

PROBE OF EMPRESS WRECK

Considered Likely to Last at Least Another Week

Quebec, June 22.—The inquiry into the wreck of the Empress of Ireland by the Dominion commission is expected to last at least a week more, though Lord Mersey is anxious to end it as soon as possible.

Interesting evidence is expected to be given by the divers who have been examining the sunken hull of the Empress, not only in regard to the chances of bringing up bodies, but also probably on the exact nature of her injuries and how they affected her watertight bulkheads.

Wooden Leg Checks Suicide

Evansville, Ind., June 22.—Mrs. Rose Neal, 30, tried to kill herself here by jumping into the Ohio river. The woman has a wooden leg and this prevented her sinking. Three men saw the woman floating in the river and rescued her.

THE SPIRIT OF '76

Open up your—
Hearts—to the little ones.
Houses—to your invited guests.
Pocket books—to the association, and make the day's celebration the most successful of any that we have had and a credit to our city.

Secretary Daniels of the Navy was very much pleased with the reception that Quincy gave to his boys of the Michigan last year, and if possible will send us a battleship this Fourth if any are in this vicinity. Let us hope that conditions wil be so that he will send the Michigan again.

Did you leave your button at home? I did not see it on your coat yesterday. Perhaps the Collector has not got round to you yet. Better get in line. You look odd without the button.

You cannot find in Webster's Dictionary that word which will express the kind of a time that we will have in Quincy on July 4th. Try and find it.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

Ernest Lord, brother of Fred Lord, was probably fatally injured at North Weymouth Saturday evening by riding his motorcycle into a moving electric car at Middle street and Gilbert road. He was picked up with a fractured skull, a dislocated jaw, part of his upper lip cut off, five teeth knocked out and his fact and head a mass of cuts and bruises.

Lord rode his motorcycle down an incline from his yard onto the street. He struck the car with much force and was thrown some distance. The car was stopped and medical assistance summoned. He was later taken to the Quincy City Hospital in the Quincy police ambulance. At the hospital 65 stitches were taken in the cuts and bruises on his head, the most ever taken by any local physician on one part of the body.

RESTELLI REWARD PAID.

Patrolman Patrick Milford of Quincy and James R. Qualey of the Braintree police have received the reward of $250 each for the finding of the body of Louis Restelli, the Quincy murderer who committed suicide after running at large several years ago. The order for the payment was submitted by Chief of Police Burrell and was approved by Walter S. Pinkham, city solicitor. It was offered by the city when Restelli disappeared and a bill authorizing its payment was passed by the House of Representatives.

Y. M. C. A. CAMP.

FLOWER GARDEN RAIDED.

Two women entered the yard of T. L. Williams on Newcomb place Saturday afternoon and pulled up a number of plants in his flower garden and carried them off and planted them in their own gardents. Inspector Goodhue of the police department was notified, and he located the two women. They at first denied taking the plants but when confronted by witnesses and threatened with arrest, they owned up and promised to purchase some new plants for Mr. Williams.

Among Our Churches

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

Children's Sunday will long be remembered by all who were privileged to attend. The service was of an unusually interesting character and was largely attended. The perfect June weather, the fine floral decorations including roses, mountain laurel and peonies, the three canaries which did their utmost, it seems, to help in the worship of the heavenly Father, the very appropriate selections by the Girls' choir and the soloist, Mrs. Royal L. Turner all helped to make Sunday a red letter day in the life of the Wollaston Unitarian church.

The service opened with a song by the Sunday school during which the kindergarten children marched in, each one carrying a bouquet of roses and filling with it a beautiful large star which occupied a prominent place in the chancel. Responsive reading from the Psalms, prayer and response, was followed by the christening service during which ten children were dedicated in the faith, fellowship and hope of the gospel to God, our Father in heaven. The children were:

Phillip Edward and Ruth Olive, children of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Miller.

Mary Elizabeth Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy C. Baker.

Natalie Brigham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tyler Brigham.

Warren Kenneth Stiles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Hooper Stiles.

Henry Franklin McLean, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry McLean.

Charlotte La Barte Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Baker.

Rodney Conant Powers, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Arthur Powers.

John Warren and Charlotte, children of Mr. and Mrs. John Warren Ray.

Frances Adams, Donald Cromwell Collyer and Hope Robinson were then presented with a copy of the American standard revision of the Bible in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of their baptism. Then followed the presentation of gold pins by Sunday School Superintendent Page, not as a reward, but in recognition of faithful attendance upon the sessions of the Sunday School to Virginia Bishop and Madeline Childs who did not miss a single session during the past year, and to Clarence Cath, Earl Cath, Gretchen C. Horst, Carl G. Horst, Jr., Judith Page and Anna Weston who have not missed a session for three years.

The appeal from Fred M. Rollins for funds to aid in the relief of weary and careworn mothers and to restore to health sickly and emaciated children resulted in a most generous collection, which was taken by four young misses, Hope Robinson, Olive Hillman Virginia Bishop and Verna Carr. The pastor's address was of great interest to old and young and held the closest attention of even the younger members of the church. He took for his subject: "The three wise monkeys of Nikko," who would not see, hear or speak evil.

Another baptismal service will be held next Sunday morning.

The church will be closed during July and August.

The Sunday School session was the last of the season.

Splendid Unitarian Summer meetings will be held at Andover, N. H., July 5-11 and at the Isles of Shoals July 12-26.

At Chantauqua the Unitarian House will be open from July 3 to August 30.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

The Sunday morning worship at the Wollaston Congregational church was well attended and the service was very helpful and inspiring. Dr. Sneath's sermon, "The God of the hills and valleys," was from 1 Kings 20:28, and the thought was brought out so effectively that no one could help being impressed with the presence of God everywhere. Benhadad, then king of the Syrians, met defeat at the hands of the Israelites on the hill top of Samaria, and on account of the very small number of Israelites the Syrians were convinced that the God of their enemy was a God of the hills. The king decided to come against them the next year with an even larger army, and force a battle in the valley. A man of God came to the king of the Israelites, and said, "Thus saith the Lord, because the Syrians have said, The Lord is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys, therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

Many people of the present day are like the Syrians and localize God. He is not on a throne in heaven, but science assures us God is everywhere looking after the welfare of his children.

The Syrians failed to recognize the preparation of the Israelites in the valleys, which enabled them to gain the victory on the hill top. According to our success in the valleys of life will be our hill top experience. There is no one but will have to face his Syrian foe. It may be temptation to dishonesty, to dropping interest in church to loosening of morals, and to many other things, that draw a person away from highest success, but as he comes in contact with the temptation his valley experience will determine how he meets the foe. Young people brought up in a rural community, and who go into metropolitan life inevitably meet the Syrian foe, and whether they overcome or yield depends largely upon their valley preparation. Whether God has been with them through the valley experience will determine their hilltop success.

The great majority of us are not permitted to reach the hilltop of spectacular achievement, but there is infinite opportunity for achievement in the commonplace of life.

There is one place where we need not fear the Syrian foe—the hilltop of glory, heaven. Companionship with God in the valley experiences will entitle us to companionship with him on this hilltop, into that presence where we shall be with him forever.

The midweek service will be held Thursday evening as usual, topic: "The Christian life worth while," and our people are urged to make an extra effort to be present in view of so many being away. After this week there will be union services during the summer.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST.

Rev. Jacob Speicher delivered an address on missions in China at the Sunday morning service of the Wollaston Baptist church, Dr. Speicher has but recently returned from that country where he has been at work for many years. He is at present a delegate to the great Northern Baptist convention now being held in Boston. He thinks that the day is soon coming when China will take a prominent place in the activities of the world and that it is up to the Christians to teach the Chinese now the principles that cause them to handle great problems in a Christian way. Dr. Speicher also addressed the main department of the Sunday School.

Daniel A. McKay spoke before the two men's classes at 12:15, on prison work, in which he has been concerned for many years.

Miss Winifred Church led the senior Christian Endeavor meeting at 6, subject—"Chief seats and how to reach them." Several members of the society were present at the young people's session of the Northern Baptist convention at Tremont Temple where Father Endeavor Clark was one of the speakers.

PARK AND DOWNS.

Rev. William B. Ayres gave for his morning talk Sunday—Some Modern lessons from the life of Elijah. At the evening service the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Dr. W. F. Newton, State Colporteur of the American Baptist Society, who gave a very interesting talk on some phases of his work in this field.

Next Sunday morning at 10.45 the services at this church will be given over to the Sabbath School as "Children's day." The exercises will be by the Kindergarten department and will prove most interesting.

HALL PLACE M. E.

Sunday was observed as Children's day at the Hall Place M. E. church. At the morning service the pastor spoke to the children, although his sermon was pertinent to older folks. He took for his text Matt. 19:14—"for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The choir sang "The Homeland" with J. Lawrence Martin as soloist.

The Epworth League service was omitted.

At 7 o'clock the Sunday school gave their annual Children's day concert. In addition to songs by the school and congregational singing, there was a song by Miss Bessie Nicholls class, song by Miss Burkes class, song by Miss Francis class, exercises by Miss Maude Nicholls class and Miss Francis class; recitations by Howard Fullerlove, John Conway, Eva DiBona, Charles Hazel, boys of Miss Bessie Nicholls class, Myrtle William, Gladys McMillan, Ivy Trottman, Wallace Vose, Miss Bessie Nicholls class, Edith Trask, Grace Newcomb, Sarah Fuller, Ethel Miller, Charles Stewart Henry Nicholls, Milton Miller, and others. The pastor spoke on the institution of the Bible, and the superintendent made a few announcements.

The regular business meeting of the Epworth League will be held this evening in the vestry. Prayer meeting Friday evening at 7.30..

Living on a Salary.

Living on a salary is a more or less precarious form of existence, but it is not always wise for every man to go into business for himself. Some men are not fitted for that responsibility and there are a great many failures of men who strike out for themselves without sufficient backing of capital or experience. However, if you never save any money out of your salary you will never get ahead financially. You always will be the tail of another man's kite, always stoking to keep up steam in the boilers of somebody else's business.—Rochester Sentinel.

Two Old Customs.

One of the oldest customs in the world, according to an archaeologist is giving precious metals or other commodities of agreed value in exchange for the necessaries of life. Of course an equally aged custom is promising to hand over the precious metal or other commodity next week.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Zoological Question.

The director of the zoological gardens was on his vacation. He received a note from his chief assistant, which closed thus: "The chimpanzee seems to be pining for a companion. What shall we do until you return?"—St. Louis Republic.

Olive Oil.

Adulterated olive oil is hard to detect, even by the expert tasters. They allege, however, that they can tell the spurious article by flavor and effect on the throat.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Consider well the portions of things. It is better to be a young June-bug than an old bird of Paradise.—Mark Twain.

CHAPTER ON FOREIGN PUDDINGS

The boiled pudding is the great English dessert, and it is found in all places. They are mostly boiled in cloth; molds are seldom used except for a very elaborate pudding.

Baroness Pudding.—Chop very fine three-fourths of a pound of suet, add the same amount of seeded raisins, mix with three-fourths of a pound of flour, a half teaspoonful of salt and a cupful of milk. Beat well and tie in a pudding cloth wrung out of hot water. Put the pudding into a kettle of boiling water and boil without ceasing for five hours. Serve with powdered sugar.

Delhi Pudding.—Pare, core and cut into slices four large apples; put them into a saucepan with a little grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of grated lemon peel and four tablespoonfuls of sugar; stew with very little water until the apples are tender. Make a rich biscuit crust, spread with the apples a few currants, then roll up, tie in a floured cloth and boil for two hours.

Queen Elizabeth Pudding.—Sweeten a pint of milk to taste, add a little grated lemon peel and four well beaten eggs. Line a buttered mold with raisins cut in half. Spread slices of sponge cake with marmalade and place in the mold. Pour in the custard, tie the pudding down with paper and a cloth and boil gently for one hour. Let cool slowly and when cold turn out of the mold and serve.

West Indian Pudding.—Crumble half a pound of sponge cake and pour over it a pint of hot sweetened cream. Beat eight eggs and add to the cream. Butter a mold and line with three tablespoonfuls of thinly sliced preserved ginger. Carefully pour in the pudding, tie down with a floured cloth, and boil or steam for an hour and a half. Serve with whipped cream flavored with the ginger sirup.

Staffordshire Fig Pudding.—Chop six ounces of suet and make a smooth paste with three-fourths of a pound of flour and milk to moisten, add salt, roll out a half-inch thick and spread with a pound of finely chopped figs. Roll up, pinch both ends, tie in a pudding cloth and boil for two hours.

LITTLE GIRL'S PLAY HOUSE.

A doll house which has really been designed by one of the foremost architects of the United States and which, consequently unlike most doll houses is perfect in design and proportion, is now being displayed in the window of L. Grossman & Sons, corner of Federal avenue and Goddard street. This little house is of the old colonial type with red chimneys at either end, green blinds, etc. It looks as though it would cost about ten dollars but as its purpose is to advertise Neponset building products (which it is made of) it is sold for two dollars. This house will be delivered to the purchaser all knocked down flat and packed in a Neponset fibre case. There is a lot of fun to be had in putting the house together. With each house is included everything necessary for assembling except a hammer.

The frame of the house is wood. The sides, floors and partitions are of Neponset wall board, the cream white and plain oak finishes. On the floor is Neponset floor covering, the waterproof substitute for linoleum. On the roof is an imitation of Neponset shingles—the attractive shingle which outlasts wood. L. Grossman & Sons are agents for all these Neponset products.

CLARA WINS ON ALLOWANCE

Quincy yachts participated Saturday in the open race under the auspices of the Columbia yacht club off City Point, Boston., 50 sailing craft and 13 power boats being entered. There was a strong land breeze that kicked up quite a sea, so that most of the yachts went over the course under reefs. The finish in class D, which is composed almost wholly of Quincy boats was very close. The Clara was leading as the boats approached the line at the finish, but the Dartwell on the starboard tack forced the Clara after she had come over so that she lost much of her headway so that the Iris slipped in ahead of her, but on corrected time the Clara got first position the Dartwell second and the Iris third.

In class A the Aryeto of Commodore E. F. Drew of the Squantum club won out with the Virginia second. In class S, the Zoe of F. J. Stewart won out by nearly a minute on corrected time, while in class G the Tavie won the Quincy boats finishing near the bottom of the list in this class.

FORE RIVER WINS AGAIN

Defeats General Electric Team 5 to 1

The General Electric team of Lynn lost to the Fore Rivers in the best Manufacturers league game of the season at Merrymount Park Saturday afternoon, 5 to 1, but may protest on account of slight delays.

The game was featured by a piece of inside base ball unequalled by any previous play in the city. In the sixth Hall reached on a single and Gus Daum, last year's catcher for Brockton of the New England league, singled between left and right field Hall passed second while Vin Stevens was chasing the ball. Stevens recovered and pegged to third. Caine took the ball as Hall passed and instead of following the runner he drove to second and Gillis retired Daum who was stealing and then shot the ball home where Bishop nailed Hall at the plate. The suddenness of the play took the gallery by surprise and it was several minutes before the crowd realized they had been treated with something special.

Caine made the first run for Fore River in the third inning. He reached first when the wind carried his high fly to left, out of reach of the fielder, stole second, reached third on a wide throw and scored on a hit by Gillis.

In the sixth inning Stevens got his second hit and scored on Ed Jenkins homer which went to the field beyond Hancock street. Then Hoyt doubled, Gillis and Bishop singled and the inning closed with four runs earned.

Griffin, the visiting pitcher, was in the box last year for the Lawrence New England league team and although the hits were bunched in the sixth seemed to have considerable on Knight in judgement. He got 11 strikeouts, fanning six men the first two innings.

Knight allowed but three hits and tanned 11. He issued one pass against two for Griffin, and hit two of the visitors.

Tom Bannin, the old Boston National star was in left field and furnished the comedy. Tom's fast base ball days are o'er but he is still a foxy player. He heckled Knight until he all but got his goat and if Bannin has his way, the win of Fore River will be protested because two balls were not always in play, causing slight delays. He got two putouts and while chasing a foul fly took a header and dove into a dust hole. He came up with his uniform soiled but his continual crabbing had made him rather unpopular and he got no sympathy.

Ned Cunniffs umpiring was punk. He called Bishop safe on first in the third inning when he was out a mile and although Callahan was caught three feet off home in the eighth he declared him safe and Lynn got a run without the runner even tagging home plate. None of the batters were satisfied with his decisions and when Fore River plays in Lynn it would not be surprising to find that team choosing an umpire who would shade in their favor.

The playing of Vin Stevens and Gillis and Caine for Fore River was exceptional while Hall and Daum played well for the losers. The summary:

TEN INNINGS AT WEST QUINCY

St. Mary's beat the Hibernians in a ten inning game on the Ward Four playground Saturday afternoon 7 to 6. In the 10th the Hibernians got two men on but Little tightened and prevented scoring. In the last half, three St. Mary's men reached base on errors on easy flies and Hebert sent Joe O'Rouke home with a long sacrifice fly to deep right.

The game was featured by the work of Little and Duggan, the battery, Frank O'Rourke, and the all around hitting of Hebert. Duane, McTiernan and Elcock starred for the Hibernians. The summary:

MILITANTS GET A HEARING

They Fail to Get Any Definite Promise From Premier Asquith

London, June 22.—The militant suffragettes were recognized officially by the British government for the first time when a deputation of six women were received in audience by Premier Asquith in accordance with a promise he made to Sylvia Pankhurst.

One of the first demands of the deputation was that the premier would exercise his authority to have the criminal charges against Miss Pankhurst set aside so that she could enjoy freedom.

Asquith said he would see what could be done about securing her unconditional release. The premier's reply to the representations of the suffragettes was non-committal. He made no definite promise, but said: "If the voting franchise must be extended to women it should be given on a broad, democratic basis."

The injury is not considered serious.

In a moment the assailant was seized and taken to a police station. He gave his name as Prudon and said he had been the proprietor of a creamery, but was ruined when the baron opened another for philanthropic purposes.

CAPTURES AN AUTO LOAD OF LIQUOR

Maine Deputy Sheriff Punctures Tire With Pistol Shots

Portland, Me., June 22.—Leo Herman and John Moody of Portland are under arrest in Saco and their automobile, with its load of 240 gallons of whisky, is being held by the York county sheriff's department.

The capture of the men and their outfit was made by Deputy Sheriff Brown of Hollis, who, after chasing the big car in a little Ford machine for some distance, headed off the larger machine and brought it to a standstill by puncturing a trie of one of the forward wheels with pistol shots after the driver had refused to obey the officer's command to stop.

The capture was made at Buxton Lower Corner. Brown made the two Portland men put a new tire on their car and then forced them to drive it to Saco, where it was turned over to the sheriff's department.

HAMLIN WINS FOR ATLANTIC

Hamlin, the Quincy High school pitcher, who pitched a remarkable game against Braintree several weeks ago, continued his fine work at Atlantic Saturday afternoon by pitching the Atlantic A. A. to victory over the Winthrop A. C. by a score of 10 to 6. He allowed five hits and fanned 10 men and with better support could have returned a bigger net. The feature of the game was the running catch of Earl Bates and the batting of Dolan, Cullen and L. Donnelly. The team with few exceptions is the Quincy High school men playing independent ball.

DOUBLE PLAYS WERE NUMEROUS

Four double plays were the features of the fast game in which the Orients defeated the St. Alphonsus 2 to 1 on the Ward three playground Saturday afternoon. All the plays prevented scoring and retired the sides.

The local team opened up a one lead in the first inning and added to it on the third. St. Alphonsus drew one across in the last inning but the Orients tightened up and took the game out of the air.

Both teams contributed fast fielding plays, a running catch by Brown and another by Patriarca spoiling the visitors chances. Not an Orient batter fanned during the game.

The Orients are now travelling at their usual and next Saturday meet the strong Braintree A. A. at the Hollis field, Braintree.

VILLA MARCHES TO THE SOUTH

Prepares to Renew Attack Upon Federals at Zacatecas

VICTORY FOR ADVANCE GUARD

Huerta's Troops Reported to Have Been Obliged to Abandon Equipment and Supplies—Carranza and Villa Still at Odds—Angeles Is Villa's Choice as President

Washington, June 22.—With an army of 25,000 men, supported by fifty-one field guns and seventy-three machine guns, General Villa is marching southward from Torreon to renew the attack upon the victorious federal force defending Zacatecas and barring the rebel approach to Mexico City.

Already Villa's advance guard is in touch with the federals and has administered a defeat to one division of 5000 men, which was pursuing the forces of General Natera, the constitutional commander, who was routed in his attack upon Zacatecas.

The engagement took place at Calera, a few miles from Zacatecas, and resulted in the rout of the federals, who were obliged to abandon their equipment and supplies and who are reported to have suffered severely.

Dispatches from Torreon quote Villa as asserting that he has enough ammunintion for the artillery and machine guns. "I am out of politics and the only object I pursue is to bring this campaign to a successful issue," he asserted.

General Blanquet, Huerta's minister of war, is threatening to send a strong foce into the rebel territory to take advantage of the dissensions between Generals Carranza and Villa, but it is believed he will await the result of the Zacatecas battle.

Several brigades of rebels are reported to have left Saltillo, Carranza's headquarters, for an attack upon the federal garrison at San Luis Potosi. Diaz Gutierez, six miles from San Luis Potosi, has been taken by the rebels.

Although it is denied by the constitutionalist agents in Juarez that Villa has proclaimed General Angeles, the rebel artillery leader, as provisional president, it is believed that his advisers will induce him to do so.

WON'T DISCUSS ARMISTICE

Carranza Says Rebels Must Decide What Is Best For Mexico

El Paso, Tex., June 22.—General Carranza has forwarded his reply to the two notes sent him by the mediation commissioners at Niagara Falls.

Carranza's note, it is understood, reiterated his willingness to have participated in the various conferences whose sole object he recognized to be the pacification of Mexico. The futility of the discussion of Mexican internal affairs, however, he pointed out.

While thanking the mediators for their efforts, the "first chief" made plain that among the subjects he considered it impossible to discuss are the proposed armistice, military movements of the constitutonalists, the agrarian question and the designation of a provisional president of Mexico.

Carranza declares that a grave error has been committed in attempting to solve such questions of transcendant importance to the Mexican people. It devolves upon the constitutionalists themselves, he held, to decide what is best for the interests of their country.

Doylstown, Pa., June 22.—"I don't know whether my loss of vioce is in sympathy with Colonel Roosevelt's ailment or not, but I've got to quit."

These were the words in which Gifford Pinchot, Progressive candidate for senator in Pennsylvania, cut short his speech at Chalfonte a few minutes after he began it.

Pinchot's voice failed him absolutely and he explained afterward that the condition of his throat was due to an attempt to make twenty-nine speeches in one day recently.

BAPTIZED BY POWER

Or Saved by a Woman's Courage

By VINGIE E. ROE

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Ellen Hargrave stood at the little window of her unpainted pine shack and twisted together slim fingers that bespoke her former station in life.

The coarse blue flannel shirt and short skirt told plainly enough that her lot these days was "roughing it."

Outside the sight which greeted her half tragic eyes was drear to the point of desolation.

As she looked the door of the power house opened and a tall man came out, swinging up the path to the cabin with the rhythm of youth and health.

"Hello, Miss Prettyface," he laughed. "How's dinner?"

She did not answer and turned to the well laid table, pouring the tea with shaking fingers.

Presently the man noticed the look of her eyes, and his face sobered.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "Blue again?"

For answer she turned suddenly away, pressed hard by a flood of tears that clamored for escape.

When she could command herself she turned to him, though her lips quivered.

"Jim," she said, simply, "if you don't give up this work and go back to the world I shall go mad. I could tear these hills to pieces! And I hate that monster down there." She glanced at the power house. "It menaces me. And I hate the river."

The man's face saddened, and a line of perplexity came between his brows.

"Ellen," he said, "I'm sorry—sorry that you feel like this—and if you cannot change I will give it up, though I wish you could learn to see it all as I see it. Why, I love it all—the hills, the river with its uncounted strength, the power house there with its magnificent tasks of labor, its glorious serving of man, the very towns and cities that you love so much. I am happy here, dear. If only you could be! It's great work.

"Think it over, honey," he whispered as he kissed her to return to his shift. "Don't you want to come down and stay with me awhile this afternoon? Charlie is going over to the settlement. How that chap manages for sleep I don't know."

It was 3 o'clock of a rainy afternoon before she could bring herself to bathe her swollen face, wrap up in a waterproof and go down the crooked path to the power house, crouching low and ugly beside the river.

As she crossed the railed approach above the flood gates the deep throated hum of the dynamos struck her ear, and she shuddered involuntarily.

The constant menace of that stored death was always before her—the awful power whose lightest touch meant eternity appalled her.

She was thinking in this shrinking strain as she opened the door.

As they always did, her eyes swept swiftly over every bit of the wide open space in the center of the building for Jim.

Now, as she looked in growing fear, the door of the telephone booth, a little room set up on a waist high platform to the right, flew open and Jim tumbled out literally, his face gone white and horror in his eyes.

"Jim!" screamed Ellen shrilly.

At the sudden cry the man essayed to turn sharply as he reached for the flight of shallow steps leading to the floor, missed his footing and went down straight from the platform on his right knee, the foreleg bent back, with the toe caught on the platform's edge.

There was a report as of a cracked plank above the hum, and she reached him to see the foot fall useless.

"Broken, by George!" gritted the man. "And there's been a bad disaster at the Black Drift mine—cave-in—thirty men entombed—and—they want—power—power.

"Ellen—they must have all the power we've got—extra drills—air compressed—more hoists! Oh, my God! And I can't get there!"

His wife covered her eyes with her hands, and horror shut off her breath.

When she looked again Jim lay in a limp heap—fainted—out of the running—done for!

And thirty men in the Black Drift mine waiting for air!

She drew herself up slowly, her body weak and a mist in her eyes.

As she stood so the bell in the booth rang madly, and she dragged herself up the steps, numb and slow.

"Hargrave?" cried a man's hoarse voice. "For God's sake turn the power on! Hurry! We've got on all the drills, but they're working slow.

"For the love of God, man, give us all the power you've got! Cut off everything in Bartell City and along the lines and let us have it all!"

He shut off abruptly, dropping the receiver, and Ellen Hargrave came out of the booth wringing her hands.

What should she do? What could she do?

Then suddenly she straightened, took her hands from her face and crept down the steps.

Air! Her own throat was choking. But she must do what Jim would have done—she must handle the monster.

At the east loomed up the red streaked marble face of the great switchboard, glittering with brass and copper switches, big and little.

To her right Nos. 1 and 2 sang their constant high pitched song of power; over beyond the booth 3 and 4 stood in sinister silence.

Along the western wall run a narrow space leading out to the little room above the traveling ropes and the turbines.

Here the governor stood.

Here was the power the Black Drift needed to force the life giving drills—and she alone to handle it, shaking in deadly fear!

She shut her hands hard and gathered her forces, cleared her mind desperately.

What was it Jim did first when he cut in the other machines?

She had followed him so often in the monotony of the dull hours that she knew every motion.

But where did he begin? And the synchronizing!

She nearly fainted at the appalling thought of the delicate operation at the switchboard after the dynamos were started.

Could she throw the big copper switch just at the proper fraction of a second?

Or would her eye and hand fail and knock out the circuit breaker, thereby wrecking all hope?

She cowered against the cement wall, staring out at the empty room.

Then, fearfully, she gathered up her trembling limbs and walked out to the shining governor.

Instinctively, not trusting her brain, she opened the valve on the governor.

Instantly she caught the low roar of the opened turbine gates, saw the governor begin to whirl, heard the thunder of the great turbine in the depths below, and her heart leaped in her throat.

Steady now!

What did Jim do next, where had she followed him from here?

Again following instinct, she went back through the passage.

She stopped at the small hooded generator beside No. 3.

It was beginning its own little tune.

From there she went as one in a dream, softly, following Jim on other journeys and threw the exciter switch.

By now Nos. 3 and 4 were whirling under their hoods, giving out a strange, menacing note that rose steadily, an exciting, terrible note.

She stood wide eyed and watched the power her hand had loosed roar up to its zenith. The trembling was gone out of her limbs.

In its stead she felt something strong rising within her, an excitement borrowed from the dynamos, a crazy joy—a triumph!

She ran, wavering a bit under the strain, to the switchboard and switched on the synchronizing lights, two small bulbs in the front of the marble face.

One lighted and went out, lighted and went out, in perfect regulated time, like the play of a pendulum.

That stood for 1 and 2, harnessed and obedient, already working like willing giants.

The other was slower, its beat crossing and falling behind and overstepping the step of the other. That was 3 and 4 coming up to the pace.

Steadily the second light gained on the first.

Now it was only a hair's breadth behind; now it was so near as to be scarce perceptibly slower; now it lighted and went out in unison with the other.

Tense, steady, she watched a second longer, gauging the lights. Now they were at the zenith. Now they went down and out. Now—now—just before they reached the zenith again—

Click!

Strongly she pushed the big switch down—and let out her bursting breath.

Right! Nothing had happened!

The four black monsters were working together mightily, filling the power house with their awful humming.

Staggering and laughing, she went and switched off all the current from Bartell City and the valley towns.

She got the Black Drift on the telephone. Some boy answered.

"How's the power?" she asked weakly.

"Fine!" came back the word. "Drills workin' like the devil! Compresses ready. All hopin'."

When she at last reached Jim he opened his arms, and she sank into them.

"Oh, Miss Prettyface!" cried the man tensely. "Miss Braveheart! My own girl! What a woman you are!"

An hour later she got the Black Drift again, this time the hoarse voice of the superintendent who had begged for power.

"What luck?" she asked bravely.

"Best luck, thank God!" he answered heartily. "We've hit the level and are pumping them air while the relief squads work. All alive. Give Hargrave my thanks for his prompt work."

"Good!" said Ellen. "And now, Mr. Masters, when you can spare them will you send me help and a doctor? My husband is lying here on the floor with a broken leg. You will? Thanks! Right soon, please. Oh, just a bit ago. Goodby!"

When the men from the Black Drift, full of the day's happening, carried Jim Hargrave up the crooked path to the shack beneath the pine the woman turned from the stretcher's head and looked back at the river, the hills and the ugly power house beside its dam.

It was a whole new country to her misty eyes, and all its bitterness was swept away as by a mighty wind.

The world had changed since noon!

"Jim," she said in the quiet night, "let's build another room on the cabin. I think I want to stay."

WAS GOING TO MARRY ANOTHER

Woman's Thoughts of Husband Spurred Her to Kill Him

ONCE IN AN INSANE ASYLUM

Wife of Boston Lawyer Had Developed Homicidal Tendencies but Was Thought to Have Recovered—Admits Guilt In Court, Saying Her Story Would Not Be Understood

Exeter, N. H., June 22.—Admitting that she shot to death her husband, Henry H. Folson, a well-known lawyer of Boston, as they were driving home from a railway station, Mrs. Henry H. Folsom, who was formerly an inmate of an asylum for the insane, is under arrest here, charged with murder.

When arrested she declared: "I killed him because he was going to marry another woman." When arraigned before Judge Mayer she again admitted her guilt, but when the court appointed Stewart E. Rowe to defend her Rowe entered a plea of not guilty.

"I have no case," Mrs. Folsom told the police officials. "No one will understand me if I tell you everything."

Mrs. Folsom was an inmate of the McLean asylum for the insane at Waverly, Mass., five years ago, having developed homicidal tendencies. Folsom had taken her from the asylum to their home in Somerville in the belief that she had recovered.

Not long ago, it s said, Mrs. Folsom placed her fingers around the throat of one of her friends and said: "I could kill you so easily."

Mr. and Mrs. Folsom have been living this summer at Rockingham, N. H. She went to the railway station to meet her husband. Folsom was driving home and his wife was sitting in the seat behind him when she fired a shot from a small revolver, striking him in the back of the neck. As Folsom arose and turned his wife fired twice more, the bullets striking in the side of her husband's face. He turned to face her and she fired again. The bullet entered the centre of the forehead, causing instant death.

When Chief of Police Davis arrived Mrs. Folsom made no attempt to escape, but asked: "Is he dead?" When the chief said the husband was dead she replied: "I don't believe he is. Feel his pulse."

Mrs. Folsom is 43 years old and the daughter of Captain W. W. Hardy of Dover, N. H. Her husband was the same age and a member of a Boston law firm. He was formerly principal of the high school in Gardner, Mass., and was chairman of the school committee of Somerville.

JESSE GRANT SUED

Wife of Former President's Son Asks For Adequate Support

New York, June 22.—Jesse R. Grant, son of former President Grant, was named as defendant in a suit brought by his wife to compel the United States Trust company, as trustee under the will of Julia D. Grant, his mother, to pay her a sum sufficient to support her "in a manner befitting the income and position of her husband."

The complaint states that from 1880 until 1902, when the widow of the former president died, the defendant and his wife lived at the home of his mother, who supported them.

Mrs. Grant alleges that after the death of her mother-in-law, her husband abandoned her.

TURKEY BACKS DOWN

Will Make Ample Amends For Indignities Suffered by Greeks

Constantinople, June 22.—It is stated on good authority here that the Turkish government has instructed its minister at Athens to inform the Greek government that Turkey is willing to permit the return of Greek subjects who had been compelled recently to leave Turkish territory.

The Ottoman government is declared to be ready to grant an indemnity for the losses suffered by those who had been forced to quit their houses during the recent anti-Greek disturbances and who in many cases left their entire belongings behind them.

PERSECUTION OF JEWS

Renewed With Greater Violence Than Ever In Odessa

Berlin, June 22.—A dispatch from Odessa says that the local Black Hundred has just published, absolutely free from an censorial restraint, the most pestilent anti-Semetic broadsheet that has appeared in that country.

It preaches a terror that is intended to make the lives of the Odessa Jews unendurable and compel them to flee the city.

RESULT OF FAMILY FEUD

Brothers Who Lived as Hermits In Battle to the Death

Reading, Mass., June 22.—A family feud of years' standing reached a tragic culmination when James Harris, aged 58, shot and killed his brother, Charles Harris, 56, in the old Harris farmhouse here.

It was a battle to the death, with Charles slashing savagely with an axe and James using a revolver.

The end of the battle saw Charles lying dead on the kitchen floor, with the other, bleeding from a ten-inch gash in his shoulder, driving madly toward the police station to give himself up to the authorities.

James Harris is at the Reading police station, charged with murder in the first degree.

The tragedy brings to public notice a strange story of two brothers, bitter enemies, living the life of hermits in a dilapitated farmhouse two miles from the centre of the town.

While the trouble Sunday started over the ownership of a pile of wood, the beginning of the discord was about fifteen years ago, when their mother died. Trouble over the property began at once and all through the years the brothers have kept their own house, but in pathetic fashion.

James Harris carried on the farm. His brother made his living as a shoemaker.

KILLED BY TRAINED LIONS

Body of Theatrical Man Is Partly Dvoured by the Beasts

Chicago, June 22.—Emerson D. Dietrich, manager of a theatrical production presenting a troupe of trained lions, was killed and partly devoured last night by six lions when he entered the car in which they were caged.

While the keepers were trying to recover Dietrich's body from the beasts a lion escaped from an adjoining cage and terrorized residents of the quarter in which the car stood. The escaped lion finally was driven back to its car, having harmed nobody.

A pike pole from the fire department finally was used to withdraw Dietrich's body from the lions, after it had been sprinkled with formaldehyde to drive the animals away.

THINK WOMAN WAS SLAIN IN REVENGE

Police Puzzled Over Torso Found in the Mohawk River

Schenectady, N. Y., June 22.—Murder, with revenge for the motive, is now the theory upon which the police are seeking to solve the mystery of the death of a young woman whose unclothed torso was found in the Mohawk river, just below this city. The body had been cut in at least three pieces.

The portion of the body found in the river was wrapped in oilcloth and heavy burlap. It consisted of the body from a point a few inches above the hips to the knees. Examination showed that the work of dismembering it had been done with coolness, precision and skill.

Examination of the section of the body found showed no indication that the woman had died of accident or disease, and there had been no need to seek concealment of the body as the result of death from an illegal operation.

TRAGEDIES AT HAVERHILL

One Man Slashed to Death and Another's Skull Broken

Haverhill, Mass., June 22.—During a dispute with a man in the doorway of a boarding house, Joseph Simini was slashed to death with a razor. The police are seeking Joseph Bruno in connection with the case. The cause of the quarrel is not known.

Tony Avilla, a Polish hat worker, is dying with a fractured skull as the result of being hit over the head with a fence picket during a brawl with three of his fellow countrymen here.

All four men were drinking in the kitchen of the Avilla home at the time the row occurred, according to the police.

PLANS FOR THE FOURTH

Association Pleased at the Liberal Contributions

An enthusiastic meeting of the Fourth of July celebration committee was held Saturday evening. Every committee was represented at the meeting and encouraging reports were made, especially by the collectors who report that the collections are coming in well.

George F. Elcock of the fireworks committee reported that the contract for the fireworks display had been let to the American Fireworks Co. and says that it will be by far the best thing ever seen in Quincy. The display contains 125 pieces some of which are entirely new and will be shown for the first time, in this country.

There has been a great demand for tickets for the children's entertainment in different theaters and A. J. LeCroix of the committee had to provide more. Up to the present time 4100 tickets have been given out. Any child between the ages of 6 and 14 years of age who has not yet received a ticket may obtain one by calling upon him at 19 Irving place.

Nothing definite has as yet been learned relative to the visit of a battleship to Quincy waters on the Fourth, but the committee have not as yet given up hope that one will be here. If it is possible the Navy department has promised to assign a vessel to these waters.

The parade from returns already in, promises to be the best yet. It is planned to start the morning parade earlier this year, and to have it start on the time advertised. There will be several bands in line, but just how many will depend largely upon how much money the committee have to expend.

FINED FOR SUNDAY WORK.

The next time that Vaccaro Gerando attempts to chop wood on a Sunday he will think twice before doing it beneath the windows of a church. Sunday while services at Christ church were in progress the solemnity of the service was broken by the sound of an axe as it hewed apart a tree. Assistant Court Officer Hultman, who was attending services at the church, went out and placed the man under arrest, and sent him to the police station. The arrest however was not made until after the man had been warned to stop but had refused to do so. In court he was fined $5.

LONG AUTO TRIP.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Dennen, with Mr. Dennens sister, Mrs. Anna Parsons, and Mr. Parsons, took a long automobile ride Sunday with Mr. Dennen at the wheel. The first place visited was Gloucester, where the party were taken to the old homestead where Mr. Dennen first saw the light of day, 71 years ago, where the party had dinner. Later they visited the old school house where Mr. Dennen learned his A. B. C's and that 2 and 2 made 4. From there the party took an eighteen mile ride about Cape Ann returning to Quincy late in the day having covered 117 miles, without a skip of the engine.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

A driver for Burleigh & Marten, the caterers, had his leg broken in a runaway accident on Granite street this afternoon. He was taken to the Quincy hospital by William H. Taylor of the Health department.

The through street cars between Neponset and Nantasket Beach did a large business Sunday. Cars on all lines of the street railway also carried many passengers and on the Wollaston, East Milton and Brockton lines it was necessary to run two cars on every trip. On the Houghs Neck line, three and four cars were run on every trip.

BEAUTIFUL ROSES.

There are roses and roses but the white ones grown by Mrs. Herman Kjellberg of 31 Cherry avenue are so exquisite and perfect they look like wax or artificial ones. She bought the bush four years ago at a Boston department store and it has thrived under her care until this year it is a mass of large white roses, the full blown ones measuring five inches or more across. The bush is stocky, the foliage large and green and free from insects. Mrs. Kjellberg is a lover of flowers and the attention she bestows on them is rewarded by many blossoms.

WHAT IS AMORTIZATION?

The Method of Providing For the Repayment of a Loan.

Every now and then the plain man who has saved a little money and wants to invest it so that he will get a reasonable and safe return runs against a nest of terms which are bewildering and all but meaningless. I'm afraid he usually passes by without taking the trouble to understand them.

Take the word "amortization." I hold that it's no shame to any man not to know what that word means. And yet to investors the word is highly important.

"Amortization" means simply the method of providing for the repayment of a loan. If you lend me $10,000, which I promise to repay in ten years, you have a right to be interested in my plans for meeting the demand for the $10,000 which you expect to make upon me ten years hence.

So I say to you:

"I am going to amortize that $10,000 debt in this way: Out of my earnings every year I'm going to set aside $900. Each year I will set the $900 to work earning something too. At the end of ten years the fund will amount to just enough to discharge my debt."

You will find that specialists in bonds use the word a great deal. They know better than anybody else its importance. They realize that a borrower of money for a long term of years is very apt to forget to make provision for repayment.

Certain lenders of money on long terms insist upon the borrower's taking out a life insurance policy big enough to meet the debt in case of death before the debt becomes due. Generally the longer a debt has to run the more important becomes the question of "amortization."—John M. Oskison in Chicago News.

NAVAJOS FEAR THE DEAD.

Hence They Get Rid of Their Bodies as Quickly as Possible.

One practice of the Navajos that promotes health among them, however repugnant it may be for us, is their disposition of the dead. In the presence of the living the Navajo is without fear, but his terror of the dead is abject and unreasoning. The dead are believed to be possessed of malevolent feelings toward the survivors, with unlimited powers for working evil upon those who carelessly place themselves within the power of the spirits.

So when any one dies the only anxiety of the surviving relatives is to get rid of the body as quickly as possible. If there are any white men living in the neighborhood an effort is made to induce them to perform the offices of undertaker. If not, the disposition of the body depends somewhat upon circumstances. If the hogan—the modern wigwam—is built of wood it is set on fire and burned with the body in it. If of stone the body is usually taken outside, the entrance to the hogan closed up with stones or sticks and a hole made in the wall opposite to permit the evil spirits to depart and to warn passersby that the structure belongs to the dead.

If the death occurred in a rocky country the body will likely be taken to some crevice and thrown in it. It may be left uncovered to become the prey of wolves and coyotes, or sticks and stones may be cast over it. If the family lives in a sandy part of the reservation, with no convenient crevices or chasms near by, the body will be laid upon the sand, a little earth and some stones thrown upon it, and a pile of brush laid over all.—Christian Herald.

The Judge Who Didn't Joke.

The funny sayings of a judge who never joked are found in "Arabiniana," a selection of the dicta of Sergeant William Arabin, who sat as a judge at the Old Bailey in London from 1830 to 1839. For instance, his remark to counsel:

"If you can show precisely at what moment the offense was committed and prove that the prisoner was not there when he did it he could not possibly have done it." And he sagely added as an afterthought, "We cannot divest ourselves of common sense in a court of justice."

Another axiom he delivered himself of has been fathered on many other occupants of the bench:

"If ever there was a case of clearer evidence than this case, this case is that case."

Odors of London.

The sense of smell which enables an engine driver to avoid a collision or a sailor to steer clear of an iceberg is the least cultivated of our senses. But with a properly equipped nose and a little practice we ought to be able to tell where we are blindfold all over London, for every locality has its distinct odor. Soho smells different from Southwark, Billingsgate differs from Limehouse, Rotherhithe has quite a special smell of its own, and Barking is absolutely unique.—R. L. Stevenson.

A Natural Inference.

"Matrimony," said the lady who had just secured her third divorce, "is, after all, an uncharted sea."

"I take it, then," her friend replied, "that you have not engaged in your various ventures for charting purposes."—Chicago Record-Herald.

It is estimated that the life of the average horse in bondage is twenty-five years. The wild horse's age is about thirty-eight years.

DOES QUINCY FAVOR BILL?

under the impression that on several occasions the Daily Ledger had favored the abolition of grade crossings in Quincy by the "City plan of depression." It has been claimed that there were two petitions orginally—one for Saville street, and one for Water street—and that the scope of the commission was limited. They could do nothing for Granite street but they could cause a monstrosity at School street.

The grade of the railroad from the Boston line to the Braintree line should have been considered by the commission, especially as there are several bridges on the main line in Quincy. When four tracks are established, as proposed at the time the grade crossings are abolished, the grade of the bridges at Beale street, Adams street, Dimmock street, Granite street and School streets will be affected seriously.

The new bill in Section one meets the wishes of the people of Quincy and the Daily Ledger heartily endorses the bill with the exception of Section 5. Possibly that is as it should be, but if it includes any of the takings already made by the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. along the railroad, the railroad should be liable, or at least become jointly responsible with the city for damages. The railroad has made large taking such as the Baxter estate on School street, property of Charles H. Spear, on Franklin place and others. Possibly such takings are not included.

But in the decree there are 51 parcels of land which will be taken or may already have been taken. The expense of abolishing the grade crossings is heavy enough for the city without the land damages.

It would be unfortunate to have in the bill provisions which would outweigh the good points. In these last days of the Legislature, amendments to the bill are not easily secured, but such a bill should not be rushed through. It would be a great victory for the railroad to be relieved of land damages.

Unfortunately, many voters who are not taxpayers would vote to accept such a bill, so that it is not well to depend too much on the referendum. Let the provisions be understood before the Senate sends the bill to the Governor.

Representative Sullivan has made a remarkable up-hill fight and deserves to win. He claims that Section 5 is absolutely necessary, and that the merits of the bill can be discussed after it passes the Legislature before it is submitted to the voters. Will the City Solicitor please inform the taxpayers of the city at an early date whether there have been any land taking to date in connection with the abolition of the Saville street and Water street crossings.

CAMPBELL TO BUILD.

Ernest W. Campbell of Wollaston has purchased a Bonelli-Adams Company all of two large tracts of East Milton terrace, with the exception of a few lots, bounded by Adams, Kimball, Campbell, and Cliff streets, and Adams Cliff, Kimball and White street, numbering about fifty house lots together with a large 23-room residence, stables, etc. Modern dwellings of most artistic design, having every improvement will be designed and erected by Mr. Campbell, who is a well-known architect, and put on the market at an early date.

Two Dorchester people were struck by autos of Quincy people on Saturday night. Just before 7 o'clock an auto owned and operated by Clifton Fletcher of 72 Garfield street, hit Patrick Rogers aged 50, married, of 28 Tolman street, Neponset, while he was crossing Neponset avenue, near Blackwell street. Rogers was taken to the office of Dr. A. R. Ballou, nearby, and then to his home. He received abrasions on the nose and lips and on both sides of his face.

Nine year old Frances Curry, of 33 East street, Dorchester, was crossing Dorchester avenue, near East street, when she was struck by the automobile of Reuben R. Baker of 51 Beach street. Mr. Baker was operating the machine when the girl was hit. He carried her to a physician's office and then to her home. She received a scalp wound and was injured about the right foot and left knee.

GRADUATION AT ST. JOHNS SCHOOL

Mayor Miller and Chairman of School Committee Among the Speakers

Program by Pupils Was an Entertaining One

The members of the class of 1914 of the St. John's parish school were graduated Monday evening in the school hall with appropriate exercises, in the presence of a gathering of representative men and parents that thronged the hall.

The guests present were Mayor and Mrs. John L. Miller, John D. Mackay, chairman of the School Committee; Ernest L. Collins and Frank L. Mansur of the Quincy High school, Horace W. Rice of the Woodward Institute, Albert L. Barbour, superintendent of schools, Charles H. Johnson and others.

Father Coan opened the speaking program by thanking the guests for their attendance. He said Mayor Miller was present, not in very good condition, he was sorry to say. For this he deserves all the more thanks, and we pray that God will give him back new strength to carry out his own work and the work of the city.

Father Coan, in a short speech said we yield to no one in patriotism, in love of our country, its institutions and its schools. We yield to nobody in our love and pride of the public schools of the United States. We have no quarrel with them. We are with them in everything as far as we are able, and we try to follow them in our course of study, the manner of carrying on our schools, and we are with them in every respect as far as we can go or follow.

But, the public school course does not go far enough. We feel that the heart must be educated; the children must be taught to do right because it is right, and not wrong because there is a policeman around the corner, but because it is wrong. It is our wish to inculcate this principle and we feel without religion this cannot be done. That is the reason we have our own school and teach them our religion.

We claim no monopoly in the collection of brains: all are included in the distribution. We lay claim to no working miracles in the line of education. We develop children the best we can, intellectually and morally and teach them what they should be and give them a better start in life.

We are always ready to fight for the country, to follow its flag and honor it. As far as the doctrine of the church goes there is no more true patriot than the Catholic and none will go further than he.

He said in closing that instead of dividing the ranks of the citizens of the United States we want to make them as one, and religion is taught to make the better "God first and country afterwards, and no better citizens of the United States can there be than a good Catholic." Applause.

Father Coan then presented the speakers, expressing his sentiments in a kindly and witty way. He said Mayor Miller came first as chairman of the School Committee and now as Mayor. His Honor received much applause.

MAYOR MILLER.

Mayor Miller congratulated all on the showing of the school. He said he was impressed with the graduation of a year ago, that his ambition and thought was inspired at seeing the young life stand in their independence before the world.

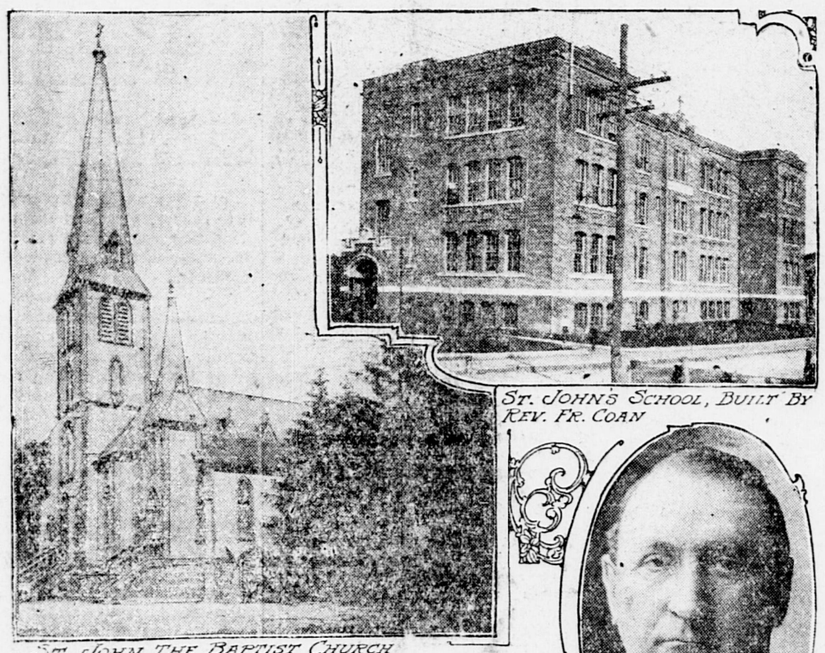

Tonight, he said, we find the exercises even as good, and I am not certain if not better, and I am sure all are to be congratulated. He said he had inquired about last years graduates, and learned they are doing well. In closing he said "may they be monuments that will speak for themselves and those who have striven to give them this education."

John D. Mackay, said Father Coan, came first as a member and now as chairman of the School Committee and the next time it may be as mayor.

PRESIDENT WHITON SPEAKS IN FAVOR

Would Abolish Grade Crossings Under New Bill Now Pending in the Legislature

Large Appropriations for Street Improvements

Orders involving appropriations aggregating nearly $92,000 for street improvements passed the City Council at the adjourned meeting Monday evening without a murmur. Of this amount $40,700 was for building newly accepted streets, $30,500 for widening and paving Hancock street between Granite and School streets, $7,700 for paving Penn street and practically $13,000 for rebuilding and paved gutters, the latter amount being provided for in the supplementary budget which was passed.

The only note of discord was on the resolution endorsing House Bill 2757 providing for the separation of the grades at Saville and Water streets by depression of the railroad. The resolution was adopted although it was by no means unanimous.

Every member of the City Council was present.

The Mayor forwarded a communication from the boys of Houghs Neck asking for a playground, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

FORTUNATE SAYS MAYOR

Quincy Fro d to Do Honor to a Live Hero

Mayor Miller had the pleasure of grasping the hand of Edward A. Gisburn, who lost his leg in the attack at Vera Cruz, when the youthful hero called on His Honor on Monday to express his thanks for plans made for his public reception. Although averse to affairs of this kind, Mr. Gisburn has been prevailed upon by his friends to accept the honor to be conferred.

"Quincy is more fortunate than some cities," said Mayor Miller in response, "other cities were called on to honor their dead heroes, but we are proud to do honor to a live one."

The young man modestly accepted the congratulations of Mayor Miller, and at his request told of a few incidents connected with the landing of the first troops in Mexico.

Mayor Miller informed him that he had called a meeting of the committee in charge of the reception for Thursday night at which time plans will be completed and the date set.

The hero fund which is being raised by popular subscription is gradually growing, and Clarence Burgin, its treasurer, reports the receipt of money from many sources. All are making an effort to substantially express their feelings toward the young man who sacrificed his leg in the service of his country, and says that he would willingly volunteer again if the cause arose.

GOVERNOR EXPECTED

The annual mid summer fete of St. Mary's parish will be given on the parochial grounds next Saturday, and His Excellency, Gov. David I. Walsh will be the principal guest of the evening. Governor Walsh will arrive about eight o'clock and will make an address. The program has been arranged to fill the hours from two until 11 o'clock. The afternoon will be devoted to childrens sports and the evening to adults.

BATH HOUSE WAS THREATENED

Sparks flew all over Quincy Point this morning from a fire which swept the Point Holes district and boys swimming beyond the outer raft in Town river were obliged to constantly duck to save their hair from being singed. The fire started on the Ward Two playground and travelled at great speed over the large area of dried grass. Clouds of sparks and smoke enveloped the houses in the immediate vicinity and the public bath house which was in the path of the flames was saved only through the hard work of the fire fighters.

SCOTTISH HISTORY.

If there is any person of Scottish blood in Quincy who doesn't read the Daily Ledger regularly, be sure to advise him to buy a copy of Wednesday's issue, for it will contain a special article which will prove of great general interest to readers and of particular interest to Scottish people. The purpose of holding it until Wednesday will become apparent on its appearance.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

Some of the farmers are so busy reading the agricultural papers that they have little time to do any farming.

The Niagara Falls mediators have exchanged 17,632,983 words of talk, and as a result have succeeded in agreeing that it is very dry weather this summer.

It is claimed that the coining of three cent pieces would encourage thrift. This coin would be popular when the contribution box comes around, as the deacon would think it was a dime.

Col. Roosevelt can't use his throat for speeches during the next campaign, but politicians always regard shaking hands as much more influential in reaching the intellects of the voters.

In spite of Boards of Trade and business men, Congress might argue for months over the trust bills, were it not that a few days with the thermometer at 95 will offer a very convincing reason for adjournment.

The state of New Hampshire really ought to restrain itself and resist the temptation to elect Harry Thaw to Congress this fall.

GRADUATING ESSAYS.

Members of graduating classes may like to know how the typical commencement essay strikes the editors, with whom writing is a trade and daily bread. Perhaps the juniors, who a year from now with pumping hearts will discourse to admiring parents, on the true, the good, and the beautiful, may find some suggestions.

Many Commencement essays are obviously not chiefly the work of those who read them. Kind parents help bewildered offsprings out of bad holes. In many places, teachers brighten up or smooth down a bungling or rough essay.

Many young writers merely copy sentences out of books and magazines. With an index and a file of magazines any intelligent pupil can prepare a very brilliant essay.

But plagiarism takes an old hand. The cribber unconsciously borrows phrases that otherwise he would never use. The experienced listener can spot the game.

The most effective essay comes out of the personal observation of the writer. If the student gives his own impression of incidents which he has personally experienced, it has the magnetic quality of human interest.

Years ago graduating exercises were written on vague and grandiloquent themes. Tens of thousands of fluffy and soaring girls have written on "Over the Alps lies Italy." "Knowledge is power" is another stock subject that the average school trotted out every other year. Nothing new can possibly be said by a graduating class about such subjects.

Let them talk about everyday business and domestic life, the birds and wild flowers they have seen, their experiences in travel or vacations, everyday work and play among young people, the needs, enterprises, and occupations of their home town. To such subjects as these, they can add some personal touch.

ROBINSON IS IN MURDERERS' ROW

Jailed After Being Held For Trial Without Bail

BANDIT PLEADS NOT GUILTY

Police Obliged to Clear Courthouse and Street In Vicinity of Thousands of People Trying to Get Glimpse of Prisoner Who Killed Police Inspector Norton at Boston

Boston, June 23.—Amid scenes seldom paralleled, Lawrence Robinson, the desperado who shot and killed Police Inspector Thomas J. Norton in the Boylston cafe, was arraigned in the municipal court on a murder charge and held without bail by Judge Brackett. The prisoner pleaded "not guilty."

Robinson was taken from his cot at the city hospital and brought to police headquarters in Pemberton square under a strong police guard. The automobile patrol of the Back Bay station was used as a conveyance. When it reached Pemberton square a crowd of several hundred, including a number of women, was on hand.

The automobile went to the bureau of criminal investigation. Robinson was shut in Captain Armstrong's office and while he was there all the inspectors in the building were called to the office to look the man over. He remained in the building about an hour, and during that time was taken to the rogues' gallery, where he was photographed.

Meanwhile the crowd in Pemberton square increased until there were more than 2000 persons on hand. They overflowed the street, sidewalks and doorways and thronged the steps leading to the courthouse. Everyone supposed that Robinson would be led across the street to the courthouse but Superintendent Pierce gave orders that the square be cleared, after the officers on hand had vainly tried to keep a lane clear across the street. Then the throng was driven back and dispersed.

Next the crowd that filled the courthouse steps and corridors was driven out, but the first session courtroom held such a throng as never was seen there before.

At length the prisoner and his guard left the building but turned into the adjoining one, where the offices of the superintendent of police are located. Thence Robinson was led through an areaway into the courthouse and placed in the dock. The charge of murder was read and Robinson, in a voice hardly audible, entered a plea of not guilty.

Robinson's measurements, as taken in the rogues' gallery, indicate that he is six feet three inches in stature and weighs 192 pounds. His physical condition is said to be excellent and he gave his age as 32 years old. Robinson was dressed in a blue suit. He wore patent leather low shoes and a soft collar, under which a bandage was placed to cover the bullet wound in his neck, but he was hatless.

The prisoner was conveyed to Charles street jail in a police van. Sheriff Quinn took charge of the prisoner and placed him in a cell in "Murderers' Row," where five other men are awaiting the disposition of homicide charges.

Many More In Hillcrest Mine May Never Be Found

Hillcrest, Alberta, June 23.—Government mine experts, who continued the search for the dead in the mine wrecked by an explosion, entombing 195 miners, said it was probable the 154 victims still in the mine were buried beneath tons of rock more than 1000 feet from the mouth of the pit and that some of the bodies would never be recovered.

The majority of the ninety-one bodies recovered thus far were burned beyond recognition.

"SYRIANS" TO BE DEPORTED

One "Finds His Tongue" Long Enough to Offer a Bribe

Boston, June 23.—A party of nine alleged Syrians who arrived here on the steamer Laconia from Liverpool, and are now being held at the immigration station, will be sent back to Liverpool. A score of interpreters visited the station in an effort to understand the Syrians, who seemingly could not talk English.

While passing through the station Inspector Dolan was given a surprise when one of the supposed Syrians, who had not opened his mouth since the ship came in, said in plain English: "I'll give you $50 if you let me get away." The man said that he had been a minister in England.

Dolan notified other officials, who questioned the man further, but he refused to speak.

HIGH PRICE OF POTATOES

Advance Came Too Late to Benefit Aroostock County Growers

Bangor, Me., June 23.—The recent sharp advance to $2 a barrel in the price of Aroostook potatoes came too late to greatly benefit producers, for when the market made this sudden advance nearly all of the crop of 1913 had been shipped, very much of it as low as $1 a barrel having recently ruled at the principal shipping points.

The recent rise is due to the fact that dry weather has retarded the southern crop two weeks or more, shipments from Virginia, which usually begin in the first week of June, having been delayed to June 15-20.

Poverty Vow Held Legal

Washington, June 23.—The United States supreme court reversed the decision of the eighth United States circuit court of appeals, which held that the vows of poverty in Catholic orders were void because against public policy.

Strike of Taxi Drivers

New York, June 23.—Six hundred drivers and mechanics employed by the "Taxicab trust" went on strike because S. S. Stephenson, superintendent of drivers, resigned rather than discharge seventy-five of his workmen.

Cambridge, Mass., June 23.—Charles F. Starrat of Everett was arraigned in the Middlesex superior court, charged with the murder of his wife. He pleaded not guilty and was remanded to jail for trial.

POINT CARRIED BY CARRANZA

Envoys to Be Heard Without Declaration of Armistice

DELEGATES ARE ON THE WAY

Any Plan Containing Essential Provisions For Which Rebels Have Been Contending Will Be Acceptable—Washington Thinks Mediation Will Be Successfully Concluded

Washington, June 23.—General Carranza seems to have carried his point. He will declare no armistice and the peace conference at Niagara Falls, Ont., will go on with his envoys in unofficial attendance.

The coming of the three new representatives of the constitutionalist movement will open the way for informal negotiations between those forces and the Mexican envoys. That the mediators themselves will welcome anything the American delegates can do with the constitutionalists is assured.

The three new delegates en route, said to have the approval of Carranza and Villa, are Messrs. Calderon, who has been in conference with Carranza at Saltillo; Braceda, aide to Carranza, and Espenosa, a member of the congress during the Madero administration.

It is believed Calderon will succeed Zubaran as chief representative of the constitutionalists in Washington. Whether Luis Cabrera, another of the constitutionalist agents now in Washington, will remain is not disclosed.

Another message from Carranza to the mediators has been forwarded from Washington to Niagara Falls. In that communication the constitutionalist first chief is reported to have discussed probable informal negotiations as to a provisonal government through the American commissioners.

Calderon comes, it is stated, clothed with power to pledge the constitutionalists to any plan that will end the fighting and restore constitutional government which contains the essential provisions for which the constitutionalists have been contending.

Meanwhile the administration continues confident the crisis at Niagara has been passed. Some plan of action, it is hoped now, will be evolved there that will meet the objections of the Huertista envoys and permit mediation to be carried on to a successful conclusion.

Various rumors of impending attacks on General Funston and of massing of Huertista troops along the American front at Vera Cruz are without confirmation and are generally discredited at the war department.

No particulars of the Zacatecas fighting has yet reached the state department, although the consular representatives in northern Mexico have been asked to forward them as soon as possible.

Secretary Bryan reflected the revival of optimism at Niagara Falls by reiterating that the progress of mediation was "satisfactory."

Villa reiterates his denial that he has proclaimed Angeles president. Dispatches from Saltillo state that he has gone to the front at Zacatecas.

DIES IN ELECTRIC CHAIR

Four Others May Meet Same Fate as Youthful "Black Hander"

Ossining, N. Y., June 23.—Peter Rebacci, a 19-year-old Italian, a tool of a "black hand murder syndicate" in Westchester county, was put to death in the electric chair at Sing Sing prison for the murder of Tony Marro of White Plains.

Rebacci had figured in other crimes, and on his promise to expose the workings of the "murder syndicate" Governor Glynn granted him a six months' reprieve. His confession will be used at the trial of four other members of the syndicate.

A week from Saturday is THE DAY.

The Horribles will hit some one? Who? City, State or Nation? Possibly all three,

Our mail yesterday was the best so far. Sunday, evidently, the citizens thought seriously what the association was trying to do, to make a success of the 4th.

The collectors report that they are distributing the buttons very satisfactorily. Remember every button means that the wearer has contributed to the fund. There are several thousands in the city who should be contributors.

I know that you are not sorry you gave to our funds last year. So give this year, and a little more than last year if you can, as we want to make this year the "best of all."

The "Horrible" committee desire all interested in that feature for the Fourth to meet with them at the Board of Trade room on Wednesday, June 24, at 7.30 P. M. If you have any ideas come and tell the committee.

The Parade committee also desire all citizens interested in the parade to meet with them on Wednesday evening, at the Board of Trade rooms. Have your organization enter and parade.

THREE DEGREES EXEMPLIFIED

Commander Piper Knights His Two Sons

It sometimes happens that a presiding officer in a fraternal order has the pleasure of advancing his son, but it is seldom that a presiding officer has the pleasure of advancing two of his sons in the same evening. This however is the pleasure that was experienced Monday by Walter E. Piper, eminent commander of Quincy commandery, Knights Templar.

It was the last conclave of the commandery until September, and the three degrees were eexmplified at Monday's conclave, which commenced at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. During the afternoon session the Red Cross degree was exemplified, an adjournment being taken at 6. 30 at which time a banquet was served. At the evening session the Order of the Temple was exemplified and the Order of Malta conferred. It was during the evening session that the eminent commander had the pleasure of knighting his two sons.

ciation instead of the President of the Council and Fourth of July Association. Passed.

REFERRED TO MAYOR.

Reference to the Executive on the orders for rebuilding streets and paved gutters, etc., for which money was provided for in the supplementary budget. These included Grove street, Cranch street, Whitwell street, Rogers street, Bennington street Willard street, Scammel street auto for building Inspector and tractor for steamer. Report accepted.

As all of the Finance reports were not ready at this time the regular business of the Council was taken up until later when reports of committees was returned to.

On motion of Councilman Bailey it was voted when the Council adjourn it be until Wednesday, July 1, at 7.45 o'clock.

SCHOOL STREET.

Councilman Craig offered an order for the widening of School street to a uniform width of sixty feet. Under the rules of the council this was referred to the next City Council.

GRADE CROSSING BILL.

Councilman Williams offered a resolution endorsing House Bill No. 2757 relative to grade crossings.

Councilman Thompson did not believe in hasty action and moved reference to a committee. Motion lost on a rising vote of 8 yes and 14 no.

Councilman Bailey asked how far along the bill was, and was informed that it would probably come up Wednesday.

Councilman Gilliatt thought that the Council should be shown the difference in the cost between the two plans.

Councilman Ross was called to the chair.

President Whiton taking the floor said the adoption of this resolution does not mean that we go on record as favoring the bill, but simply that we are willing it should go to the people to decide. The question is, are you in favor of depression or to put the railroad up in the air? The cost is a secondary matter. We are abolishing the crossings for all time. The present decree plan is a monstrosity. Ask the public wherever crossings have been abolished what they think of the two plans, depression or elevation. Our Representative has done fine work in this matter and it is a fine record for him. This simply puts the bill before the people.

Councilman Thompson said that it was a dangerous bill and we should go slow.

Councilman Little asked if he had seen where School street was to be put under the decree plan?

Councilman Gilliatt did not think that Quincy would be very badly off if crossings were abolished by the decree plan.

The resolution was then adopted on a rising vote of 12 yes and 10 no.

MORE LIGHT.

Councilman Carlson offered an order for street lights on Ocean street, Squantum. To Executive.

STREETS ACCEPTED.

Reports of Committees were again in order and the following orders for new streets were passed by a unanimous vote:

Accepting part of Park Lane.
Accepting part of Glendale road.
Accepting part of Edison street.
Accepting Dysart street.
Accepting Federal avenue extension

Accepting Montclair avenue.
Accepting Huckins avenue.
Accepting Winthrop street to Rock Island.

Widening Goffe street at its junction with Adams street.

Accepting a footway on Saville street to Goffe street.

Accepting Green street.

LOAN ORDER PASSED.

The committee reported ought to pass on the loan order for $40,700 for building the above streets. Rules suspended and order passed unanimously.

In the calendar the order changing grade of Columbia street at its junction with Penn street was passed under suspension of the rules. The change in grade is made necessary by the paving of Penn street.

PERSONAL OPINION

DEPRESSION EXPENSIVE

No Provision in New Bill To Raise Street Grades

Editor of Daily Ledger:

If the present grade crossing bill becomes a law it will, i nmy opinion be little short of a calamity for the city of Quincy.

It is idle to say that we have five months to discuss before the electorate the merits of the bill. The people as a whole have neither time, facilities or inclination to study and determine the difficult engineering problem. As a matter of fact, many of them have already been fooled by the claim that the present plans contemplated a Chinese wall through the city, and on the other hand that depression meant putting the tracks out of sight. Those who understand the situation know that neither would happen, whicever plan was adopted.

To illustrate how intelligent persons, somewhat conversant with the subject may be misled, I call your attention to a statement made by you in your own paper of yesterday's publication. You state, "The new bill in Section 1 meets the wishes of the people of Quincy, and the Daily Ledger heartily endorses the bill, with the exception of Section 5.

Now Section 1 makes it mandatory to depress the railroad tracks for about five miles; it provides only for the elimination of the crossings by depressing the railroad. Under this section therefore the streets could not be raised a foot.

For instance it would require a cut at the Quincy station of over twenty feet, and would in fact probably establish a new and dangerous grade crossing at Granite street, if it did not close up the street entirely.

Futhermore, no one can tell what could be done with Town brook, and the question of drainage water generally in that territory would be a problem difficult to solve.

The powers given to the Special Commission to be appointed under Section 3 would not be sufficient to deal with these subjects, because Section 3 is expressly limited by the requirements of Section 1.

Moreover, the grade at the Braintree line will be increased, and all the travel to the south of us will be injuriously affected and the cost of operation of the railroad, both freight and passengers greatly increased.

It has been said, "Why should we worry about other people; this is a Quincy question; we don't pay the railroad's bills, except ultimately perhaps in poor service and increased rates, and then when the time comes we have forgotten the causes." It is true, the people see only the first cost, the bill which is presented for damages at the outset, and here it is:

Within the last two or three days it was estimated by a first class engineer, a specialist in the elimination of grade crossings, that if the work was done in conformance with Section 1 of the Act, it would cost not less than four million dollars, and probably five millions will be nearer the mark.

This opinion was shared in by an independent engineer of equal standing and experience. The share of Quincy would be ten per cent. four hundred thousand dollars, or one half a million. To this should be added damages, provided under Section 5. At least common honesty would require the city to pay private owners the damage it had caused them.

In the first instance these private owners asked for nothing but a speedy determination of these proceedings by the adoption of some plan. They have waited for over seven years, during which time they could safely make no improvements, and because of constant rumors and agitations their tenants have been frightened away, and it has been impossible to secure others for permanent location.

The Mayor has been critised because before he was elected he believed in depression, and since being elected having the best opportunity to study the situation, secure the advice of his legal and engineering departments, and the advice of other competent persons connected with the problem, he has now concluded that it is for the best interest of the city to accept the Commission plans and get something done for the city; and he is further criticised because he has the courage to state publicly what everybody says privately, that this is not a proper subject matter to be determined by referendum.

Personally, I believe in referendum, and I know it is somewhat unpopular to make any exceptions as to the subject matters to be sent to the people, but I should no more think of solving an intricate engineering problem in such a manner, than I should the diagnosis and treatment of a sick man.

It took three disinterested, distinguished and experienced men, with the assistance of something like a dozen engineers and lawyers, seven years and a half to formulate and adopt a plan.

The proponents of the present bill expect the voters of the City of Quincy to assimilate all the intricate questions of engineering and intelligently settle the question by next December; and all this is to save Saville Street in its present location—a street never accepted by the City of Quincy as a public highway.

Yours very truly,
Paul R. Blackmur.

THE LETTER OF C. R. HAYWARD

Not a Question of Elevation of Tracks He Says

Editor of the Ledger:—

Your issue of last Saturday stated that Representative Abbott of Haverhill read a letter from me in the House of Representatives favoring elevation of the tracks at Quincy. You will see by the attached letter, which is a copy, of the one I sent to Mr. Abbott, that this is not the case.

It is extremely unfortunate that the citizens of Quincy are being made to believe that the decree plan calls for elevation of the tracks at Quincy Center. It seems to me that the time has come for them to understand that the issue is not between elevation and depression but between keeping the present grade and digging a trench through the city which would be an enormous expense, put a serious grade in an important thorough-fare like Granite street and impose an obstacle to train service in the winter because of the drifts which would inevitably accumulate in the cut.

It is time that some of our organizations looked carefully into the actual plans as given out by the commission instead of merely taking the word of financially interested parties.

As stated in the letter to Mr. Abbott, which I hope you will publish with this, I have no interest whatever in the matter aside from that of a good citizen of Quincy. My property will not be affected a cent's worth in value so far as I can see, but I should be sorry to have the city hastily adopt a plan by popular vote when a very large majority of those voting will have absolutely no knowledge of the two sides of the question.

I hope the Ledger will take it upon itself to publish a copy of the plan given by the commission and compare it impartially with the so-called city plan of depression.

Yours very truly,
Carle R. Hayward

E. S. Abbott, Esq., House Representative, State House, Boston, Mass.

Dear Sir:—As a resident and property owner in Quincy, I wish to commend your attitude on the Quincy Grade Crossing Bill as quoted in the Quincy Daily Ledger of June 5. My property will not be affected in the least whichever plan is adopted, but as a citizen and former member of the City Council where I was a member of the Committee on Streets, I am naturally interested in the welfare of the city. I therefore wish to strengthen your attitude by mentioning a few facts in the case and to urge that you use your influence to the utmost in securing the defeat of this bill.

Deression may be a good general solution for eliminating grade crossings, but in this case it is not feasible. Not only is the expense almost prohibitive, but the final result of depression would not be satisfactory.

Dimmock street, the first street north of the Quincy station, passes over the tracks and is a general thoroughfare for light teaming and pleasure vehicles. Granite street, the first street south of the station, is the main artery to the freight yard and the quarry district, and as such, is used continually for heavy teaming. Between these two at the Quincy station is Saville street crossing the tracks at grade. The upper part of this street has a prohibitive grade so only the lower portion can be used for teaming.

You can readily see that there is no ideal solution for this problem. To depress the tracks would necessitate putting Granite street over the tracks with a difficult grade for heavy teaming. To raise the tracks would seriously affect Dimmock street. The natural thing to do is what the decree plan calls for, that is, to close Saville street and leave the grade of the railroad as it is at present, not to elevate and put a "Chinese Wall" through the city as the advocates of depression are trying with considerable success to make the people believe. To compensate for the closing of the street, a foot way is to be provided under the tracks and an outlet for teaming provided by extending an existing street to Granite street parallel with the tracks.

At Quincy Adams, where the decree calls for elevation of the tracks, it is merely a question of being inconvenienced by the elevation of the railroad or by putting Water Street, another artery for heavy teaming, over the tracks in a great arch which would be both unsightly and inconvenient for heavy teaming. Depression here offers serious obstacles to the railroad, as it would increase an already difficult grade.

As you pointed out so well, this is a problem to be solved by competent engineers, and the voters, especially those in outlying sections of the city, are not competent to pass on it.

There is no question in my mind but what a referendum would result in a victory for depression because of the active campaign of publicity certain financially interested parties have made in its behalf. Until now "depression" is almost a household word throughout the city, and I suppose our Quincy representatives take the attitude that they should support what the people apparently want. This, however, does not alter the merits of the case. Just because a plan is favored by the railroad is no reason why it is necessarily against the best interests of the city.

In closing, I wish to state that the oft mentioned mass meeting in which the citizens of Quincy "demanded depression" was composed almost entirely of residents in the immediate vicinity of the Saville street crossing who wanted to keep this street upon regardless of the effects of depression elsewhere.

Yours very truly,
Carle R. Hayward.

Queer Things That Turn Up In the News

Bremer Carlton of Nelsonville, N. Y., was killed by a kick from a horse which killed his father in a similar way two years ago.

Although dead, Patrolman Charles Graham of Jersey City, N. J., was promoted to a rank of lieutenant so that his widow will get a pension of $850 a year.

A New York youth has gone into the business of furnishing his blood for transfusion purposes, and at $30 a quart he has earned $120 in the last four months.

The currency scarcity at Tampico has not been relieved and continues a detriment to business. Boxes of celluloid poker chips are now circulating as small change.

Miss Lulu Howe of Newfane, Vt., has a henhawk that measures four feet seven inches from tip to tip of its wings. Miss Howe caught the hawk with her hands and killed it after a hard battle, thereby saving the life of one of her hens.

AMERICAN FOOD SUPPLY IS ON THE INCREASE.

Government Statistics Show Results of Scientific Intensive Cultivation.

In recent years we have been alarmed by the oft repeated statement that poulation in this country is increasing faster than the food supply. It is reassuring, says Leslie's, to be told by the committee on statistics and standards of the chamber of commerce of the United States that exactly the opposite is the case. It shows that the popular belief as to the declining food supply was based on an erroneous use of statistics in the decade from 1899 to 1909. In this period the population increased 21 per cent, while the yield of cereals in 1909 was only 1.7 per cent greater than in 1899. The population statistics are easily gained and are pretty accurate. The figures for cereal production are much subject to bad years.

The year 1909 was a poor year for corn, registering a drop of 114,000,000 bushels as compared with 1899. All other cereals in 1909 showed increases over 1899, ranging from 3 per cent to 142 per cent, but since corn is much the largest crop we have, it pulled down the cereal class as a whole to a very small net increase. If the corn production of 1899 were compared with that of 1912 it would show an increase of 18¾ per cent or over 492,000,000 bushels.

The fruit crop shows somewhat similar conditions to that noted in cereals, due to great variation in the apple crop. The apple crop of 1909 was 20 per cent less than that of 1899, but that of 1912 was 50 per cent greater than that of 1899. The census bureau shows an increase in acreage of vegetables of 27.8 per cent from 1899 to 1909. Another fallacy attacked by the committee is the belief that the land is being impoverished by constant and unintelligent cultivation. Government statistics show a steady, although slow, increase in scientific and intensive cultivation. The committee concludes that the "outlook seems to be for a greater variety, increasing abundance and a more reasonable price of foods."

SHOWS HOW SPEEDY POLO IS

Two spectators who never before had seen a polo match fell into an argument at Meadowbrook, N. Y., as to whether a player hit the ball with the flat or the end of his mallet. They made a wager at length and left it to a man who sat beside them to decide.

"To tell you the truth," said the stranger, "this is the first game I ever saw, but I'll watch the players for awhile and let you know who wins."

In the excitement of the battle the bet was forgotten until the last period was over. Then one of the men who had bet turned to the judge and asked, "Well, what part of the mallet did they use?"

The arbitrator shook his head. "I guess I'll have to call it a draw," he answered. "They moved the blamed things too fast for me to find out."

ONE NAVY TO EIGHT NATIONS.

Peace Foundation Plan to Reduce the Armaments of the World.

One navy for the eight leading nations of the world is the aim of a plan drawn up for the World Peace foundation to be sent to Secretary of State Bryan and Secretary of the Navy Daniels.

These include Germany, the United States, Japan, Great Britain, Italy, Austria, France and Russia, which possess naval armaments costing $4,100,000,000.

The plan proposes a joint convention of these nations to reduce their armaments, which may be used jointly if any one of the nations is attacked by reason of the reduction, the contracting parties engaging to postpone any resort to force until an international commission of inquiry shall have rendered its report.

VAUGHN CASE IS CLOSED

Counsel McAnarny Asks that He Be Reinstated

William Vaughn renewed his charges in his testimony Friday afternoon that Perry Green, Overseer of the Poor, took supplies from the almshouse and Mrs. Vaughn who was recalled to the stand supplemented his statements by saying he always took his groceries when going home. That he knows, sitting there, she said. This, together with further details regarding the management at the City Home and a few witnesses brought the hearing on the Vaughn removal to a close.

No finding was made by Overseer Green, who presided, but one will be made within a few days. Counsel McAnarney is prepared to take the case to the District Court if the decision is against his client.

MONDAY'S HEARING.

Fred W. Vaughn, son of the respondent said he boarded at the home during the administration of Fred Green and James Elcock, until February of this year. Mr. Vaughan, known as the proprietor of the "new City Hall," said he had his coats washed several times by his mother.

Witness said he paid board of $2.50 per week after he went to work as arranged with the Overseer and that he was not home a great deal.

He said boxes were picked up and taken to the almshouse by his father and a man and that they did nothing else.

Witness said Mr. Green called one night when an Italian woman inmate was gibbering and hollered "shut up, ——you, shut up." When she didn't he again hollered, "J—C—, you shut up," and he turned to mother and said "Mrs. Vaughn, I don't understand how you get along with these people. If it was me I would certainly knock ——— out of them."

He corroborated previous testimony about Mr. Green ordering the slamming of inmates as he heard it from the hallway. He said Mr. Green was very mad.

In cross examination he stated he slipped into another room so he wouldn't be seen when they came out.

He said Officer Murray was at the almshouse after Mr. Green quieted down at the time of the Italian woman inmate, and that she went upstairs. Officer Murray acted as an interpreter.

Dr. John H. Ash, city physician from May 1912 to Feb. 1914, testified he frequently went to the almshouse and never heard Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn indulge in profanity. His observation, as far as the conduct toward the inmates, so far as seen by him, was perfectly legitimate and proper and Mrs. Vaughn was very attentive.

He denied that Mrs. Shea, a previous witness, had ever complained to him about medicine.

In cross examination he said milk was given when ordered and on one occasion malted milk was substituted when there was no milk.

Q.—You never had any complaints whatever from the patients.

A.—None.

He said the substance of a conversation with Mr. Green was the difficulty of getting fresh eggs for patients because there were only a few hens.

Marie Areson said an inmate got a mug of milk three times every day, and eggs if there were any, and that she never heard the Vaughan's swearing. She said Mrs. Vaughan always washed the white coats for her son.

Annie English of Braintree, a former cook, said food was well prepared and there were no complaints and no abuse of inmates. That Mrs. Vaughan was always like a lady.

William C. Moody of School street said he was present during the "Flanagan" incident, and that Mr. Vaughn did not swear.

Mr. Vaughn said Overseer Green brought bologna sausage from a Boston firm and the inmates ate it until they got sick of it. This he said didn't take over two or three meals, and as a substitute frankforts were served and then blood sausage. Mr. Green said first the supplies were to be tried, but never said anything further about it. He said he always took two plugs of tobacco when he came and once he had a plug cut up.

Mrs. Vaughn said Mr. Green did up his own bundle. She said he would take tea, coffee, perhaps one can of salmon, one of peas and on one occasion he put a box of cocoa in each of his pockets. That left eight cans and he ordered me to send them to City Hall. This was done every time he came, and during the first week he was at the home every day she said. According to Mrs. Vaughn, paper egg boxes were taken and she was stripped for them and had to send eggs out in paper bags to the outside poor.

She said what was purchased at Johnson's was on her orders once a week. Slips were received with the delivery and these were turned in to the Overseer for his information in checking of bills.

She attempted to say goods charged to the almshouse account might have been sent to outside poor, but agreed that this supply was charged to outside poor when shown a bill so labelled.

Mrs. Vaughn, as on the first day, directed her testimony at Mr. Green and said he would not give her what was needed. Flannels were needed three or four days before she left but she was ordered to send Pat Lane out nude. There were plenty of flannels but no reserve supply.

Why, she said, Mr. Green wouldn't even allow us to have a pair of shoes tapped and wouldn't let me buy flannels for my women.

Quite a controversy developed over the re-opening of the case by Mr. Pinkham, and the admission of a statement made by Michael J. Curtis who died at the tuberculosis camp a few days ago.

The statement was dated April 2, 1914, and was declared true before Emery L. Crane on May 14.

Counsel McAnarney contended it was not admissible since it was not a deposition and there was no chance of verifying it. He said it was made after the proceedings were commenced, and that if the man could not be interviewed about the contents who was to say his mind was free when he made it. He said it was unfair to flash such a statement at the 11th hour thinking that the sanctity of truth would clothe it because the man was dead.

Mr. Pinkham said he took the full responsibility of advising Perry Green to admit the paper, and with his permission admitted it subject to objection which was made.

The statement related tales of abuse of inmates and other incidents which Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn, when recalled to the stand, said has occurred more than two years ago.

The statement charged that books and papers were sold, and that the inmates had no reading material for several months, and two prominent women were mentioned as having offered books. Mrs. Vaughn said bugs were found in one of them and that was why.

After Mrs. Vaughn had testified about the supplies she left, Mrs. Neena Campbell, wife of the present warden, was put on the stand, but the strenuous objection of Counsel McAnarney resulted in her dismissal.

Marie Arenson said the food at the inmates table was always good; and that at times she preferred to eat there when employed at the home.

Fred Green and Annie English were both recalled and spoke highly of the Vaughns.

Counsel McAnarney in closing asked that William J. Vaughn be reinstated as warden of the Quincy Almshouse, for the reason that there has been no evidence to sustain any of the charges set forth in the order of removal; further that he be re-instated in office in view of the fact that there was no compliance with his request that he be given specifications and information as to the time, occurrence, and with whom or where any of the alleged reasons or specifications under reasons took place or occurred, in order that he might properly meet and define the same and further that he be re-instated on the ground that there has been no substantive evidence offered to meet any of these charges, the burden being on the party who seeks to remove the man.

HOUGHS NECK PARADE

Boys Not Prepared for Mayor Miller's Interview

The much-heralded parade of the Houghs Neck school children to City Hall, to demand a playground for that section, took place Monday afternoon about 4 o'clock. At that hour a half dozen boys in front of the barber shop of Edward Powers, the avowed candidate for Mayor. Each boy carried a tiny flag. Mr. Powers had obtained a permit for the boys to parade, and when all was ready the six boys led by Mr. Powers marched proudly accross the street to City Hall to storm the Mayor's office.

Mr. Powers led them up to the door of the Mayor's office and then stepped back remaining in the corridor while the boys were having their interview with the Chief Executive, to whom they presented a petition which was later forwarded to the City Council.

The Mayor asked them what their fathers thought about the taxes; if they were not high enough now. The boys replied that they did.

He then asked them if they did not think it would be better to have the taxes a little less and wait a time for the playground. The boys promptly answered yes.

This ended the interview and the boys left the Mayor's office. They met Mr. Powers again in the corridor who proudly marched them to Saville street where they boarded a car for Houghs Neck and the much heralded incident was over.

Although the affair was very quiet, the bride received a number of beautiful gifts and remembrances from friends and relatives which included a chest of flat silver.

After a trip through the middle west and a stay of a fortnight with relations of the groom at Indianapolis, Mr. and Mrs. Wade will go to Chicago where they will be at Hotel Hayes for a month until their new home is ready for occupancy.

WILL DIE IN CHAIR HE HELPED INSTALL

Murderer Says He Will Pass Away "Happy as a Bird"

Evansville, Ind., June 23.—Robert Collier, a negro sentenced here for the murder of Patrolman John Cain, will go to his death Oct. 16 in the electric chair he helped install at Michigan City.

Collier was released from the Michigan City prison last February, when he was serving a sentence for assault and battery with intent to kill. He was suffering with tuberculosis and was sent home to die. One of his last acts at the penitentiary was helping construct the death chair.

He said: "I am going to the chair happy as a bird."

Painless extinction of old men was predicted by the vicar of Carisbrooke.

$23,000 BACK PAY GRANTED

Middlesex and Boston Men Also Get Higher Wages

ARBITRATION BOARD'S AWARD

New Schedule Exceeds That of Any Road In Massachusetts Serving Similar Territory—Declared Excessive In Minority Report and Increase In Fares Is Forecasted

Waltham, Mass., June 23.—By the terms of the award of a majority of the arbitrators selected to settle the wage dispute between the members of Division 600 of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America and the Middlesex and Boston Street Railway company, the company must pay the men the sum of $23,000 before July 8 next.

This is for the increase in wages dating from June 1, 1913, when the men first made demand for an increase. It will cost the road in the increases granted the further sum of $62,000 in the next two years.

Possible increases in fares are forecasted in a minority report filed by Arthur A. Ballantine, who protests the increases.

Conductors and motormen are to receive back pay at the rate of 23 to 29 cents an hour, according to length of service, from June 1 of last year to June 30, 1914. Beginning July 1 next, their pay will be 24 to 30 cents an hour, according to their length of service.

Other employes, including barnmen, blacksmiths, firemen, trackmen and teamsters, are awarded increases of 2 to 5 cents an hour. The new schedule for barnmen gives them 17 to 29 cents an hour, as against 15 to 25 cents. Blacksmiths get the biggest raise, 5 cents flat.

The new wage schedule is higher than that paid by other street railway companies in this state serving territory similar to that which the Middlesex and Boston serves, and the decision of the board in making the award was not unanimous. Ballantine presented a minority report, in which he declared that that the wage increases favored by his associates will endanger the interests of stockholders and patrons of the road.

He states that the Middlesex and Boston will be forced by the new wage scale to pay as high wages as metropolitan companies. At present, he says, the company has no difficulty in finding men for the jobs it has to offer.

Only 4 percent dividends were paid last year, and the outlook for the present year is even less favorable, he declares.

In 1898, he points out, the company was forced to increase fares to 6 cents. A return of 4 percent on capital invested is low, Ballantine declares, and anything that will threaten so modest a return is likely, in his opinion, to discourage investments in necessary public service enterprises.

Already, he states, the Middlesex and Boston employes get better pay than the majority of adult males employed in this state, and furthermore have steady employment through the year.

The majority report, granting the increases, is signed by George L. Mayberry and James H. Vahey. It provides 50 percent additional pay for overtime, and sets July 8 as the time by which back pay awards should be made.

He is said to be a man of great physical strength, despite his size. He is 5 feet 3 inches tall and weighs 143 pounds. He wore a brown suit and hat and tan shoes. About three years ago he made an escape and was recaptured in Lowell.

WILL SUE NEW HAVEN ROAD

Federal Intention If Bay State Legislature Does Not Act

Washington, June 23.—President Wilson and Attorney General McReynolds are agreed that the dissolution suit against the New Haven railroad must go forward unless the Massachusetts legislature empowers the Boston Railroad Holding company to sell its Boston and Maine stock.

When negotiations for the peaceful dissolution of the New Haven merger approached a point several weeks ago where a settlement without a protracted contest in the courts seemed assured McReynolds agreed to hold the government's suit until July 15, awaiting the action of the Massachusetts legislature.

The consent of that body is necessary before the holding company may sell its Boston and Maine stock. Last week the legislature referred the bill to a recess committee and a delay until after Christmas was threatened.

Boston, June 23.—The legislative committee on railroads threw up its hands on the order referring the separation of the New Haven and the Boston and Maine roads to a recess committee and voted to report to the legislature the bill to provide for turning the majority stock of the Boston and Maine over to the federal board of liquidators.

CLAIMS SELF DEFENSE

Harris Arraigned on Charge of Murdering His Brother

Woburn, Mass., June 23.—A formal charge of murder was made in the district court here against James Harris, who shot and killed his brother, Charles, at their home in North Reading. The case was continued until June 27 for a hearing, and Harris was committed without bail to jail.

Harris said he shot his brother in self defense. He said Charles attacked him with an axe, and that he fired five shots into the floor before firing at his brother.

The quarrel arose over the disposition of timber on a woodlot which they owned jointly. An inspection of the premises disclosed five bullet holes in the floor and an axe near the dead man's body.

LION TAMER'S DEATH WAS ACCIDENTAL

Woman Inclined to Place Blame Upon Beasts' Keeper

Chicago, June 23.—The death of Emerson Dietrich, killed by lions when he entered their cage, was accidental, according to the verdict of a coroner's jury.

Miss Angie Castillo, a vaudeville performer, who used lions in her act and who was engaged to marry Dietrich, her manager, said there was no reason to shoot any of the lions.

Miss Castillo said George McCord, the keeper, should have entered the cage when the attack was made.

"It would have been death to do so," replied McCord. "The beasts were enraged and I did the best I could with a fork with which I speared at them through the bars."

McCord admitted that he and Dietrich quarreled frequently, but the disputes were transitory over details of the work.

Disturbers of Church Services Lose In Their Appeal to Court

New York, June 23.—The court of general sessions declined to interfere in the cases of Rev. Bouck White, pastor of the Church of the Social Revolution, and of Milo H. Wolman, who were sentenced to six months in the workhouse for creating a disturbance at the Cavalry Baptist church, where the Rockefeller families attend service.

Their attorney argued on appeal that the defendants had a right to rise during the church services and start an argument with the occupant of the pulpit.

White's activities arose from the connection of the Rockefellers with the Colorado mine troubles.

The Defiance showed up here for the first time with her bowsprit off and under the knockabout rig.

The Empress of Ireland Rivals Titanic Tragedy; Calls For Safeguards.

THE terrible tragedy of the Empress of Ireland, by which 1,027 lives were lost and only 452 were saved, has only been exceeded by that of the Titanic, with a death roll of 1,595. But the rescued numbered 745; therefore relatively the loss of life was greater on the Empress of Ireland.

A controversy has arisen between the masters and owners of the Empress of Ireland and of the collier Storstad, the two ships that came in collision at the mouth of the St. Lawrence river, as to where the blame is to be laid, and the Storstad was seized by a bailiff on a claim of $2,000,000 damage against the collier on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway company, while, on the other hand, the owners of the Storstad have entered a counterclaim against the Canadian Pacific railway for $50,000 damages, contending that the Empress was at fault and alleging negligent navigation on her part. This adds to the complications of the case, and counsel on both sides are busy searching for precedents in the Canadian courts.

The question of blame between the two ships remains to be settled if courts can settle it, but the grave fault seems to lie with the general sea regulations, which are often misinterpreted, and with a certain want of up-to-dateness in taking necessary precautions against collisions and of using the latest appliances.

In a contribution to the New York Times J. B. Millet, the well known authority on under water signals, says: "Collisions between steamships at sea in fog need not occur. I want to make that statement as strong as possible in hopes of assuring attention. There is no more reason why two steamships should collide in a fog than one should run into a lightship anchored to guard a shoal. The apparatus exists to prevent such collisions, and it has been in partial use for ten years.

CREW SURVIVORS OF EMPRESS OF IRELAND

"The necessity of educating navigators to use the bell of their apparatus is apparent from the well attested experience of many captains who have located steamers in fog by listening for sound of their screws. In the case of a collision like this, where the ships are proceeding slowly in fog, or should be, it is not necessary to have an installed electrical receiving apparatus If an observer is stationed below the water line in some quiet spot, preferably forward, he can easily detect the sound by placing his ear to the skin of the ship and comparing the sounds on the port with those on the starboard.

"An ordinary broom handle or piece of pine stick with one end placed against the skin of the ship and the other end held to the ear forms an excellent receiver. As for the bell itself, a bell weighing ten or twelve pounds when rung under water can be heard from two to five miles, according to the draft of the ship on which the listener is stationed. The deeper the draft the more sound waves attack the ship owing to the greater wetted surface.

"In the case of the Empress of Ireland, which was equipped with apparatus for receiving, but not for sending, signals through the water, the moment she lost headway she became a dangerous target for other vessels on account of her size and inability to move.

"Any vessel so situated sends signals through the water for the reason that they can be trusted, while sounds in the air cannot. By this means other vessels approaching are supplied with warnings, and it is supposed that all navigators are instructed to listen and to use such sounds. It is not known whether the officers of the collier had been instructed in the value and use of sounds in water, but it is entirely possible that if they had been and especially if their ship had been equipped with receiving apparatus they might have located the Empress by the sound of her pumps or screws.

"However this may be, since sound in water can be trusted, it is clearly the duty of all who are in positions of authority in maritime matters to see to it that the subject is given the attention that it deserves. Moreover, it should be taught to all navigators."

RACE TO MEXICO CITY.

General Aguilar Is Anxious to March From Tuxpan Upon the Capital City.

General Candido Aguilar, the rebel conqueror of Tuxpan, is casting longing eyes upon Mexico City and is ambitious to win the race to the capital over Villa, Zapata and Obregon.

The towns of Tantima and Tantoyuca, in the state of Vera Cruz, have been captured by General Aguilar. He has occupied a large portion of the country, has established civil and military authorities in office and offered full guarantees to commerce and industries. All railroad and telegraph lines as far south as the northern limit of Hidalgo have been opened to traffic, and General Aguilar was given orders to push the campaign against the federals to the south.

Aguilar's plan of campaign is to make an advance westward through the oil region into the state of Hidalgo, where he will be aided by the Maderista exgovernor, Rosales, commanding 1,400 Hidalgo rebels; then on through the rich mining district of Pachuca, where the federal garrison of 2,000 is being re-enforced by recent levies from the Serrano Indians, numbering 1,400. These Indians are undisciplined and poorly equipped and will be more than offset by the miners who will join the Aguilar forces.

After passing the swampy oil region west of Tuxpan, Aguilar's advance will be comparatively easy if the federals continue their retreat. The whole distance could be covered in a week, but Aguilar may be tempted to deflect his advance and attack Puebla's weakened garrison, a capture far more important than anything else in that region. Puebla is but a little over 100 miles to the south from Tuxpan and is but sixty miles from Mexico City.

RESTORING KEY'S FLAG.

The Original Star Spangled Banner Is to Have a New Birth.

Work on the restoration of the original star spangled banner which floated from the flagstaff at Fort McHenry when Key wrote the national anthem was recently begun at the Smithsonian institution, Washington.

The flag measures 29 by 36 feet, the stars being two feet across from point to point, and the stripes two feet wide, and, according to the officials at the institution, it is the largest flag they knew ever to have been in action. It was deposited in the Smithsonian by

THE ORIGINAL STAR SPANGLED BANNER AND THE FRIGATE CONSTELLATION.

Eben Appleton, the grandson of Colonel George Armistead, who was commandant of Fort McHenry at the time.

The bill for the restoration of the frigate Constellation, the oldest ship in the United States navy, which is to be towed to Baltimore from Newport, R. I., has passed the house and is now before the senate.

In the office of the architect of the war department maps of Fort McHenry, dating back as far as 1803 and 1819, have been found. They will be used in laying out the grounds of the fort for a park.

President Wilson has signed the bill granting Fort McHenry to the city of Baltimore as a park. The bill passed both houses of congress and has the approbation of the war department.

Story of a Millionaire's Love For a Cash Girl

The most delicate thing about Runey's White Kitchen was Aggie. Probably you know Runey's?

If you belong to the submerged dyspeptics to whom are allotted forty minutes and 20 cents for lunch it is safe to assume that you do.

If, on the other hand, you are of the equally dyspeptic half which dines in a world of napery and takes soup from the side of the spoon there may be things about Runey's that you do not know.

Runey's is long and narrow, lined in white tile and faced in plate glass.

Buckwheat cakes and maple sugar, 10 cents, have helped immortalize Runey's—wheat cakes and Aggie.

Aggie, perched in the cashier's cage as scintillating as a humming bird, her hair gilt-ed like the brass fencing which inclosed her, at her soft, white throat a gold heart depended from a gold chain and the plump arms in brief sleeves that ended with pink rosettes at the elbow, were jingly with gold and silver bracelets.

Then Aggie's eyes were large and alluring, so were the dimples in her cheeks, and when she thrust change through the little archway there were four more dimples and a large turquoise ring on her right hand.

Her wits were nimble as her fingers. She kept on tap a supply of small talk and exaggerated haut ton that were worthy of a Recamier or a book agent.

After your second meal at Runey's she knew without glancing at your ticket whether you were a ten, twent' or thirt', and you were rated in her mental Bradstreet accordingly.

Runey esquire saw her possibilities and paid her compliments and $6 a week.

One noonday Mr. Charley Trimp, who sold bric-a-brac and gumdrops in a weathered oak drug store, slipped a lunch check and a kid topped bottle of azalia cologne through the opening that was solely designed for change and smiled.

"Well, Agg?" the bulk of Mr. Trimp's too solid flesh inclined toward the cage "I'm here, Aggie."

"Do tell!" she replied with an impertinent rising inflection. "I thought you was touring Hongkong in your underground balloon."

"Aw, quit your kiddin', Aggie. Can't you tell a fellow where he's at?"

"There's a city directory on the boss' desk," she flipped back at him.

Undaunted, Mr. Trimp leaned his corpulent face closer. "Did you sleep over the proposition, little one?"

Aggie filed her check and ran a column of bank stacked dimes through her fingers.

"Twenty and eight's a dollar—and say, Billiken, it's goin' to take me longer than overnight to make up my mind to have your name printed on my visitin' cards."

"WELL, I'M HERE, AGGIE," SAID MR. TRIMP.

Mr. Trimp, whose resemblance to the little god of things as they ought to be was undeniable, smoothed his smooth hair with a nervous palm.

He wore a black vest with red zigzags and large pearl buttons. The vest rose and fell with the heave of a pouter pigeon.

"Well, what did you tell a fellow you'd think it over for, Agg? Wasn't that what you said last night?"

"Well, what do you know about that! You must think I got a mind like a addin' machine! I ain't done nothin' but sleep, much less work me brain after that bum show you took me to last night. Say, this is some cologne." Aggie sniffed appreciatively.

Mr. Trimp regarded her with aggrieved eyes. "Fine chance a fellow's got with all these guys hanging round. I ain't got a show."

"You're wrong, little boy; guess again, but kindly step aside, Mr. Trimp, you're blocking the line. How d'ye do, Mr. Suggs. Twenty is right, thank you. Nix on that stuff, Mr. Well; I wasn't born yesterday—how's Mr. Schmidt today—'tain't so; you've seen that there turquoise long as you've seen me—gee, ain't you the jollier—ten and fifteen is twenty-five—pleasant day, Mr. Bing—oh, you gold dollar, first I've seen this year—ten and ninety is one dollar—Mr. Trimp, please pass on; you're blocking the line—say, what do you think this is, Mr. Mentry, a church social—oh, thank you, I do love chewing gum—good morning, Mr. Dodridge, pleasant day."

At 6, when the night force came on, Aggie climbed down from her obelisk stool, took her hat and tan coat off their hook and went to her boarding house.

She lived in the traditional hall bedroom with a single iron bed and trunk covered with chintz.

Aggie slipped out of her "V" at the neck shirt waist into a red flannelette dressing sack and curled her tired little body in a corner of the bed with a copy of a new novel and a box of Mr. Trimp's chocolates. But she did not read. Instead she ate of Mr. Trimp's chocolates and thought of Mr. Dodridge.

A word concerning Mr. Dodridge.

He was a Runey regular; he came at the clerks' rush hour, and his check invariably represented two boiled eggs, buttered toast and milk.

His features were undistinguished, except that nearsighted eyes, framed in steel rimmed spectacles, made him appear forty instead of twenty-nine, and a wide, quiet smile had creased deep brackets around his mouth.

He had the familiar stoop which is born of leaning forward with both hands on the counter; you thought of yard stuffs when you saw him and expected him to carry a pair of scissors in his upper vest pocket, silver off silk dress patterns and carefully replace the bolt on the shelf.

Yet when Mr. Dodridge passed Aggie's cage, bent on play at Runey's digestive roulette table, his wide, gentle smile and weak eyes, that seemed straining and peering into some beyond, caused Aggie's left side to pound like a triphammer.

Often he gazed at her owl fashion, the two eyes regarding her above the rim of his milk glass. Once their glances met, and Aggie jumped internally and externally as if some one had struck her in the small of her back.

Mr. Dodridge choked over his milk and was obliged to set the glass down hastily.

Thereafter when Mr. Dodridge pushed his boiled eggs and toast check through the archway and looked at Aggie with his shy, inconsistent eyes the bombardments on her left side increased and sent the color rushing into her face.

Hunched in the corner of the bed, her back against the cold wall, these delicious and significant moments came back to her with all of their tastiness.

Then Mr. Trimp passed on dress parade, and her workaday instincts spoke louder than his loud promises and loud waistcoats and loud perfumes.

Charley had prospects of a partnership in the drug store. He was a known quantity with intentions, and a young man with a secure position and intentions is not to be winked at, notwithstanding that he wheezed when he talked and had moist hands.

But the blue litmus of poor Aggie's fluttering little soul yearned for the acid touch, and she knew that Charley could never inspire that reaction.

It was Dodridge, with no visible intentions or prospects, and according to her valuable indices, the lunch checks of sparse resources, who tugged at her heartstrings.

Yet Mr. Dodridge's personality wafted to her as powerfully fragrant as the azalia cologne.

The next morning after the breakfast rush, while Aggie was piling a mountain of toothpicks in a glass bowl, Mr. Dodridge walked into the White Kitchen.

He had a white carnation pinned on his coat lapel, and his glasses and eyes were shining with a high brilliancy as if both the lens and the eyes had been polished with scrupulous care.

He defied his every precedent by walking up to the cage, placing each hand on a bar and peering through. Aggie's fingers worked faster.

"Mornin', Mr. Dodridge; you must have come from Leadtown, Ariz., this morning and forgot to change your time. My Waterbury says 11:10, and the big show at the tables don't begin for twenty minutes," she laughed nervously. "You're ahead of yourself, Mr. Dodridge."

"I love you, dear. I loved you from the moment I saw you."

"Honest?" she breathed softly, and her eyes were like stars.

"Honest, dear," whispered Mr. Dodridge, edging toward the rear of the cage.

"Why, you don't hardly know me. What if you get the wrong steer and—and I don't hardly know you." She was sweetly diffident, the diffidence that is born of confidence.

"I know it, Aggie, but I would not be here if I were not prepared to offer you any proofs you may want."

"Proofs?"

"Yes, dear; it may surprise you to know that I am a social worker and that search of material for my forthcoming book, 'The Crying Shame,' was the happy means of my finding you."

"Oh," she smiled beautifully and blankly.

"You understand, dear, don't you, here in this little lunch room I found types, the department store clerk, the bookkeeper, to both of whom I am devoting three chapters and several footnotes?"

"Oh!" she repeated. It seemed as if the little god was waiting to blow his fever clarion.

He was close to her now, with only the toothpick bowl between them.

"Do you love me, Aggie?"

Her answer was a deep tinted blush and lowering eyes.

"You surely see by this time that I am in earnest—that the only cure for me is you, dear."

She shook her head, and the little gold heart bobbed.

"I can give you everything that makes life dear to a woman. I am rich; fabulously rich. I have social position. I cannot make a queen of you because I found you more than a queen, but I can pay you a queen's homage—offer you every luxury and gratify your every desire."

Aggie was taking on her habitual haut ton. She shoved her waist line downward with both hands and raised her shoulders.

"Go on," she said. "Don't forget the sunken gardens and the gold and hand painted dining room."

"Why, dear, you shall have gardens and rooms for your every mood. I'll build you a palace on the avenue, on the Riviera. We'll travel every nook and cranny of this beautiful old world to find sites that will gratify you. I'm going to take you out of this, Aggie, and make your life as exquisite as a painted fan."

MR. DODRIDGE TURNED HIS SHEEPISH EYES UPON HER.

Her face was like adamant, and the smirk was on her lips.

"Gee!" she said. "I'm slow. It took me all this time to get your number. I thought for fourteen seconds that your jolly was on the level. You thought you could get me going, didn't you? Go on, Mr. Rockefeller. How many diamond tiaras can I wear to breakfast?"

Mr. Dodridge shifted and looked perplexed.

"Aggie, dear, try to care for me as I want you to—try to return my love just a bit."

"Soft pedal on that stuff, Mr. Carnegie. You better get down to hardtack."

"That's right, dear heart," he agreed, mopping drops of perspiration from his forehead. "Let us get down to—er—facts. My yacht is anchored up at Seventy-ninth street and the river. If you'll say the word I'll have a special license up there inside of an hour."

"Say, kiddo," she said, placing the backs of her hands on her hips and cocking her head, "is it the d.t.'s or the heat? You better beat it down to the corner and get a milk chocolate to settle your nerves."

She opened her cash drawer, and the bell jingled.

"Run along, Dodgie," she said, moistening her fingers and ruffling a pack of greenbacks. "The rush is on; but, say, kiddo, please see that the automobile is kept shiny, and you might send over Forty-second street and the Flatiron for my birthday"—

Mr. Dodridge turned his sheepish eyes appealingly upon her.

"I didn't mean— Miss Aggie—let me explain. Miss Aggie—I"—

But that young lady's slender neck had taken on an inch.

"That'll be about all, Dodgie; make room for the line, please. Good morning, Mr. Smythe, how's the tooth?—that's good—you'll have to talk to Mr. Runey about that, Mr. Stiffon. I don't know what age limit he places on his eggs—thank you, Mr. Perkins—ten and forty is fifty—don't crowd, please—what's the matter, gone back on Irish stew, Mr. Isaac—Hello, Billiken, what?" Aggie's voice suddenly towered. "Well, I guess it's me for the gold band, honey bunch—don't crowd, gents—come around this evening, Charley, and we'll talk it over."

Out on Eighth avenue Mr. Dodridge shook himself like a spaniel out of a bath.

For the merest second he watched the wheat cake flopper and then he directed his uncertain steps toward the corner.

After a block he paused before a huge, drab limousine drawn up against the curb. It was caparisoned like a Pullman car and gleaming with nickel and enamel. At his approach a chauffeur in a fur coat reached back and swung open a door. Mr. Dodridge stepped in and drew a sable robe over his knees. "Home" was all he said, and he leaned back wearily against the upholster.

The door slammed shut and the great machine panted, chugged, leaped forward and turned its shining snout toward the avenue that is built of marble and stucco.

ALBANIA'S SHAKY THRONE.

Prince William Willing to Abdicate and Arouses German Wrath.

Prince William of Albania, formerly William of Wied, is having a difficult time in trying to hold down his very shaky throne. It is said that he is quite willing to abdicate, for the disturbances that have arisen are not at all to his liking. The fact that he took refuge on an Italian warship when threatened by rebellious subjects has awakened the ire of Germany. William was but lately a major of the Potsdam lancers. He is openly accused in Germany of revealing a "streak of yellow," which has not only damaged his own prestige, but has shamefully besmirched the reputation of the German army for bravery. William has abandoned the outward forms of royalty and has been practically a prisoner in Albania. The insurgents demand his abdication and the substitution of a Moslem ruler.

Almost insuperable obstacles have stood, in the opinion of practiced observers, in the way of evolving a state out of Albania. The race is divided into three large factions by adherence to the Mohammedan, Catholic and Orthodox religions, and there is a further tribal and clannish subdivision, with blood feuds in full force and little power of cohesion in a language scarcely reducible to writing. Consequently Prince William is not in love with his job, one which was practically forced upon him by the powers that are trying to create a state out of opposing factions that refuse to coalesce and over whom the unhappy prince has practically no control.

PLANNING ALASKA RAILWAY.

Engineers Appointed by President Start For the Field of Their Labors.

William C. Edes and Lieutenant Frederick Mears, U. S. A., appointed by President Wilson as members of the Alaskan railroad commission, have sailed from Seattle for Alaska, where they will map out the preliminary work. Both engineers were appointed by the president at the suggestion of Secretary Lane.

It is pretty well known that Colonel George W. Goethals, governor of the Panama canal, was Mr. Lane's adviser in the matter of appointments to the work in Alaska. Colonel Goethals seemed to think that it would be wise to have a civilian make the preliminary survey and that later, if necessary, the work should be turned over to the army engineers. Colonel Goethals requested the appointment of the young cavalry officer, Mears, to the work in Alaska. Lieutenant Mears has been chief engineer and general superintendent of the Panama railroad.

LET THE PEOPLE VOTE.

Editor Daily Ledger:

As a resident of Quincy, deeply interested in the welfare of this city, I have watched the progress of the attempt to abolish the grade crossings with rare interest. (This, to my mind, is the most important piece of legislation, affecting Quincy, which has arisen in a decade. The problem, with its danger to life and limb, is constantly and forcibly set before us, both in and out of this city, and to any thinking person, should be disposed of as soon as possible.

The City of Quincy and the Legislature have devoted time and money to the study of this question ,and today, for the first time, we are approaching a sensible method of settlement. I note, in a statement credited to His Honor the Mayor, that he thinks that the bill is simply a piece of politics on the part of Representative Sullivan. In the absence of familiarity of inside politics, this appears unfair to me, as I believe that the well-directed, intelligent and conscientious fight made by Mr. Sullivan, is simply an attempt on his part to give to the citizens of Quincy that to which they are entitled, an opportunity to express their opinion on the question. Mr. Sullivan has shown that his confidence is placed where it should be placed, in the judgment of the people of Quincy.

The thought which now strikes me is brought on by that time-worn phrase, "the Senate, the graveyard of fair legislation," so frequently heard in connection with the grade crossing question. I am a firm believer in Massachusetts, in her system of government, in her sons, upon whom has been placed the burden of government. I believe that the Senate, if shown the desire of the people of this city, will give to Quincy the opportunity to decide this question, intelligently and finally. All that is necessary is that our honorable Senate be made to feel that we, the people of Quincy, desire to register our choice in this matter.

Senator Langelier has a duty to perform. I feel that he will arise to the occasion. If he will get into the matter, heart and soul, and with the same ability, vim and vigor exhibited by Mr. Sullivan, the people of Quincy will have been well served.

Senator, the path is well marked, and we look to you to follow it, thereby giving us in Quincy, that to which we are fairly entitled, an opportunity to directly express our views on this all-important question.

Messrs. Editors, I want to apologize for presuming thus far on your valuable space, but I trust that the importance of the question involved will be a sufficient excuse, and I also thank you for your courtesy.

John Q. Carter.

CELEBRATION AHEAD OF TIME

The alarm from Box 137 at 10.48 Monday night was for a bon fire on the Ward Three ball grounds. It seems that some of Quincy's Young Americas had started the erection of a large pile of old rubbish intending to have a bon fire the night before the Fourth. Some other Young Americas however, got impatient and touched off the bon fire Monday night, a few days ahead of time. The boys who had worked hard to accumulate the old wood were naturally a little wrathy over the outcome.

MISSED BY PLAYMATES.

Her graduation dress her shroud, little Lillian G. Sanborn of Montclair lies cold in death in Mt. Wollaston cemetery. Friends mourn her sudden demise and her father Eben P. Sanborn grieves over the loss of his loved one whose diploma was never presented.

Lillian was ready to graduate from the Montclair grammar school with the class of 1913 but was taken sick and unable to attend the exercises. Her dress was put away for this year and again ill health prevented her attendance.

Saturday the day after she could have graduated she was attacked with malignant scarlet fever and on Monday she died. Shortly after the small casket holding her remains was strewn with flowers and Rev. George M. Bailey of Wollaston conducted funeral services on the piazza of the home at 32 Holbrook avenue.

Playmates witnessed the ceremonies from afar, ofr the Board of Health rules forbade their presence and as the hearse bearing her remains passed out of sight there were tears of sorrow as thy cried for their lost playmate whose memory they will always keep fragrant.

ANKLE FRACTURED.

Thomas Lawless, an employee of Burleigh & Martin the Boston caterers is at the City Hospital suffering from a fractured ankle, as a result of being thrown from his team at the corner of Granite and Goffe streets, Monday noon. The auto of Burleigh & Martin had on what is known as a shifting load. That is the load was not securely fastened. The car came down Goffe street, Lawless riding on the back of the load. As the auto turned the corner into Granite street the load shifted throwing part of it into the street and Lawless with it. He struck in such a way as to fracture his left ankle.

The Police ambulance was summoned but before it arrived, William H. Taylor, an inspector of the Board of Health, came along and took the unfortunate man in his auto and carried him to the City Hospital where he was attended by Dr. Sheahan. He is resting comfortably today.

NEPONSET BRIDGE.

By a vote of 47 to 51 in the legislature on Monday, the report of the Ways and Means committee to send the Quincy and Boston bridge bill to the next general court was rejected. The bill is now in the calendar of the House.

In a Strange Place.

Little Alice was visiting her grandparents in an eastern city. One Sunday grandpa took her to church with him. When sermon time came Mary looked around a little, and, seeing a relative up in the gallery, whispered shrilly: "Oh, grandpa, look up there! See Cousin Mary sitting on a shelf!"

ASH TEAM GOES OVER BANK

A double team of the city used in the collection of ashes, while unloading into the abandoned slate quarry in Norfolk Downs this morning, went over the embankment and Axel Peterson, the driver was thrown into the muddy waters and had a narrow escape from drowning.

But one of the horses struck the water and he was unhitched and hauled ashore by ropes. The street and fire department men worked almost an hour in effecting a rescue.

The accident was due to the failure of blocking the wheels after the load had been dumped. Four men were with the team and all worked heroically to save the horse. The horse received a bad cut on the leg and for a while it was thought it had beenbroken. He was hitched up and continued working throughout the afternoon.

Hard to Miss.

"I oversaw and overheard this delightful little thing in an alley running north from Payne avenue yesterday," says a more or less cryptic correspondent. "Two boys were fighting. One was a very fat boy and the other was very skinny. The thin one had a backer, however, who seemed to be very wise to all the technicalities of the manly art of self defense.

"'Hit him in the solar plexus, kid,' shouted the second. 'Hit him in the solar plexus, an' you'll put th' big tub out!'

"'Where's his solar plexus at?' panted the thin one.

"'Aw, hit him anywhere—you can't miss it!' answered the backer."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Early Italian Surgery.

Benvenuto Cellini (1500-1571) tells of early Italian surgery. He had got a bit of chipped steel in his eye, "so far into the pupil that it was impossible to get it out, so that I was in very great danger of losing that eye. But the surgeon came to the rescue with the pigeons. The surgeon, making me lie upon my back, with a little knife opened a vein in each of their wings, so that the blood ran into my eye, and I was thereby greatly relieved. In the space of two days the bit of steel issued from my eye, and I found that I had received considerable ease and in a great measure recovered my sight."

Where Poets Fail.

"Trouble 'bout these here poets," said the Georgia farmer, "none of 'em make good field hands. They won't plow for fear they'll hurt a wild flower, an' they won't swear at a mule for fear the animal's got a soul. But it's my public opinion that they're all afflicted with downright laziness!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

FEATS WITH THE CAMERA.

Only an expert, and he only after much practice, can take a photograph of a rapidly moving object at a predetermined point—for example, an express train with the cowcatcher just at a white chalk mark on a tie or a baseball at the instant the bat strikes it.

The reason for this is twofold: First, there is a certain appreciable time between the mental decision to do a thing and the actual doing of it; second, it takes a certain appreciable time for the impulse given by pressing the button or squeezing the bulb of a camera to travel to the shutter and open it. The latter may in a very fine camera be only one-fiftieth of a second, but even the fiftieth of a second in a train going 100 feet a second would mean a difference of two feet.

C. H. Claudy in an article in the Camera says that not more than once in four attempts will even an expert catch the precise instant he is seeking. The average man snaps his camera at the moment the ball is striking the club or racquet, and by the time his shutter has worked the ball has gone. A tennis ball travels nearly a mile a minute when struck hard. That is ninety-six feet a second, so in a lag of one-tenth of a second between the pressing of the button and the opening of the shutter the ball will move nearly ten feet, and ordinary cameras work no faster than this. So one need not wonder if even experts fail.

CLOUD FORMATIONS.

What We Know About Them Seems to Be Mainly Guesswork.

Many scientists have told us how clouds are made. Most of the textbooks on physical geography tell all about them, but it is all guesswork. Clouds are a mystery. It is true they are composed of moisture floating in the air, but how did the moisture get there?

It is held that particles of moisture are evaporated from the earth's surface by the heat of the sun. This moisture does not form into clouds immediately. Indeed, the passage of the moisture from the earth to the upper air is quite invisible. It was formerly supposed that this moisture was condensed by the cold of the upper air into rain droplets, which formed the clouds.

But scientists hold that the tiny particles must have something to condense upon. They used to tell us that the moisture collected upon dust particles to form into rain drops. Now they are practically agreed that it is something else, but they don't know what.

Anyway, when these drops get large enough they accumulate into vapor forming clouds. When the droplets get too large and heavy to float in the air they fall to the earth in the form of rain, and this is about all we actually know about clouds.—War Cry.

When Seals Were Food.

The gray seal used to serve Cornish men as an article of diet. Stephen Hawker tells how he and a brother clergyman, having asked a landlady at Boscastle what she could give them for dinner, were told "Meat and tatles.' They tried to get her to particularize the meat, but "Meat, nice, wholesome meat, and tatles" was the full extent of her information. When the meat was served it tasted like veal, but was unaccompanied by any vestige of bone that might have enabled the diners to infer its origin. Years afterward Hawker lighted on the nature of the "meat" when he read in an old history of Cornwall that "the people of Boscastle do catch divers young soyles, which doubtful if they be fish or flesh conynge housewives will nevertheless roast and do make thereof savory meat."—London Graphic.

Twenty Years of Pleasure.

St. Michael's church, Macclesfield, England, is noted for its beauty. In "The Manchester and Glasgow Road" Charles G. Harper tells of a curious epitaph in the churchyard upon one Mary Broomfield, who died in 1755 aged eighty. It reads as follows:

"The chief concern of her life for the last twenty years was to order and provide for her funeral. Her greatest pleasure was to think and talk about it. She lived many years on a pension of ninepence a week and yet saved £5, which at her request was laid out at her burial."

GRADUATION AT ST. JOHN'S

that must be restated again and again, is that religious views must be respected, and I hope to reciprocate the sentiment and cordiality and good will expressed by Father Coan. He congratulated, without reservation, the pupils and all that assisted in their preparation. He said they would be welcomed to High school, that they had a proprietary interest in it, and there he said, side by side with the little Presbyterian, Baptist and Jew, all will study out of the same text books will grow up respecting each other.

Mayor Miller left at this point and was again applauded.

HEAD MASTER COLLINS.

Ernest L. Collins of High school said that boys and girls who went to High school from St. John's school gave a good account of themselves, took up their share of the burden, and carried it out well. He announced that the graduates of the parish school were among the honor pupils at High school.

PRINCIPAL RICE.

Horace W. Rice said the girls who came to his institution did well and if more enter this year he would be happy to have them.

CHARLES H. JOHNSON.

Charles H. Johnson said he had always felt Father Coan was a friend of his until his introduction. He said he hoped to be introduced as the next mayor of Quincy.

Father Coan retorted he left that out on purpose, as it can well be taken for granted, and loud applause and cheerful smiles followed the good natured chaffing of the two men.

Mr. Johnson in a congratulatory vein particularly mentioned the patriotic exercises of the evening, and he said he had no fear for the future of the good old city of Quincy so long as he graduates of the parish school carry away such interpretation of patriotism.

Mr. Johnson who has been acting ruant officer of the school since its rection said that in his official capacity he had never had occasion to take before the court any pupils of St. ohns school.

He paid a high tribute to the progress of the parish under the direction f Father Coan, and said he wanted to eave with the parents and friends his word in behalf of the rector, "It hall be for you to give expression to the work here given by Father Coan." Applause.

THE PROGRAM.

The program was an entertaining one, and its success was due in a great measure to the remarkable electrical effects and stage decorations by Miss Nellie Desmond, and the fine piano accompaniments of Miss Amy E. Falon who also directed the St. John's orchestra.

The salutatory by Francis Julian Galligan followed "The Morning Ramble" by a chorus of little children. The primary school boys and girls in a patriotic sketch gave a drill, and closed by saluting the flag waved by Joseph Messier A ambourine drill by girls in Spanish costume, singing Spanish songs, was liberally applauded, and preceded "Consider and hear me" by the chorus.

A patriotic song exercise, in which he songs were explained by the graduates, opened the second half of he program. The sketches were Helena Buckley, "The Star Spangled Banner"; Eleanor Buckley, "Hail Columbia"; Theresa Morrill, "Columbia, the gem of the ocean;" Evelyn Cahill, "Yankee Doodle"; Catherine Osburne, "Dixie and Maryland;" Olive Phelan, My Country 'tis of thee."

"I'm going to be a soldier" was sung by little Gerald Barry, after which there was a pantomime, "Lead Kindly Light," with Miss Eva Rice as the soloist. In the pantomime were 12 girls, dressed in white, and in their closing tableau they resembled a group of angels.

The boys of the class gave "The Rival Studies" in which Mr. Galligan presided over a discussion on different sciences and awarded the crown to "Christian Doctrine."

The valedictory was by Miss Sara Elizabeth McCabe. Both she and Mr. Galligan delivered their messages in firm, clear tone, with much expression, but with no attempt at oratory. Their effort was vigorously applauded and added much to the enjoyment of the evening.

The diplomas were presented by Father Coan, assisted by Father Walter A. Quinlan, after which the chorus sang "Fare thee well."

There were 12 who received diocesan as well as school diplomas, the former for receiving a mark of 85 per cent in an examination given by the supervisor of diocesan schools. They were Helena Frances Buckley, Alice Evelyn Cahill, Sara Elizabeth McCabe, Teresa Mary Zacchine, William Clifton Canniffe, Tillio Arthur Carino, Thomas Patrick Curry, John Joseph Gallagher, Francis Julian Galligan, John Russell Kelly, Lewis Stewart McKenzie.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Arnold of Arnold street had a double celebration of their tenth wedding anniversary. Saturday evening they entertained several neighbors and Monday evening Mrs. Arnold entertained the ladies of the Harmony whist club. Instead of a tin wedding it was an aluminum wedding as most of the gifts were of aluminum. The club's gift was a tea kettle presented by Mrs. George Sprague. Music and dancing were enjoyed. The house was decorated and the grounds illuminated.

HOW DEPRESSION WOULD WORK OUT

NO Twenty Foot Cut at Quincy Depot Contemplated or Desired by any One

Overhead Bridge at Granite Street Greatest Change

Many will be surprised at the construction which ex-City Solicitor Blackmur places upon Section one of the new grade crossing bill, which reads that the crossing "shall be abolished by depressing the tracks." Mr. Blackmur goes to the extreme and maintains that if the tracks are depressed at all at the Quincy station they must be depressed 20 feet; that the bill does not provide for the changing of grade of Saville street or Granite street, or any other street.

But is it not for Mr. Blackmur or any other citizen to determine the railroad grade through the city. If the new bill passes the Legislature, it simply says, that the general plan shall be—the depression of the tracks. When the new grade of the railroad is determined by the special commissioners they will have the authority to raise or lower existing streets that go over or under the railroad.

If the tracks are to be lowered, Granite street should be carried over the railroad, and Water street also. Then all crossings on the main line of the railroad in Quincy will be by overhead bridges, and the solution will not be difficult.

The grade of Granite street bridge need not be ten feet higher than the present grade of the railroad, and the grade from Hancock street would not be heavier than at present, but up instead of down. On the westerly side the raising of the street grade would reduce the grade of Goffe street which is now too heavy. The extension of Upland road could enter Granite street at the higher level better than at the present grade or under the decree plan.

All School street remonstrance would be removed by depression of the tracks, and it would not be difficult to connect the Quincy freight yard with the crane yard at Quincy Adams. Water street could be carried over the railroad as easily as under the railroad.

By depressing the tracks a few feet the street grades at Beale street, at Adams street and at Dimmock street will be improved, and it will be possible to put a bridge over the tracks at Saville street. Certainly no twenty-foot depression of the tracks is wanted at the Quincy depot, and a ten-foot cut is unnecessary.

LOST HIS LEG BUT GOT WIFE

Hero Gisburn Married to Former Quincy Girl

Another romance came to light today when it became known that Edward A. Gisburn, the hero of the first day's fighting at Vera Cruz, and Miss Ena Frye of Dorchester had been married in Brooklyn, N. Y., several days after the young man who lost his leg in the service of Uncle Sam became able to use crutches.

The ceremony was performed in Burrough hall, Brooklyn, on June 8, and because there were no spectators present that were of a curious bent they have been able to keep the news to themselves.

The bride is the daughter of Edward M. Frye of Dorchester, who when a foreman for the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co. lived on Summer street a few door from the home of Mrs. Catherine Allen, with whom our hero made his home. As in all romances their acquaintance ripened into love and last July they became engaged. At that time "Gissie" was the wireless operator for the U. S. S. Florida.

This ship was ordered to Mexican waters, the sweethearts bade each other a fond goodby. While the ship was steaming for the scene of hostilities, both planned for their marriage during the Christmas season.

Then came accounts of the battle at Vera Cruz and the news that Edward A. Gisburn of Quincy had been shot through the leg and it had later been amputated and that there was but little hope of recovery. The news found its way to Ena's home through the papers.

At first she could hardly believe her fiance was wounded, and then as she realized his condition she collapsed. For several weeks she was under the watchful care of her immediate family and after the first letter from her lover, who suffered aboard the hospital ship Solace, an improvement was noted.

Ena Frye saw the ship dock at New York and waved to her hero as he was carried down the gangplank by careful sailors and a short time after she was soothing his brow with loving hand.

Daily she visited him at the Naval Hospital and finally "Eddie" asked if she didn't want to be released from the engagement. He said he was minus a leg, and although it had been lost in real service, it had nevertheless been lost. Ena held her counsel and several days after he became convalescent she gave him her answer.

Sh invited him to go walking and said she wanted to be his wife now more than ever. Soon after the ceremony was performed.

Mrs. Gisburn is well known to many people in this city and many expect to renew their friendships at the reception to be given her husband in the Council chamber, City Hall within two weeks when the purse of gold will be presented in behalf of the citizens of Quincy.

PROMPTLY RESCUED.

William H. Taylor, foreman of the Board of Health, was Johnny on the spot again Tuesday afternoon when the ash team backed over the embankment into the old quarry hole at Norfolk Downs. Fortunately but one of the horses went into the quarry hole. Taylor was quickly on hand and rigging a pulley succeeded with the crowd in hoisting the horse from his perilous position and landing him on firm ground. The pulley was made fast to a nearby tree and the horse hoisted bodily from the quarry hole and swung onto dry land.

NEW FIRE ALARM BOX.

A fire alarm box has been installed at Appleton street and the Wollaston boulevard, Atlantic. It is numbered 611 and is a four round box. The mechanism is of the latest pattern and in tests proved to be satisfactory. Several other boxes will be added it is said before the end of the year in this rapidly growing district. The number 611 was chosen because the box can send out its summons quickly.

SAVED CITY OF MANCHESTER

Good Work By Fore River Auto Fire Engine

The auto fire engine, built at the Fore River shipyard saved the city of Manchester, N. H. this morning from destruction by fire which broke out in the business section and drove scores of guests from hotels. A. L. Houghton, the designer, directed its working. Its timely arrival and fine work after its service was accepted was instrumental in saving the city from one of the worst fires in that state is the statement of the city officials.

The machine, with its crew left Quincy Saturday to tour New Hampshire. They pulled into Manchester this morning when the fire was at its height. It was placed in position shortly after and pumped millions of gallons into the furnace. At no time did the engine falter and this noon upon examination none of its accountrements or its deck gun showed any strans.

The machine at the request of the officials will remain for a week or more.

Among the buildings destroyed was the factory where the 7-20-4 cigar is made. The loss will total over $500,000.

RASMUSSEN—WOODWARD.

Martha E. Woodward returned to West Quincy this morning after an absence of several days and announced to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Woodward of 27 Robertson street, that her companion, Walter C. Rasmussen of Alston was now her husband. The ceremony was performed in Boston on Monday by Rev. Kelly Jenness. The couple were unattended. The bride has a host of friends in this city, and the groom is one of the best known auto salesmen of Boston, being on the sales force of the Cadillac Motor Co.

FIRST SET OF QUADRUPLETS

Names Wanted for Four New Battleships

Prospects are good for the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation to obtain another battleship contract, for Congress will probably authorize the construction of three this week.

The Globe correspondent says: Undeterred by the guarded protest of Turkey, the House by a vote of 174 to 87 agreed Tuesday to the Senate amendment to the Naval Appropriation bill to sell the two battleships Idaho and Mississipi to Greece and apply the proceeds to the construction of a superdreadnought.

The test vote came on an amendmendment offered by Mr. Mann, the Republican leader, providing for the sale of the battleships with the proviso that the proceeds be placed in the Treasury. On this amendment Representative Treadway was the only Massachusetts Republican to vote in the affirmative. Gardner, Greene and Roberts, Republicans, voted against Republican Leader Mann and the four Democrats from Massachusetts, present and voting, Dietrick, Mitchell, Murray and Thacher, were also against the Mann amendment

As the matter now stands in the Naval Appropriation bill the President is authorized to sell the two ships before July 1, 1915, for not less than their cost price, the proceeds to be used to construct a dreadnought to cost, exclusive of armor and armament $7,800,000. The bill also immediately appropriates $2,000,000 out of the proceeds for the construction and machinery of the new ship, $2,535,000 for armor and armament and $100,000 for equipment.

Secretary Daniels said that Turkey's protest against the sale of the battleships Mississippi and Idaho to Greece had not altered his view, nor that of the Administration, in favor of the sale.

"Battleship No. 39 has not yet been named, and this year's Naval Appropriation bill authorizes the construction of the two new battleships which, with this new ship, will total four unchristened young leviathans. Therefore, on this coming Fourth of July Uncle Sam will have the pleasant duty of choosing names for his first set of quadruplets.

The two warships probably will be in the hands of agents of the Greek Government within a week.

Final action will be taken in the Senate today or Thursday, and the measure will be sent to the President at once for his signature.

MRS. FRANKLIN CURTIS.

Two daughters have been born to them, one of whom, the wife of ex-City Treasurer Henry F. Tilden died some years ago. Mrs. Curtis is survived by her husband and one daughter, Miss Alice Curtis who resides with her parents. Funeral services will be held from her late home, 92 Franklin street Friday afternoon.

CITY OFFICIALS AT HEARING

On Proposed Bill to Abolish Grade Crossings in Quincy by Depression

But Advocates of the Bill Occupied Most of the Time

Mayor Miller, City Solictor Pinkham City Engineer Sargent and others were in attendance today at the hearing before the Ways and Means committee of the Senate on the bill to abolish the grade crossings at Quincy by depression

Others present were Senator Langelier, Representative Sullivan, Representative Sandberg, President Whiton of the City Council, Secretary Hall of the Board of Trade, President Brault of the Granite Cutters Association, President Pinel of the Ward Three Improvement Association, G. B. Bates, about 40 in all.

The hearing was held at 12 o'clock, and for an hour was all one-sided, every speaker favoring the new bill.

Representative Sullivan said the size of this gathering shows that the question is a live issue in Quincy. He said the principal objection to the bill came over Section 5 relative to damages, but he submitted an opinion from Brandeis, Dunbar and Nutter that the section was all right and necessary. He told of the Mayor's change over from depression to the decree plan.

Mr. Sullivan asked for a new commission as provided in this bill. It was a regreteble thing that two of the prominent opponents were members of the Progressive Party, for they should not oppose the referendum. He told of the vote of the Council and spoke of the probable expense. Some estimate it at $350,000 but the opponents say four to five million; the first estimate was about right.

Senator Langelier was non committal. He said it was a question of finance only. He suggested a change in the reference whereby two votes might be taken.

Levi Turner said it was a question solely of the right of petition. Quincy never had an oportunity to express itself on decree plan after the report. The Mayor and members of the Legislature had been elected because they favored depression.

President Whiton said the people want depression and that it was hard to explain the Mayor's change. City will be better developed by depression.

Secretary Hall told of the way the petitions were signed in favor of depression, less than 20 out of 1000 opposing depression.

President Brault said the Granite Cutters Union had three times gone on record in favor of depression. He favored the referendum and said the public could be trusted.

President Pinel said Ward Three was more vitally affected than any other part of the city. Depression was favored.

Gus B. Bates spoke for depression, and his arguments are well known.

Engineer Tuttle of the railroad said the present grade from Water street to Braintree was 35 feet to a mile, and that by depression it would be 85 feet which would be prohibitive. The cost by depression without land damages would be $2,415,000.

Adjourned at 1.45 until 3 P. M.

CANDIDATES FOR RE-ELECTION.

Charles W. Guy of Quincy, the only man ever elected councillor from the second district on the Democratic ticket is getting out notices that he will run as a candidate for a second term.

Incidently he has invited all of the High school pupils from Rehoboth to Seeknonk and from Boston to Wrentham to visit the State house where he will guide them around. His enemy, rheumatism, prevents him from showing them the ancient landmarks of the metropolis and he has suggested that Councillor Alexander MacGregor and Lieut.—Gov. Barry do the honors. Both have kindly consented to serve. The former did so reluctantly believing it would appear unusual to see rival candidates for the second place on the ticket on such errands, but Mr. Guy with sage advise persuaded him.

TELEPHONE: QUINCY 425.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

The principal trouble with the daylight saving idea is that getting up at five or six o'clock makes it seem as if you had to work for a living.

The disagreeable alternative of peace is not necessary in Mexico, as after licking the Federals, they can take hold and lick each other indefinitely.

While athletic sports are pre-eminent, it is not yet felt to be a discredit to a college graduate that he has worked hard and has done well in his studies.

Of course all the people who figured that their income tax had been reduced by the fall of stocks will be very careful to report the gain on the next rise in the market.

A loud and raucous motor horn not merely clears the crosswalks promptly, but it suggests to other people that they would better remain indoors until you get by.

It may be all right for mine promoters to use Senate note-paper, but it is hoped they won't ask that august body to post their bills on the walls of the Senate chamber.

AVERTING LIVES OF VICE.

Much was said at the Chicago convention of the Federation of Woman's Clubs, of the dangers of vice threatening young girls. It was a controverted question whether in respect to sex knowledge, ignorance is a source of weakness or of strength.

Without entering on this disputed matter, it is important to note how our ideals of home life are changing. In how many dwellings does one see father, mother, and the children under the evening lamp as formerly? How familiar a picture it used to be! Father reading the newspaper, Mother darning stockings, the kids playing jackstraws, avilude, or old maid.

Now it seems to be taken for granted that children are going to be out on the streets evenings. But the boy who is excused from home to go to the Scouts' meeting may end up on the corner, smoking cigarettes, and precociously flirting with girls who should be at home.

Probably the days of home jackstraws, avilude, and old maid will never return. The boys and girls are kinky creatures, and demand a wider range and longer tether.

There remains for parents and teachers the task of teaching social discrimination. To the crude, ill-trained girl, the rough fellowship of the street has the fascination of a new world. The horseplay of the curbstone loungers seems electric with wit.

In any large town, the streets are full evenings of idle young folks, treading the beginnings of "the primrose path." It will be well if they can realize that the sidewalk element consists of the failures of life. Those who drop behind at school, those who fall down at athletics, those who lose their jobs, try to compensate themselves out of the coarser pleasure of the street. Social competition, if aroused in a girl, should tell her to avoid these associations, which lead downward, not merely to disgrace, but to poverty.

JURY ACTS IN RECORD TIME

Robinson and Duddy Charged With Murdering Norton

FUNERAL OF THE INSPECTOR

Police Escort Body of Comrade to Cemetery After Church Services Attended by Thousands of People—Wonderful Display of Floral Tributes From Slain Man's Friends

Boston, June 24.—In the record time of three hours and ten minutes the Suffolk county grand jury returned two indictments against Lawrence Robinson and Joseph Duddy, charging them with the murder of Police Inspector Thomas J. Norton.

Both men will be arraigned in the superior court next Friday. The 32-calibre bullet which, it is claimed, snuffed out Norton's life, was produced before the grand jury by John F. Monroe, proprietor of the cafe where the tragedy occurred.

The grand jurors reported to Judge Chase after hearing nineteen witnesses. The district attorney presented the evidence.

Robinson was named alone in one indictment and was also named in the other indictment, which charged Duddy with the crime.

In both indictments Robinson was also referred to as "George Roberts, Albert Adams, George Spencer, 'Chippy' Robinson, Walter E. Spencer, Albert Scott and Harry Burton." Duddy was referred to as "Daniels."

With over 2000 present, including some of the most prominent men in Boston's public life, the funeral of Norton was held from St. Mark's Catholic church, Dorchester. The crowd was so great at the church that more than 600 were unable to gain admittance and stood in the street during the service.

There was a prayer service for the family at the Norton home. A detail of fifty policemen accompanied the cortege to the cemetery. Eight police inspectors who acted as honorary bearers walked by the side of the hearse, while eight police sergeants who were pallbearers walked behind the hearse.

Rev. John A. Farrell, curate of St. Mark's church, was celebrant of the mass and there was singing by the choir.

Representatives were present from the department stores in which Norton did more or less work, as well as delegations from the several societies of which he was a member.

There was a wonderful display of floral tributes. Among the tributes from the associations was an eight-foot wreath of roses on a base in which was a reproduction of an inspector's badge, from his associates in the inspector's office; a large standing wreath of roses from the district attorney's office; a large standing cross of roses and lilies from the state police; a huge pillow of roses from the Ancient Order of United Workmen; a set piece, "Gates Ajar," seven feet high, of roses, lilies and white immortelles, from police station 3; a large wreath of roses from Chief Peterson of the Oakind, Cal., police; a seven-foot cross of Easter lilies from "West End friends;" a large standing wreath from the probation officers; a large standing wreath from the Lynn police; a huge wreath from the Burns Detective agency; a large wreath of evergreen and roses from the Expressmen's Protective league.

It is estimated that 20,000 persons saw the funeral cortege pass along the streets.

DEPUTIES FIRE ON MINERS

One Man Killed When Mob Presses on Butte Peace Meeting

Butte, Mont., June 24.—Crowds of miners who are opposed to peace plans pressed on Miners' hall last night in consequence of a secheduled meeting there, at which President Moyer of the Western Federation of Miners was to outline a peace plan, and were fired upon by sheriffs' deputies stationed in the hall.

Three men were shot. One was killed and another is believed to be fatally wounded. Most of the shots were fired into the air by the officers.

The shooting of the three men apparently took most of the nerve out of the crowd and they quickly backed a distance of two blocks from each side of the hall.

A hundred deputies with sawed-off shotguns are holding Miners' union hall.

DEATH LIST REACHES NINE

Victims of Milford Fire Double-Locked Themselves In Rooms

Milford, Mass., June 24.—Leon Hancia, aged 22, a native of Turkey, died in Milford hospital, the ninth victim of the Armenian boarding house fire June 16. Two more are thought to be dying.

Investigation has shown that the deaths and injuries in the fire were largely due to the habit of the Armenian lodger of double-locking himself in his own sleeping room.

To keep his valuables safe the lodger puts a padlock on the door, in addition to the house lock. At night he turns the door key and the padlock key, usually putting both keys under his pillow. When the fire came most of the lodgers were unable to find both keys in time and were caught like rats in traps.

Plaisted was born in Bangor forty-five years ago, the son of former Governor Harris M. Plaisted. He is survived by his widow and one child, his mother and a sister, who are now in Europe, and a brother, former Governor Frederick W. Plaisted.

CONDEMNED BY HOUSE PROBERS

Speer's Action on Bench Not What It Should Be

COMMITTEE FILES ITS REPORT

Majority Neither Acquits Nor Impeaches Federal Judge Who Went as Close to Impeachment Line as Safety Would Permit—House Is Requested to Drop Charges

Washington, June 24.—Judge Emery Speer of the United States district court at Macon, Ga., in a report filed with the house judiciary committee, was severely arraigned for misusing his office, but he was spared any impeachment trial because the committee believed there was not sufficient evidence of wrong-doing to convict him. The committee requested the house to drop the charges.

Representative Volstead of Minnesota, Republican, and minority member of the sub-investigating committee, submitted a separate report, exonerating Speer. Representatives Webb and Fitz-Henry signed the majority report.

"Early in his judicial career," the majority report states, "Speer ascertained the limit to which he could go before liability to impeachment for official conduct would accrue and went as close to the line upon many occasions as safety would permit.

"The sub-committee regrets its inability to recommend either a complete acquittal of Speer," the report continued, "of all culpability so far as these charges are concerned, on the one hand, or an impeachment on the other. And yet we are persuaded that the competent legal evidence at hand is not sufficient to procure a conviction at the hands of the senate. But the sub-committee does feel that the records present a series of legal oppressions and show an abuse of judicial discretion which, though falling short of impeachment offenses, demand condemnation and criticism."

Speer was stamped an "autocrat" by the majority.

"It was rare, indeed, that a jury was permitted to return a verdict contrary to his wishes, regardless of the facts," said the report. The investigators did not question the charge that Speer had permitted his friends to exact liberal fees in bankrupt cases. They criticised the judge for using federal employes as personal servants.

The probers also attacked Speer because of the lack of harmony between the judge and the district bar.

"There has been an absolute want of effort on the part of the court to make the people of the district feel that their federal court was the bulwark of their liberties," the majority said.

Among other charges the committeee declared unsustained as far as possible impeachment conviction is concerned are that Speer uses drugs; that he disregards mandates of the court of appeals and that he unlawfully seized and sold property.

EACH CONFESSES MURDER

New York Man and Woman Take Guilt From One Another

New York, June 24.—Two persons, a man and an 18-year-old girl, each told the district attorney that the the murder of Giuseppe Marino, whose body was found in a Harlem flat, was an individual act, and each denied that the other had anything to do with the crime.

The girl, Marie Magalusio, was arrested after masquerading as a man. She told the police she shot and killed Marino when he threatened her for failing to become a party to a blackmailing scheme.

The man, William Flack, heard the girl's story. He still insisted that he murdered Marino after robbing him of $25. Both were locked up on a charge of murder.

THE SPIRIT OF '76

The Boy Scouts certainly did prove their worth on Memorial day and they will perform the same satisfactory service on the 4th if occasion should arise that their services are needed.

Why do you wait to hear what your neighbor or friend gives to our collectors? Be a leader and give first.

I have read the route over and I think it would be hard to improve upon it. The committee realize that they cannot please everyone, but they tried to; so, say that they have done well.

How do you like the red posters in the store windows? Good are they not?

I hope the horribles will not rub it in too hard on our city fathers. They are doing the best they can and would you do any better?

Several entries to the morning parade were received yesterday and more will come in today.

I expect to announce the full route of the procession tomorrow and it is a good one.

GRADE CROSSING DEBATE.

Williams and Walter Carman. The debate will be renewed at the next meeting. Charles T. Williamson was appointed assistant to Governor Albert J. FOUNDED 1836

New Jersey Tennis Club's President Insisted Club "Go to Church," and It Did

NORTHERN New Jersey is doing great work in the GO TO CHURCH movement.

Thirty-seven churches from Ridgefield to Chester, in that state, collaborated in a plan to get the lazybones out to worship on the Sabbath. Pastor Cooper of the Cresskill Congregational church broke all records as the result of his forceful GO TO CHURCH campaign. He prepared a sermon that especially appealed to the people in his section, where he plays tennis on summer days and where he is greatly liked despite the fact that the members of the tennis club generally only go to church when somebody gets married or somebody's new baby is christened.

Of course Mr. Cooper doesn't play tennis Sunday. But his congregation is composed mostly of commuters, and Sunday is their only day of recreation. They say they have just got to play tennis then. The pastor received help from an unexpected source. Jack Young, a big Scotchman, is president of the tennis club and director of the choral society. He delivered himself thus:

"AS PRESIDENT OF THE TENNIS CLUB AND DIRECTOR OF THE CHORAL SOCIETY I CALL ON ALL MEMBERS TO BE UP AND SHAVED EARLY NEXT SABBATH. THOSE IN THE HABIT OF SHOVELING COAL, CUTTING WOOD, PATCHING UP HEN HOUSES OR PLAYING ON THE SABBATH DAY SHOULD ABANDON THESE EFFORTS THIS TIME. BROTHER COOPER IS TOO GOOD A TENNIS PLAYER TO LACK SUPPORT IN ANY SUCH MOVEMENT AS THIS. THE TENNIS CLUB AND THE CHORAL SOCIETY WILL BE THERE IN THE FRONT PEWS AND WITH BOILED SHIRTS ON NEXT SUNDAY OR I'LL RESIGN."

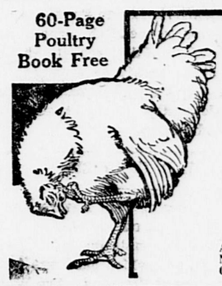

There was a great turnout. The church was crowded.

More Jack Youngs are wanted. Do your part in helping this great movement.

POP CONCERT OF GLEE CLUB

The weather was perfect for the pop concert which was given on the lawn at the home of Miss Eva Rice of Standish avenue, Wollaston, Tuesday evening in aid of the entertainment committee of the garden party to be held next month by Father Coan.

It was a success fiancially as well as socially. The young people of St. John's parish were well represented. Father Quinlan and Father McCarthy were present. The entertainment was good. Besides the several selections by the orchestra it consisted of a tambourine drill by 16 young girls dressed in pretty pink costumes with black satin sashes, their tambournes tied with pink ribbons, their number was well executed. They also sang a Spanish song with Miss Eva Rice at the piano. Fred McDonald gave some very amusing songs. The vocal numbers by the members of the Glee club of the Young Ladies Catholic club well merited the applause they received.

Considerable amusement was afforded by the monologues by Frank Driscoll. The vocal solos by Miss Teresa Hooley and Charles Brown were well rendered and much enjoyed.

The audience were seated at small tables, and ice cream cake and tonics were served by a corps of young ladies. The grounds were well lighted by electric bulbs in Japanese lanterns. There was general dancing after the program ended with Remi Langelier pianist.

NEW TYPE OF PAPER MONEY

To Issue Many Millions In Federal Reserve Notes.

SAMPLE BILLS SUBMITTED.

These Are of Five Denominations—$5, $10, $20, $50 and $100—but Will Not Be Accepted Until Senate Confirms Reserve Board—Currency of Uniform Design Is Planned.

Millions of dollars' worth of paper money of a new type will be put into circulation upon the establishment of the federal reserve banks within the next few weeks.

Under the federal reserve bank act each of the twelve reserve banks will receive advances from the reserve board in the form of federal reserve notes, a distinctly new sort of paper money. Commercial paper will be the collateral advanced by the various banks as security for these notes.

Comptroller of the Currency Williams has samples of this new paper money now under consideration. At his request, Joseph E. Ralph, director of the bureau of engraving and printing, prepared notes of $5, $10, $20, $50 and $100 denominations, and these have been submitted to Secretary McAdoo. It is not likely, however, that the samples will be officially accepted until the members of the federal reserve board have been confirmed by the senate and can confer with Secretary McAdoo and Comptroller Williams concerning the new notes.

No Estimate of Volume.

At present no official of the treasury department is able to make any estimate of the amount of federal reserve notes which will probably be put into circulation this year. Federal reserve banks are required under the new law to keep gold reserves of not less than 40 per cent against federal reserve notes in actual circulation. The amount of these notes required by the federal reserve banks will depend largely on the amount of money required by member banks for the rediscounting of commercial paper.

Last year at harvest time Secretary McAdoo permitted banks in the west and south to borrow money on commercial paper, and about $37,000,000 was loaned. The immediate demand for federal reserve notes will probably be far in excess of that sum, as the harvest loans were limited to the farming sections, while the entire United States will draw on the federal reserve board for money to rediscount agricultural, industrial and commercial paper. The money for harvest emergencies was limited to twenty-eight states, and none of it went to New York and New England.

Designs of New Notes.

The new five dollar note submitted by Mr. Ralph is typical of agriculture. The portrait on the face of the note is Lincoln's, and the back shows a harvesting machine and allegorical figures typical of farming. The ten dollar note bears a portrait of Cleveland and a manufacturing scene. The twenty dollar note bears Jackson's portrait and is typical of commerce, having a steamship, train and other mediums of trade on the back. Grant's picture is shown on the fifty dollar note, and Franklin's portrait adorns the $100 bill. Both of these larger bills are typical of the arts. All the bills will be printed in green ink on the back, while black ink will be used on the faces.

For some time the treasury department has been anxious to make all paper money more uniform. At present different portraits appear on different sorts of paper money of the same denomination. It is likely that the portraits selected for use on the federal reserve notes will also be used on other paper money. So in the future all banknotes, gold certificates, silver certificates and federal reserve notes of five dollar denomination will probably bear Lincoln's portrait and so on through the series up to $100.

AERIAL CURE FOR BAD HEART

Young Physician Plans to Send His Patients Up In a Balloon.

Dr. Rudolph Heym, Jr., of Cleveland, O., who has been out of medical school only a year and is now twenty-four years old, believes he has discovered a sure cure for heart disease. He is negotiating with a balloonist for the use of a large balloon, which he proposes to convert into a hospital and send up 2,000 or 3,000 feet in the air at night with the patients reclining on cots.

The beneficial effects of a rarefied atmosphere on weak hearts are recognized, but the result is not permanent so Dr. Heym proposes to give a supplementary treatment when the hospital comes down in the morning, before the effect of the trip alone has been dissipated.

Buries Chronic "Knockers."

With some of the old guard present and escorted to witness the ceremony, the Paterson (N. J.) board of trade buried a huge thirty foot banana symbolic of the "knocker." Paterson has received both free notice in the city and from the outside. The banana marked the beginning of a campaign to boost the city. Together with the banana were buried a number of pamphlets labeled "Chronic Knockers."

DINNER AT THE THORNDIKE

Shipyard Officials Hear of Labor Conditions

President Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. gave a dinner Tuesday evening at the Thorndike, Boston to the officers and foremen of the different departments at the Fore River yard. The affair was a particularly enjoyable one and was attended by upwards of forty. A course dinner was served during which there was music by an orchestra.

President Powell's guest of the evening was Rev. Howard Melish of Philadelphia. Mr. Melish is a gentleman who has made a study of the labor question and he spoke interestingly of the labor conditions throughout the country.

The labor element he devided into three classes, the I. W. W.,, whose aims and principles he explained at length; the Socialist end of the labor movement, and lastly the Union Labor, or American Federation of Labor element.

He went into detail on each of the subjects showing his thorough familiarity with the subject. In closing he urged a closer co-operation between the workmen and the direct employes of labor, particularly the foremen in direct charge.

Among those preset in addition to President Powell were H. G. Smith, Harry Brown, J. A. Sedgwick, Messrs. Hill, Kemp, Schultz and others

LOCATE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Mrs. John W. Bell leaves today to join her husband in Philadelphia, where they will make their home. Mr. and Mrs. Bell have been residents of Quincy for a number of years, and during this time have made many warm friends who regret that the change in business of Mr. Bell compels them to take up their residence in Philadelphia. For several years past they have made their summer home at Adams Shore where they had a pretty cottage and entertained many friends. While in Quincy, Mr. Bell was the foreman of the forge department at the shipyard but with the change of management of this company the forge department was abandoned which obliged Mr. Bell to seek employment elsewhere. He is now located in Philadelphia where he has charge of a large plant. Their Quincy friends wish them all success in their new home.

RECENT MARRIAGES.

George E. Bell of Sea avenue, Houghs Neck, and Ida Holmy of Groveland, were married at that place Monday in the presence of their immediate relatives and friends. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Andrew Campbell. Mr. Bell is a well known carpenter and builder of this city. His wife died suddenly about a year ago. It is also the second marriage for his bride.

Alexandrina Craig, daughter of Alexander Craig, and Edward J. Warmington, Jr., both of Quincy were married at Manchester, N. H., on June 13, by Rev. John Kamm of that city. They are living there.

HIGH SCHOOL AVERAGES

Brown Had the Best Per Cent in Batting

(BY A FAN)

The recently closed High School baseball season was hardly a successful one. As someone has wisely remarked however, "Don't explain! Your enemies won't believe you, and your friends don't need it.""

The season started with a squad of what seemed to be promising material and unfortunately inexperienced. Four veterans remained, Bates, Larkin, Hamlin, and Creedon, all of them counted on as certainties in their positions. Strangely enough only Larkin was able to make his position and hold it through the season, all the rest being either on the bench or in entirely different positions by the end of the season.

Bates went to the outfield from third base, Hamlin finally gave up catching to do a very creditable job at pitching, and Creedon gave way to Jenkins at second because of stick work. Ineligibility robbed the team of at least one regular and kept several out of the game for periods of two weeks at a time. O'Connor, counted on as a pitcher, did very little work because of a sore arm. Consequently it was not until the Cambridge game of May 26 that a reasonable line up could be presented. From then on the team won four out of the seven games played.

Inexperience and wretched fielding will account for most of the losses of the season. The team never seemed able to shake itself together until it had thrown the game away. Weymouth, Winthrop, Revere, Brockton and Braintree all won their games in the first two innings, with Quincy, outscoring them inning for inning during the remainder of each game.

With the lessons of this year learned, next year should be successful. This can only be accomplished by a decided fielding improvement. Only four players stood better than .900. Those who fielded well couldn't bat; those who batted well didn't field. Larkin and Browne—the latter, by the way, picked by the Boston Journal for the 2nd Interscholastic team—led the batting, but fielded for .707 and .555 respectively. Nobody fielding for .900 batted up to the .250 mark. With such unconsistencies the season could hardly have been other than it was.

THE RESOLUTE

Easily Beats Vanitie and Defiance In Trial Contest

DEFIANCE DISAPPOINTS

Resolute Again Shows Her Rudder to Her Two Rivals

Rye, N. Y., June 24.—All three of the cup defense aspirants, the Resolute, Vanitie and Defiance, met for the first time in a completed race, and finished in the order named, with the flag officers' yacht a winner by many minutes.

It was her sixth and longest victory over the Vanitie, which seemed slower than usual; while the Defiance, which had a chance for the first time to show her worth, proved a disappointment.

At one time the Defiance was more than four miles astern of the Resolute, which set the pace almost from the start.

The Resolute won the race by 16 minutes and 20 seconds in corrected time over the Vanitie and by 20 minutes and 12 seconds over the Defiance.

GIRL'S DEAD BODY FOUND IN BUSHES

Slain After She Had Left Home to Attend a Circus

Caribou, Me., June 24.—The body of Emma Jensen, the 20-year-old daughter of a farmer, was found under circumstances which indicated foul play. The girl came to town to attend a circus.

Frank Brown, a farmer, was walking along the New Sweden road, two miles from this village, when he saw part of a white dress at the roadside. He investigated and soon came upon a trail of blood leading to some bushes.

Concealed behind the bushes was the girl's body. There were two deep cuts on the head. An inquest has been ordered.

The officials immediately instituted a search for the son of one of the Jensen neighbors when they were informed that he told a brother that he had shot a man who was with Emma Jensen. He is missing and his father is said to have expressed the fear he has killed himself.

FUNERAL OF NORDICA

Service In Church In England Where Prima Donna Was Married

London, June 24.—The funeral service of the Angelican church was held for the late Mme. Lillian Nordica in the King's Way House church, Mayfair, where she was married five years ago to George W. Young of New York.

The atmosphere of the church was heavy with the scent of flowers, banked around the peculiar teak coffin, the altar and the pillars. Many people were present, including great singers with whom Mme. Nordica had appeared. Dr. Adams conducted the service, the music for which was sung by a surpliced choir. Adams paid a glowing tribute to the deceased prima donna.

NOT THE "TORSO VICTIM"

Girl Supposed to Have Been Murdered Is Alive and Well

New York, June 24.—The most promising clue to the identity of the murdered woman whose torso was found in the Mohawk river near Schenectady was exploded when Miss Teresa Faust, 17, who was believed to be the victim, visited a police station here.

The local district attorney asked the local authorities to offer a reward of $500 for the recovery of the head of the woman.

IS ANXIOUS TO SECURE PEACE

Villa Thinks Mexico Has Seen Enough Suffering

CARRANZA IS STILL OBSTINATE

United States May Take Up Negotiations With His Principal General, Dropping the "First Chief" In Peace Parleys—Envoys' Mission to Washington Not Yet Known

Washington, June 24.—Mexican constitutionalists in Washington still await the arrival of other representatives en route with instructions from General Carranza before taking any formal action on the invitation from the American peace commissioners at Niagara Falls to meet with them and the Huerta delegates, informally, to discuss plans for the pacification of their country.

Reports current in Washington since the precipitate action of General Villa in seizing the constitutionalist headquarters at Juarez and arresting Carranza's officers there, that the United States was preparing to negotiate with Villa in preference to Carranza, are renewed.

It is known that Villa, on June 15, informed George C. Carothers, American consular agent, that he would accept the results of the mediation conference whether Carranza should agree to them or not.

Villa, the report stated, had expressed the view that such a course would be desirable, in view of the peculiar temperament of the Mexican people and the ambitions of Carranza. He said Mexico had seen enough suffering, and that he was ready to accept terms that would lead to peace with honor, particularly because of the threatening possibility of intervention.

The statement made in New Orleans by Alfredo Breceda, one of Carranza's confidential agents, that Carranza held firmly to his attitude not to treat with Huerta except on the battlefield, and that he would not accept the invitation from Niagara, brought no comment in official quarters. One representative of Carranza, however, said that none of the constitutionalist representatives now in Washington would join in an informal mediation conference without authorization from Carranza.

Despite the declarations by Breceda, members of the cabinet who discussed the mediation situation with President Wilson expressed hopeful views of the situation. Secretary Bryan declined to make any comment further than to reiterate his persistent declaration of satisfactory progress. In administration circles expectations were general that representatives of the constitutionalists eventually would be prevailed upon to confer with the American and Huerta delegates at Niagara Falls.

The mission to Washington of Berceda, who is coming with Messrs. Calderon and Espinosa, still is unknown. It is significant, however, that Juan Urquidi met the constitutionalist agents at New Orleans, taking them a message from Washington.

Urquidi, it was learned, would proceed from New Orleans to Galveston on business for the revolutionists, and it was rumored that he might continue to Monterey or Saltillo to confer directly with Carranza.

FLIGHTS PLEASE FLYERS

America Is Found to Be Well Balanced and Easily Handled

Hammondsport, N. Y., June 24.—Several trial flights were made here by Rodman Wanamaker's two-ton transatlantic flying boat America.

The trials were successful in proving that the machine flies fast, is well balanced and is handled almost as easily as a flying boat of less than half its size and weight.

Flights in the America were made by Glenn H. Curtiss, Lieutenant Porte and George Hallett, all of whom expressed themselves as well pleased with her behavior.

FILM COSTS $15,000

Great Train Wreck, Explosion and Fire For the Movies

New Brunswick, N. J., June 24.—An engine drawing four coaches at fifty miles an hour crashed into an open switch at Milltown and rolled down a thirty-five-foot embankment while movie operators stood by and turned the cranks of their cameras.

The engineer jumped while the engine was in motion. The cars burst into flame, the engine blew up and the stunt was such a success that the Vitagraph company considered the expenditure of $15,000 a good investment.

SALVAGE WORK DROPPED

Nothing Can Be Removed From Sunken Empress of Ireland

Quebec, June 24.—Attempts to recover bodies and mail and other valuables aboard the sunken Empress of Ireland, off Rimouski, have been abandoned.

Lieutenant Commander Forbes of H. M. S. Essex declared nothing can be done even when divers work at low tide in slack water. One diver has already been lost in the work.

INDEPENDENCE OF SCOTLAND

Today the Anniversary of Battle of Bannockburn

(Written for the Ledger)

Six hundred years ago this very day was fought the famous battle of Bannockburn, by which Scotland achieved an independence which she has never lost and probably never will; for she is now one of the active partners in the gigantic combination known as the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. A public celebration of the anniversary is being held today in New York. Scotsmen and people of Scottish blood in Quincy regard the name Bannockburn as we Americans regard the name Yorktown. For their particular benefit the following brief account of the famous battle and its causes and outcome is here given by the Daily Ledger.

Intermittent fighting over the crown of Scotland had been going on between the Scottish and English kings for a long time. About the end of the 13th century, Edward the First invaded Scotland, deprived Baliol of his throne and carried to England the famous Stone of Scone on which the Scottish kings had been crowned, according to immemorial custom. This stone is still preserved in the "Coronation Chair" at Westminster Abbey and came near being injured by the bomb of a suffragette the other day.

The Scottish love of independence could not be crushed.

William Wallace struck valiant blows for freedom. He was finally captured by the English and put to death.

About this time (1306) Robert Bruce defied Edward's authority and had himself solemnly crowned king of Scotland. Taking the field, he inflicted such losses on the English that the English king resolved that he also would take the field in person. He was in his 70th year and suffering from a fatal disease. At the head of his army he reached Burgh-on-Sands, within sight of Scotland, and there died, leaving it as his dying charge that his body should be carried at the head of the army until Scotland was subdued.

His son, Edward the Second, who now succeeded to the English throne, disregarded the dying wish of his father and patched up a truce with the Scottish generals and disbanded his army.

For four years this truce lasted, but in 1314 hostilities broke out and Robert the Bruce seized nearly all the English fortresses in Scotland. Edward raised an army of one hundred thousand men and marched into Scotland to relieve the castle of Stirling which was holding out against Bruce.

The great battle which secured the independence of Scotland was fought about two miles from Stirling on June 24, 1314. It derives its name from the Bannock, a small burn or river in the neighborhood. Bruce gave his followers a prelude of victory in a duel on the eve of battle by cleaving with his own battle axe the skull of Henry de Bohun, one of the most valiant of the English knights. To the large English army Bruce opposed a much smaller force, estimated at thirty thousand men. But these were all veterans, trained under his own eye and fighting with the zeal and energy of patriots.

As the two armies approached each other the Scottish soldiers knelt for an instant's prayer. An English general cried out, "They kneel for mercy." To which one of his officers replied: "It is not our mercy they seek. It looks as if those men would win or die." After brief but terrific fighting Edward's army was broken and thrown into confusion. He left the field, narrowly escaping capture. English authority disappeared from Scotland and her independence was formally acknowledged by an English Parliament which met at Westminster a few years later.

On the death of Queen Elizabeth, which occurred in 1603, it was found that the nearest heir to the English throne was James the Sixth, son of Mary, Queen of Scots. He was then the reigning King of Scotland. This peculiar coincidence led to a union of the two crowns, but the nations continued totally distinct, James reigning over both under the title of "King of Great Britain." By uniting the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew he furnished the original of the well known Union Jack.

In 1707, during the reign of Queen Anne, a parliamentary union of England and Scotland was effected, the agreement providing for one Parliament for both countries, Scotland sending 16 peers to the House of Lords and 45 members to the House of Commons. The Act of Union, as the agreement was called, provided also that Scotland should retain unchanged her courts of law and certain specified laws and customs. Several of the prime ministers have been Scotsmen and preponderating influence of Scotsmen in the government of the united kingdom is too well known to need discussion here.

Scottish residents of Boston will celebrate the 600th anniversary of Bannockburn Thursday evening. The celebration will be under the auspices of the Boston Caledonian Club, in Deacon Halls, 1651 Washington street.

BREAKING THE LIMIT

An Engineer's Ride For Life and Lives

By JARED L. FULLER

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Pug Donaldson, who had been the roundhouse foreman so long that he thought he owned the entire system, gave out his opinion of Lannigan at the end of the latter's first week on the M. and S. P. And this was it:

"That Grandfather Longlegs never 'll get to hold down a passenger lever on this road, whatever he's done back east. It ain't in him."

Then the old man chalked up the limit on the side of his little smoke discolored office, spat with emphasis and—well, that closed the subject as far as Pug was concerned.

I reckon if Lannigan hadn't begun by blowing about his eastern record he'd made more of a hit with us.

He was a tall, awkwardly built man, with a shock of sandy hair and a smooth, humorous face. His legs and arms were remarkably long and thin, and old Donaldson's sobriquet stuck to him. "Daddy Longlegs" seemed to fit.

Lannigan got a freight, and the worst bunch of scrap iron on the road, which, in moments of enthusiasm, Pug called an engine. If there was any man handicapped in the race to break the limit it was the new man from the land of tenderfeet.

The system of advancement followed by the M. and S. P. did not include length of service or "pull." Just one thing counted—the ability of a driver to get speed out of his machine over the worst track the law ever allowed man to lay.

The country was new when the M. and S. P. was surveyed and laid down. It had been a race between the M. and S. P. and another corporation to see which should reach the terminating town where connection could be made with the Pacific road first.

We won, but at a cost which crippled the road financially for years, and the renewing of the first roadbed was a slow and laborious job.

We ran one fast passenger—the Limited. The through mail cars were attached to that train too.

It was a continual fight all through the year to keep that one train alone up to the schedule called for by the contract with the government.

If any man on any other train showed the ability to get speed out of his engine he was watched, and if he "broke the limit" he stood a good chance of displacing the driver then running the mail train.

The M. and S. P. in those days was a "farmers' railroad." Most of the way stations were merely huts and water tanks in forest clearings, tapping a certain section of farming country stretching westward of the line.

Lannigan had been with us since the winter before. He was a good driver, but not brilliant. Anybody but a prejudiced old fool like Donaldson would have recognized his good points, but you never could stir the roundhouse foreman when he'd once made up his mind.

Lannigan had learned the road and his engine. If he followed another train he was on its heels all the time and got himself well cursed for it.

Some of us began to see that there really was more to the eastern man than we had believed.

That fall was dry, the sun and wind all day and every day drying the sap out of the trees and brush and burning the leaves brown before the frost could make them pretty.

By and by the inevitable happened. Fires began to light up the heavens nightly, and by day streaks of blue smoke hid the tops of the higher hills.

Reports reached us from all directions of families burned out and settlements threatened, but for a week the conflagrations kept away from the line of the road.

Then suddenly one Sunday morning a flood of fire swooped down the mountain side and crossed the tracks some miles south of Yardsley.

The Limited came through somewhat scorched, and the next day traffic on the road between Lattell and the junction was cut off altogether.

This shut off several settlements as well as Yardsley, except by telegraph. The wires were still working, and our operators stuck to their posts like the brave fellows they were.

Pretty near every living soul in a hundred square miles of territory lit out for less dangerous ground. But Yardsley was caught napping, and its 300 people were practically hemmed in by the fiercest forest fire the state had ever experienced.

The entire system of the M. and S. P. was pretty well tied up. We had pulled freight as near the fire line as we dared, and the sidetracks were about full of waiting cars.

The fire was still burning fiercely beside the roadbed in more than one place, and we weren't asked to try to pull a train through to the junction.

Naturally there were plenty of locomotives and plenty of drivers at Lattell that day when the news came from the Yardsley operator. It was his last dispatch, for he had remained until it was too late to escape by any track through the forest, and there wasn't even a handcar left at the station.

"Wind changed. Fire will reach us in one hour. Three hundred people in danger. Can you reach us?"

That was the message which the yardmaster read to us from the steps of the station at Lattell. He was pale, and his hands shook as he spelled the words out slowly.

He didn't have any need to tell us the danger. Nor did he call for volunteers. To try to get to Yardsley was like buying a through ticket for death and be done with it.

We stood around and discussed the terrible news and did nothing—except Lannigan.

He appeared at Pug Donaldson's window and, leaning his arms on the sill, looked in with the same humorous twist to his lean features.

"Them three boxes there empty?" he asked, jerking his head backward toward the sidetrack.

Donaldson nodded.

"I'm going to hitch my engine on to 'em. Jimmy and me'll see if we can git down there and beat that barbecue. Gimme a clear switch!"

The roundhouse foreman only stared; but, after Lannigan had disappeared from the window, he rushed to the door and yelled after him:

"Hey, you, Grandfather Longlegs! You'll be fried like a pancake on a griddle!"

But Lannigan only grinned and leaped aboard the old engine. We didn't know what he was up to until he'd coupled on the three empty box cars and rattled away over the switches and out of the yard.

"He's making a bluff," some of us said.

Others who respected the pluck it took to approach the fire thought he'd never get through, but would waste his steam for nothing.

"Well, Jimmy, it's going to be a hot run," the long legged Yankee told his stoker as they neared the first belt of fire. "You fill up the furnace, and I'll slow down so you can jump. I don't want to take another man to perdition with me."

"Oh, I guess I'll stop," says Slosson, kind of shamefaced.

Then they shook hands on it, and from that moment neither questioned the other's intention of sticking to his job.

But Jimmy had loaded the old engine for bear all right before they reached the fire line. She was whirling miles under her drivers at a rate to beat even our one fast train, and the empty boxes behind were dancing like mad over the rough roadway.

"We're getting there, Jimmy!" sings out Lannigan at last. "Shin over into the water tank and fling a pail or so over me when you get a chance."

He stood out on the running board with a hand on the lever, his cap visor shielding his eyes from the smoke and flying sparks, peering ahead as best he could at the rails. Jimmy, up to his neck in the tank, flung pail after pail of water over his long figure.

Suddenly the engine seemed to run into a veritable wall of flame. It extended far across the roadbed, and it wrapped the train about in a living, seething mantle as she rushed on.

It seemed as though no man could go through that sea of fire alive, but when the old engine staggered out of the fire belt Lannigan still stood upright at the lever.

His sparse mustache, his eyebrows, his shock of sandy hair were gone. He was as bald as a parrot, and his clothing was afire in a dozen spots. But he turned a horrible grin upon Jimmy and waved his hand.

"Give us another bucket!" he croaked. And the stoker climbed out of the tank, more dead than alive himself, and put out the burning garments.

Then they reached Yardsley.

I guess if any two men were ever welcomed as angels straight from heaven it was Lannigan and his stoker, though they must have looked a deal more like devils from the pit.

Two hundred and ninety people, who had given up their last hope of continued existence, piled into those three box cars like cattle. The doors were closed, and then it was up to Lannigan and Jimmy to run them back to Lattell.

The old engine was reversed, and back through the awful belt of flame and smoke she went with the three boxes.

Lannigan certainly showed that day what he could do when he had the right of way.

Scorched almost to a cinder one instant and saturated the next, Lannigan stood at his post and brought the rescue train through to Lattell. The box cars were afire and the passengers half suffocated when they arrived.

Jimmy was pretty nearly drowned in the tank, and we picked Lannigan off the engine just as he caved completely.

"Daddy Longlegs" was some time in the hospital and came plagny near losing his sight, and all because of that run. But if a man was ever popular along the line of the old M. and S. P. his name was Lannigan.

The first day he got down to the yard the super happened to be there himself. The line was open again and everything running smoothly by that time, only the miles upon miles of charred forest and the heap of ashes where Yardsley had stood telling of the forest fire.

"Humph!" said the super, trying to pick out the engineer's hand which was least bandaged to shake. "I hear you've been doing some tall running down here, Lannigan."

And the driver grinned sheepishly, as though he had done something to be ashamed of.

"Donaldson's got your record chalked up on his office wall over the Limited. Guess we'll have to find you something better than a freight to pull out when you're well enough."

And Lannigan got the mail train the next fortnight.

SHIFT MUSCLES AND LAME WALK

Paralyzed Members Again Are Made to Do Their Work.

MARVELS IN BONE GRAFTING

Twisted Spine Braced by Bone Taken From Leg of Patient—New Principles In Surgical Treatment as Set Forth at Meeting of the American Orthopaedic Association.

Papers describing remarkable operations, such as the shifting of healthy muscles to replace those paralyzed, the grafting of living bone to help in the cure of tuberculosis of the spine and to prevent spinal curvature and other surgical marvels were read at the first day's session of the American Orthopaedic association in Philadelphia.

New principles in the surgical treatment of paralysis of the muscles due to destruction by disease of the governing nerve cells were advanced by Dr. P. William Nathan, who described a method by which strong, healthy muscles and tendons were shifted from one attachment to another, taking the place of those paralyzed. This method, he said, would distribute the muscular power of the body by making flexor muscles do the work of paralyzed extensor muscles. Patients who have been unable to walk or stand erect, according to Dr. Nathan, are now walking without the aid of a crutch or cane and even can climb stairs unaided.

A bone from a cat grafted on the bone of a dog grows rapidly, and in ten weeks becomes transformed and looks like the bone of the dog, according to Dr. W. E. Gallie, who described a series of experiments.

Foot Paralysis Yields to Treatment.

Paralysis of the foot, according to a paper read by Dr. R. E. Soule, is being cured by a delicate operation, consisting of removing the cartilage between two bones, the astragalus and the scaphoid, gouging the exposed surfaces, forcing the two denuded bones together, causing an ankylosis or stiffening when they grow together. This method gives a secure anchorage for the foot articulations and corrects the deformity.

A paper describing remarkable results in the treatment of curvature of the spine, due to permanent paralysis of the muscles, was read by Dr. H. P. Galloway. The operation was described as straightening forcibly the crooked spine, splitting nine vertebrae and inserting a bone graft taken from the leg.

The Albee operation of grafting a piece of bone from the leg on the spine to take the body weight off tuberculous vertebrae and permit them to heal was discussed.

There was a stir as Dr. F. H. Albee of New York described the latest marvels of bone grafting. Dr. Albee exhibited several specimens to show that the grafted bone actually had become a firm part of the vertebrae and showed a series of lantern slides to prove that several years after the Albee operation the grafted bone still was firmly bracing the spine.

WHAT TO DO IN FLYTIME.

Effective Means of Coping With Summer Pest That Menaces Health.

Fighting the typhoid carrying fly is a community problem. To aid communities Dr. M. P. Ravenel, director of the Wisconsin state hygienic laboratory, gives this account of its habits and best methods of eradication:

"The powers of multiplication of the fly are enormous. Its eggs are deposited by preference in horse manure. They hatch in about twenty-four hours after being laid, producing larvae or maggots. These molt or change their skins three times in from five to seven days and at the end of this time pass into the resting state, which is a small brown, oval, segmented object. In from five to seven days more, according to the weather, the perfect insect appears. Depending chiefly on the climate, there may be from eight to fourteen broods a season, and the progeny of a single female fly, provided they all live, will be 14,067,792,600,000,000.

"The method of treatment is prevention of breeding. This means scrupulous care in getting rid of the breeding places. The eggs are oftentimes laid within a few minutes after the dropping of the manure. It is impossible to keep the ordinary stable with soft floors clean. The manure should be collected at once and stored in fly proof bins or screened apartments and frequently taken out and spread on the earth as a fertilizer. If manure is not available flies will breed in almost any sort of garbage; hence alleyways, back yards and places where trash is usually collected should be kept scrupulously clean."

June 30 Income Tax Limit.

Secretary McAdoo of the treasury calls attention to the fact that all persons, corporations and associations liable under the income tax law must pay their assessments to the collectors in their respective districts before June 30. He points out that the law imposes heavy penalties for failure to make payments within the prescribed time.

THE PERFECT SPELLER.

Test Him by Having Him Write This Jumble From Dictation.

One occasionally comes across a superior person who tells you he can easily spell any word every printed in a dictionary. If ever you meet this type of man just ask somebody to dictate the following jumble to him and see how many mistakes he will make:

"Antinous, a disappointed, desiccated physicist, was peeling potatoes in an embarrassing and harassing way. His idlosyncrasy and privilege was to eat mayonnaise and mussels while staring at the Pleiades and seizing people's tricycles and velocipedes. He was an erring teetotaler and had been on a picayune jamboree. He rode a palfrey stallion and carried a salable papier mache bouquet of asters, phlox, mullein, chrysanthemums, rhododendrons, fuchsias and nasturtiums.

"He wore a sibyl's resplendent turquoise paraphernalia, an ormolu yashmak and astrakhan chaparejos. He drank crystallizable and disagreeable curacao juleps through a sieve. He stole some moneys and hid them under a peddler's mahogany bedstead and mattress.

"Like a fiend in an ecstasy of gayety I rushed after him into the maelstrom, or melee, and held him as in a vise. I could not feaze him, however, and he addressed me, with autocracy, in the following imbecile words, which sounded like a soliloquy or a superseding paean on an oboe: 'You are a ratable limamoth, a salaaming vizier, an equinoctial coryphee and an isosceles daguerreotype."—New York Mail.

CUPID'S QUEER PRANK.

A Wedding Blunder That Furnished a Curious Climax.

The other evening we were talking to Mr. Bransby Williams, the delightful impersonator of Dickens' characters, and he told us this story:

The scene was a London parish, and the period recent. The vicar was sitting in his study one morning when in burst the verger in a great state of excitement.

"Mr. ——" (mentioning the curate's name) "wants you at once, sir," he exclaimed. "He has married two couples and married the two men to the wrong women, and he does not know what to do!"

"Have they signed the register?" inquired the clergyman.

"No," was the verger's response.

"Then they can be married again," said the vicar. "Tell Mr. —— I will be at the church in a minute or two to perform the ceremony."

In due course the incumbent made his way to the church and found the parties gathered at the entrance.

Before he could say anything one of the bridegrooms approached and said:

"We have been talking it over, sir, and we have made up our minds to remain as we are."

And they did so.—Pearson's Weekly.

Breaking Out the Colors.

A pretty sight aboard ship is the breaking out of the flags on reaching a port. At the appointed time a seaman takes his station at the forward mast and another at the rear mast. In his hand is a small silken bundle, tightly rolled. This is sent aloft. When the signal to break out the colors is given a cord is pulled, the bundle unrolls, and a splendid silk flag flutters out into the breeze. At the foremast is that of the nation whose port the ship is entering, while that on the rear mast is the flag of the steamship company, the ship's nationality being advertised by a large flag at the stern. The latter is lowered or dipped by way of salute when another steamer is passed out in the ocean.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Unbearable Perfumes.

The perfume of flowers can make some people shiver. A member of the London Spiritualist Alliance tells of a woman who dreads the smell of hyacinths. Once at a party the hostess, knowing her visitor's horror of the flowers, hid them behind a screen, yet although they were concealed from view the woman detected them and fainted shortly after entering the room. The Princess of Lamballe, a friend of Marie Antoinette and a victim of the French revolution, would always turn pale at the sight of a violet, and Vincent, the painter, swooned at the smell of roses.

Insanity.

There has never been a satisfactory definition of insanity, the best, that of Sir William Hamilton, that it is "the paralysis of the regulating or legislative faculties of the mind," leaving us far from being satisfied. Like sleep, like dreams, like life itself, insanity is a mystery that no man understands. Its causes lie in the "De profundis" that no science has as yet explored.—New York American.

ONE OF MANY GOOD TIMES

Dorcas Society Hold Their Annual Banquet

The Dorcas society of the Universalist church enjoyed their annual banquet Tuesday night in the vestry of the church. From 6 to 6.30 greetings were exchanged and a social half hour enjoyed.

With Mrs. McCurdy at the piano a line of march was formed around the vestry to the table where one's place was designated by a prettily decorated card, also a menu with a witty verse which caused considerable laughter when read. Paper crackers were distributed and the many colored caps when placed on the head made an attractive scene.

The menu included, tomato bisque, hot roast beef, gravy, baked potato, creamed potato, macaroni and cheese, tomato salad, cucumbers pickles fancy pies cake, ice cream, rolls, tea and coffee. A most delicious array of good things enjoyed by all. A rising vote of thanks was given the committee in charge Mrs. George E Sprague and Miss S. Abbie Feltis.

Music was then enjoyed, games played, and a most pleasurable evening was soon at a close.

All enjoyed the pleasure of meeting again Mrs. George W. Wheeler, a former member who now lives in Bridgewater. Mrs. Wheeler invited the society to spend the day with her in her new home some day in August.

Before closing active work for the summer, the society voted to have a lawn party on the afternoon and evening of July 8, at the home of Miss Hanson, Hancock street.

PAY ROLL LATE.

There was a lot of worthy workmen about City Hall this morning looking for their pay, but were obliged to wait until the pay roll arrived from the Mayor's office. Several of the men were planning to go away for the day and wanted to take an early train. One man even was going to New Hampshire and desired to leave for Boston early to connect with an early train for New Hampshire, and the twenty odd dollars coming to him was needed. When he found that he must wait until the Mayor arrived he was very much disappointed. Several others, who came for their money and could not get it, expressed their feelings in the matter in a forcible manner.

Mayor Miller arrived at City Hall about 10 o'clock however and soon after the pay roll was available.

NO NEW BRIDGE AT NEPONSET

Vote Was Nearly Two to One Against It

(Special from State House.)

Representatives Michael T. Sullivan of Quincy, Sanford Bates and Charles E. Lawler of Boston made a strenuous effort to induce the House members to vote for the new Neponset river bridge bill on Tuesday.

Mr. Sullivan declared that last year, when the proponents agreed that the matter be postponed until the present session, the corporation counsel of Boston promised that the city would not officially oppose the proposition this year. "Now it is the same old story. The city of Boston is broke and cannot afford to contribute their share toward the construction of this bridge so we have got to go on indefinitely with this narrow ,antiquated structure with a car track on it. The people are not always going to fall for the same old story 'Next General Court.'

"This House should not deliberately lodge its responsibility on this bill and pass it on for the next legislature. Every member knows that the bridge is badly needed. There is a great public demand for it, and I appeal to the members to do the right thing by us."

Sanford Bates of Boston also made a strong argument for the bill, but the opposition of the committee on ways and means was too strong, and the bill was referred to the next General Court, by a vote of 112 to 67.

The Sunday School of the Universalist church, and some of the older friends of the church, are holding its annual picnic today at Franklin Park, Boston. The party left City Square on the 10.18 car taking their lunch with them which will be eaten at the park.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

QUINCY HIGH 1914 GRADUATION

Addresses by Dr. Nelson and Chairman Mackay of the School Committee

Three Essays on Development of the Drama

In spite of the hot evening, there was a good attendance at the graduation exercises of the Quincy High school. There were however a number of vacant seats showing that the heat of the evening had kept many from being present. The hall particularly about the stage was prettily decorated. Across the front of the stage were innumerable large bouquets of roses of varied colors while on the side walls in figures made of Jack roses were the numerals "1914," the figures "19" being on one side and "14" on the opposite side. Across the front of the stage at the top was a wide banner upon which were the words "Suma Summarum," the class motto.

The program opened with the processional by the school orchestra during which the graduating class marched in. Each of the young ladies wore a Jack rose in the corsage while the young men wore a similar rose in the coat lapel.

The exercises opened with the singing of Verdi's Aida by the High school chorus under the direction of Miss S. Maude Amsden, director of music in the public schools, the accompanists being Miss Edith A. Grant and Miss Rosalie May DuTemple.

The opening number was followed by three essays dealing with the history and development of the drama. John Ernest Dingwell gave the early history of the drama which was first devised for use in connection with church services between the tenth and fifteenth centuries, and were written by the Monks and were read, the parts being taken by people in the monasteries. It was not until the time of Queen Elizabeth that one heard of women on the stage. Then came pictures and tableaux. But the demand for action resulted in the drama.

The first plays were of two kinds, miracle and moral plays, and they were given in the open. Later the Guilds had a travelling stage on wheels. It was of two stories, the lower story being used for dressing rooms. There was not much in the line of scenery, but the costumes were elaborate, the colors of the costume representing the characters impersonated. At first the actors used their own dialect with the result that few understood what was said. Then the Guilds adopted a common dialect which all could understand.

Miss Martha Robertson's essay portrayed the theatre in the Elizabethan period, and was a description of a visit to the theatre in that period, in which the costumes were minutely described.

The third esay was by Miss Marjorie Lillian Snow and dealt with the modern drama where the romantic had given away to realism which was the keynote of the modern drama, so that today the drama was a more vital factor than ever before.

Then came two choruses by the chorus, "Build thee more stately mansions" by Farwell, and "June" by Schnecker.

DR. NELSON ON IDEALS.

Head Master Collins then introduced W. A. Nelson, Ph. D., professor of English at Harvard college.

In opening, Dr. Nelson said that he was not to address the whole audience of teachers, parents and friends, as they were only an incident in this graduation, but that his address would be to the graduating class

Most of you graduates doubtless are glad to leave school today because of what you leave behind you, and what you see before you. One great difference is in the path you have before you. You will heed less what other people think good for you. In the future it will be what you think best for yourself. What he desired to say however was about ideals. When one starts out it is a good thing to know where one is going. What it is you are making for. It is said that the characteristic of the American people is to get something, and a great deal of it. Naturally the general mission is to achieve wealth, although he did not think all of the class were victims to this ideal. All know the difference between being something and having something. It is better sometimes to decide at first what you want, and then you are not swayed by immediate desires. We then come back to what is most worth our efforts.

One thing that enters into our lives is admiration. Where we admire we try to imitate and we are facing a situation of what it shall be. It is therefore important that we should be careful about what we admire. To see clearly the nature and quality of what we desire. Here we get the three elements. Those who are compelled to serve, which we call slaves. Those that compel us to serve, which we call masters; and those who serve as they desire. Slavery is still common in a thousand ways, such as a slave to fashion and the like. The great danger or servitude we do not realize. The great leaders in finance, etc., are the masters. It is important that we examine the quality of these before we take them as our models. It should be a study of personal quality of these leaders. The failures in life are those who do not realize the value of life. The conception of the best in human character. It requires courage to fight against these desires

Education is looked upon as the way to enlarge ones individual possibilities The value of your future will be in proportion as you have cultivated and broadened your personality. The schools put into your hands the keys of many doors which you may open. You are to make the most of your opportunities. The teachers have put the tools into your hands, it is for you to use them. You need never listen again to these teachers unless you want to. Your only chance for freedom in the future is with yourself.

The speaker closed his sermon, as he called it, with reciting the poem, "Playing the game."

DIPLOMAS PRESENTED.

Chairman Mackay of the School Committee was then introduced to present the diplomas to the graduates. Before doing so however, he spoke briefly to the graduates.

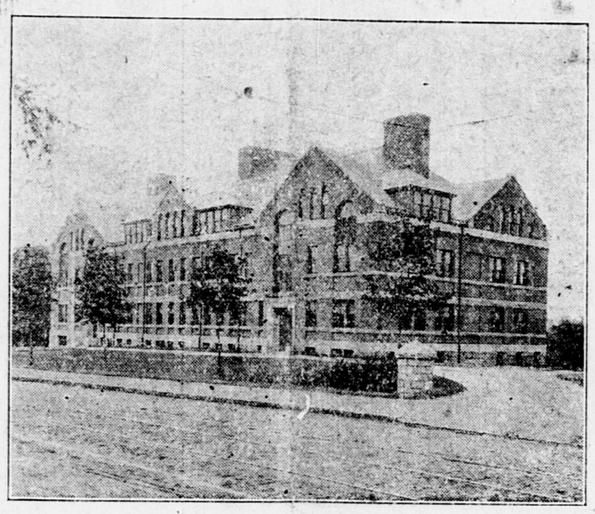

The city of Quincy, said Chairman Mackay, has always discharged in fullest measure her legal obligations in regard to education. And in the matter of high school training she has gone much further than the statutes of the Commonwealth require her to go. She proceeds as far as the reasonable needs of the pupils require, and by the expenditure of considerable money she has maintained and conducted this large institution from which our young friends are about to be graduated.

And I want to make public acknowledgment, right here and now, of the spirit in which the City Council has always met and considered our requests for appropriations. We have been allowed year after year the amounts asked for although other departments of the municipality have thereby been obliged to curtail their expenses to the breaking point. That attitude should be apreciated not only by us, who are merely trustees, but by the beneficiaries some of whom are before us this evening.

Now, my young friends, when the wisdom of expending so much money on our schools is in issue, we must fall back on you. You are our witnesses and you are our exhibits in the case. We can only point to you and what the school has done for you and made of you to justify our expenditures. In the long run, the Quincy High School will stand or fall at the bar of public opinion by the attainments of its graduates and the way they acquit themselves in life.

Your education, I can safely assert, has been liberal. One has to familiarize himself with the courses you have taken in order to realize fully how extensive and comprehensive your education has been. A high school training in the year 1914 is much more than it was twenty-five years ago or even ten years ago; and I assert that you are

EMERGENCY PULMOTOR

This Is a New Free Call of Telephone Company

In line with the telephone company's solgan "Service First," District Traffic Manager F. D. Field of the Quincy district told a Daily Ledger reporter today of a new emergency feature which the telephone company has adopted for the benefit of the public ,and without cost. The Quincy police station has a pulmotor always ready for use.

For several years he said, our company has been doing everything possible to handle quickly and accurately emergency calls for the police, fire department, hospitals and ambulances. Now we are adding to this list all calls for pulmotors in cases of electric shock, asphyxiation, partial drowning and other accidents where the administration of oxygen may be of vital importance.

All such calls may be made from a pay station as well as from a business or residence telephone. Especially during the summer there are many instances where the prompt service of pulmotors will save life. To this end, instructions have been issued to our operators to be quick, cool-headed and resourceful in responding to calls of this kind.

If a person calls in and says, "Emergency, pulmotor," the operator will immediately endeavor to put him into communication with the telephone at the place where the pulmotor is located. Not only that, but she will ask him if he wants a doctor, and, if a doctor is required, this fact will be communicated to a supervisor who will proceed to get a doctor, while the operator continues her effort to reach the telephone station at which the pulmotor is located. If she finds the line is busy, she will interrupt conversation by explaining the emergency.

In emeregncy cases, much depends upon the person making the call. The varying requirements in connection with a pulmotor case, make it essential that the person calling shall state the nature of the accident, the location of the victim, and such other information as may be deemed pertinent. It may be desirable to send several physicians or to call ambulances, and the operator cannot know this unless the person making the call tells her.

A complete list of pulmotors has been placed in the operating room of every city and town where there are pulmotors. This wonderful invention has saved the lives of persons who were supposed to have died thirty minutes before it was applied. It is not wise to assume, therefore, that all hope has departed merely because a person's breathing has stopped. In some cases, it has been necessary to continue this form of artificial respiration for hours. In handling these calls, the operators are admonished to think clearly and act quickly. If the same admonition can be impressed upon the public, this co-operation ought to save a number of lives before the summer is ended.

SENATE COMMITTEE WANT FIGURES

Question of Cost Important in Abolishing Grade Crossings in Quincy

Another Hearing on New Bill Held This Morning

Those present at Wednesday's hearing before the Ways and Means committee of the Senate on the new grade crossing bill were Mayor Miller, City Solicitor Pinkham, City Engineer Sargent, Henry M. Faxon, Secretary John O. Hall of the Board of Trade, Ernest W. Branch ex-Mayor Charles M. Bryant, G. B. Bates, Paul R. Blackmur, President Joseph L. Whiton of the City Council John Swithin, A. B. Smith representing the granite manufacturers, Edward Brault representing the granite cutters, Mr. Breed the consulting engineer of the city ,Senator Langelier James E. Wall, John Q. A. Field, A. F. Pinel, John F. Merrill, chairman of the County Commissioners, Councilman Charles W. Bailey, Levi H. Turner, ex-Councilman John D. Smith, ex-Councilman James M. Nowland, Andrew Milne, and several engineers representing the railroad, whose interest were being looked after, ex-Senator George L. Barnes, an engineer representing the state. Representative Sandberg also dropped in for a minute at the afternoon session, but did not speak.

Representative Sullivan handled the case for the bill and briefly rehearsed the grade crossing history in Quincy. He said that he saw about him many who would doubtless speak against the bill and that they would probably testify that the cost would be excessive.

The chairman promptly interrupted to say that these men would speak for themselves . The chairman said that the committee was there to represent the Commonwealth and that the vital point was as to the financial question. He asked Mr. Sulivan if he had any figures showing the cost between the two plans.

NO FIGURES.

Representative Sullivan replied that he had not. That he had no opportunity to get any figures. He however declared that the cost would not be any greater by depression, when it was taken into consideration the 51 parcels of land that would not have to be taken by the depression plan.

The chairman however said that he considered the vital question to be one of finance.

All of those who favored the depression plan spoke along the same lines as had been advanced at other hearings. All of these were asked as to figures but none could be given.

COST SECONDARY.

President Whiton said that the cost was a secondary consideration and that the city was willing to pay the extra cost.

G. B. Bates was the only man who gave any figures, and he said that his plan, which was shown, would make perfect railroading, and the cost would bel ess than it would be to separate the grades by the decree plan. When asked what his authority was for giving the estimate, he said, that he had them from his own figuring. He referred to the plan he showed as the city plan, but the commitee was promptly informed that it was not the city plan.

FACTS WANTED.

Several attempts to get after the Mayor were promptly checked by the chairman, who said that the committee's time was short and that it was not oratory they desired to hear but facts. Engineer Tuttle was the only one to give figures.

It was expected that the hearing would be continued at 3 o'clock, and that the opponents would be given a chance. The Quincy men were on hand, but after a delay a member of the committee announced that he Legislature had not adjourned, and that it would be necessary to continue the hearing until 10 A. M. Thursday.

This morning most of the same ones were present and several others. After some delay the hearing continued.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

NO TAX RATE LIMIT.

About a year ago a largely attended hearing was held by the City Council under a new law which permits a city to decide the tax limit. The sentiment was almost unanimous against increasing the limit from $12 to $14 as proposed. But after the hearing the City Council did nothing.

Now it seems that the law which established a $12 limit before Quincy became a city in 1888, has been repealed, and therefore Quincy has no tax limit. Thus it is possible for the Mayor to forward supplementary budgets to the City Council before the tax rate is announced, and when the Mayor declines to forward budgets upon request of the Council, the City Council may introduce and pass such budgets.

Obviously, there is no check on the tax rate unless it be the Mayor and the wisdom of the City Council. The passage of a supplementary budget is sure to increase the tax rate of the year, and there will be no reduction of the tax rate this year unless there is an extraordinary jump in valuation.

The new general law relative to the finances of cities is now in effect, and its effects in Quincy are beneficial, stopping loans for current expenses and shortening the time of water loans. The finance ordinance adopted through the efforts of George W. Abele, Albert N. Murray and others while in the Council is also proving its worth. But a tax rate limit seems desirable and the City Council of 1914 should adopt one which will be in effect in 1915.

There is considerable speculation as to action of Mayor Miller on the many appropriation orders sent to him this week involving about $100,000 in loans. The promised reduction in tax rate, debt and interest will not materialize if all these appropriations are made.

SENATORS AND STOCKS.

Time was when the Senators kept close to the Wall street ticker. Advance knowledge of a committee report meant a very pretty little flier. As some one else would make the turn if they didn't, the Senators felt it merely a fair offset for an inadequate salary.

Too many newspaper men are nosing around. The stock game makes too good campaign material for the other fellow.

Information has just been given to the Senate of an attempt of gold mine promoters to sell shares by letters written on Senate stationery. This is a kind of thing that should be stopped. Many speculators would pay large sums of money for Senate notepaper on which to print their solicitations. The men [illegible] sell stock, giving an impression of security and power. It will be good business and good politics for Senators to keep a very tight padlock on their supplies of public stationery.

The throngs of young folks around the soda fountain show that the boys are commendably generous with father's money.

It is not considered proper to elect successful men to Congress and the Legislatures, as they can earn their living some other way.

GIVES THRONE TO SECOND SON

Peter of Servia Abdicates Because of Ill Health

HIS REPUTATION IS TARNISHED

Comparatively Prosperous Reign of "King With Blood-Stained Hands" Who Became Ruler When Alexander and Draga Were Assassinated at Belgrade In Fiendish Manner

Belgrade, June 25.—Peter I., who ascended the throne of Servia in 1903, after the assassination of King Alexander and Queen Draga, abdicated in favor of Prince Alexander. His retirement is due to continued ill health.

Prince Alexander, who succeeds to the throne, is 26 years old, and the second son of Peter. Prince George, the elder son, renounced his right of succession in 1909. Peter is 70 years old.

Peter Karageorgevitch was called "the king with the blood-stained hands." The victor in a "holy war" against the Turks, Peter hopes further to rehabilitate his tarnished reputation by writing a volume of memoirs in which he will present to the world his version of the tragedy which placed him on his blood-spattered throne.

It was in June, eleven years ago, that the unspeakable King Alexander, last of the Obrenovitches, and his courtesan queen, Draga, were murdered in the royal palace at Belgrade. Although Peter has shown himself a wise and valorous ruler, the circumstances under which he came to the throne made him an alien in most of the royal courts of Europe.

Inconceivably fiendish and barbaric as was the assassination of Alexander and the queen, twenty years his senior, whom he had raised to his throne, the crime was not without extenuating features. Alexander, with a madman's lust for blood that was constantly fired by Queen Draga, recklessly ordered wholesale arrests and executions. The last straw was placed on the backs of the suffering Serbs when Draga's brother, a wretch engaged in an unspeakable traffic, was named heir to the throne.

Servia had long been rent between two dynasties—the Obrenovitches and the Karageorgevitches. Alexander was a scion of the former family, while Peter, later king, was an exile in Geneva. The leading statesmen and army officers of Servia joined in a conspiracy that had regicide for its object, and sent a committee to Geneva to see Prince Karageorgevitch and offer him him the throne, should it "become vacant."

Peter accepted. Then followed the mad night in the palace, when Alexander and Draga were cut to pieces, and their slashed bodies thrown into the courtyard. Two of Draga's brothers and the king's principal ministers were also slaughtered, and a whole dynasty wiped out. On the following morning, while the dogs of the street sniffed at the bodies of the king and queen, Peter I. was proclaimed ruler of Servia.

King Peter's health broke down as a result of the anxieties and exertions of the war. He was married thirty years ago to Princess Zorka of Montenegro, who died in 1890. He has two sons and a daughter, Helen, who married Grand Duke Ivan of Russia.

The reign of Peter has been a comparatively prosperous period for the Serbs, and they attribute their prosperity, as well as their victories in war, to the old monarch. Peter was trained as a soldier, and served gallantly in the French army during the Franco-Prussian war. At Geneva he lived a retired, quiet, studious life, that was free from scandal.

No clue has been found to the whereabouts of Boulier since the finding of the girl's body beside the New Sweden road.

Boulier is 23 years of age. He is three years older than the Jensen girl, with whom he had been "keeping company." He has been a trapper and is thoroughly acquainted with woodcraft.

Three steel cased bullets in the head caused the death of the girl, it was ascertained at the autopsy.

Collins, who is 10 years old, lost his right leg as a result of a collision between trolley cars in June, 1912.

Special interest attached to the case because of the strenuous fight of the defendant to secure small damages on the ground that the improvement in artificial legs has removed the handicap against the one-legged man in competition for business success.

We Owe Part of July 4 to John Barry, Irish-American

BARRY MONUMENT IN PHILADELPHIA.

TO Commodore John Barry, "father of the American navy," we owe at least a part of our independence. Barry was the senior, the commanding officer of the American navy in the Revolution and at one time John Paul Jones served under him. Barry came to America from Ireland when fifteen years old and elected to make the sea his profession. He soon took rank as a sailor of rare ability and commanded a number of big merchant ships. At the outbreak of the Revolution he was commissioned to command the brig Lexington of sixteen guns, and this vessel was the first to fly the Continental flag. He captured the first ship ever taken by an American warship. Later he commanded the Effington and the Raleigh.

The greatest battle of Barry's career was the contest between the Alliance and Atlanta and Trespassy, which he compelled to surrender. He served till at the age of fifty-eight he died in Philadelphia in 1803. His remains lie in St. Mary's churchyard in Philadelphia.

The Barry tomb is one of the most impressive mementos of him because of the inscription which it bears. It says in part: "He fought often and bled in the cause of freedom, but his deeds of valor did not diminish the virtues which adorned his private life. He was eminently gentle, kind, just and charitable, beloved by family, friends and country." There are various monuments to Barry in America. One of them stands in Independence square, Philadelphia.

The memory of Barry is revered by Irish-Americans, and various movements looking to the payment of honor to his memory have been inaugurated by them.

TEACHING OF THE FOURTH.

By Rev. Francis E. Clark.

Our nation has been marvelously prospered in the past because the great heart of the people has been sound and true. We have been, for the most part, true to the traditions of the fathers. We have kept in good degree to the simplicity and God fearing purpose of the pilgrims. We have sought to make America an asylum for the oppressed and to stand for righteousness and liberty and peace among the nations of the world. Because of this great underlying purpose, in spite of many mistakes and wanderings from the highest ideal, God has wonderfully blessed us. We are among the live and living nations of the day, as Lord Salisbury expresses it, and not among the dying nations. Then, in conclusion, let one with seven generations of American and Puritan blood in his veins urge you, patriotic young Christian Americans, to be true to your great inheritance, to remember all the way in which God has led us in the past, to stand for our country when she is right, but never for "our country right or wrong;" to use the victories of the past as not abusing them, and to resolve that because of the great favor of our God we will do our very best to make our beloved land a righteous, God fearing, peace loving nation, ever the refuge and the champion of the oppressed and never a bombastic bully among the nations of the earth.

THE SPIRIT OF '76

The committee on prizes have selected some handsome ones and any one of them will be an ornament in your home. Have your boy enter one or more of the events. There is room for all. The more that enter the more exciting the event.

I have noticed that there has been displayed in our store windows that Monday is Quincy's bargain day, but I am sure that you will admit that you never saw such a bargain day as we will have on Saturday, July 4th, not for a few hours only, but from sun rise to 11.59 P. M.

One of the contributors to the 4th of July fund said to me the other day, "That small amount that I gave to your association last year was one of the best investments that I ever made. It kept our citizens at home, gave them a good time, particularly the children, and celebrated our day in a safe and sane manner, and I gladly give again this year, because when there are men who are willing to do the hard work, as your association officers are doing, to make the day a success, the least that I can do is to help financially."

The full program of the day is fast being compiled. The different committees have put a lot of time and hard work into it and I hope that you will approve of it.

Some of the best base ball talent will be seen at the games on the Fourth, and if you are a "fan" I know that you will be well pleased with the playing.

I expected to have announced the route of the parade tonight, but I will have to keep you waiting a little longer, as the chief marshall informed me last night that it was not entirely settled. He desires to serve as many parts of the City as possible. Possibly it will form near the park on account of the Militia which I hear will encamp on the Park the night before.

SHORTHAND GRADUATION.

Every pupil in this institute, some who entered as late as March and April, have passed the examinations in shorthand and typewriting, and not one pupil in this entire class will be carried over this year. A large number of Quincy girls and boys are in this class who were former graduates of the Quincy High school and the Woodward Institute of this city.

Pupils desiring to take up shorthand and typewriting have the opportunity of doing so by registering now for the summer school which opens on Monday, June 29, and continues until the first of September.

LEAVING FOR ARGENTINE

Families of Officials Much Attached to Quincy

This afternoon the families of two of the Argentine officials, some of whom have been in Quincy four years leave for Argentine. They will be accompanied to New York by their husbands and will sail direct for Bueno Aires on Saturday. They are Mrs. Osvaldo Fernandez and son of Bigelow street and Mrs. Juan Carcagno and three children of Dysart street. Mrs. Estaban Ciarlo, who has been at Bethlehem, also accompanies them. In their voyage home they will cross the equator and on arrival will find the winter season.

For a year or two, Mrs. Fernandez and Mrs. Carcagno were very home sick, but as they mastered our language and became acquainted with our customs, they became quite attached to Quincy, nd now regret to go. They like our free and easy ways in marked contrast with requirements at home.

Preliminary acceptance of the superdreadnaught Rivadavia having been given by the Argentine Republic government final work on the craft is now well under way at the works of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation at Quincy. Next month the battleship will leave the Fore river and berth at the Charlestown navy yard to take an ammunition and supplies and the crew of Argentine sailors who will come here from South America on an Argentine transport.

From Boston the craft will go to New York to be drydocked and then she will be given a trial trip by the crew, after which she will steam to her home port in Argentina for final acceptance. Workmen at the Fore River works are conducting final tests.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

The Missions of Southern California, which were established for the Indians during the 18th century, are a source of great interest on account of their historical, educational and spiritual significance. In the picture gallery of the Thomas Crane Public Library is a collection of beautiful views of both the ruins and the restorations of the famous missions.

Built on Moorish lines of architecture, located in picturesque, fertile valleys, surrounded by gardens and orchards, with quadrangles of distinctive arches, the pictures of the Mission temples are imposingly beautiful. The interior views are none the less artistic, especially those of the Mission of San Luis Rey, which was called a "kingly massive structure surpassing all others." A pulpit said to have come from Constantinople, is one of the relics of this old mission. Ancient ornaments in gold and silver adorn the walls and altar. The exterior views of San Luis Rey show some of the 250 graceful arches the Moorish dome over the chancel, the overarched bells, of which each mission had several.

The pictures of San Juan, with its olive mills; of San Gabriel, with its noted vineyards; of Santa Barbara and its fountain, which, since the earthquake of 1912, has been restored and made fertile with reservoirs; of a new Santa Clara and its Catholic college—would be probably of vital interest to the student, historian, or would-be traveller.

GRADUATION AT BRAINTREE

The annual graduation exercises at the Jonas Perkins school Tuesday evening were attended by a large number of people there being about 350 present. The program ararnged by Frank B. Taylor, principal, was carried out excellently by the pupils of the graduating class. The class chose "Progress" for their motto and "blue and buff" for their colors. The class officers aree:

President—Frederick Almquist.
Secretary—Evelyn Simthers.
Treasurer—Edward Harirngton.

The class of 1914 earned ten diplomas for writing and three improvement ecrtificates which is twice as many as any other school in Braintree. The diplomas were given to Hazel Croke, Miriam Holmes, Viola Kincaid, Fredrick Almquist, Mary Davis, Edna Johnson Evelyn Smithers, Dorothy Avery, Mandana Warrington and Edward Harrington. The improvement certificates were taken by Vivian Akerstrom, Edna Brow and Hazel Griffin. Another of these features is that one of the members of the class Vivian Akerstrom, graduated at the age of eleven. As a present to the school the class gave ten dollars towards a set of standard encyclopaedia.

Led by their class marshal Vivian Akerton the thirty-two members of the graduating class marched to their places on the platform at eight sharp. The program opened with a song by the class, followed by the invocation which was given by the eRv. Albert P. Watson. The class ang Love Divine by Stainer, after which Frederick Almquist delivered an oration entitled "Liberty Throughout all the Land."

The next number on the program was a piano solo by Dorothy Avery entitled Love Song by Cadman. Evelyn Smithers then gave a recitation, Sandalphon, by Longfellow. The class then sang two pieces, The Minstrel Boy and The Merry Monarch. The next number created much interest. it was the class history rendered by Viola IKncaid. A recitation "At School Close" by Whittier was the next number, intelligently given by Mary Delorey.

Following this recitation Thomas Cassidy played Il Trovatore by Verdi on the violin very cleverly. The next number was the presentation of diplomas and emdals. Mr. Taylor introduced Mrs. Carrie F. Loring a member of the school committee and at the close of his speech, in behalf of the class he presented Mrs. Loring with a large bouquet of roses. Mrs. Loring has had this honor of presenting diplomas at the Jonas ePrikns school for a number of years and al were much pleased to have this noted member of the school committee address the largest class ever graduated from this school. Mrs. Loring recited the following poem as advice to the class:

As you go out fro mthis school hall,
Keep where the light of Heaven falls
Let virtue with an angel grace;
In every heart and soul find place,
Be kind to all and try to bear;
Some part of earthly toil and care,
Along the path of human needs,
Illumine your way with loving deds
In noble efforts do your best;
Then will the world and you be blest

Medals were presented to Viola Kincaid, Frederick Almquist and Evelyn Smithers. Following the presentation of diplomas and emdals Judge Albert E. Avery made a short address after which the program was closed with a song entitled Spring song by Mendelssohn sung by the class.

Advice for Mother.

The small girl had been exasperating all day, and at last her mother lost patience and administered corporal punishment. The child had scarcely recovered from her sobs when she looked up and said: "Mother, you must try and control that temper of yours."

A QUINCY REPORT

Fully Corroborated and Easily Investigated.

Do you need a good kidney medicine? Then read the reports in these very columns of Quincy persons cured or benefited with Doan's' Kidney Pills. You won't have to go far to find out if they are true. This Quincy case is an example. Others will follow.

Mrs. R. A. Neil, 40 Edison Park, Quincy, says: "My hands and ankles swelled. I was worse at night after I had done a hard day's work. I used several remedies, but they did me little or no good. My husband brought home a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and I began taking them. I could see an improvement right away. Doan's Kidney Pills got my kidneys acting right and the swelling went down. I wasn't so nervous and felt better in every way. I now keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house and consider them a fine family medicine."

HEART STRAIN.

Unusual Exertion May Cause It, and So May a Fit of Temper.

To keep your temper is rather a good idea, said Dr. Strickland Goodall in a lecture at the Institute of Hygiene. Every time the heart contracts, he said, its force would raise a weight of two pounds to the height of one foot, and it does this from 70 to 140 times every minute.

Acute heart strain was difficult to produce in a young, well nourished and healthy adult, but it was very easy to produce if the heart muscle was anaemic or poisoned or was the seat of degenerative disease.

Running to catch a train increased the heart's work by 228 foot pounds a minute. Ascending a staircase slowly increased the heart's work by 112 foot pounds; ascending quickly by 152 foot pounds.

The enormous amount of total extra work done by the heart was shown in the experiment of riding a bicycle up hill, the gradient of which was one in ten and the length 2,904 feet. The ride occupied three and one-half minutes, and the total extra work done by the heart was no less than one and one-eighth foot tons.

A rest of half an hour daily would save in a year 219,000 foot pounds of work on the heart.—London Chronicle.

OUR LOPSIDED BODIES.

Legs, Arms, Hands and Ears Are Rarely Perfectly Matched.

"I venture to assert that if you measure the legs of every one in this court you will not find a person who has a pair of equal length," said Dr. C. W. Cooke in giving evidence in a London court.

"The human body is not symmetrical, as is commonly believed," said a widely known doctor. "The legs vary in length and circumference, and the arms as well. The right hand is usually bigger than the left, because it is used more. The head is by no means regular in form—in fact, it is often as not lopsided.

"The left leg is generally a little longer than the right, presumably to counteract the overbalancing effect on the body of the right arm, which is usually somewhat heavier and longer than the left, since ninety five out of every hundred people use their right arm more than their left. The eyes, too, are nearly always different, both in shape and strength, and through sleeping more on one side than another every man's ears are tilted at different angles. Feet, too, are nearly always unlike in shape, due frequently to the wearing of ill fitting boots.—London Mirror.

An Old English Custom.

In the northern counties of England there was practiced at Easter up to at least half a century ago the curious custom of "lifting." It may still exist. I have before me, writes a correspondent, a newspaper cutting of 1860, giving an account by an indignant commercial traveler of the ritual to which he was subjected on Easter Tuesday by the maids of a hotel at Crewe. He was placed in a chair, lifted three times and kissed by the merry revelers. It appeared that a like privilege might have been his for the exercising on Easter Monday—a privilege which absence made impossible. There is a remonstrance of a century earlier by a man who was treated by the maids of the Talbot inn, Shrewsbury, in a similar fashion, but who in addition had to pay a fee.—London Chronicle.

Worry and Selfishness.

Worry, when you come to analyze it, is not a social vice. We work chiefly over those things which concern the "me." Show me that what impends will leave my bank account intact, my health impaired, my friends and family out, and any further tormenting solicitude that I may feel is frankly academic. I may still take thought and use preventive measures, but I cease as if by magic to worry over the outcome. On the contrary, I can now work for the accomplishment of my object better than ever before, for most worry is not only an arch form of selfishness, but it is the great inhibitor of action. We say "I am worried;" w mean "I fear for myself."—Elliott Park Frost in Atlantic.

Scott and His Secretary.

Sir Walter Scott's amanuensis and much esteemed friend, Willy Laidlaw, often found it difficult to keep up with the rapidity of his dictation, though on one occasion, having to wait for a second or two, he said, "Come, get on," and was answered, "Oh, aye, it is very easy for you, Willy, to say 'Get on,' but you forget I have every word to spin out of my brain."—T. P.'s Weekly, London.

Knew More Than Pa.

"Say, pa, what was the longest day in Adam's life?"

"I am sure I don't know."

"But, pa, you are a minister."

"I can't answer any such"—

"I can. It was the day on which there was no Eve."—Grit.

A Broken Promise.

"That was in the marriage platform, I understand, but when she found how easy he was to boss she rescinded it."—Detroit Free Press.

GRAND DISPLAY

surprising piece ever made A wheel of fire on a set-piece is thrown from its position across the field to a new position The wonderful effect and surprise produced is beyond description, for no one realizes that it is different from the ordinary set-piece, and no one can see why it should go as it does Then the wheel lights another wheel which revolves and then develops into a girandole After the girandole is started the lighting wheel shoots back across the field to its original location, a duplicate of its first act. Then the wheel revolves and lights a setpiece as it did the girandole, with two wheels as shown in this display the wheels go in opposite directions and are doubly effective. The set-piece is the one following.

Special device, American flag. First the fire kindles and shows a huge flag in solid color of gold. This suddenly gives way to an American flag, with perfect form and color.

Zigzag girandole. This new girandole begins as a set-piece and after a minute it begins to ascend going back and forth across the sky through its flight

Special combination shell. This shell has five breaks with the following effects in as many breaks, searchlight, saiettine, whistling, or distant thunder and lightning effects, ending finally in a break showing a bouquet of colored flowers.

Crocetta shell, forming a red cross.

Special display shell, four breaks. This shell will show the following effects:—viz,—Troni, saiettine, lambettoni and zurroni.

Edison electric bombshell.

Special device flower basket. This set-piece contains three flower baskets which discharge a continuous stream of variegated colors intermingled with stars. While revolving they continually change showing different colors. This piece throws showers of fire 400 square feet and is one of our latest designs.

Special device 20th century set-piece. This piece represents an Arabic Mosiac. It shows color and design after design. The colors and tints are most perfect and after each design and color the piece dies out and then rekindles showing a different one. These changes occur five or six times and finally end in a shower of gold. A very wonderful creation.

ILLUMINATION.

Searchlight set-piece. This is one of the most perfect set-pieces that has ever been produced in the fireworks art and a special product of this Company. From a large frame a number of wheels are attached forming a hexagon. First the wheels all start with blue colors showing, then it makes five different changes of colors, and betwen each change will appear flashes, at equal intervals, as bright as a large flashlight. This will light up an area of one mile square so that every one can be easily distinguished and any one could readily read a newspaper.

Plain girandole.

Flight of wolf tail girandole.

Firefly shell.

Farfalle shell. This shell is one which repreesnts bats flying around in the night.

Fountanella shell.

Fumante shell.

Golden shell.

Internal region shell, double break. From the bursting of this shell tongues of fire are thrown about the sky, darting and shooting in fantastic paths.

Pupatella shell, one break with eight sections.

Pupatella shell, two breaks with sixteen sections.

Pupatella shell, three breaks with twenty-four sections.

Pupatella shell, four breaks with thirty-two sections.

Pupatella shell, five breaks with forty sections.

Special device, zuretto set-piece. This set-piece upon lighting first goes in one direction, with a ball of liquid fire throwing off sparks Then it flashes, after which all is darkness. The whole proceeding is again repeated and so on for all six times together. The seventh time it rekindles showing entire in solid colors and then it all changes and the air is filled with showers of gold. This set-piece is the longest burning and has the most changes of any ever made.

Transformation set-piece. This is one of the most beautiful set-pieces that has ever been made in the fireworks art and a special product of this company. From a large frame a number of wheels all start, forming a hexagon. First the wheels all start and blue colors show, then it makes five different changes in colors and between the changes flashes are sent forth at equal intervals as bright as a flashlight. This will light up a park one mile square.

Special device ,alternating speed wheel.

Special device, zodiac set-piece. This shows the sun, moon and stars arranged as follows:—In center is a large star of perfect proportion, which remains stationary, and slowly changes colors. Beyond it is a half moon which revolves around the star, which also changes colors. Then outside of all is seen the sun in pure gold, revolving in great speed from the common center, throwing out showers of gold like the rays of the sun. The whole device when burning covers a circle with a diameter of fully forty feet.

Shower of gold girandole.

Triple ascension girandole.

America girandole.

Surprise shell with parachute chain.

Special parachute chain. Salvo of parachute chain.

Rendella shell, eight breaks.

Rendella shell, sixteen breaks.

Rendella shell, twenty-four breaks.

Rendella shell, thirty-two breaks.

PALM TREE.

Special device palm tree. This set-piece is so large that it has to be made on the exhibition field. The effect is as follows. First in the center are three wheels, one above the other, then these turn rapidly and change color. Meanwhile from all sides huge showers of gold are thrown out like palm leaves.

Special device, brilliante set-piece. This piece is notable for its beauty of design and color. The design is in a beautiful figure changed according to the place of display. The color is the most dazzling white ever seen. It is so dazzling that one can hardly look at it. It repeatedly dies and rekindles with three changes of color. Finally ending with a shower of gold accompanied by a battery.

Special device, palomella set-piece. This set-piece is one of our most pleasing designs. First the light spreads over the piece, burns for a minute, then dies out as if it were the end. Then it rekindles with a change of color and new effect. This is repeated with each change of color. The effect is unique in that it produces practically three or four set-pieces, one after another, in one single set-piece. This piece is really wonderful because of the fact that the piece entirely dies out and as if by magic makes an entire change. Every color is effective instantly and in no case does one see blotches of different colors.

Special device, tracche set-piece. This piece is one which is very interesting, as it produces a very true description of a gattling gun in action giving numerous discharges with ever increasing rapidity.

Special device, tracche set-piece. This device shows a large fall of colored fire which looks like water breaking over the rocks on the falls and falling to the bottom. It almost seems to be water burning as it rushes on. As the falls start flowing, they are divided into the three parts of our National colors. They then change into the wonderful silver of the falls in the moonlight. No other set-piece affords such pleasure and with the new invention giving the American colors will be doubly pleasing.

Grand finale. This finale is a blending of the most beautiful colors known to the fireworks art and will be accompanied by the discharge of huge aerial maroon which are sent into the heavens in rapid succession, making a dazzling effect, which is simply sublime. The whole air seems to vibrate with force, the heavens are alight, the earth belches forth fire and noise. For the five minutes during this, every one is thunderstruck, all is wild and uncanny. It is a sight of exceptional beauty and unexcelled in splendor No battle scene could be more realistic. This finale consists of numerous pieces of fireworks, namely, mines, fountains, batteries, shells and maroons.

TODAYS COURT.

The cases in the Quincy court against Richard A. Hanrahan were today dismissed without prosecution, it appearing on investigation by counsel that a misunderstanding occurred in the closing up of the firm's business. Mr. Hanrahan was entirely exonerated. The cases grew out of a partnership that existed between Mr. Hanrahan and Owen McKim which was recently terminated.

John Casey of West Quincy was arraigned in the District Court this morning on five charges of violation of the labor laws. The complainant Andrew M. Goff, an inspector for the Board of Labor and Industry, alleges that there were five violations, including violation of the child labor law, one for employing two different girls in a laundry at hours different from notices posted in the building, and one for employing a boy under 14 years of age. Mr. Casey pleaded not guilty to the complaints and the case was continued to Wednesday for a hearing. He was held on his personal recognizance for his appearance.

Martin Kaine, a well known plasterer, could not refrain from celebrating the restoration of a watch lost a week ago and as a result was arrested in City Square Wednesday evening and charged with drunkenness. Capt. Daniel R. McKay was detailed to make an investigation of the theft of the timepiece, and Wednesday took Kaine to Boston and recovered it in a pawn shop. Captain McKay returned home alone. Several hours after the defendant arrived by trolley and considerably the worse for wear. He collapsed in City Square and was sent to the station. In court he was sentenced to pay a fine of $15 on an old complaint arraigned on another, and the last one was placed on file.

Ballou, a prominent and wealthy citizen, was found unconscious in the street, not far from where Mrs. Angle lived, and died in a short time.

According to evidence introduced by doctors death was caused by a hemorrhage due to a fracture of the skull. Bruises on the head, face and hands were also found.

Mrs. Angle says Ballou, who has been paying her constant attention for the past three years, died from injuries received by falling down stairs.

Over-Seas Flying Boat Drags Human Anchors About In Rain

Hammondsport, N. Y., June 25.—Lieutenant Porte, accompanied by George Hallett, James La Mont and George Robinson, flew about fifteen miles last night in the Rodman Wanamaker transatlantic flying boat America.

During the day auxiliary hydroplanes were fitted to the hull, just aft of the step, and these proved of material value in helping the machine to rise quickly from the water.

A violent wind and rain storm endangered the machine yesterday afternoon. More than a dozen men held the anchor ropes, while the wind tossed the big flying boat about, dragging them with it.

HUMAN LIFE SPAN MUCH LENGTHENED

Medical Association Head Tells How It Happens

Atlantic City, N. J., June 25.—Young men and women today may expect to live fifteen years longer than do their parents, and those parents are living fifteen years longer than did their ancestors of a century ago.

This news was announced at the convention of the American Medical association by Dr. Vaughn of Ann Arbor, Mich., who was installed as the new president.

Vaughn's statement called for the most hearty approval. He has statistics to prove that Rome, Greece and other empires went into decadence through disease and not through the assaults of human enemies. In those days the limited medical knowledge could not cope with conditions that resulted in plagues and depopulated countries.

Likewise, he attributed the decadence of Rome's morals to unhealthful conditions that undermined intellects, the deterioration of the mind and body being corelated.

Lewisburg, W. Va., June 25.—The remnants of "General" Kelly's army of the unemployed tramped the roads here on their way to Washington after a stirring battle with railroad men at Renick, fourteen miles east.

The "army" boarded a freight train at Renick. They resisted the efforts of the crew to eject them, but after a lively scrimmage the train pulled out with only a few on board. These were afterward thrown off.

The scattered sixty-two men were gathered together by their leaders and the march proceeded.

Cambridge, Mass., June 25.—William B. Sweeney of Dracut was sent to the Worcester insane asylum after a jury in the superior court had found him "not guilty by reason of insanity" of murdering his wife, Minnie. The verdict was ordered by Judge Keating.

Three alienists testified that Sweeney was insane when he killed his wife with an axe last March. Dr. Henner said Sweeney was an overworked mill hand and suffered from epilepsy.

Washington, June 25.—President Wilson denied application for pardons of the responsible former heads and agents of the International Bridge and Ironworkers' union convicted in the dynamite conspiracy cases.

The president commuted, to expire at once, sentences of four defendants, Michael J. Hannon, Frank K. Painter, Fred J. Mooney and William Shupe.

The president agreed to consider an application for executive clemency on receipt of separate petitions of John H. Barry and Paul A. Morris. In the meantime Barry and Morris will begin serving their sentences.

The other defendants out on bail must go to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth today. These include former President Frank M. Ryan of the union.

Applications for pardon in the following cases were denied:

Frank M. Ryan, Eugene Clancy, Jack Bright, alias J. C. Munsey; Peter J. Smith, Henry J. Legleitner, Ernest J. Basey, William H. Redding, Edward Smythe, George Anderson, Michael J. Cunnane, Philip A. Cooley, Frank B. Webb, Murray L. Pennell, Charles E. Beum, John T. Butler, W. Burke Browne, Frank G. Higgins and Michael J. Young, the latter two of Boston.

Young's sentence was for six years, and that of Higgins was for two years.

It is understood that the president followed the recommendations of Attorney General McReynolds in all cases. The evidence against the four defendants released was deemed largely circumstantial. A separate petition for clemency for Painter, who represented the union at Omaha, where two buildings were dynamited, contained thousands of names.

With the exception of Barry and Morris the president's action practically ends the celebrated case. It is believed Barry and Morris will be pardoned later.

Many of the conspirators have already begun serving their sentences, some being due to expire soon at Leavenworth. Since the pardon applications have been in Washington, two defendants, Olaf Tveitmoe of San Francisco and Richard Ouilhan of Chicago, were granted new trials, but their cases are expected to be dropped.

The trials were held in Indianapolis in 1912.

The execution was witnessed by a jury of twelve negroes and the minister and physicians in attendance also were negroes.

Commission to Be Named to Adjust Private Claims Growing Out of War In Mexico—President Promptly Gives Delegates Authority to Sign Pact Looking Toward Peace

Niagara, Falls, Ont., June 25.—Terms for the composing of all international differences between the United States and Mexico have been concluded.

The conditions under which diplomatic relations will be resumed were embodied in a protocol which was signed by the ambassador of Brazil, the ministers of Chile and Argentina and the American and Huerta delegates.

The single outstanding proviso in the protocol is that the international problem shall be declared adjusted on the establishment of the new provisional government. The protocol sets forth:

That the United States and Argentina, Brazil and Chile—the mediating countries—shall recognize the new provisional government, and that henceforth diplomatic relations between the United States and Mexico shall be resumed.

That the United States demands no indemnity and does not further exact satisfaction for any of the incidents connected with the patrol of Mexican waters and invasion of the country.

That a commission shall be appointed to adjust private claims growing out of the revolution and international incidents.

The protocol was drafted Wednesday and its phraseology telegraphed to Washington for approval. Word came from President Wilson and Secretary Bryan authorizing the American delegates to sign it.

The Mexican delegation had not expected so prompt a response. Dr. Naon, the minister from Argentina, also had failed to notify them that there would be a full conference. Louis El Guero, one of the Huerta delegates, was several miles away at dinner when the conference was called. He made a hurried trip in an automobile, and upon his arrival the conference began.

The effort to finish work on the international points in the peace plan, so that all might be complete before the convening of informal meetings of constitutionalists and Huerta representatives, has been in progress since last Friday.

Baptist Convention Makes Sure of Rockefeller's $100,000 Gift

Boston, June 25.—Spurred on by a gift of $100,000 made by telegraph by John D. In two hours and fifteen minutes more than $50,000 was raised by the assembly in contributions and pledges from $1 to $1000 from individuals, churches and Baptist organizations in all parts of the United States.

STILL MISSING.

Definite information regarding the whereabouts of Joseph Lo Presti, a West Quincy Italian charged with the abduction of Louisa Monti, the 15 year old neice of his wife, is not known but his brother Frank Lo Presti of Providence, R. I. has retained an attorney to act in behalf of the missing man.

The police department sent out descriptions to various cities and outgoing steamers were watched without results. It is now practically certain that the man and his captive have not left this country.

The girl has been in America about a year and was employed at the factory of the Tubular Rivet & Stud Co. in Wollaston. A week ago Tuesday she left home for work and has not since been seen.

A SINGULAR CUSTOM

And How It Was Illustrated by a Russian Countess

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

A ball was in progress in the Winter palace at St. Petersburg. There were few persons in the resplendent throng who were not titled, and in Russia even a prince cannot hold his position in the court circle without complying with a number of requirements. Among the few at the ball without the prefix to the name of count, baron, duke or even general, without gold lace or a string of decorations on the breast, but in plain black evening dress, was Adelbert Wyman, an attache to the American legation.

If Wyman was bereft of artificial plumage nature had endowed him with an attractive personality. He was finely built, being tall and proportioned for an athlete, while his countenance bespoke a manly spirit within. Having inherited a fortune and work not being a necessity with him, he had adopted a profession in which money making had no part and which to him seemed full of interest—diplomacy.

Wyman had prepared himself for his career by the study of international law and more especially of several foreign languages. Russian among the number. He was therefore enabled to chat in her native tongue with a young Russian girl, with whom he danced several times at this imperial ball. The Countess Olga Ivanovna was one of those women of the north whose complexions are fair, whose eyes are blue and whose hair is flaxen. Notwithstanding the fact that she was noble and her companion was a commoner, she seemed to be pleased with him. Indeed, there was something unique in that unadorned figure among hundreds of men most of whom relied for admiration on their velvet clothes, tinsel and the medals strung on their breasts. Some of them were misshapen, some had homely faces, and all were dressed as if for a play. Wyman alone was unadorned.

"How do you like Russia?" asked the countess. All visitors are asked this question and if they are well bred usually reply that they like the country they visit very much. Wyman's reply was that the country interested him. When asked why, he said that it was in the marked difference to what he had been accustomed.

"In what way?" asked the girl.

"First, with you Russians everything points from the people to the government, while with us everything points from the government to the people. In other words, here the people seem to be for the government, while with us our government is for the people. But it is the many singular customs in the different parts of your great empire that especially interest me, the pronounced varied types of your people. I have read that in a certain province dowryless girls are raffled for as wives, the money paid in for chances being given for a marriage portion."

"There is a more singular custom than that," added the countess. "In a certain part of Russia the girls propose to the men. If a girl wants to marry a man she goes to his house. If he refuses to marry her he is regarded as insulting her and her family, and they take revenge upon him."

"The privilege of proposing marriage," said Wyman, "accorded to the man is a mere custom. For my part I see no reason why a woman should not be as free to ask a man to marry her as that a man is free to ask her to be his wife."

"Do you really mean that?" asked the countess, looking up at Wyman archly.

"I certainly do. But you must not take me in that respect as representing my countrymen. I like to think for myself and am not a slave to customs."

The two parted at this point, but just before the ball closed they met again.

"We go next week to our home in the province of Viatka," she said. "If you will make us a visit there I think I can show you some more of our odd customs. The people about us have some very singular ones."

"I assure you I feel highly honored by the invitation and shall accept it with much pleasure."

In time Wyman received a formal invitation to visit Count Ivan Ivanovna's estates in Viatka. A time was set for his coming, but none for his departure. This surprised him, for it is usual among most entertainers in high life all over the world to invite their guests for a definite period. The American was cordially received by the young lady's family and a suit of rooms placed at his disposal. He had not before met any of them except Olga, and he seemed to be considered her especial guest. At any rate, she took upon herself his entertainment, driving him about herself, showing him the people, how they lived, how they worked and how they reared their children. Wyman was much interested in it all and more especially in the ignorance of not only the children, but of their parents.

"But you have not shown me," said Wyman one day when they were out together, "any of those singular customs you spoke of when in St. Petersburg."

"You must be patient," was the reply. "You Americans are always in haste. If you are to be a diplomat you must get rid of that American trait."

A couple of weeks passed. Olga Ivanovna showed no disposition to part with her visitor, nor did he care especially to return to the city. There were no intricate questions between the United States and Russia to render his attendance on his chief necessary, and he was not recalled. He occupied his time during the day in studying the Russian people under the guidance of his fair hostess, and the evenings did not seem long enough, since he invariably spent them in her company.

If Wyman thought of what might come of this association it certainly did not occur to him that a family whose nobility might be traced back for centuries, which was in high favor with the czar, would consent to admit a commoner like himself into its charmed circle by giving him one of its members to wife. Nor did he suspect that Olga Ivanovna would stoop to ally herself with him. He was happy, and he was young, and young persons are not given to looking to a point where their happiness may come to an end.

One evening Olga showed a well defined symptom that the little god had claimed her as one of its victims. He parting with the American was accompanied by an intensity of feeling not before definitely displayed. Wyman went to his rooms wondering. Could it be that, yielding to love, this high-born beauty would surrender to an untitled man from the other side of the globe?

The next morning Olga told her guest that there was to be a singular ceremony in the line of what she had promised him. He was delighted. Olga would take part in it. Would he like to do the same? Certainly. What was it like? There would be racing. She would be dressed in running costume. If he intended to take part he would better dress for the same purpose. Capital! He had been a sprinter in school and afterward in college. He had several cups at home he had won on the cinder path.

An hour later Olga appeared attired in a dress the skirt of which came only to the knees. Wyman had no sprinting costume with him, so he appeared simply in a pair of white flannel trousers and shirt. Thus arrayed, the two sprang into a phaeton which stood at the door, and Olga drove to a field on which was a crowd of people. At one end of the open space was a tent. Olga drove to a point near the canvas, and both she and her guest alighted. Olga went into the tent for a few moments, whete she divested herself of her jacket and came out ready for a run.

Wyman saw no one else prepared for racing and noticed that he and Olga seemed to be the center of attraction. While he was wondering what it all meant, Olga, who had walked a short distance from him, turned, beckoned to him and then darted away over the field.

Wyman ran after her. There was the same excitement, the same cheers, the same shouts, as when he had won cups in America. He was surprised to see that Olga was running very swiftly. Gallantry at first caused him to moderate his pace, but it was not long before he realized that if he was to catch her he must do his best.

The space to be traveled was 200 yards, and to win Wyman must catch the fugitive before reaching a goal at the other end of the field. He was at first so dilatory that when Olga had made half the distance it seemed he would lose. And so he would have lost had not Olga in the next quarter slowed her pace. Within a hundred yards of the goal she ran so slowly that Wyman had no difficulty in catching her. He put his hand on her shoulder, and she fell back into his arms amid a vociferous approval of the onlookers.

Having recovered her breath, she slipped her arm through his, and they walked back together to the starting point. Out of the tent came a priest and advanced toward them. Olga raised her hand in protest.

"No, no, father. This is not a real wedding. This gentleman wished to see some of our customs, and I thought I had best show him one of our wedding ceremonies and arrange that he should be a part of it, but your services will not be required."

Wyman stood looking at the speaker wonderingly. The excitement of the chase was upon him. Moreover, a delightful suspicion flashed in his mind that there was something more in this ceremony than to show him a custom of the country.

As for the crowd, it showed signs of dissent. There were cries of "A wedding, a wedding!" But the countess, who was much beloved by the people, stilled them.

"For my part," said Wyman, looking at Olga with eyes that expressed far more than his words implied, "I think the people are right. We should not disappoint them."

At this the cries were renewed, and this time Olga found it impossible to still them. She gave Wyman a questioning look, then dropped her eyes. Wyman struck while the iron was hot and signaled to the priest to advance and perform the ceremony. Olga yielded, and the two, having been made one, were escorted to the bride's home by a singing, shouting populace.

Wyman returned to the embassy at St. Petersburg, and it was announced to the world that the secretary of the American legation and the Countess Olga Ivanovna were betrothed. Not long afterward they were married in presence of the imperial family, and there were few persons at the capital who knew that this was a supplementary ceremony.

Wyman's life has been spent mostly abroad, but a portion of it he has lived in America with his Russian wife.

NOTABLE WEDDINGS.

Festive Attire Worn By Maids And Matrons and Many Brides During the Month of Roses.

The month of roses and brides was ushered in with such an array of wedding festivities in town and out, that people are put to it to attend even a small part of their bids. If it were not for the fact that all the nearby places are very easy of access by train and just a pleasant spin by motor car, brides would receive congratulations from only a small part of their list. As it is, out of town events have decidedly the preference, other things being equal, for of course personal popularity and family connections have a deal to do with the number of guests when so many weddings come all at once.

A DISTINGUISHED GATHERING.

An exceptionaly distinguished gathering attended the wedding of Miss Bacon, daughter of Robert Bacon, ex-Ambassador to France, and George Whitney, formerly of Boston, now a resident of New York. The pretty church at Westbury, Long Island, was filled to overflowing for the ceremony at noon. All the Long Island set came by motors as well as many people from Westchester and Tuxedo, so that park room was at a premium and one saw all the newest and smartest things in auto coats, as well as festive gowns.

THE BRIDAL GOWN.

The bride walked up the nave with her father, who gave her in marriage. Her gown was made of old point lace, a family heirloom, arranged in flounces and drapery on a foundation of supple satin. The corsage was all of lace and a voluminous veile of tulle was held to her blonde coiffure by a half wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a prayer book and wore as her only ornament a short string of superb pearls.

McCall Design
Misses' Dress, 5934

Six bridesamids were in attendance who wore gowns of palest pink charmeuse flounced with white lace. The corsage was also of the lace with a low-necked foundation of the flesh colored satin. Short tunics and bretelles of turquoise blue taffeta trimmed with self-ruchings gave a chic note of color contrast.

Hats of pale yellow straw fully ten inches high as to crown and with scarcely any brim, were trimmed with plaitings of pale yellow tulle that veiled the straw and rose above the flat barrow crowns forming at the lower edge a ruched effect against the hair. Wreaths of tiny pink roses broken at intervals by turquoise blue flowers were placed just above the lower edge of the rim. All the bridesmaids carried loose sprays of Weigela, and each wore the bride's gift, a little pear-shaped turquoise pendant from a slender gold chain.

THE WEDDING BREAKFAST.

After the ceremony, the guests motored, over to the house for the reception and wedding breakfast. The bride and groom received standing before a screen of flowers, and the breakfast was served in marquees on the lawn and music and dancing followed. Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt with Dr. and Mrs. Richard Derby (formerly Miss Ethel Roosevelt), the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand who was wearing an amethyst taffeta gown topped by a hat to match, with a long list of others as well known who attended both the ceremony and reception. Mrs. August Belmont wore a notably simple but charming frock of white embroidered crepe with a flounced skirt, and a wide brimmed black and white sailor hat. Mrs. Bacon was in corn colored silk and crepe topped with a very large flat hat. Mrs. John E. Cowdin in mustard-color crepe-de-chine with tiny nosegays in brilliant colors and a very large shepherdess hat in mustard color with tiny sprays of vivid buds on the brim.

GAY COLORED WRAPS.

Gay colored wraps, in the popular mustard and coral tones, as well as many in softer pastel tints topped the dainty frocks as people stepped from their cars, and no end of smart cape wraps of satin in black and colors, with striped linings in black and white and in vivid colors were worn by matrons, but the girlish contingent leaned decidedly to golfine for materials and pure color tints in their wraps which for the most part, showed the circular cut raglan models, so poular this season.

A ROSE WEDDING.

A pretty rose wedding which took place in the bride's home, just off Central Park West, seemed like anything but a town affair, for the house was literally a bower of roses. The bride and her attendants passed through a ribboned aisle with the posts topped by bunches of roses.

The bride wore a satin gown completely veiled with tulle and a tulle train embroidered in pearls. A wreath of green leaves held her veil to her coiffure and her flowers were lillies of the valley and white pansies. The bridesmaids and matron of honor wore pink satin frocks with long tunics of pink tulle, and pink satin hats veiled with tulle and trimmed with pink roses. They carried pink snapdragons, while the two little flower girls were in white and pink and carried pink sweet peas.

POWDER BLUE GOWNS.

Very dark, powder blue has been the favorite color for the going away gown worn by the majority of the early June brides, and one of the prettiest was topped by a waist of blue chiffon made up over shadow lace and with a skeleton bretelle of matching ribbed silk which also formed a detail of the shirt trimming. The dress material was the popular and practical wool gaberdine.

COLOR CONTRASTS.

TWO ALARMS NO DAMAGE

Two more bon fires built for the Fourth of July celebration were touched off Wednesday evening and it is hardly probable that others will be built in time for the night before.

About eight o'clock the West Quincy boys heard that the police were going to oblige them to tear down their gigantic pile of lumber, barrels and boxes on the vacant lot at Cross and Copeland streets, and to forestall them, someone produced a match and set her going. The sparks flew all over the district but started no fires.

About 9.30 the boys touched off the bon fire at Payne street. Box 31 was sounded by someone who saw the reflection. The first round came in 21 and the auto apparatus made a quick run to Whitwell street. There they learned that the overloaded fire alarm circuit had again given them a wild goose chase.

WEYMOUTH

Mrs. Mary Jones of North Weymouth was pitched headlong in City Square, Quincy, on Wednesday morning when she tripped in alighting from an electric car. She landed on her shoulder and was badly shaken up. Her year and a half old baby girl, who was in her arms at the time, was thrown several feet further than the mother and was badly cut and brused but received no serious injury. Mrs. Jones left North Weymouth Wednesday, morning to go to New Hampshire for an extended visit, and on account of her accident has postponed her trip several weeks.

SAVED BY PULMOTOR

Woman Was Bathing at Merrymount Park

The pulmotor at the Quincy police station proved its value this afternoon when it restored to life Miss Rose Hill of Warren avenue extension who became unconscious while bathing in the creek at Merrymount park.

It was about 1.30 when the telephone call came from the Seewr station near the park and the response was quick. The pulmotor was put to work and almost immediately there were signs of life.

Rose was swimming in the waters at the foot of Merrymount Park and was rescued from drowning by Ralph Melendy of 11 Grant street.

Little Rose was riding on the back of Persy Coupal and at some distance from shore pulled him under.

As she was going down the third time Coupal pushed her toward Melendy and he brought her ashore.

Percy Holmgren and Richard Chandler of Wollaston ran to the pumping station. Dr. Adams responded to the call and the pulmotor was sent by the police auto.

The girl was revived and taken to her home.

TO BE GUEST OF COUNCILLOR

Lieut. Governor Barry to Visit C. W. Guy

Lieut. Governor Barry will be the guest on Saturday of Councillor Chas. W. Guy at his residence on Butler road. Of course he will point out to him the route of the proposed extension of the Metropolitan parkway, and the necessity of early construction, but it would not do to show him those model tenements where no children are wanted.

He Escaped.

He was standing at the counter of a gun store waiting for a clerk when an acquaintance came in. He was one of those communicative acquaintances who catch the victims by the buttonhole and talk and talk and say things over and over. Presently the clerk came up.

"Do you keep the Maxim silencer?" asked the waiting man.

"Yes, sir."

"Is it any good—will it stop the noise?"

"It will."

"Have you one for a large bore?"

"We have them for all sizes."

"Will they work on a repeater?"

"They'll work on anything."

"Then put one on Bill here and charge it to me."

And in the moment of mystified silence that followed the rude man made his escape.—Indianapolis News

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufarturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

SENATE COMMITTEE

members of the committee and those present by declaring "the best thing to do would be to give Bates some damages and shut him up." The statement was made while Mr. Bryant was speaking in favor of the decree plan.

Gustave B. Bates, the man referred to and one of the most aggressive of the depressionists took the floor immediately and asked Mr. Bryant if he ever knew of his being bought, and the ex-Mayor retorted "you know best about that yourself."

During the hearing a debate arose over the Section 1 of the bill and Chairman Ward of the committee stated his interpretation of the section was the tracks would be depressed 21 feet and did not provide for the elevation of streets over them.

Representative Michael T. Sullivan after the hearing said he would have an amendment introduced in the Senate that would make this provision.

Mayor John L. Miller was very mild in his talk. He said he had been accused of being tricked by an invisible commission, but when he was confronted with all the facts he had acted as he thought best for the city. He said he was familiar with the problems from the very first The night the Granite Manufacturers' Association took action on it there were 18 present and sentiment was evenly divided. He said he was elected a member of their committee by a majority of one vote.

It is said I changed my mind, and in one sense I did, he added, but that is a privilege of everyone after things are seen in the proper light. The decree plan is the best for the city and I think so now.

Mayor Miller said there had been many mistatements on the matter. The head room at School street is not as much as the Railroad Commissioner's demand. Therefore more is necessary.

He objected to the statement that only a small percentage favored the decree plan. I have heard that gentleman (G. B. Bates) make statements before that did not work out well.

COST EXCESSIVE.

Engineer Tuttle of the railroad said that by the proposed bill the tracks would have to be depressed 21 feet and Engineer Walker of the Bay State Street Railway Co., objected on the grounds of excessive costs.

City Engineer Sargent explained the plans and said he had advised the signing of the decree.

BILL DANGEROUS.

H. T. Whitman said he was one of those referred to as the invisible commission. He accused G. B. Bates of misquoting him. He said the plans for depression was not feasible and declared the bill to be dangerous. He could find no engineer that would endorse it.

Mr. Bates asked him how many of the 51 parcels of land taken by the decree plan had been sold by him but the question was ruled out.

John Q. A. Field spoke of his long experience and after a lengthy discussion favored the decree plan.

Engineer Breed was present and gave a technical explanation of the plans.

PEOPLE NOT READY.

Henry M. Faxon said it was time something was done as transfers of property were being held up. He said when Mr. Sullivan states the people of Quincy are ready to pay the additional cost which will be necessary because of depression, he does not fairly represent the people.

E. W. Branch, an engineer, favored the decre plan.

OPPOSED REFERENDUM.

Ex-Mayor Bryant after disposing of G. B. Bate's attitude took exception to the remarks of James H. Wall of Houghs Neck, and said School street was not in great demand He favored the referendum but not in this particular matter.

Paul R. Blackmur said it was misuse of the referendum to put the bill before the people of Quincy because others living beyond that would be affected could say nothing on the matter.

Collective.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that one John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

well educated, altho you may not as yet be learned. The sooner you catch the distinction between being educated and being learned the better for yourselves. You have been trained to think straight. You have been taught the things that are worth while, the things that constitute useful knowledge and have been brought to the point where you can adapt yourselves to any reasonable task that comes your way. And while the process was going on, you were being made acquainted with the greatest minds in the world's history and learning of them. You are in very truth heirs of all the ages in the foremost files of time.

I have no doubt you will now speedily seek useful employment and find it; and having obtained it I know you can retain it This country is still the land of opportunity and there is considerable demand for your labor. In saying this, I am not unmindful of the fact that there are thousands of men and women looking for work and unable to find it. There are also thousands working hard and being robbed and starved while being worked. When Thomas Carlyle and later a famous American educator prescribed hard work and plenty of it as the cure for our ills and maladies, they did not discriminate. The miners in Pennsylvania and Colorado have hard work and plenty of it, but they receive for it only starvation wages. The same conditions exist in Lawrence, Lowell and other places in this fair country. And in many of our mills and factories and department stores women and girls are being overworked and grossly underpaid.

You, young men, will not have to labor under bad conditions. Your training here has adapted you for kinds of labor which are still well paid. And you, young ladies, will not be obliged to work in the department stores or mills or factories where unjust conditions prevail; for your education has fitted you for more lucrative tasks. You will never feel like singing the song of the short. You are indeed fortunate."

The chairman then paid a compliment to the boys and girls for their conduct on the streets on their way to and from school, saying that he had been meeting them every day and knew whereof he spoke. He closed with these words:

"Now what does the City of Quincy expect of you in return for the education she has given you? Simply that you play the game and that you play it fairly. Manifest a love of industry and a sense of honor. If you do so, you will be living witnesses of the value of education. If you will show by your walk and conversation that you are High School graduates, you will be making it easier for us and our successors on the school board to obtain from the City Council the money wherewith to give similar education to the boys and girls who are coming after you. You will be enabling us to keep this school going, with powers unimpaired."

DEER CHASE AT ATLANTIC

A deer made its appearance in Atlantic Wednesday morning and in escaping a crowd jumped fences five feet high crossed lawns, dodged electric cars and autos, and frightened nearly a score of people before it reached the woodland in the vicinity of the golf links. Where it came from is not known, neither is it known, where it has gone.

It was early when the low cry of the deer was first heard in the yard of John Holloran, wagon man at police headquarters. Several took up the chase and in eluding capture the animal jumped a five foot fence with ease, landed in the middle of Officer Holoran's hens, causing them to scatter in all directions, and then took to the woods. It is thought that the deer was one of those in from the Blue Hills.

COLBATH—SMITH.

Miss Grace Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James K. Smith, was united in marriage Wednesday evening to John Colbath of Dorchester. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride, 7 Bass street, Wollaston in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and immediate family friends Rev. William B. Ayres officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Miss Anna Chandler of Brockton was maid of honor, the best man being Mr. Norcrut of Dorchester. The home was prettily decorated with Japanese lanterns and roses. The bride stood under an arch of peonies.

The bride was becomingly gowned in white charmeuse with silk shadow lace and carried a bouqet of bridal roses.

Immediately following the ceremony there was a reception which was largely attended. The bridal couple left later in the evening amidst a shower of rice, confetti and old shoes for a wedding trip to the White Mountains, after which they will reside in their new home in Dorchester.

STRONG OPPOSITION TO DEPRESSION PLAN

Bill As Drawn Does Not Provide for Any Change in Street Grades

Adverse Report Expected from the Senate Committee

That new bill for abolishing the grade crossings in Quincy is seriously defective especially in section one of the bill, is evident by the interpretation put upon that section by Chairman Wade of the Senate Committee on Ways and Means, and by those in opposition to the passage of the bill. The bill was characterized at Thursday's hearing before the committee as being a dangerous bill and the evidence seemed to bear out this fact.

Under the interpretation of Sect. 1, the crossings must be abolished wholly by depressing the tracks through Quincy from Norfolk Downs to the Braintree line. If the tracks were lowered a few feet as desired by Mr. Bates, several streets must be elevated in order to get accross the tracks. Notably these streets are Saville, Granite and Water streets. There is no provision however for the elevating the grade of these streets and according to Chairman Wade of the committee and others who spoke at Thursday's hearing these streets could not be elevated under the bill.

In other words in order to accomplish the separation of the grades the tracks must be lowered 21 feet at the Quincy station which would entail enormous expense which the opponents of the bill have claimed from the first.

While this defect was hinted at during the first day's hearing, it was not brought out forcibly until Thursday morning, when Engineer Tuttle of the Railroad submitted a plan showing what the situation would be if the tracks were depressed as called for by the bill. This showed them put down 21 feet which would be necessary in order to give the railroad the headroom required by the Public Service Commission. The expense of the abolition of the crossings by this plan would it was estimated cost over $4,000,000.

Engineer Tuttle stated that the grade of the tracks at Braintree had already been decreed and could not be changed. That there was now a grade of 35 feet to the mile between Quincy Adams and Braintree and that long trains were frequently stalled there, and that it was necessary to split them to climb the grade. With the tracks depressed as called for by the bill the grade would be 85 feet to the mile and prohibitive, as it would be impossible to operate long trains. Engineer Tuttle also spoke of the matter of draining. To depress the tracks 21 feet would bring them below the level of Town brook through which the surface water would have to be drained, with the result that the tracks would be overflowed. It would also be necessary to abolish the freight yard at South Quincy and require expensive changes in the spur tracks to the granite yards.

Mr. Bates suggested that the long trains could be sent over the Granite branch but Engineer Tuttle said that this would not be giving the public the service demanded. He also stated that the road between Boston and Braintree was one of the heaviest operated in the state as regards the number of trains.

Mr. Bates claimed that by his plan of depression the tracks would not be over three feet lower than today. This brought out the discussion as to Sect. 1 of the bill during which it was interpreted to mean that the tracks must be depressed but contained no provision for elevating the streets.

Mr. Bates said that he had $50,000 worth of property, and if Saville street was closed up it would damage him. He further said that his plan called for perfect railroading. His plan he said was made by Mr. Whitman. Later during the session Mr. Whitman denied emphatically making any plan for Mr. Bates or that a plan was made in his office.

Representative Sullivan ,who came into the hearing while Mr. Tuttle was being heard arose to his feet and said that if the bill was defective in this respect that he would have it amended in the House.

Chairman Wade asked who will pay the cost of elevating the streets.

Representative Sullivan,—The City of Quincy will pay ten per cent. This reply caused a laugh among those present.

Continuing, Engineer Tuttle said that Granite street would have to be put over the tracks which would mean a great expense.

GOOD WORK BY BEETLES

Some one brought a mammoth beetle into City Hall from Houghs Neck on Thursday to inquire what kind of an animal it was. It was said that there were many of these beetles at Houghs Neck and that people were wondering if a new pest had arrived on the scene.

Andrew Stewart, the city expert on bugs, quickly dispelled all fears, telling the finder of the bug that it was a species of the beetle imported from Japan to combat the gypsy moth pest. The beetle which is about an inch and a half long, is of changeable color and the only thing it lives on is the gpysy moth. The beetle is doing a great work in exterminating this great pest and finders of the beetle should be careful not to harm them.

They are perfectly harmless to everyone or everything except the gypsy moth. According to Mr. Stewart there are thousands of the beetles in Quincy and they are doing a great work. If you see one of these beetles about the house therefore do not kill it, but pat him on the back and say go on with your good work.

CLASS OF 1914 RECEPTION

High School Graduates Entertain at Alpha Hall

One of the most brilliant receptions ever held in this city took place in Alpha hall on Thursday evening, when the members of the senior class of Quincy High met in a social way and entertained over 200 of their friends.

The invited guests gathered early and most of them remained late, and among those present were members of the faculty, prominent citizens, alumni and undergraduates of the school.

The decorations were in red and gold, the class colors, and about the hall was festooned colored bunting and flags, the entire decorative scheme being relieved by potted plants and palms.

The matrons were Mrs. A. L. Barbour and Mrs. Ernest L. Collins, and the patrons were Ernest L. Collins, principal of the school, and A. L. Barbour, superintendent of schools. They received until almost 9 o'clock, when the grand march was formed with Harry S. Burr, president of the class, and Miss Mildred Bonney, as the leading couple.

Refreshments, ices and frappe were served in Union hall. The floor was in charge of Harry S. Burr and the committee was Miss Dorothea L. Brokaw, Miss Viola Jackson, Miss Margaret Magee, Clifton H. Young, James H. Jenkins, Jr.

The dance program consisted of twelve numbers and four extras, the feature of which was the 1914 special. There were three one steps, two castle walks, three waltzes and two hesitations. All indulged in these modern dances and all respected the wishes of the committee, and did not depart from the custom of the modern ball rooms, of not carrying their pleasures to extremes.

This evening the class of 1914 will have a banquet exclusively for the graduates.

LETTERS FOR TENNIS TEAM

The members of the Quincy High school tennis team, who in one season placed the school in the front rank of interscholastic circles so firmly that they are considered the champions, have been given school letters. Their Q. T. T. was awarded several days ago by Ernest L. Collins, headmaster. The layout of the letters was designed by Fred Atwood, and is one large block letter Q with the other letters somewhat smaller. They are red, similar to the High school color.

Tennis was practically introduced at High school last year when several who played the game organized with Richard Z. Crane, Harvard '17 as the captain. The season was a successful one. This year the team was re-organized and the only match lost in the eight played was the St. Mark's Academy. Newton, early in the season, considered the champion school boys' team, met defeat at the hands of Quincy twice.

The team this season was captained by Willard Crocker and Fred Atwood was the player-manager. The others that now wear the letters are Horton Page, Fred Rollins, Arthur Favreau, Leon White, Thomas Barstow.

WILSON—JONES.

An interesting wedding was solemnized Thursday evening when Miss Florence J. Jones of Quincy a popular member of the Rebekah lodge and of the Philathea and Internos clubs connected with the Bethany Congregational church and Robert Wilson affiliated with the Order of Scottish Clans were united in marriage by the Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott pastor of Bethany Congregational church. The bride was attended by her sister Miss Ethel Jones of Quincy and Thomas Wilson, brother of the groom was best man. The wedding was a great surprise to their many friends.

QUINCY AID AT SALEM'S BIG FIRE

Fore River Auto Engine Early on Scene and Plays Four Powerful Streams

Flames Were Plainly Seen From Many Points in Quincy

Quincy was not called upon by Salem for aid, but if it had been the response would have been prompt. Chief Bilings was all ready to ship the steamer to the scene of the conflagration had a call been received, and it would have been but a minute or two after the call when the steamer would have been on the way.

From reports from the scene it would appear to have been more of a lack of water than of fire apparatus. Although Quincy was not officially called upon, as usual in important events, the city played an important part, for the big auto steamer from the Fore River shipyard which did such effectual work at Manchester, N. H., a few days before got to the scene just in time to offer its services which were immediately accepted. The big apparatus was on its way home from Manchester at the time when Messrs Houghton and Ordway who were in charge of the apparatus heard of the fire. They were in Stoneham at the time and reached Salem 23 minutes later. The morning papers speaking of the work of this apparatus say:

"The pumping engine owned by the Fore River Shipbuilding Corp., situated at Summit avenue and Lafayette street rendered yeoman service. The machine yesterday morning went to the fire at Manchester, N. H. and was homeward bound this afternoon when Messrs. Houghton and Ordway, who were in charge of it, learned of the Salem conflagration. They were in Stoneham when they heard of the fire in Salem and they reached the city just 23 minutes later.

"Five large streams were run off this engine, a crew of men in charge of Asst. Chief "Joe" Tansey of Stoneham carrying two of the lines up through Laurel street tackling the blaze coming from Holly street. This Stoneham company stopped the fire at Linden and Holly streets.

"Behind the streams that the men worked with the pumping engine was immense pressure and residents of the exclusive Lafayette street section realized that they were extremely fortunate to have the engine in that part of the city.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

All the English Suffragettes have to do to get out of prison is to complain that the beefsteak is not sufficiently cooked.

The choice of postmasters would probably be taken away from the Senators were it not that this would promote business government.

You may think your $1.49 wedding gift looks as if it cost $5.00, but the June bride has bought presents herself.

THE BUSINESS WORLD.

An attorney of wide experience in metropolitan life, was talking a few days ago about the recent revelations of crooked finance in railroad and other corporation affairs. It seemed to him that one-half of the business men he knew were dishonest. He thought half of the other half would not do anything positvely crooked, but would wink at it if they saw it going through in a way to profit them. If this is a fair judgment, it is one of a number of reasons why the stock market ticker is almost held down by cobwebs.

The development of great corporations has created certain types of dishonesty. Just as the reporter of a metropolitan yellow journal is protected by the impersonality of the big machine he works for, so the managers of big corporations are a long way from the stockholders. They feel inaccessible. But when they "put over" a wrong deal, some one always knows. It may become for the advantage of that some one to give up his information.

In the smaller cities and country towns business men seem to be pretty honest. It pays them to be so, as the bad bargain comes back quicker than the cat. The discouraging side of business life is the freedom with which many people will lie outright, and look you in the eye when they do it. People overlook a lie too tolerantly.

The trouble with the liars and cheats is that they underestimate people's intelligence. Nine-tenths of the deceptions are so obvious as to be laughable. People who try to "get away" with these shallow tricks should be outlawed.

The public is bewildered by complicated transactions of big corporations and jugglery of millions. Financiers will find from now on, that the simpler the business form is, the easier the stock will sell. A labyrinth of holding companies and paper organizations looks as if some one was trying to elude something.

LARGE PART OF SALEM IS SWEPT AWAY

Property Loss Is Estimated at Twenty Million Dollars

HUNDREDS OF BUILDINGS ARE QUICKLY LEVELLED

Even the Use of Dynamite Fails In Many Instances to Check Flames, Which Sweep With Relentless Fury Through Manufacturing and Residential Districts—Thousands of People Homeless—Telephone and Electric Light Service Cut Off—Army of Firemen Handicapped by Low Water Pressure—Business Section of City Also Suffers—Militia Told to Shoot Looters

Salem, Mass., June 26.—Salem is practically devastated by fire. The flames, starting in a factory in the historic Gallows Hill district, were fanned by the high wind until they had consumed a thousand buildings in the manufacturing and residential districts, causing a damage estimated by the city officials at $20,000,000. The fire was placed under control through the combined work of the fire departments of half a score of cities and towns.

Apparatus that could be of great assistance was marooned at the scene of the fire start. Hose became useless when the water pressure fell.

Two people are dead and more than 100 injured. Informal martial law enforced by a half dozen companies of militia fully armed was found necessary not only because of general conditions, but by the sporadic arisings of looting in several of the burned sections apparently by an underworld faction which arrived from Boston.

Adjutant General Cole was early on the scene with Governor Walsh. As soon as the looting became apparent orders were issued to shoot at sight and this word was circulated across the city. The drastic effect of this threat, coupled with the sight of the rifles carried by the uniformed militiamen who were pouring into the city all night, was immediately apparent.

The 150 patients in the Salem hospital were removed on cots and stretchers just as the flames reached it.

Buildings Are Dynamited

The only means of effectively checking the progress of the flames was recourse to dynamite, and scores of buildings were blown up in an endeavor to hem the fire.

In many cases even this desperate act failed, the wind carrying tongues of flame over the ruins of buildings and setting ablaze others across the gap.

Women, many of them crazed at the loss of their possessions, were herded by the police and militia from many cities in groups on the edges of the burning district, and time and again were forced to vacate their refuges as the flames crept nearer. Thousands were rendered homeless, many being left without a dollar and with no prospect of employment, since the factories and tanneries in which they worked were levelled by the flames or destroyed by the dynamite. Hundreds of lost children sought their parents without receiving notice from the crazed sufferers.

The high wind and the inadequacy of the water service were the twin causes of the spread of the flames, the wind driving the fire from building to building, while the firemen could not get sufficient pressure to supply the apparatus from Boston, Lynn, Beverly, Marblehead, Manchester, N. H., and other cities rushed to the doomed city.

Fire Starts From Explosion

Starting from an explosion in the Korn Leather company's factory at 2 p. m., the fire spread through the shoe and leather district, filled with tanneries and boot shops, swept through the residential district as far south as the Boston and Maine freight sheds and railroad station and then veered east to the water's edge.

While the combined fire-fighting forces were endeavoring to extinguish the principal blaze, two other fires broke out, as a result of the brands carried on the high wind, and burned practically unchecked, laying waste a section of North street and the district surrounding the oil tank of the Standard Oil comany in the extreme northwest of the city.

The burned buildings include the entire plants of scores of companies upon which the majority of the 45,000 inhabitants depended for their livelihoods, the $250,000 St. Joseph's Cathaolic church, only recently dedicated; scores of business houses, the city orphan asylum, sheltering 150 children; and hundreds of residences.

City Left Without Lights

To add to the catastrophe, the plant of the Salem Electric Light company was destroyed and the city was in total darkness save for the glare of the flames, which could be seen for more than a score of miles. The telephone service between Salem and Lynn was broken early in the progress of the fire, cutting off hundreds of residents who had returned to Lynn from Boston in hope of finding the members of their families.

While the flames were raging about the Salem hospital and the heroic nurses were removing the 150 patients to safety in cots, stretchers and every possible means of carrying them, in a ward filled with hurrying people a baby was born to Mrs. Rosetti. Both mother and child were borne to the home of a nearby resident.

Several relief stations were opened by Mayor Pegley and the city council, while the markets, groceries and bakeries furnished food for the sufferers.

Vast Territory Burned Over

The first spread of the fire was on the west side of the city at the foot of Gallows Hill. Territory about two miles long and more than half a mile wide, extending from Proctor and Boston streets on the north to Jefferson avenue in the south, was devastated by the flames. Included in this district were Proctor, Pope, Broad, Hawthorne, Winthrop, Mt. Vernon, Endicott and Peabody streets, on which practically all structures were destroyed.

In the meantime falling embers from the conflagration started fires in South Salem while all available fire apparatus was in the Gallows Hill section.

South Salem was left without fire protection and first one building and then another burst into flame without means of prevention.

For several hours the fire in this district was confined to a small oval extending from Porter street on the north to Hancock street on the south and from the canal to Lafayette street. As evening approached the fire spread in all directions, destroying hundreds of residences in the district, including many handsome houses on Lafayette street, the most fashionable thoroughfare in Salem.

Orphan Asylum Destroyed

The city orphan asylum on Lafayette street, sheltering 150 children, was destroyed. All the children were taken by the nuns to a place of safety.

The flames devastated Lafayette street from Cedar and Everett streets south to the state normal school. From this point the fire swept like a huge sickle across Salem and Park streets to the water front.

There was no apparatus here to check the flames, which licked up scores of tenements and high wooden apartment houses.

The Naumkeag cotton mills, employing 3000 hands, were swept by the flames, and the entire Point district, where most of the mill operatives had their homes, was wiped out. Many children of these families were reported to the police as missing.

At the start the water pressure was low, and when the fight had become desperate a great water main near Beverly bridge broke, and the firemen were almost helpless.

Aid From Outside Sources

Meantime calls for assistance had been sent to nearby cities and an enormous quantity of apparatus, ranging from the most antiquated tubs to the new high pressure automobile engine of the Manchester, N. H., fire department, joined in the fight against the flames. The latter undertook to pump water from the ocean. Boston, Lynn and other cities sent apparatus and details of police.

The combined efforts of the greatest aggregation of fire-fighting machines that has been seen here were futile, and when darkness fell resort had to be made to dynamite. Several blocks in the path of the flames were blown up in the hope of checking their progress, but a fickle wind that shifted four times each time carried the destruction in a new direction.

The firemen hoped at the time to make a stand behind the solid brick walls of St. Joseph's church, but the blaze jumped the Boston and Maine tracks just south of the depot and then reached the block bounded by Salem harbor and Ward street, where a whole nest of closely crowded tenement houses were soon in flames. Directly opposite was the large brick plant of the Salem Electric Light company. This was destroyed and the city deprived of light and power.

Cinders Start Third Fire

A third fire, started by cinders from the burning buildings in the leather district, swept through the French settlement, as the peninsular bounded by the harbor front, Palmer's Cove and Smith's river is known.

This was a thickly populated district. Most of the buildings were wooden and burned like tinder.

Several factories on and around Lafayette street, near the business district, including the Glover shoe plant and the Goodale machine factory, were destroyed.

The whole of the Italian and Greek colonies, including 250 houses and stores, were destroyed.

In the meantime, falling embers from the conflagration started fires in South Salem.

Just when there seemed to be some hope that the fire might be checked along New Derby street and Fairfield dock, a cruel blow fell on the city in the form of a new fire which started in the Salem Oil company's tanks near North street, on the windward side of the business centre.

This swept with unrelenting fury on the buildings on Essex street and Town House square. At 9:05 the operators and newspaper men were forced to leave the Western Union office on Washington street and transfer their operations to Beverly.

Having laid waste practically the entire residential section, the flames this morning turned north and rapidly burned their way to Essex street, the business thoroughfare of the city.

MOTORCAR PROGRESS.

Standardization of the Parts and What That Means.

Ask any engineer what feature of modern motorcar construction represents the greatest improvement and advancement in design, and he will say not the automatic engine starter, the six cylinder engine, but standardization.

That may be a word which means but little to the car owner, but he unconsciously derives untold benefit from it every day that he runs his automobile. By reason of it he has only to ask for a certain kind of spark plug and he knows it will fit the cylinder, he has only a dozen or so different sizes of tires from which to select the one adapted to his car, and even the carburetor may be replaced by one of a different make without any change whatsoever in the bolt holes or attaching flange.

A vital part of the motor or running gear may be replaced by a blacksmith or local machine shop from the ordinary sizes of stock carried on hand, and the screw thread sizes as now used conform to a certain standard that renders replacements exceedingly simple. Grease cups, nuts or bolts that may have been lost may be replaced at the nearest supply store or garage, for no longer does each manufacturer work only to his own specifications on these minor parts.—H. W. Slauson, M. E., in Leslie's.

LOST HIS BAROMETER.

Count Zeppelin Says General Butterfield Sneaked It Away.

Count Zeppelin, the inventor of the dirigible balloon, is not a stranger to the United States, for he saw service with the Union army in the war between the states. In his recently published reminiscences he tells this amusing story of General Butterfield, who was chief of staff in the Army of the Potomac:

In planning operations General Butterfield attached special significance to knowledge of the probable weather conditions, and for this reason he became especially fond of an excellent aneroid barometer that I had obtained from London and paid a lot of money for.

He saw this instrument in my tent, borrowed it from me, then found it impossible to give it up. He kept it a longer time each time he borrowed it until at last he failed to return it at all. When I was about to leave the army I asked him again and again to return it, and I finally became so pressing that he said he would go to his tent and fetch it out.

After waiting outside a long time I followed him into the tent. It was empty. With my barometer in his hand he had crawled under the canvas and disappeared.

Building to Please Everybody.

"Have you started to build your house yet?"

"No. We haven't quite decided what we want."

"You haven't? I thought you had that all planned out months ago."

"So we did, but Aunt Jane didn't like the living room, so we changed that to suit her, and Uncle Bill thought the porch ought to be different, and we changed that. Then Cousin Kate insisted that we'd never be satisfied without a music room, so we had to rearrange it to put that in, and my folks thought we ought to have a butler's pantry, and her folks were sure we couldn't get along without a room in the attic, and we're waiting now to learn what color an uncle in Honolulu thinks the roof ought to be."—Detroit Free Press.

Reading That Sticks.

An old lady, says the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, was discussing the differences between the old and the new. "We hadn't anything but the reading book to read when I was a girl," she said, "but I know the best parts of that so I can say them to myself now I'm sitting here in the dark, and my grandchildren don't know what they read last week! It soaked into me and it drips off of them." The editor concludes: "Not what drips off, but that which soaks in is of real importance, stays with the reader and affects and develops character."

Of Course He Swooned.

While the judge was giving his charge to the jury in the burglary case one of the jurymen fainted. His lordship had just impressively said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, in arriving at the verdict you must take the testimony of the witnesses for the defense into consideration and give them full weight."

At the words "and give them full weight" the juryman swooned away. He was a coal merchant.—London Mail.

On the Trail.

"Do you see that man going along with his head in the air, sniffing with his nose?"

"Yes, I know him."

"I suppose he believes in taking in the good, pure ozone?"

"No. He's hunting for a motor garage, I believe."—Kansas City Star.

THE SPIRIT OF '76

Some fireworks!! To be seen in Quincy the 4th!! Did you read all about them in Thursday night's Ledger?? A long fine list, and "George" says they will all be there.

As I said last night as soon as the Chief Marshal gave me the route I would give it to you. I saw him last night and it is in the Ledger today. Read it carefully. Say, it is fine.

Now get busy and dig up some features for the parade.

Galen says—"Work work hard, and success is surely ours. What is ours is yours, so help us work and work hard.

Who was the biggest "kid" last fourth at the fireworks, you or your child?

Do you wear a button yet? Better get one. Also one for each of your children. It is a sign of your interest in what the Quincy Fourth of July Association is trying to do.

I am happy(?) because I am the Publicity man of the Association. Try it yourself some year, and then I can see you laugh.

REBUILDING OF HIBERNIAN HALL

The rebuilding of Hibernian hall, made necessary by the $10,000 fire which gutted it on the morning of March 8, is almost completed and within a few days Div. 5 and the auxiliaries that make it their headquarters will again occupy it.

Several changes have been made, the principal one being the substitution of a flat for a pitched roof, giving the hall an increase of 10 feet in height. The stage has been lengthened to 25 feet, six feet wider, and a new dance floor of birdseye maple is being laid.

The lodge room on the first floor has been rebuilt and under the new arrangement there are no posts on the floor, making it suitable for degree work of the divisions.

The stairs connecting the lodge room with the upper hall are built outside the building, and are absolutely fireproof according to the latest building requirements and new ladies' waiting room and gents' smoking rooms will be installed.

The work has been carried on under the direction of a committee representing the Div. 5 Building Association, a corporation of members, and John J. Donahue, the youngest president of a division in the state.

New draft doors of the most approved pattern, will be set in different parts of the hall, and in case of future fires will act as firewalls.

The building is being rebuilt by J. W. Pratt and John G. Thomas is doing the roofing.

Have you ever heard a Hupmobile owner say anything but good of his car?

Haven't you noticed that when he wants to dispose of it to get a new one, he never has any difficulty in so doing?

Haven't you observed how willing any dealer is to take a Hup in trade at a good figure—and how few of them you see on the floor of the second-hand dealer?

If you haven't noticed these things ask any Hup owner—and you'll get the answer as to why Hups sold stay sold.

Ask Any Hupmobilist

The Hupmobile's reputation for lesser maintenence cost, for longer life, and for a higher cash value in the second-hand market is founded on the experience of Hup owners.

It is not a thing of recent growth.

It is as old as the Hupmobile itself.

Owners of other cars can't understand the Hup owner's intense loyalty and enthusiasm for his car.

Their own experience knows no such economy as typifies the month-in and month-out use of the Hup.

They see Hup owners actually going out of their way to make Hupmobile sales to their best friends.

You can easily verify all this, possibly in your own neighborhood.

A chat with a Hup owner will reveal to you phases of economy and car service you have never perceived.

PREPARING AN APPEAL

William J. Vaughn Will Take Case to District Court

J. J. MacAnarney counsel for William J. Vaughn, the deposed warden of the Quincy almshouse, is preparing an appeal from the decision of Perry Green, Overseer of the poor, who refused to reinstate him at the conclusion of a public hearing.

The appeal will be filed in the Quincy district court, after which a date for a hearing will be set and notice served on Overseer Green to appear with witnesses to show proper cause. Witnesses for the defense will also be heard. Only those who gave testimony at the public hearing will be heard.

The appeal will probably be heard by Judge Avery who will determine whether or not the Overseer of the Poor acted in good faith in removing Vaughn.

The provisions of the civil service act were extended to the wardens position some years ago, and Mr. Vaughn qualified in a non-competitive examination. William Campbell his successor has not taken an examination as yet.

QUINCY AID

SEEN FROM QUINCY.

Starting at 1.30 P. M. the fire burned all the afternoon and night. Although Quincy is over 20 miles distance clouds of smoke were visible before sunset, and as darkness approached the flames could be plainly seen from many parts of the city.

One of the vantage points was Whalley road near Goffe street, where trees did not obstruct the view. Hundreds of Quincy people watched the flames from this point late into the night.

From Wollaston Heights and the Third Hill there was an unobstructed view, also from Squantum hill, Great hill at Houghs Neck, and other elevations. Weymouth, Hull and other South Shore towns also saw the fire.

One of the many vantage points from which the conflagration could be seen was the roof of the Savings Bank building where there was a crowd of sightseers until late in the evening.

Many from Quincy took the trip to Houghs Neck and braved the attacks of the mosquitoes on Great Hill to watch the fire, the flames of which could be seen plainly.

Many people are vitally interested in the fire from the fact that many had relatives and friends residing in that city. This morning many of those interested put in telephone calls, and after a time some received answers. One answer received was by Miss Farrell of the Tax Collector's office who was anxious about the family of a cousin who resided on Essex street, and is a physician.

Miss Farrell put in her telephone call early this morning but it was not until several hours later that she got connection with her cousin, and learned that he had just returned home after being out all night. Fortunately his home was not reached by the fire.

Many others are interested in the fire on account of friends, and today many have gone to Salem to view the ruins and see the devastation that has been wrought.

ENGINE RETURNS.

Tired and weary from the hours of arduous service, suffering from severe heat burns about the face and arms, but still, a picture of contentment because of the fine reputation earned by their product, Harry L. Houghton, designer of the 150 horse power gasoline motor fire engine built at the shipyard and Alfred Coates, his mechanician, reached Quincy at 11.30 this morning after travelling 200 miles and rendering invaluable service at the Manchester, N. H. and Salem, Mass. fires.

Both men show the effects of the heavy strain, but their engine, after a critical examination is in proper condition to undergo another severe test and duplicate its demonstration of practical efficiency, after its 24 hours continuous pumping.

The machine left its birthplace, the shipyard, for Manchester, N. H. Tuesday, to give an exhibition before the officials of that city and incidentally for Mr. Houghton to look over sites for a factory site for manufacturing purposes.

A company is about to be formed to build engines and supply the world with this last word in modern motor apparatus and it understood that there is but little possibility of it locating an establishment in Quincy.

The engine had been in Manchester but a few hours when a conflagration threatened the business section and fire department heads of that place appealed to Mr. Houghton to come to their rescue. News dispatches containing statements of the officials of that place pay high tributes to the efficiency of the engine and it is generally agreed that its work was instrumental in preventing fire wiping Manchester off the map.

On Wednesday Mr. Houghton and Mr. Coates slept seven solid hours and then started for Boston. While passing through Stoneham they learned of the Salem fire when an official of that place stopped them and said Salem had ordered him to head them off and ask them to render what assistance they could.

Mr. Houghton asked for directions, opened up his engine and started for the witch city.

He made the distance, estimated about 16 miles, in 23 minutes. On the way he passed a La France motor engine from Wakefield and the fact that he had never been over the road before shows how remarkable the run was.

They reached Salem to find that Marblehead had a fire scare and had turned off its water supply leaving four Boston engines unable to draft any water in Lafayette square. Quincy was hitched up for several minutes as their pump was unable to get any water.

Finally the tanks filled and in a few minutes the gage registered 20 pound preasure. Four streams were laid, the shortest 900 feet and the longest 1200 feet, and a pressure of 120 pounds was developed on the four streams.

The officials of the Boston fire department crowded around and marvelled at the workings of the engine and people stood for hours watching and questioning Mr. Houghton and Mr. Coates.

Finally Mr. Coates called for chalk and in large white letters marked the side of the machine with "Fore River Ship Corporation engine 150 H. P., pumps 1600 gallons a minute. This made the crowd more curious and finally the militia cleared the space and allowed the operators freedom.

While the fire was at its height Mr. Coates changed a spark plug without shutting down his engine or losing any of its power. He received eight shocks but his enthusiasm prompted him to finish his task unaided.

When the machine left Salem this morning the fire was under control. Buildings that were heated by the sun of yesterday were nothing but piles of smoking debris. The streets were littered with thousands of feet of burned hose and partially melted couplings and the people of that city apparently resigned to their fate continued their weary watch.

It was a bigger and worse fire than Chelsea had, declared Mr. Coates as he rubbed the sleep out of his eyes. You're right said Mr. Houghton and they both yawned.

Mr. Houghton the designer is well known in auto circles in Boston and for some years was district manager of a Boston office of a well known company. His home is in Somerville. He first realized the future of motor apparatus when he commenced visiting the headquarters of Ladder 2 in Somerville and although he is not a machinist he was able to design and perfect the machine which has given Quincy more real live advertising the past week than it has received for some years.

Chief Swan of the Everett department, who watched the engine at work declared over the phone to Chief Billings of this city that the Fore River engine pumped the best streams directed at the fire. His praise was in line with all the praise that has been bestowed on Mr. Houghton's product since its fifteen hours work in Manchester and nine hours work in Salem.

Mrs. Michael E. Cook is to give a barn dance and card party at her home on Adams street next Wednesday for the charitable fund of the Quincy Catholic club.

FAHEY—MULRANEY .

Thomas H. Fahey, a well known granite dealer and one of the best known residents of West Quincy, and Mae S. Mulraney of Linwood, Mass., were married at Linwood on Thursday. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. Richard D. Murphy of Whitinsville and was witnessed only by the immediate families of the contracting parties.

Mr. Fahey has a place of business on Bates avenue. He is a widower. Although it was known that he intended to claim his second bride the preparations were quietly made and but few knew the date of the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Fahey are on a short honeymoon trip and will live on Bates avenue. Many of his West Quincy friends are planning to tender them a reception on their return.

BIG FIRM FAILS FOR $34,000,000

Receivers Are Named For H. B. Claflin Company

FINANCED BIG RETAIL STORES

Unable to Meet Capital Requirements Occasioned by Rapidly Expanding Dry Goods Business—Noteholders' Protective Committee Organized to Look After Interests of Creditors

New York, June 26.—The great dry goods house of the H. B. Claflin company failed with liabilities estimated at $34,000,000. The assets are estimated at $44,000,000.

Two proceedings—friendly and unfriendly—threw the firm into bankruptcy, and two receivers were named under bonds of $500,000 each.

The Claflin company controls or is affiliated with some thirty retail stores throughout the United States, and it was the indorsement of their paper, held by more than 3000 banks here and in interior cities, that caused the crash.

Unless blocked by creditors a reorganization of the failed firm is contemplated, according to a statement issued by John Claflin, the president.

The following statement was given out at the office of H. B. Claflin company:

"The unprecedented shifting of trade centres in New York has caused great loss to many interests. In the case of the H. B. Claflin company the uptown movement of business has seriously curtailed our wholesale profits and has compelled us to rely mainly on the profits from financing retail stores throughout the country. Their rapidly expanding business has occasioned large capital requirements, which we have not been able to meet.

"A receivership has, therefore, become necessary pending a readjustment of the affairs of the company. A plan of reorganization for the H. B. Claflin company will soon be presented, which we hope will prove acceptable both to creditors and to stockholders.

"The Associated Merchants company and the United Dry Goods companies are not themselves borrowers of money. They are in exceedingly strong financial position and the success of their retail stores is assured."

A noteholders' protective committee has been formed to look after the interests of the creditors. Most of the banks concerned will be represented on this committee.

New York banks are said to have made large advances to the Claflin company recently, with the hope of averting financial embarrassment. New York banking interests, it is understood, have agreed to offer such assistance as may be necessary to some of the independent retail stores affected.

John B. Martindale, president of the Chemical National bank, and Frederick A. Juilliard, a wholesale dry goods merchant, were the receivers appointed. They were named in the friendly proceedings—two suits in equity—one brought by John C. Eames, vice president of the H. B. Claflin company, with a claim of $3668; the other by William P. Odell, with a claim of $5200.

There were also involuntary proceedings which sought the appointment of different receivers and alleged that the company was insolvent. These proceedings were instituted by creditors with claims aggregating $32,000. Their attorneys said they represented other creditors with total claims of about $200,000.

No action on this petition was taken, but officials of the company were subpoenaed by the petitioning creditors to appear on or before July 2 to answer to the suit and show cause why the company should not be adjudged insolvent by the federal court.

Martindale and Juilliard said the failure was of such tremendous proportions that it would be several weeks before it would be possible to know where they stand.

Though the failure is perhaps the most important in the history of the dry goods trade in this country, New York bankers predict the chief and perhaps only potent general effect will be a temporary demoralization in the dry goods trade.

At the request of counsel, Topolian's bail was reduced from $10,000 to $3000, which was furnished, and the case was continued until July 7.

Contractor Says He Paid $2000 Blackmail to Union Business Agents

Chicago, June 26.—As the first step in his announced intention of sending some "blackmailing union business agents to jail," John G. McLoughlin, contractor and politician, held a conference with United States District Attorney Wilkerson.

McLaughlin said he had paid $2000 blackmail under threat of having strikes called on him. He declared that George Hammond, business agent for the excavators' union, who was killed two days ago by Patrick Dignan, a contractor, was one of the guilty men.

"Dignan was exasperated beyond restraint by blackmail which threatened his ruin," McLoughlin said.

Besides Hammond, McLoughlin named John Haley, business agent of the sand, limestone and cement teamsters' union, and Michael Norris of the same union.

McLoughlin went to the district attorney because he said gravel in interstate commerce had been interfered with. He decided that every sand and gravel contractor in the city had been compelled to pay blackmail to avoid strikes.

BOULIER HELD ON CHARGE OF MURDER

Denies That He Is Responsible For Miss Jensen's Death

Caribou, Me., June 26.—Alden Boulier was held without bail for the November term of the supreme court when arraigned on the charge of murdering Miss Emma Jensen. He pleaded not guilty to the charge.

Boulier told the officers about his experience on Monday night after attending a circus here with Miss Jensen. He said he was walking along Sweden street when he saw her and a circus attendant ahead, going in the direction of her home.

He followed for a mile and a half, then caught up with them, taking the girl by the arm. The circus man, he said, tore his shirt and the buttons from his vest, threw him into the gutter and threatened to kill him if he did not keep away.

Boulier is alleged to have told the officers he then fired three shots at the man, and, jumping a fence, disappeared in the woods without stopping to find out if the shots had taken effect.

Sneak Thieves Lose It When Policemen Get on Their Trail

Boston, June 26.—Three young sneak thieves entered the Lafayette Savings bank and stole the cash box from the paying teller's cage and made their escape without being detected.

The trio were later discovered dividing the $196 in silver, which the box contained, in an alley on Berkeley street, but escaped despite the efforts of Patrolmen Murphy and Connell to head them off.

Murphy found part of the money in a cap and the balance scattered about the alley. All of the stolen money, with the exception of 97 cents, was recovered.

COLLECTORS FOR FOURTH

Many Hard Luck Stories Told Collectors

The success of a public "safe and sane" celebration of our national holiday depends largely on the amount of the contributions received. In places where the local government is placed in a position where it cannot appropriate money for this purpose it is, of course, necessary to raise the money by public subscription. This to be successful has to be done by organized effort.

One of the largest manufacturing concerns in our city where the employes work by the day, has found it necessary on account of business to work only five days a week. The collectors also found that in another line of trade, men in the same locality had been working on the average but two days a week since last February.

A collector called at one house and found the man of the house not at home. The following conversation took place between the collector and the man's wife: She said, "I want to tell you just how we are situated; if my husband were home I know he would do the same. He has worked on the average only two days a week since February, however, this week he expects to put in a full week. We have always contributed money toward the 4th of July celebration, and we always intend to do so if we possibly can. I cannot give you any money today but if you will give me your address, and my husband puts in a full week's work, I will call at your house and give you fifty cents. We do not wish our name left off the subscription list."

In another place where he called, the man was a foreigner and this is what this man said: When the collector approached him he gave him no opportunity to say anything, but opened the conversation himself. I will not attempt to imitate the dialect. "I know what you want. You want subscriptions for the 4th of July. Here is one dollar."

The collector said, "Now look here A—, I want to collect all I can, but do you think you can afford this dollar—a person should only give what they can afford. How can you afford to give this?"

And the reply was. "Well I'll tell you. I knew you were coming, and I knew business was going to be bad, so some months ago I put this dollar aside and it has been waiting for you."

In another case where the collector knew the party personally. This man has a wife and five children and was one of those who could only work five days a week. When the collector approached him, the man put his hand in his pocket and pulled out seventy-five cents in change and said. "Look here ,this is all I have got, but payday is tomorrow. This is a cheap contribution for what my family enjoy from the celebration and we want our name on the subscription list."

Neither should we forget the man who said to the collector, "Last year I gave $5.00, this year put me down for $10.00. I have no children but I am glad to contribute to the movement of a safe and sane Fourth."

In contrast to this we wish to show the following. In the morning there is a procession, young and old take part and the majority of course have to walk. This procession last year covered a distance in walking of almost five miles. There were many complaints from those who took part in the parade, in regard to the distance claiming it was too long. The distance, therefore, cut down and in doing so it was necessary to cut cut some streets. One of these streets happens to be occupied by men who in comparison to the class spoken of above are well-to-do people. When the collector called at several of their houses this was the reply he receeived.

"If the procession does not go by my house I refuse to contribute one penny."

It is of course, impossible to conduct an affair of this kind, whether it be large or small, without it being necessary to hear from what are rightly termed kickers.

We have given this story to the papers to give you some idea of the different degrees of patriotism.

WHISKER CULTURE.

A Critic Who Does Not Like the Hanging Garden Effect.

In the American Magazine James Montgomery Flagg, writing a piece on "Whiskerculture," contributes the following permit to cultivate hanging gardens on the face:

"This is to certify that the bearer, ——, has permission to stand on the grass in any part of Central park, or other city parks, during May and June and pretend he is a spiraea bush.

"If by any chance he should begin to bear currants or marrons glaces he must allow the commissioner of parks first pickings.

"He is required also to permit any uniformed official of the Long Island railroad lost and found department to enter his beard at will, without a written order, and search for lost purses, umbrellas or packages of pressed beef or coins of any denomination.

"On the 2d of February he agrees to step out from his cocoon and, if he sees his own shadow, report it immediately to the board of health and crawl back again.

"In going over his privet hedge in the fall, before putting it in camphor, he must destroy all nests he comes across.

"On national and state holidays he is permitted to string Japanese lanterns in any part of the shrubbery above Forty-second street, but he is forbidden to set off any Roman candles or red light in it.

"During the open season for grouse or caribou he must have his entire beard adequately patrolled. He agrees to report to Washington if any careless tourists start fires in any portion of this tract, especially near any ranches. He agrees to see before retiring that no lighted cigar butts are left smoldering in the underbrush.

"If all these regulations are faithfully carried out his beard will be set aside as a national park in January of the following year."

THE HILL OF TARA.

Where In Ancient Times the Kings of Ireland Were Crowned.

In the county of Meath is supposed to have stood the hall of Tara, celebrated as being the palace of the ancient Irish kings. There seems to be no doubt that on the hill of Tara the national assemblies met once a year to consult on the affairs of the kingdom and to make laws. The lawgivers were a class of druids called Brehons, who acted as magistrates and judges. They did not hold their courts of justice in any hall, but seated themselves on the top of a hill in the open air, where they heard all complaints that were brought before them and decided every cause according to their own ideas of right and wrong.

The hill of Tara is also famous in Irish history as the spot on which the kings were crowned. The throne, or seat of inauguration, was a black stone, which was called Lea Fail, or the fatal stone, said to have been brought in the early ages from Spain, and it was therefore held in high veneration. It was either borrowed by Fergus the Great, an Irish chief, or else it was carried away, among other spoils, by the Scots in one of their invasions of Ireland and was ever afterward used as a coronation seat of the kings of Scotland at the abbey of Scone until it was conveyed away by force of arms, together with the crown and scepter, by Edward I. to England, who placed it in Westminster abbey, where it still exists and forms the basis of the coronation chair to this day. —Argonaut.

Roosevelt as a Woodchopper.

When he owned a ranch in the west Theodore Roosevelt, as he says in his autobiography, "could chop fairly well for an amateur," but he admits that he could not do one-third of the work that his men did.

"One day," he writes, "when we were cutting down the cottonwood trees to begin our building operations, I heard some one ask Dow what the total cut had been, and Dow, not realizing that I was within hearing, answered, 'Well, Bill cut down fifty-three, I cut forty-nine, and the boss, he beavered down seventeen.' Those who have seen the stump of a tree that has been gnawed down by a beaver," adds Mr. Roosevelt, "will understand the exact force of the comparison."

For the Collection Box.

Jimmy, aged four, had been sent upstairs by his mother to get 10 cents, which she intended to use for the purchase of postage stamps.

Not knowing exactly what a ten cent piece looked like, Jimmy called downstairs, "Mother, is 10 cents a little piece of money?"

"Yes, Jimmy, the smallest piece of money in my purse."

"Oh, I know now, mother! Church money."—Judge.

GRUELLING CAUSES WOMAN TO COLLAPSE

Father of Mrs. Angle Supplies $5000 Bonds For Her

Stamford, Conn., June 26.—Mrs. Helen M. Angle, who has been held on a coroner's order, pending inquiry into the somewhat mysterious death of Waldo R. Ballou, a member of a prominent Stamford family, was last night released in bonds of $5000 by order of Coroner Phelan. Bonds were furnished by her father, Leonard Blondel.

The coroner announced that he expected to examine Mrs. Angle privately as soon as her health would permit. Mrs. Angle was on the stand at the inquest for a few minutes, but refused to answer questions concerning her friendship with Ballou, and finally collapsed, falling out of the witness chair into the arms of her father. As she appeared to be physically exhausted, the inquest was closed.

VILLA GAINS GREAT TRIUMPH

Federals at Zacatecas Routed With Terrible Loss

FOUR THOUSAND ARE KILLED

Two Thousand Wounded and Five Thousand Prisoners Taken—Artillery, Rifles and Trainloads of Ammunition Fall Into Hands of Rebels—News Pleases President Wilson

Washington, June 26.—In the taking of Zacatecas General Villa has scored his greatest triumph. While the stronghold may not be considered Huerta's "last stand," it was a most important obstacle to the advance of the constitutional army upon Mexico City.

If Villa's figures are to be accepted the victory was most complete. Only remnants of the federal garrison escaped. Out of a force of 14,000 men 4000 were killed, 2000 wounded and 5000 taken prisoners. The total federal casualties on this basis exceed 70 percent. The rebel losses were placed at 500 killed and 800 wounded.

Apparently after four days of fighting a general assault was made on the defenses of the city. Villa's brief dispatch depicts most vividly the horrors of war. It appears that the principal buildings of the city were mined and as the federals retreated they were blown up, killing and maiming many of the victors.

Twelve pieces of artillery, thousands of rifles and carloads of ammunition fell into the hands of the rebels.

The taking of Zacatecas places the entire northern part of Mexico and much more than half of the republic's territory in the hands of the constitutionalists. It marks another stage in the race of three rival constitutionalist leaders to Mexico City.

Villa from Zacatecas probably will move against Aguas Calientes, almost directly to the south and whence the remnants of the Zacatecas garrison retreated. General Gonzales, the eastern divisional commander, who took Tampico, has been ordered to take San Luis Potosi, now weakened by an almost complete evacuation. General Obregon, commander of the army of the west, is about to attack Guadalajara. If successful his troops would have even a clearer road to the national capital than those of Villa or Gonzales.

Guadalajara, far to the south, and next to Mexico City the largest city in Mexico, affords a roadway to the national capital through a rich country which easily could sustain a large army. Captain Gray, formerly of the English army, is acting in an advisory capacity to Obregon's advance of cavalry, which is commanded by General Blanco, who has been utilizing cavalry as it is used in European and American armies for the first time in the history of Mexican warfare.

The presence of federal garrisons in the west coast ports of Mazatlan and Guaymas is not considered by the constitutionalists as a hindrance to the Mexico City campaign.

Administration officials in Washington make no efforts to conceal their pleasure over the reports of the taking of Zacatecas by Villa. It is admitted that in the view of the administration the victory at Zacatecas increases the importance of Villa in the constitutionalist cause.

President Wilson authorized the statement that the Mexican outlook was more promising than it had ever been before. He is confident that the constitutionalist and Huerta envoys will get together, and apparently he depends upon Villa to influence this result. If the Mexicans do agree their decision will give effect to the protocol agreed upon at Niagara Falls Wednesday night.

A DOZEN YEARS AFTER

A Story of West Point Flirtations

By EUNICE BLAKE

Captain Alexander Ainsworth, after a dozen years' absence from the United States Military academy at West Point, was ordered there as instructor in artillery. He was twenty when he was graduated. Now he was approaching middle life. The day after his arrival, not yet having entered upon his duties, he strolled about, recalling here and there scenes and incidents of his cadet life.

Mounting to old Fort Put, he mused: "What a day that was when I came up here with Jennie! How my heart warmed toward her! I can smell this minute the delicate perfume there was about her. I can feel the silken softness of her sleeve, the sweet touch of her fingers when mine came in contact with them. Those beautiful blue eyes! How confidingly, how lovingly they looked into mine!"

Descending, he crossed the plain and soon found himself on Flirtation walk. Again he mused: "It was right here in this little recess when with Belle I stopped to tell her that I loved her. She knew what was coming and looked out on the river and the hills beyond, waiting for me to speak. I told her that, though we had met but a week before, I had come to love her with an unquenchable flame. I remember that at the time the word unquenchable seemed to me very well chosen. I was then a yearling with nearly three years of study before me. What mattered it? We were in the summer encampment with little to do but make love to the girls who had sprung up all over the Point like daisies in the sweet springtime. In September they vanished, and we were again grinding away at our books."

He returned to the plain and strolled past the monument to the West Point graduates who had fallen in the war and, standing on the declivity directly north of it, looked out upon that view up the Hudson river, as beautiful if not more beautiful than any in America.

"It was right here that I stood with Alice Ward on that moonlight night of the day I graduated. My cadet days were over, and I was an officer in the army. But the boy had not yet all got out of me. I had been sitting on the porch of the hotel with Alice. There were a dozen other couples there, and to escape the clatter of tongues I proposed a walk in the moonlight. We came here and stood looking out on this very view, though then instead of flashing in the sun it was mellowed by moonlight. I should have known better this time. I was of age. I did know better, but I failed to act on that knowledge. I drew her to me and kissed her."

The blood of shame mounted to his cheek when he remembered that he had told her she was the only girl he had ever loved.

"But," he added, "though I did not know it at the time, it was the truth."

He turned away from the scene before him, taking the path that led around by the officers' quarters. On the way he met a lady with a boy five or six years old, the child running about chattering to his mother. The lady was the wife of one stationed at the Point and, recognizing an officer by his uniform, bowed to him. He doffed his hat and said:

"I presume, madam, you are one of our army family here?"

"I am."

"I have just arrived after an absence of twelve years."

"You are Captain Ainsworth?"

"I am."

"I have heard of your coming. We keep posted on the changes as they occur. You relieve Lieutenant Waters, I believe?"

"I do."

"Does the Point look the same to you as when you left it?"

"West Point can never change, though its buildings may. I have been visiting old haunts."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. I first visited Fort Put. I remembered being up there once with a very lovely girl."

"She was"—

"Her name was Jennie— Upon my word, my memory is getting shaky!"

"Was it Marston?"

"Marston! Certainly! How names do fail us when we try to recall them! Did you know her?"

"She has always been an intimate friend of mine."

"Is she married?" asked Ainsworth, assuming an anxious look.

"Oh, yes; she's married, but it required some time for her to get over that visit to Fort Put!"

"You don't mean it! That was the episode of my life. But—I was nothing but a plebe."

"Jennie was very young too. She is happily married now."

"She must be an intimate friend of yours."

"My husband accuses me of loving her more than him."

"You are"—

"I was Jennie Marston. I am now Mrs. Farnum."

There was a twinkle in her eye. A shamefaced look came over Ainsworth, and he smiled feebly.

"Don't worry about it, captain. These cadets are doing the same thing you boys did a dozen years ago, and cadets will keep on doing it as long as the academy lasts. Come and dine with us this evening. I wish you to meet my husband."

* * * * * * *

A dance for the graduating class and their friends was in progress. Captain Ainsworth was among the onlookers. He stood behind the chair of a lady. A young girl of perhaps sixteen came to her to ask some question and called her auntie. Later in the evening Captain Ainsworth was introduced to the aunt.

"You are not one of our army circle here at West Point, I believe?"

"No, I am a visitor from New York. I came to chaperon my niece. I know how girls enjoy West Point, for I was here when a girl myself. I remember my experiences here with great pleasure—that is, all except one. I met my first disappointment here. A cadet was attentive to me. I listened to his flattering words. One day he asked me to stroll down Flirtation walk with him. I was persuaded. He stopped at a little nook part way down. He told me"—

"Don't go any further, I beg you," said the captain. "You are the second person I have met since I have returned to the Point whom I asked to be"—

"You are Fred Nolan?"

"No; I am Alec Ainsworth. Aren't you Edith Andrews?"

"No; I'm Belle Harwood."

"Oh!"

"It is only a case of another cadet and another girl. Doubtless there are dozens of proposals on that walk every year. I wonder if any of them ever results in marriage?"

One bright moonlight night Captain Ainsworth and a party of his friends were trying by the uncertain light to read on the monument on the northern end of the plain at West Point the names of officers who were killed in the war between the states. Several others came up, and there was a general introduction.

"I am looking," said a lady to Captain Ainsworth, "for the name of my cousin who was killed at Antietam."

The captain started. He had heard that voice before and had never forgotten it. He told the lady that if she would give him the officer's name he would try to find it for her, but when she told him he exclaimed:

"He was in my class. You can't see the letters at night, for they are in shadow. Tomorrow you will find the name without any trouble."

When the others passed on Captain Ainsworth and this lady lingered.

"The view from a little farther this way," he said, moving northward, "is beautiful."

She went with him, and they stood side by side looking up the river.

"I remember," said the captain, showing emotion in his voice, "standing on this very spot twelve years ago, when I was a cadet, with a lovely girl who was a visitor here. The scenery was the same as it is now and was lighted, as now, by the moon. I had just passed from cadet to officer and was to leave West Point the next day.

"I had passed four years in the academy and every summer had taken on a new love. In passing from cadet to lieutenant I had my last affair of the heart, and though I was not aware of it I was taking on a love that I would never be able to throw off. Under the impression that it was a passing affair like the others I failed during the following few months even to write to the girl in question, assuming that she considered it, as I did, a mere West Point flirtation. When I learned that I had met the only girl I would ever love it was too late. I dared not reopen the matter seriously with one I had so shamefully neglected."

Doubtless this was the only truth the captain had ever spoken on the subject in question, though after his graduation he had told no more lies.

"I, too," said the lady beside him, "had a similar experience. My cousin being a cadet, I came with others of our family nearly every summer while he was at the academy. I soon learned what meaning to attach to an avowal of love from a cadet. What it is now I don't know; then it was one of his privileges which were not considered binding.

"The last summer I came here I received a proposal from one of the graduating class. At the time I considered it one of those West Point affairs of flirtation rather than of the heart. I never expected to hear again from the cadet, who went to a post in the far west, and I never did. But I admit that I found, like you, that for once in my West Point experience I had flown too near the candle. My wings had been singed. I have never wed."

There was silence for a time, after which Captain Ainsworth spoke:

"Since it was the man's part, not yours, to make good his words you are in no way to blame. If he is excusable it is that, though he had no right to play with edged tools, he was living in a little world where they were played with. Being guilty myself, as he was, I would gladly atone for his fault. Let me stand in his stead and you will make me a happy man."

She not resisting, he drew her to him and kissed her as he had kissed her long before.

And there, a dozen years after a mock love affair on the part of two triflers, on the very same spot and under the same moon, they plighted their troth.

Later it was announced that Captain Ainsworth had met an old flame of his who was visiting West Point, and the couple were to be married in the autumn.

The organization consists of four brothers-Joseph, Gerhard, Grispin and Oscar Alexis. The first is professor of the Scandinavian languages at the Nebraska University. His brother Gerhard is a graduate of Augustana Conservatory of Music, Rock Island, Ill., and Crispin and Oscar Alexis are students at that institution. Their songs delighted the audience and they were tendered a reception at the close of the program. The concert was under the auspices of the University extension department of Ne-

INDIAN HOSPITALITY.

A Brand of Their Own, Not "Stingy Like the White Man."

The early experiences of the white practitioner among reservation Indians make a chapter of encounters with aboriginal prejudice not wholly finished. Even his own life was not safe if the doctor ventured too near the borderland of prejudice, and if a death occurred at the beginning of his practice he was likely to be avoided for the rest of his sojourn. Many an Indian came for the first dose and was never seen or heard of afterward—whether death or distaste was the result of his visit the doctor might never know. Or an entire bottle of cough sirup would be consumed at once, on the theory that if a teaspoonful was good a bottleful would be better.

The constant hospitality practiced by Indians, and the custom of sharing the last crumb, is a phase of the food question difficult to be appreciated by whites. As long as an Indian has any subsistence, his neighbors and friends come a-visiting, to remain as long as the food holds out. To be inhospitable or "stingy like the white man" is an opprobrium which only the hardiest Indian can socially survive. This Indian virtue bars the way to an equalization of any distribution of food, and is the cause of many of those cases of "Indians starving."—Southern Workman.

DIED FOR HIS IDOL.

Heroism That Led to Napoleon's Title of "The Little Corporal."

It is related that Napoleon was once badly defeated at Coblentz by the Cossacks. After the battle he was surrounded by enemies and would have lost his life had he not been saved by the presence of mind of one of his soldiers, Corporal Spohn.

Realizing that Napoleon's only chance for life was in getting off the battle field unrecognized, the corporal begged the emperor to change hats and horses with him. The change was made ere the smoke of battle had cleared away, and Napoleon, with his corporal's hat and mounted on a poor steed, rode away unnoticed, the Cossacks crowding around the corporal. Taking him prisoner, they led him in triumph to the Russian general. There the mistake was soon discovered, and the corporal's brave act cost him his life.

According to the Coblentz legend, Napoleon, in remembrance of Spohn's self sacrifice, always after this preferred a corporal's uniform to any other and wore it so often that his men came to speak of him familiarly as "Le Petit Caporal."—From "The Rhine," Translated by G. C. T. Bartley.

Mastery of Music.

The mastery of music never just "came naturally" to any human being. The world has never known a more industrious worker than the illustrious Franz Schubert. Yet, if to any one in the world music "came naturally," it seemed to come so to him. When the school principal asked his harmony teacher how young Franz Schubert was progressing, the teacher said: "He is a wonder. Whenever I explain anything new to him, he always seems already to know it. He must have received his knowledge straight from heaven." Yet, in spite of such superb gifts, there was never a harder worker than he. And don't you think that we with our lesser gifts, should follow his example? If he with all his heaven sent genius could not succeed without strenuous daily labor, how can we hope to accomplish anything worth while without ceaseless, patient and conscientious toil?—Woman's World.

Your Castle of Thought.

Your Castle of Thought is the most sacred possession you have.

It is your real estate, your house of prayer.

You are the agent. Shall you let in disorderly tenants?

Shall you harbor Doubt, a sickly tenant, to infect well meaning tenants? Doubt is about the worst tenant you can admit. Turn him out.

Doubting some one, any one, never gets you anything.

If the one you doubt is unworthy, then that is his problem, not yours. Give him this to read and let him come and take treatment.

Come and get your thought changed, and all things will be made new.—New York Sun.

By the Rules of the Game.

Little Mary Lou was eager to get back to her new doll and didn't know there was going to be any dessert. She slipped quietly from her chair, hoping she would not be observed.

Out in the hall she met the cook with the ice cream, and as quietly as she had left it she slipped back to her accustomed place at the table.

"Mary Lou," said her mother reprovingly, "I thought you had finished your dinner. It isn't polite to come back."

"But I didn't excuse myself, mother," the little girl said quickly.—New York Post.

General Shafter's Fourth of July

ASKED to give an account of his most interesting Fourth of July, the late General William R. Shafter, who commanded the American troops at the battle of Santiago, Cuba, wrote:

"Wholesome enthusiasm, whether fired by the battery of words or gunpowder, is bound to create courage and stir our brave men to greater deeds of valor. I feel that we cannot celebrate too much for the glorification of the greatest day in the history of our Union. When I was a little boy I looked forward to the Fourth of July with all of the pleasurable anticipations of childhood and saved my pennies from Christmas time to Independence day to buy the wherewithal for the fitting and noisy celebration.

"I think, however, my most exciting Fourth was in the Cuban campaign of 1898. The morning after the Santiago battle an orderly brought me a paper containing original doggerel in seven heroic verses. They were entitled 'Phat General Shafter Wint Afther,' and the first stanza began:

"Now, when General Toral, a Spanish dago,
Met General Shafter at Santiago,
Sez General Toral to General Shafter,
'Be jabers, old man, now phat are yez after?'
And General Shafter sez, 'Phat d'yez think?'
And gave him the sliest sort of a wink.
'I'll get phat I'm after,' sez General Shafter.

"I think that the Fourth of 1898 was the only celebration I ever took part in that inspired the muse, for which I am grateful."

WHEN FREEDOM WAS WON.

King George III. Was Told by Messenger of Cornwallis' Surrender.

In his "Historical Memoirs of Our Own Times" Sir N. W. Wraxall has left an interesting record of the effect of the news of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis (the real end of the Revolutionary war) on the mind of Lord North and King George III.

Wraxall asked Lord George Germain how North "took the communication."

"As he would have taken a cannon ball in his breast," replied Lord George, "for he opened his arms, exclaiming wildly as he paced up and down the apartment during a few minutes, 'O God, it is all over!' words which he repeated many times under emotions of the deepest consternation and distress."

Lord George sent a dispatch to the king, who was then at Kew. The king wrote a calm letter in reply, but it was remarked as evidence of unusual emotion that he had omitted to mark the hour and minute of his writing, which he was always accustomed to do with scrupulous precision. Yet the handwriting showed composure of mind.

A PAEAN AND A WARNING

Spread your bunting, hang your wreaths,
Let your banners be unfurled,
Shout until the welkin seethes
All about the deafened world,
Get your old time speeches out,
Cheer until you split the skies,
But be careful while you spout
Of your eyes.

Drag the ancient cannon forth,
Load it to the muzzle brim;
Let the east, south, west and north
Echo with its blim-blam-blim!
Let the crackers hiss and spit,
Rocket sticks come down kerplunk,
But be careful how you sit
On the punk.

Let the roman candles flare
All the darkened heavens through;
Let the mortars fill the air
Full of stars red, white and blue;
Let the fluent red lights flow,
Dimming both the moon and sun,
But be careful how you blow
Down your gun.

Roar, rejoice and speechify;
Go through all the bag of tricks
With which now we glorify
Heroes of old seventy-six;
But, no matter what your glee
Mid the roar of bursting bombs,
Careful, oh, most careful be
Of your thumbs!

Liberty a blessing is Worthy to be glorified,
Worthy of the fiery whiz
Of a nation full of pride,
But it seems a bauble vain,
Empty, useless thing of chance,
When there follows in its train
An ambulance.

STRONG OPPOSITION

ehearsed the hearings before the Special Commission and how the subject had been thrashed out, and that he Special Commission had made its nding which had been assented to by ll parties at interest. The Commission adopted a plan which seemed best or the situation. It was in general atisfactory to all. There was sure o be some dissatisfied no matter what lan was adopted. Not one of the enineers have favored depression as it s not practicable. There is to be no hinese wall through the city as has een stated. The country between uincy and Quincy Adams is an open ield and not a thickly settled country, o that the situation here differs conderable from Lynn and other places. t means an expense on the Commonvealth of a million dollars. The exense already in the matter of abolishng the crossings amounts to $18,000.

Mr. Bates—I take exceptions to his tatements.

Chairman Wade—Not now. It is atural that you should take exceptions.

CITY SOLICITORS VIEWS.

City Solicitor Pinkham told of the igning of the decree plan by himself. le had taken what he considered was he very best opinion in the matter, nd what was best for the city. He new nothing about the Attorney Genral being influenced, as had been tated by Representative Sullivan. He id not see how Sect. 1, could be contrued any different than what the hairman had construed it. The City f Quincy cannot afford to stand the xtra expense this would entail. As e understood it under the decree lan, Mr. Bates will get no damages, ut would get damages if the tracks vere depressed as proposed.

Representative Sullivan's own counel has stated that under Sect. 5, the ity of Quincy would have to stand he whole expense of damages by the hange of plans, and the city cannot fford to do it. If this bill is to pass lo not throw all of the expense on the ity of Quincy.

As to the referendum he did not onsider it a fair one. It should not e placed on the ballot as proposed ut should be in two propositions so hat the voters could take their choice.

When the proposition was put up o the City Council last Monday night t was not explained and they did not nderstand when they voted 12 to 10 o endorse the bill. He did not believe if the Council had thoroughly nderstood they would have voted as hey did.

Charles W. Bailey chairman of the inance committee of the City Council was here a few minutes, said City Solicitor Pinkham, but he was obliged o get away. He desire to be recorded as against the bill on account of inancial standpoint. Continuing he said that while the decree plan was ot an ideal one it is the best solution.

STREET RAILWAY OBJECT.

Mr. Walker, engineer of the Bay State Street Railway Co., objected to he bill on account of the additional expense. He had gone over the matter roughly, and he estimated that the cost by the proposed bill would be between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000.

ENGINEER BREED.

Prof. Breed, the expert engineer for he city during the grade crossing discussion testified as to the various plans submitted at the hearings before the Special Commission. Water street and Saville street were two distinct propositions. The city plan for the separation of grades at Saville street did not meet with favor on the part of the Commission.

The plans for the abolition by the decree plan were then produced and explained at length by Prof. Breed.

The city plan he said did not increase the grade at Water street but increased the length of the grade which was of importance as it was easier for a train to pull over a short sharp grade than over a long sharp grade. The result of the several plans was the compromise plan of the decree. Prof. Swain who was called in by the Commission disapproved of the plan of the city.

The decree plan does leave School street in rather bad condition and Water street was lowered as much as possible on this account. One thing was that the headway of the present School street was not as much by three feet as the Public Service Commission demand, so that it was necessary to raise the bridge just so much more. The decree plan is not perfect but he considered it very satisfactory.

When asked as to his estimate as to cost by the bill, Prof. Breed said that he had not figured it. However he said that he had been up against Engineer Tuttle several times, on opposite sides, and that as far as figures were concerned he and Engineer Tuttle had practically agreed, and therefore he was willing to take his figures in this case.

To sum up, Prof. Breed said that from experience in many grade crossing cases, Quincy had got a better deal than many cities ,and that it was better to let well enough alone.

Representative Sandberg asked if it would not be possible to reverse the grade at School street to which Prof. Breed replied he did not think so on account of the grade of Town brook.

CITY ENGINEER SARGENT.

City Engineer Sargent said that he had made a study of all the plans, and that he had advised accepting the decree plan. It was the best we might expect to get. He did not consider the Bates plan feasible as far as Water street.

HERBERT T. WHITMAN.

Herbert T. Whitman said that Mr. Tupper was not employed in his office. That he never before saw the plan which he was given credit of making. He was glad of the opportunity to set himself right. He further stated that he had been misquoted by Mr. Bates who claimed that he was one of the invisible commission. He had never appeared before any person in this matter. All Quincy engineers had more or less experience in railroad matters, and that one could not be found who considered depression feasible. This bill he considered a dangerous one, and hoped the committee would kill it. The bill was too broad as it takes in from Norfolk Downs to Braintree.

Mr. Bates asked how many of the 51 parcels of land taken by the decree plan he would sell?

Chairman Wade interrupted to say, "You need not answer that question."

Ernest W. Branch said he considered that the Mayor acted wisely when he signed the decree plan. He did not consider that the estimate of Engineer Tuttle was large enough.

Representative Sandberg asked Mr. Branch and other witnesses about reversing the grade of School street, and received varied answers, some saying they thought possible, and others impossible.

MAYOR MILLER.

Mayor Miller said that he had been accused of being fixed by the invisible commission. The gentleman however who made the statement denied doing so. He agreed however to abide by the stenographic report but when this was produced he still declared he did not make the statement. The Mayor was of course referring to Mr. Bates. No man can accuse me said the Mayor, of being "fixed." He had known all about the grade crossing question from the first. The night the vote was taken at the Granite Manufacturers Association there were but eighteen present, and 9 had voted in favor of depression and 9 against. He had been elected a member of the grade crossing committee by a majority of one vote.

After he assumed the Mayors office he had studied the matter closer and he had been accused of changing his mind. "Well, in a sense did, but all have the privilege of changing their minds if they find things better."

"When I saw the decree plan I said that was the best we could get, and I believe so now."

When he had seen the mistake that had been made in the city plan, and that the railroad could not get along with the headroom that plan provided, and it required a readjustment, I know enough about plans to see that the decree plan was the best.

He believed that many believed as he did about the matter. It is absurd to state that but a small percent would back up the decree plan. I have heard that gentleman (meaning Mr. Bates) make statements before that did not work out when the square and compasses were applied.

EX-MAYOR BRYANT.

Ex-Mayor Charles M. Bryant said the chairman had hit the nail on the head when he had asked about the cost by depression. Mr. Wall of Houghs Neck who was here Wednesday stated that Houghs Neck people would be inconvenienced by the decree plan. That is absurd for the decree plan does not change Saville street from what it is now. His statement was misleading. It might be better to give Bates $50,000 and let it go at that. We can do anything if we have the money but we have not got it. There was a stiff hill on School street now and the street was not much used. It would only be a short time before a new street would be laid out through the property between School and Granite streets which would relieve the situation.

Who will pay for that? asked Representative Sullivan.

It will be done under the betterment act replied Mr. Bryant, and the abutters will pay the cost.

Mr Bryant said further, that he believed in the referendum vote but that it was impracticable in this case, as it would be impossible to interest the general public. "I said that when the Mayor approved the decree plan it was one time when he showed common sense."

This is merely a personal matter with Bates ,who alone will benefit if this bill goes through. "It would be far better to buy him off and shut him up."

"Do you think I can be bought?" shouted Mr. Bates.

"You know best about that yourself," replied the Ex-Mayor.

The chairman at this point asked Mr. Bates again about figures, but Mr. Bates had none. He said that the John Cashman Co., had told him it would not cost any more but that the railroads always opposed depression.

Ex-City Solicitor Blackmur arose to speak but the Chairman stated that unless he had some new facts to propose that it would not be necessary for him to speak, to which Mr. Blackmur replied that he was satisfied to let matters rest where they were. He spoke of Mr. Hayes engineer of the Public Service Commission, who was available if the committee desired any impartial advice. Continuing, Mr. Blackmur said that this was a misuse of the referendum. I am the Progressive referred to, said Mr. Blackmur, but in this case Quincy alone is not affected for all passengers from stations beyond Quincy are affected, and they do not have any say in the matter.

One of the committee replied, "I am a Democrat and I do not believe in referendum."

Mr. Blackmur also pointed out the fact that Sect. 3 was qualified by Sect. 1. The Commission would have no power to elevate the streets.

John Q. A. Field said that he had lived in Quincy for eighty years and he told of some of the large enterprises in which he had taken part. He went into detail about the different plans and explained the plan known during the hearings before the Special Commission as the Field plan.

Nine out of ten trains are now stalled on the grade between Quincy Adams and Braintree. To depress the tracks will depreciate the value of property along the line owned by poor people forty percent. The smoke nuisance will be awful. As an illustration he cited the situation along the line between the Quincy Adams depot and School street, where the black smoke rolled up in clouds and enveloped houses along the line. Until the houses of Mr. Spear had been moved back there had been many fires caused by sparks from locomotives. That is just what would result by putting the tracks down in a ditch.

He also spoke of the change that would be necessary in the tracks to the granite yards at South Quincy. In closing he said that he favored the decree plan.

This closed the hearing and the committee took the matter under advisement. An adverse report may be expected.

LESS HUMIDITY.

Although the temperature at noon today was not much lower that it was Thursday, the day is a much more comfortable one in which to be about, for the humidity has fallen considerable since Thursday. The cool wave arrived during the latter part of Thursday evening. It did not seem to have a very cooling effect at first, however, but soon its comforting effects were felt and by midnight there was quite a breeze blowing, and the weather was quite comfortable. The early morning was quite comfortable, although by noon the mercury had climbed to near the ninety degree point and the air was hot.

CITY CLERK BUSY.

City Clerk Emery L. Crane finds his duties pressing at this time of the year, for in addition to making a comparison of the voting lists with the returns of the assistant assessors, he is endeavoring to collect all of the dog licenses due the city. The past few days his office has resembled a money exchange, and although dog owners crowd into his office to pay the annual assessment the returns this year have not reached the figures of last year.

LADIES AID.

The annual meeting of the Ladies Aid society of the Swedish Congregational church was held Thursday evening. The reports showed a membership of 50 to 60 and a large percentage was present. During the year $170.18 have been raised about one-half of which has been donated to the poor and the church. Rev. A. G. Sporrung, the pastor, is president ex-officio, and Mrs. Hannah Ekstrand was reelected secretary with Amelia Bergland as treasurer.

JUNE FESTIVAL AT WOLLASTON

All the Attractions of a Big Midway But in Charge of Well Known Citizens

Large Sum Will Be Realized for Unitarian Parish House

The Wollaston June festival, in aid of the fund for a new parish house for the Unitarian church, opened Friday evening and will continue through this afternoon and evening. The attendance was good and was simply a forerunner of what is expected to be present during the closing hours. All of the fifth ward has exhibited a show of interest in this most remarkable event and crowds lined the sidewalk in front so they could view the wonderful electrical illumination which is an attractive feature.

The site of the festival covers an immense area, running from Safford to Taylor streets, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Baker, the Misses Jennie and Helen Foster and David H. Goodspeed gave the use of the grounds without charge.

In this space a "White City" seems to have grown up over night and its attractions and counter-attractions outrival the most famous of the beach resorts. The "Great Light Way" was a typical reproduction of a fine midway as found at expositions and country fairs, the whole presenting a lily white appearance which reflected the thousands of electrical colored lights that were strung from the entrance to poles on the booths and around the trees and seating arrangements [illegible] are in every conspicuous corner of the spacious layout.

In the "Great Light Way" were sold up-to-the-minute novelties at prices within the reach of all, with bowling alleys, shooting galleries, wheel of fortune, crockery shower, hoop-la, knockout dolls, hot dogs, weighing machines together with all sorts of souvenirs, ice cream, candy, tonics, pop corn, peanuts, home made cooking and delicatessen luncheons.

The entrance was banked with an ice cream table in charge of Mrs. C. R. Baker chairman, Mr. and Mrs. G. Ernest Carr, Mr. and Mrs. Axel Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Loud and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Child.

George D. Carr was in general charge of the Midway, and assisting him were members of the committee in charge of the different sections. Arthur Powers and Tyler Brigham presided over the grabs and were busy all evening. The peanuts were run by Irving Shaw and the ring and pins were presented by J. R. Brackett. Charles Weston was the chain-man and Howard Penniman, a feature of all Midways, distributed the balloons and toys. George Brown, Frank Bishop and Jack Simmons, all three, directed the rolling of the Japanese balls and Joseph Crossley was the hoop-la man. Walter H. Bennett and N. C. Seymour gave the wheel of fortune its spin.

A genuine coffee garden, where luncheon was served was conducted just beyond the Midway, and another section was occupied by a moving picture theatre. The top canvas was not stretched and the picture machine was attached to a tree, giving a throw of over 60 feet to the screen. The program posted outside was apparently a wholesale invitation to enter, and all the evening the chairs were packed with men, women and children The failure of the first film resulted in the operator becoming the butt of jokers, for in loading his machine he had not noticed the delightful rays from a pretty string of colored bulbs around the canvas. He didn't even look to see how strong his machine light was, being simply interested in operating, and the film had been half shown before hediscovered he had overlooked turning off the lights. After that his portion of the entertainment was a great success. Between the reels songs were sung by "Billie" Murphy and included the lastest popular hits.

The picture and theatre was in charge of an entertainment committee who also had general charge of the arrangements: Clifton H. Baker, chairman, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. Oldham, Mr. and Mrs. Ray C. Baker and Mrs. Clifton H. Baker.

This afternoon is devoted to the children's entertainment with parades and prizes for costumes and a special entertainment.

MRS. CAROLINE CURTIS.

The funeral of Mrs. Caroline wife of Capt. Franklin Curtis, was held Friday afternoon from her late home 92 Franklin street. The services were of a simple nature and were conducted by Rev. Adelbert L. Hudson, minister of the First Parish. The burial was in the family lot at Mt. Wollaston Cemetery.

The Dorchester Mutual's lost in the Salem fire will be only $2,100.

A LESSON TO THE COUNCIL

Too Hasty Action in Endorsing Grade Crossing Bill

Editor Daily Ledger:

Within a few hours after the publication of the new grade crossing bill, a bill entirely different from any of its predecessors the legislative branch of our city government passed the following resolution:

Resolved: That the City Council go on record as in favor of House Bill No. 2757, entitled "An Act relative to the abolition of grade crossings in the City of Quincy by depressing the tracks."

This resolution was rushed through the Council on the night it was introduced by a vote of twelve to ten without opportunity for an investigation by its members or remonstrance from the citizens of Quincy.

The City Solicitor states that he had no opportunity to examine the bill, and its friends now admit they did not understand the meaning of it. They certainly did not intend the construction given section 1, which all the lawyers and engineers who testified before the Senate Committee on Ways and Means said must be given to it.

The chairman and members of this committee upon examining the bill gave it as their opinion that there could be no question of its meaning; that it provided for the abolition of the grade crossings of the streets named by depression only, beginning from Norfolk Downs and ending at the Braintree line.

An engineer's plan made to conform to the bill put the tracks down twenty-one feet at the Quincy station. The estimate of the engineers, which was not disputed, gave the cost exclusive of land damages and extra two tracks as $2450,000.

It was the unanimous opinion of the engineers that when the work was completed it would be a monstrosity and would give the railroad an impossible grade for the operation of its heavy trains between Quincy Adams and Braintree.

Now, it would seem that this should be a lesson to the Council. The passing of resolutions on important matters without laying them over or referring them to a committee in cases where it directly or indirectly involves the expenditure of more than $300.00, is a violation of the spirit if not of the letter of the charter.

It may be said that this was not an order and did not involve the appropriation of money by the Council, but it certainly endorsed a proposed action of the Legislature it gave the Legislature a mandate, so to speak, which might have resulted in an assessment upon the City of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

To the credit of some of the members it should be said that they made strenuous objection to passing such a resolution without investigation, but unfortunately their good advice and sound sense were ignored.

DEMOCRATS MEET TUESDAY.

The Democratic City Committee promises to be a more active feature during the summer months than ever before, and to fill the vacancy in its chairmanship, caused by the death of William Kelly, an election is announced for next Tuesday evening in Wilson's hall. Edward J. Parker, who is a candidate will probably be elected although earlier in the season it was said that Charles C. McHugh of West Quincy would be a strong aspirant.

AN APPEAL TO QUINCY

Mayor Miller Will Organize For Salem Relief

About 3 o'clock Friday afternoon, Mayor Miller received a telegram from Gov. Walsh requesting him to organize a committee in Quincy to raise a relief fund for the stricken people of the city of Salem. He says the State has pledged $75,000 and as much more is necessary, and he knows that Quincy can be depended upon to do its share. A committee was appointed Friday morning at a meeting held at the State House.

Mayor Miller has called a meeting of the citizens for tonight, to be held in the Council Chamber City Hall, at 7.30 to take action toward the appointing of a relief committee. The Mayor said this morning that he thought it better to call a meeting of the citizens and this meeting could take the necessary steps and decide as to the better way of raising funds.

The Mayor has already received one response. This came by telephone from Dr. Phillip Kelley of Wollaston, who telephoned the Mayor this morning that they could put him down for $25.

Quincy has never been backward in matters of this kind when there is urgent need for funds and for goods of various kinds and the citizens can be depended upon to do their part on this occasion.

General Superintendent John Conway of the Bay State Street Railway Co. called at the Daily Ledger office this morning to say that the street railway company desired to inform the public that any boxes, barrels or other articles contributed for the relief of the sufferers at Salem will be received at any of its electric freight terminals and transported free of charge to the stricken city and delivered to the proper authorities in that city.

The relief committee at Salem advise that contributors mark on the outside of packages forwarded, what the contents of the package are, which will facilitate prompt handling. Tell whether it is food, or men's clothing, or women's clothes or children's clothes, or household goods.

REPORT UNANIMOUS AGAINST BILL

Senate Committee Consider Depression Act a Very Bad Piece of Legislation

Change of Sentiment Also Noted in Quincy

The expected happened Friday afternoon, when the Committee on Ways and Means of the Senate voted unanimously to report ought not to pass, on the bill to abolish the grade crossings in Quincy by depression of the tracks. The report however did not reach the Senate on Friday but was placed in the calendar for Monday morning at which time the report will come up for action.

From an outside source it has been learned that the committee considered the bill in question the worst piece of legislation that had ever been brought to the attention of the legislature of this state. The vote on the bill by the committee was unanimous.

That there has been a decided change in feeling relative to the proposed bill within the past few days in Quincy is very evident. Many who have been in favor of having the tracks depressed, now realize that the bill as proposed is a bad one and should it pass and be accepted by a referendum vote it would place the City of Quincy in anything but an enviable position.

Several of the members of the City Council who voted in favor of the resolution endorsing the proposed bill, last Monday evening, now say that had they fully understood just what the passage of the bill meant they would not have voted for it.

They also expressed themselves on the unwiseness of the City Council hastily, and without consideration, adopting any resolution, especially when it may lead to a large expenditure of money.

Just what the Senate will do with the report is in doubt. It is understood that Representative Sullivan while not a member of the Senate, will endeavor to have the bill so amended as to eliminate the undesirable clauses or rather to so amend it that the special commission authorized under the bill can elevate the grade of streets necessary in the abolition of the crossings.

B. F. Thomas of Billings street, has already started to supply the Boston market with mushrooms.

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

Carranza and Villa can't agree which shall have the honor of being a highly decorated and richly ornamented rubber stamp.

The college students can't be expected to pitch hay, as it might lame their pitching arm.

There is a move to have holidays celebrated on the week-end. Also Washington's birthday should come in August.

As the public good demands that Congress hurry up some of the members are getting to work daily as early as noon.

Miss Wilson, who is now to be an editor will soon learn that the magazine reading public will take any old kind of reading matter, provided the cover has a pretty girl picture.

As they have nothing to do but to regulate the whole business of the United States, the Inter-State Commerce Commission think they might as well lay off for the summer.

It seems strange, after people have tipped the Pullman porter, that they slink out of sight without also feeling the conductor, the brakeman, the baggagemaster, the popcorn boy, and the president of the road.

CAMPAIGNING.

Col. Roosevelt being ordered by his physician to quit campaign speaking on account of a weak throat, may now reflect on the connection between vocal cords and political success. A bad throat has often upset governments and shifted political history.

Not long ago a campaign orator was expected to make but two or three speeches a day. He would leisurely travel from hall to hall. His voice was compelled merely to meet the strain common to all legislators and lawyers.

Today the race for ballots puts the orator in a flying automobile. Crowds of voters gather at the cross roads, in much the same spirit as on annual circus day. The candidate must talk 20, 30, or more times a day. His voice is lost in the immensity of out doors. To make people hear, he must rasp his throat. It is the most sensitive tissue in the body. Not one in twenty has one made of rubber or gutta percha.

So most politicians' voices go bad. The Colonel's voice has a queer falsetto trick, due to this kind of use. It looks as if he were trying to make people laugh by voice antics, but his friends say he can't help it, that it is a condition brought on by over-use.

Theoretically, the voters read the speeches in the papers and make up their minds on facts logic and argument. Actually the campaign automobile speech gathers in the votes. People are moved by the personal contact. If a man shows that he has fore alertness a capacity for swift thrust and parry, and if he plays skillfully on the mental attitude of the hearer, he gets the votes, even if the five minute speech is only a kind of "how d'ye do-goodby." The man with the leather throat has a long start.

WORK OF RELIEF IS PROGRESSING

Quick and Generous Response to Salem's Call For Aid

MONEY IS HER GREATEST NEED

Stricken City Faces Spectacle of Scarlet Fever Epidemic—Six Persons Known to Have Perished—Refugees Provided For In Systematic Manner—Conflagration Has Made Eighteen Thousand Homeless, Many Being Cared For In Tented Camps—Money Loss Is Placed at $12,000,000, While Nine Thousand Have Been Added to Ranks of Unemployed In the Witch City

Salem, Mass., June 27.—From every hand aid is being extended to this stricken city. Cities and towns near and far are working earnestly to add to the relief fund, for which $129,749 has been pledged.

The state government has taken the lead in the relief work, and has already done much for the immediate assistance of the homeless and practically penniless refugees. Offers of assistance from the federal government came in the following message from President Wilson to Governor Walsh:

"I am sure I speak for the American people in tendering heartfelt sympathy, through you, to the people of the stricken city of Salem. Can the federal government be of service in the emergency?"

Scarlet Fever Appears

Scarlet fever, with all its dread possibilities to homeless and ill-nurtured children, has broken out among the refugees. Several cases were discovered last night amid the ruins of the French colony. They caused such great alarm that Governor Walsh called on the forces of the state board of health to cope with the disease.

The governor heard a rumor to the effect that there was scarlet fever prevalent in the camp at River Forest park. Immediately he called up Dr. Hanson of the state board of health and asked him to come to Salem. Hanson immediately diagnosed the suspects as scarlet fever patients and set about discovering what caused the disease.

Meanwhile, the governor had been investigating along his own lines, with results so alarming that the spread of the disease is feared. The governor discovered that there were cases in the camps on Salem common and High School hill.

Death List of Six

The list of dead as a direct result of the fire is placed at six. The identified dead are Mrs. Jennie Cunningham, Samuel P. Withey, Mrs. Edward McGlone and Miss Mary Tighe. Another body was so badly burned that its sex could not be determined. The fourth body was that of Mary Quinn, 2 months old.

Considerable excitement was caused during last night by small fires. One started in the northern section of the city, which had escaped the worst of the conflagration. This blaze was put out with small loss. For a while it was feared that a brisk blaze in the burning coal sheds near St. Mary's church, fanned into new life by the wind, would spread to the church. A large force of fire-fighters was sent to the scene and, while they could not subdue the fire in the coal, kept the flames from spreading. The water supply was still low and there was much anxiety among the crowds whenever the clang of the fire apparatus was heard.

City Full of Sight-Seers

Thousands of sight-seers crowded into the city and the stores which escaped the flames did a thriving business. The electric light service is still crippled and the business places that remained open last night transacted business by gas and candle light.

A relief committee of seven appointed by Governor Walsh had a long conference with Mayor Hurley and the local relief committee. The local committee consisted of 100. They appointed a sub-committee of twenty, which again named another committee of seven for the purpose of cooperating more effectively with the governor's forces.

After taking a survey of the situation it was announced from relief headquarters that the greatest need of Salem was money. "The principal need is money, not clothing or food," the committee announced. The people who were burned out managed to save all the necessary clothing and there is on hand a sufficient supply of food to last a week or possibly longer." It was stated that the contributions should be directed to Gardiner M. Lane, treasurer of the state relief committee.

Red Cross Aid Offered

Miss Mabel T. Boardman, national relief secretary of the American Red Cross society, arrived and offered the services of the organization she represents. She said Ernest Bicknell, national director of the Red Cross, would come tomorrow to help in the work of the relief.

Experienced hands rapidly systematized the work of providing for the refugees. John F. Moors, a member of the committee, directed the state relief work in the San Francisco disaster, and Edmund Billings had charge of the state's relief committee in the Messina earthquake. The relief committee voted to expend $1000 immediately for the use of the homeless who wanted to leave the city.

So many maternity cases were reported that Mrs. Samuel J. Mixter, wife of a Boston surgeon, and a number of women prominent in the wealthy North Shore summer colony, organized a hospital for these cases in the North church.

Eighteen Thousand Homeless

Measures for the relief of the 18,000 persons made homeless in the conflagration proceeded with military precision. More than 3500 were directly dependent upon the relief committee for shelter, while 4500 waited patiently in the various bread-lines for the food which streamed into the city in abundance.

Those cared for in the tented camps were of the poorer class, mostly foreigners. Nearly all the well-to-do had found refuge with friends and relatives elsewhere.

An insurance adjuster who went carefully over the devastated district estimated the loss at $12,000,000, of which $10,000,000 was covered by insurance. This insurance, it was stated, was well distributed, the heaviest amount falling upon any one company being $400,000.

The Naumkeag Steam Cotton company was the heaviest individual loser. The loss on its great plant was placed at $3,500,000.

Nine Thousand Idle

Fifteen hundred hands were thrown out of work by the destruction of these mills. The total number added by the fire to the ranks of the unemployed was estimated at 9000.

Hand in hand with measures for relief went preparations for rebuilding the city. The Naumkeag company and some of the other larger firms burned out announced that they would begin the work of reconstruction of new and better plants as quickly as possible. In the meantime the unemployed will be given work in the rehabilitation of the city or will be provided with jobs in nearby places.

The active work of relief was temporarily in the hands of the state militia, directed by Adjutant General Cole, who had 750 men under him from the Eighth and Ninth regiments. These established two camps. The strictest sanitary precautions were taken.

Another large tented colony was located at Salem Willows, but it was planned to move these people to another camp where the militia could exercise a closer supervision.

Salem a Very Old City With a Most Interesting History

The property valuation of the city of Salem is $42,000,000 and the population at the last official census, taken in 1910, was 43,697.

Salem is one of the oldest and most cultured cities in Massachusetts. It is sixteen miles northeast of Boston and is intimately connected with the history of the colonial period. Its quaint houses, some of which have been burned, and its irregular streets, now obliterated, have been of unusual interest to visitors.

It has three attractive parks—the Willows, the Common and Mack park, all of which are now filled with homeless persons.

Salem is the second oldest town in Massachusetts. It was first settled by Roger Conant and his associates in 1626 and the name Salem was adopted in 1629.

In 1692 the witchcraft delusion appeared in the district later set apart as Danvers, and in the six months from March to September nineteen persons were hanged and one man was pressed to death.

In 1775 the Salemites defeated a small force of British sent to destroy some stores, this being one of the first instances of armed resistance to British rule in this country.

For many years after the revolution Salem was an important commercial centre, and it was by Salem merchants that American trade was opened up with China, Japan, Africa and Brazil.

Salem was incorporated as a town in 1630 and became a city in 1836.

BRAINTREE HIGH SCHOOL

Class of 24 Graduated—Medals Presented

The graduating exercises of the Braintree high school were held in the Town hall, Wednesday evening and there was the usual large audience present. The members of the graduating class marched in and took seats on the platform which was banked with palms and other potted plants and cut flowers. The school orchestra opened the program with the selection "Invercargill." The next number was the vocal chorus by Pinsuti, "Good night, good night, beloved."

The salutatory with essay, "English and American women in the 18th century" was very ably delivered by Holley S. Winkfield. His words were witty and the essay showed evidences of much thought and research. Another interesting essay was "Stevenson the children's poet" and was ably presented by Hannah G. Griffin. The fifth number was a girls' chorus "Oh, my Love's like a red, red rose" and was finely rendered.

The essay "Aeronautics" written by William R. Long was an able presentation of the subject. Owing to the unfortunate fact of Mr. Long being absent because of illness the paper was read by Charles H. Mallon. A stirring address on "American Citizenship" was delivered by the speaker of the evening, Hon. Melville S. Nash of Hanover. The familiar chorus "When the sun in splendor rising" from "Lucia" was charmingly sung by the school.

The essay with valedictory "The progress of the peace movement" was a scholarly effort and its author Miss Rachel H. Strathdee received well deserved applause from her audience.

The presentation of diplomas, medals, etc., was by Benjamin J. Hawes, chairman of the school committee. His remarks carried a lot of good advice and were couched in witty language.

The French medals were awarded to Hannah G. Griffin, Rachel H. Strathdee and Anna L. Strid.

The civil service essay prize given by the Philergians was awarded to Rudolph L. Couillard. Raymond A. Hubbard has the remarkable record of being neither absent nor tardy during five years and was publicly congratulated by Mr Hawes.

A very pretty affair was the dancing party given by the graduating class of the Braintree High school in the Town hall Thursday evening. This took the place of the reception which is usually given the night after graduation. Delightful music was rendered by Reardon's orchestra of Brockton, a short concert preceding the dance. The ladies were elaborately gowned and the party was graced by the presence of many admiring parents and friends. The class officers and the dance committee were as follows:

President—Harold S. Pratt.
Vice-President—Harold G. Frazier.
Secretary—Holley S. Winkfield.
Treasurer—Rudolph T. Couillard.
Dance committee — Raymond A. Hubbard Chairman; William Rea Long, Harold S. Pratt, Elsie L. Dyer, Marguerite A. Sands.

Last Monday evening the graduating class and the entire faculty of the school enjoyed a banquet at the Quincy House Boston.

The class history was given by Anna Strid, the prophecy by Lillian Gogan and the class gifts were distributed by Charles Mallon. Miss Charlotte Norton, a former teacher, now of Somerville and Carl Rogers a former member of the class, were special guests of the class.

Read the official circular as issued by the chief marshal.

Be sure and send that check tonight.

The association will have a meeting tonight when the collectors will report their collections and the association will know how they stand financially.

I may announce on Monday a new "big" feature for the parade. Watch for it.

Now "kick" about the route of the parade. I think that it is fine.

JULY MAGAZINES.

LIPPINCOTT'S.—When the midsummer heat is too intense for physical exertion, or when one is going on a long journey, reading is the pastime which naturally appeals to one for whiling away the time pleasantly and profitably. In most cases it is fiction that is desired—interesting fiction, not too deep or highbrowish, but with lots of action and a plentiful seasoning of sentiment. Lippincott's for July offers an especially attractive table of contents of this kind. The complete novel is "Northborough Cross," by L. Cope Cornford, a distinguished British author. This is a "buried treasure," story of a new type. The scenes are laid in a staid English village—that is, it was staid before the incidents narrated in the story began to happen.

Owen Oliver contributes a vivid short-story entitled "The Wisdom of Folly," Thomas Grant Springer's offering is "Babes in the Woods"—the "woods" in this instance being the great city of New York, and the "babes" a youth and a girl who are alone and stranded there.

PAY 100 CENTS ON THE DOLLAR

What Financial Circles Expect of the Claflin Company

THE TASK OF REORGANIZATION

Co-operation of All Interests Is Assured—Personal Fortune of Head of Failed Firm Pledged—Company Injured by Changes In Trade Condition of the City of New York

New York, June 27.—With assurances of co-operation from the leading dry goods firms, jobbing and commission houses, and the organization of merchandise creditors and the holders of the firm's paper, John Claflin began the task of reorganization of the H. B. Claflin company, which went into the hands of receivers.

In a statement giving his reasons for the receivership, Claflin said regarding possible reorganization that "a plan will soon be presented which we hope will prove acceptable both to creditors and to stockholders."

The impression prevails in financial circles that the firm will eventually pay 100 cents on the dollar, if creditors allow sufficient time for the company to realize on its assets.

The liabilities of the company are placed at $34,000,000, principally in the form of commercial paper. The assets are placed at $44,000,000, and in addition, John Claflin, it is stated, has pledged his personal fortune of $10,000,000. The outstanding paper is so widely scattered as to prevent a financial strain in any one section.

A meeting of the creditors will determine whether the receivership shall be continued, and if so, on what terms they shall be allowed to borrow to continue the business. At this meeting a committee of creditors may be selected to co-operate with the receivers.

Causes for the failure as given by Claflin appear to coincide with the views expressed by leading dry goods merchants, jobbers and commission men. Changes in the trade conditions of the city due to specialization in lines and the growing tendency of manufacturers to sell direct to retailers injured the Claflin company, which did a general jobbing business.

These conditions, Claflin explained, caused his company to look for profits through the ownership of or control of retail stores, resulting in the necessity for extensive financing. So extensive had this financing become that it had reached a point where maturities amounted to about $6,000,000 each week.

Recently, it is said, country banks began restricting their purchases of Claflin and other commercial paper and the company found difficulty in taking care of these maturities.

NEW CLEW TO MURDER

Circus People May Be Able to Explain Mohawk River Mystery

Schenectady, N. Y., June 27.—Search for a clew to the Mohawk river murder mystery has shifted to Lowell, Mass., where a circus which played in Schenectady on May 29 was billed for a performance.

This line of investigation followed reports to the police that grain in bags similar to the one in which the dismembered torso was found had been delivered at the circus grounds.

Belief of the authorities that some people connected with the circus knew something of the murder was strengthened by the fact that on May 31 pieces of women's clothing, stained and torn, were found in the vicinity of the circus grounds.

ANTIETAM CAMP S. OF V.

Celebrates Its 14th Anniversary at Braintree

The members of Antietam Camp No. 32, Sons of Veterans celebrated the fourteenth anniversary of the formation of the camp, in Memorial hall last evening with the comrades of the G. A. R. and members of Sons of Veterans Auxiliary No. 16 as their guests. The affair was very informal and everybody was made to feel at home by the short address of welcome by Nelson E. Hayden, chairman of the good of the order committee.

The program of entertainment was varied and interesting. There were piano selections by Miss Helen MacDonald readings by Miss Helen Corridan of Weymouth, cornet solos by Wesley Butler with Miss Grace Rand as pianist and violin solos by Miss Ethel McEwen Miss Ruth Creed presiding at the piano.

An interesting address on "Personal reminiscences of Antietam" was delivered by Henry A. Monk and was greatly enjoyed by all. Miss Ruth Creed favored the audience with piano solos and Mrs. Stella B. Fox read an original poem which abounded in "knocks" for the members of the camp and auxillary and occasioned much laughter and applause. All the performers were generous with encores and the hours passed most pleasantly.

As the final number all joined in singing "America" after which refreshments of strawberries and cream and punch were served by members of the Auxiliary.

The affair was in charge of a committee of which Nelson E. Hayden is chairman. As a finale dancing was enjoyed for a short time.

PASS IT ALONG.

Whether clocks in Spokane, Washington shall be set ahead one hour, thereby changing from Pacific to mountain time, is a question which is causing lively discussion among residents of that city.

The question has been given an official tinge by a formal request made of the city commissioners by Thomas H. Brewer ,a bank president. Desiring to get an expression of public opinion regarding the proposed change the commissioners have referred the question to the chamber of commerce which organization is conducting an investigation.

Mr Brewer and other advocates of the change in time rest their case on theh increased amount of daylight which people would enjoy during waking hours. Other arguments they advance in favor of mountain time for Spokane in substance follow: Benefit to health, more recreation, better conditions for sleep, beneficial to children, advantageous to farmers and suburban residents visiting in the city, more daylight for workingmen and women in homes, more efficient work in industrial plants, closer mail, telegraph, telephone, freight and express connections between Spokane and the east; and saving in the cost of artificial illumination.

Setting the clocks ahead would mean 201 additional hours of daylight in a year ,and would add an equal number of hours of darkness in the morning for sound sleep.

Opponents of the change declare confusion would result from a dual standard of time inasmuch as the railroads would continue under Pacific time, and that the regulation of courts, banks and public offices would suffer.

Grocers belonging to the Spokane Grocers' association have voted unanimously for the change in time, and have pledged their cooperation in a sult.

RESOLUTE SCORES EIGHTH VICTORY

Leads Procession In Race With Vanitie and Defiance

Oyster Bay, N. Y., June 27.—The cup class sloop Resolute scored her eighth victory in the preliminary racing series. The contest was sailed off here in light to moderate and shifting winds, and except for the first three miles the race was a procession, with the Herreshoff yacht making the pace.

Neither of her rivals, the Vanitie and the Defiance, seemed able to hold the flag officers' yacht, although both made up much lost time on the last five miles through the freshening of the breeze.

The Resolute's margin in corrected time at the finish over the Vanitie was five minutes and forty-six seconds, and over the Defiance six minutes and thirty-two seconds. The Vanitie beat the Defiance forty-six seconds in corrected time.

GENERAL MOVE ON MEXICO CITY

Villa Presses on With Practically All His Forces

IS CHASING FLEEING FEDERALS

Aguas Calientes Probably His Next Objective—Last Stand of Huerta Forces Likely at Queretaro, Gateway of Capital—Further Details of Desperate Fighting at Zacatecas

Zacatecas, Mex., June 27.—There is not any doubt that the federals sustained in the loss of this city the most crushing defeat suffered by them so far in the present revolution. In no previous instance had so many earthworks been thrown up, or scheme of defense so ably planned.

In spite of all, miles of trenches, stone parapets and small earthwork forts which fell before the constitutionalists, one after another in eight hours on the last day of the battle.

Villa's troops scaled barren hillsides where footing seemed impossible. Whole lines of the attacking parties were cut down but always there were others to take their places. When finally the top of the hill or mountain was reached, the federals would rush headlong down the other side only to be mowed down by the constitutionalist fire.

For a whole day the Villa men, led by their commander-in-chief, pressed forward in this manner and at sundown the city was in their hands.

The constitutionalists were in position for days. They were exposed alternately to drenching rains, scorching sun and chilling cold of the night, which exists at this altitude, a height above sea level of from 8000 to 12,000 feet—with one blanket for protection and practically no food. The federals held to their positions valiantly but were overwhelmed by the fierce onslaught of Villa's men.

Villa has started troops in pursuit of the remnant of the federal army of General Barron, which he routed from Zacatecas. The attack on Aguas Calientes will not be delayed in order to await the arrival of General Obregon's forces from the west. This division of the army is at present so far away that the federals would have too much time in which to prepare themselves for the attack.

Villa is pressing on immediately with practically all his forces. Aguas Calientes is only sixty-five miles south ofZacatecas and 360 miles north of Mexico City. It has a population of about 45,000 persons and is a very important commercial centre. It is connected by rail with San Luis Potosi, about eighty miles east, and with Tampico.

If the commands of Barron, Maas and Velasco effect a junction at Aguas Calientes they will have a combined force almost as large as that of Villa. They have 100 cannon and many rapid-fire guns.

Villa does not expect any formidable resistance from now on until he reaches Queretaro, the gateway of Mexico City, where, in all likelihood, the decisive battle of the revolution will be fought.

Villa's only drawback now is said to be the disruption of his lines of communication. The railroads are cut behind him and repairing these may cause delay.

BENTON'S SLAYER KILLED

Fierro Reported to Have Been a Victim of His Own Men

El Paso, Tex., June 27.—Colonel Rudolfo F. Fierro, "the butcher," as he is known through northern Mexico, died at the taking of Zacatecas, a victim of the hatred of his own men.

His death will probably mean that no one will ever be brought to justice for the killing of William S. Benton, the British rancher, for even constitutionalists tacitly admit that Fierro was the man who killed the Englishman.

For a long time it has been the firm belief among officials that Fierro would not emerge from the present campaign alive. The gossip even says that Fierro has been walking around under sentence of death, which for obvious reasons could be carried out only on a battlefield.

WARD TWO DIVIDED

New School or Addition to the Washington

People in the Point district are disturbed over the danger that the proposed addition and hall to the Washington school may not be realized speedily. There seems to be a misunderstanding and also differences of opinion existing.

The members of the School Committee recently approved the plans of the addition and their chairman has signed the plans and specifications, but it is supected that many of them would rather have the congestion relieved by building a school in the Bigelow district and that they voted for the additions to the Washington school merely because that plan would afford quickest relief.

Some of the members of the Council before voting on the order, want to know how long the Bigelow district will remain quiet. This question the School Committee cannot answer.

They simply say "We want more room."

A conference between the School Committee and the Finance committee will take place next Tuesday evening. This is because there is a difference of opinion existing among the councilmen. Many favor the erection of a new building in the Bigelow Park district and as many others the proposed addition.

Some weeks ago the residents of the Bigelow district presented a largely signed petition to the School Committee asking for a school in that district but no action was taken on it, for the reason that the board had already voted to ask for additions to the Washington school and it was understood that only one of the two projects could be undertaken, at least until the Norfolk Downs people had their needs supplied.

The growth of Squantum and the increase in the school children of that place has resulted in the residents demanding a school also.

ST. MARY'S FETE.

All the arrangements for the midsummer fete of St. Mary's parish on the grounds surrounding St. Josephs hall this afternoon and evening are complete and the committees that devoted so much time to the preparation of this annual event have prepared the most elaborate program ever given.

The special guest of the evening, His Excellency Gov. David I. Walsh, will arrive about eight o'clock and as Lieut.-Gov. Edward Barry will be in this city today as the guest of Councillor Guy, he may also call on Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy during the evening and renew his friendship. The affair is under the personal direction of Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy assistant, and he has arranged the sports for children this afternoon.

WEYMOUTH.

Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays are the regular days for North Weymouth news in the Ledger but if there is much going on there may be news from this lively summer resort most every day in the week.

SISTER BURNED OUT.

Joseph W. Dennen went to Salem on Friday to try and locate his sister, Mrs. Anna Parsons, whose home was located in the district devastated by fire. When Mr. Dennen arrived at Salem all he could find of what had been his sister's home was a piece of slate. He did not succeed in seeing his sister or her husband, but he received direct information that while their home had been burned to the ground they were safe.

QUINCY POST OFFICE.

SUBURBAN LIFE.

An admirably diversified number of that excellent magazine of the country-side—Suburban Life—is the issue for July. Combined with the more practical articles are a number of interesting stories of things which have to do with the great out-of-doors, all excellently illustrated. "Seth Low's Paying Farm" is the story of the agricultural enterprise of a well known publicist, and "The Success of Concrete Roads," tells most interestingly of the amazingly rapid increase in building highways of cement. "Where It Is Always Spring" is a delightful study of the homes of two noted writers—Henry K. Bailey and Dallas Lore Sharp—and of the personality of the men themselves and their families. "A Notable Summer Home" gives a glimpse of a recently built house admirably adapted for the seashore. "My Friends, the Woodpeckers," is a charmingly intimate bird study. Other leading articles in this issue are. "From Barren Plot to Beauty Spot," "Bedding Plants and Their Uses."

AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

In the July American Magazine "Eddie" Collins of the Philadelphia Athletics whom "Johnny" McGraw of the New York Giants has called the greatest baseball player in the world, writes an article entitled "Pitchers I Have Faced," in which he tells many stories of his experiences with the most wonderful baseball pitchers in the major leagues.

In the same issue Stephen Leacock, who is called the "Canadian Mark Twain," begins a new comic series entitled "Arcadian Adventures with the Idle Rich." Fiction is contributed by Marjorie Benton Cooke, whose serial story "Bamby" is making a great impression; Number 6606, a convict in a western penitentiary, who tells another "Boston Blackie" story; and Rebecca Hooper Eastman who writes a story entitled "That Awful Bill," which is a report of an adventure treating of a wife's financial affairs.

The Undoing of Mrs. Rastus

All on Account of a Photograph

By EDWIN FAIRFAX NAULTY

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

I am not writing a tract, so you must find your own moral to this tale. Lombard street has passed upon it and the verdict—but this is how it happened:

A fire had eaten up half a lumber yard in that mysterious section of Philadelphia called "downtown."

When the city editor of the Globe reached his office at 1 o'clock, the first thing he did was to assign Watson to cover the fire.

He told Watson to take along a photographer and to have his copy in early.

Watson went down to the art room and got Pierce. The Globe had just bought a new triplicate action camera with about a dozen improvements, and this Pierce took with him.

Fifteen minutes later the men were at the fire, and Pierce had taken three expostures. That left him one plate.

He arranged to meet Watson in half an hour two squares away.

Watson has nothing more to do with this story, so it does not matter whether he kept his appointment or not.

Pierce amused himself on the corner watching the passersby for awhile, but he soon tired of that and fell to speculating on the result of his exhibition of prints at the next showing of the Photograph club.

Suddenly he heard that peculiar clicking noise made by some persons when they are confronted with something out of the ordinary.

He turned round and saw standing on the corner Mrs. Rastus.

On her head was poised the basket in which she had brought some washing to a family who lived near by. On either side of the basket were placed her uplifted hands supporting it.

Her face, black as graphite, shone with a dozen emotions as she looked down the street to where the fire was thrusting great swords of flame to the sky only to sheathe them the next moment in twisting scabbards of rolling smoke.

Pierce looked at her, and in a moment came his inspiration.

Mrs. Rastus, spellbound at the sight before her, did not notice the big black box being swung into position, nor did she hear the click the shutter made or the satisfied sigh of security vented by Pierce.

Pierce hesitated a moment, his right hand fingering the change pocket of his coat. Evidently he thought better of his intention, for he suddenly boarded a trolley car which came by at the moment.

Next morning the Globe had the best pictures of the fire printed by any newspaper. The managing editor, looking at the half tones, thought that, after all, the head of the art department was wise in insisting on the purchase of the new camera.

So did Pierce in his own little dark room at his home as he carefully developed a negative.

The exhibition of the Photograph club was a great success. Camera mad enthusiasts raved over it.

But they exhausted all their superlatives in adjectival praise of the single exhibit made by J. Coolidge Pierce.

It was a remarkable photograph and was quite the feature of the exhibition. On its dead black frame was the single word "Voodoo."

The face of the negress was a study. She stood with uplifted hands as if invoking all the terrors of the nether kingdom, and on her face was an expression that was as mysterious as the subject.

Then Pierce would smile in a knowing way. He did not think it necessary to explain nor to tell how his skillful manipulation of the negative had eliminated the laundry basket.

The owner of a store on Chestnut street in an idle moment wandered into the show of the Photograph club. The picture laid its spell on him, as it had done on others.

Three days afterward Pierce bought a new wide angle lens he had hankered after for a year. He also deposited $40 in the care of the receiving teller of a bank that accepted small accounts.

Pierce was a New Englander and combined thrift with the pursuit of art.

The Chestnut street merchant put the "Voodoo" in a six inch wide silver frame. One of his two windows he draped in black velvet, and at the end of a long perspective he placed the picture.

This was done at night. The next morning the curious ones almost blocked the pave.

The clerks told inquirers that the picture was not for sale at any price. The merchant, who also combined thrift with art, reaped the benefit of a huge advertisement which he had figured on.

Two nights later Alcibiades Paige of Lombard street took a stroll on Chestnut street.

Alcibiades had "belonged" to the Paiges of Virginia. He tolerated the shortening of his first name into Al, but the omission of the letter "i" in his last one excited his ire.

He was the philosopher and general oracle of Lombard street and it was whispered knew something about "black art."

If the "Voodoo" was impressive by day she was doubly so at night. She burst on the amazed vision of Alcibiades with a dramatic surprise that brought him to a sudden halt.

For fifteen minutes he never moved. Then he wrenched himself away and went to Lombard street.

His interview with Mrs. Rastus was not a satisfactory one. Finally he prevailed on her to go with him to Chestnut street.

As she wound a shawl about her head Rastus, lying asleep on the lounge, stirred and drowsily asked:

"Whah yo' gwine, Liza?"

"Jes' gwine ter th' stoh."

Mr. Paige brought all his art to bear on Mrs. Rastus on the way to Chestnut street, but she was obdurate. She would neither deny nor affirm.

Eventually he confronted her with the picture. The expression of her face when she saw the photograph was convincing to Alcibiades.

The original and the counterfeit stared at each other with equal look.

Alcibiades' peroration was conclusive. Said he:

"Thah ain't no use en denyin' et. Thah yo' be. Ef et wah a painted pitsher Eh mought hev mah doubts. But this yer's a photygraf, an' they doan' lie."

Suddenly a great light broke on Mrs. Rastus. She had hard work to keep it to herself, but she did.

Two days later Lombard street was astonished to find that the sign "WasHinG doNe Here" had disappeared from the front of Mrs. Rastus' house and that it was replaced by a staring yellow one bearing the inscription:

"Mme. Jonez, Voodoo."

Rastus was even more astonished than the neighbors.

His wife informed him in decisive manner that she had done with washing. He threatened, he raved, he expostulated, but to the black Gibraltar sitting in state in the "parlor," which she had draped with black alpaca, his words were as the idle wind.

Rastus stood it for four days, then he got a "job" at the salt works, the first he had taken in seven years. Also he went to board with a neighbor.

Lombard street first looked with awe on the sign. But, after a few days, an adventurous woman, driven to desperate courage by the scorn of a mulatto longshoreman, called on Mme. Jonez. A week later she and the longshoreman were married.

But, though the sign still blazons its yellow tidings to the public, Mme. Jonez is in a bad way. The longshoreman's wife is an ardent disciple, yet Mme. Jonez failed to cure Pete Blenkin's broken leg, and he had to go to the hospital. Minnie Hunt's husband died of pneumonia in summer, despite the fact that she paid six silver dollars to the "Voodoo" for his recovery.

Sim Wilson was arrested for playing policy. He had paid $10 to Mme. Jonez, but the police seemed unaware of that fact and haled him off just the same.

Mme. Jonez "voodooed" seven candles. Nevertheless one of the Wilson twins died from the measles and the other is partially blind.

Then Lombard street arose in wrath. It did nothing severe. It simply refused to have anything further to do with Mme. Jonez. And it talked about her.

Things went on for a time, and then one morning Lombard street awoke to find that the yellow sign had disappeared and that inside the window of the parlor hung the meek legend:

"WasHinG doNe Here."

But Lombard street would have none of it.

Little black and yellow urchins stood in front of the house and cast gibes at its inmate. They followed her on the street, and a convenient stone at times gave aching point to their scorn.

Even Rastus, appealed to secretly at night, refused to hearken to the wife of his bosom and shook in her face with defiance the $21 he had saved.

I do not know what is going to become of Mrs. Rastus. Pierce has gone over to New York to work for one of the newspapers there. The Chestnut street merchant is in Europe.

But the photograph, in its silver frame, from the wall of his library stares into space. The Irish serving maid shudders every time her mistress tells her to dust the shelves.

USE OF FIRE EXTINGUISHERS.

Chief Billings of the Fire department paid a visit to the City Hospital on Friday and gave the nurses and attendants a little instruction in the use of the Pyrene fire extinguisher with which the hospital has been equipped. This fire extinguisher is said to be a most effectual one, but great care must be exercised in the use, as it immediately consumes all of the oxygen in the room where used, and attendants are liable to be overcome unless great care is taken.

FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS.

"Any community that is large enough to have a case of tuberculosis is large enough to have some one to fight it" is the slogan of an important leaflet being sent out by the recently organized Massachusetts Anti-Tuberculosis League. This leaflet in a few short paragraphs calls attention to the most important laws relating to the tuberculosis problem, clearly indicates the duty of each city and town, and suggests that every agency receiving the leaflet find out whether or not the law is being complied with in its particular community.

Three of the most important laws on our statute books relating to tuberculosis are those requiring every case of tuberculosis known to a doctor or householder to be reported to the local board of health that which compels every town of over 10,000 inhabitants to maintain a tuberculosis dispensary and the one requiring cities to build tuberculosis hospitals. The public is not generally awake to the importance of strict enforcement of these laws.

The League with offices at 4 Joy street, Boston, and with 24 anti-tuberculosis and other similar organizations already affiliated with it, stands ready to assist any community in its fight against tuberculosis.

FEEDING BIRDS.

Have you a bird-board in your yard? You haven't?—then for goodness sake get one put up right away. You are missing daily a three-ringed circus, a symphony concert, and a picture gallery all in one, not to mention valuable lessons in the etiquette of the lunch-counter and sermonettes on the gentle art of being grateful. Roll up your sleeves. Drive a stout stake into the ground, and on the top of it mail securely that cheese-box lid which your obliging groceryman doesn't dare refuse you. Upon this improvised table place scraps of bread, sodden toast sunflower seeds, crushed nuts and suet. Then just wait. Possess your soul in patience a few days and you will soon begin to reap large returns of quiet delight from your bird hostelry. First, however give some kind friend your cat; he has an epicurean fondness for birds which is not at all reciprocated. —Suburban Life.

FEWER NEWSPAPERS.

Frank A. Munsey, one of the most courageous, resourceful and, in the main, successful publishers in the United States, has discontinued the Philadelphia Times ,of which he is the owner. This is the second paper in Philadelphia to suspend publication in a decade.

Modern conditons are everywhere calling for fewer papers and stronger ones. Denver now has only one morning newspaper the Republican having been absorbed by the Rocky Mountain News. New Orleans and St. Paul have effected similar consolidations of late, all of which are but symptomatic of the economic forces at work in the newspaper business.—Boston Herald.

MISS REVERE JOINS TENT

A Granddaughter of P.ul J. Revere, the Hero

The meeting of Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans, Friday evening was of unusual interest, from the fact that one of the ladies initiated into membership was a granddaughter of Col. Paul J. Revere for whom the local Grand Army post is named. The young lady in question is Miss Pauline J. Revere, of Roxbury, a daughter of Frank J. Revere, formerly of Quincy.

Miss Revere has long desired to become affiliated with the local tent of the Daughters of Veterans. The constitution of the organization however provides that one must have reached the age of eighteen years to be eligible for membership. Miss Revere observed her eighteenth birthday last April, and as soon as possible thereafter application for membership in the local tent was made, and she was initiated, as noted above, Friday evening.

There was a large attendance of members of the tent as well as several members of Paul Revere Post G. A. R., which included Commander Marstin.

After the business session there were remarks by several of the Grand Army men present, readings by Miss Nichols, and songs by Commander Marstin.

The newly initiated member, Miss Revere, was also called upon for remarks and she in a winsome way told of her interest in the Daughters of Veterans and her desire to become affiliated with it, and that she had taken the fisrt opportunity, after reaching the desired age to do so. Miss Revere said that she was much interested in Quincy and its many places of historical interest. She also spoke of the First Parish church which she had not visited however since the funeral of her father some five years ago. On that occasion she with others of her family occupied the Revere pew. She also spoke of Rev. Mr. Lunt a former pastor of the First Parish, whose great granddaughter she is. After the close of the session light refreshments were served.

District aide Mrs. Mabelle H. Gooding of Weymouth was the special guest of the evening and an invitation was received from Dorothy L. Dix of Weymouth to be present at an exemplification of the Daughters of Veterans degree next Thursday evening. Comrades James Barrows and A. H. Maxwell were obligated to membership.

BETHEL BEACH AUDITORIUM

To Be Dedicated This Afternoon By Baptists

The new auditorium recently erected at Bethel beach by the Swedish Baptists will be dedicated this afternoon at 3 o'clock and services will also be held this evening at 7.30 when there will be a concert.

Some years ago a number of the parishioners of the Swedish Baptist church opened up a tract of land near Palmer street on the road to Germantown which they gave the name of Bethel beach. Every summer regular religious services have been held throughout the week and on Sundays. These services have up to the present time been held in a large tent. This year, however, the parishioners have erected a large auditorium and here services will hereafter be held during the summer months. It is this auditorium which will be dedicated this afternoon.

On Sunday instead of the usual services at the Swedish Baptist church at Brewers corner, services will be held at the new auditorium at Bethel beach with sermons at 10.30 by Rev. J. O. Hammarberg, Rev. J. O. Backlund and the pastor Rev. Paul Hallin. At 3 o'clock on Sunday there will be a union evangelical service at the auditorium.

The only service at the Brewers corner church will be the Sunday school.

GETS $4000 VERDICT

Woman Recovers For Imprisonment In an Insane Asylum

Hartford, June 27.—A jury in the federal court awarded $4000 to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Holman in her suit for $50,000 damages against her former husband, Professor Cranston Brenton, and Dr. Paul Waterman of this city, an an allegation of conspiracy in placing her against her will in an insane retreat.

The then Mrs. Brenton brought suit for divorce over a year ago, alleging intolerable cruelty. Brenton brought a counter-suit on statutory grounds, naming Frederick E. Holman as corespondent. Brenton won his suit. Then followed long litigation for custody of a minor child and Brenton won.

Soon after the divorce Mrs. Brenton married Holman. In the suit against Brenton and Waterman she charged that while Brenton's wife she was taken to an insane asylum against her will. In order to secure her release she said she had to first sign a statement of wrongdoing with Holman.

BANQUET OF CLASS OF 1914

Superindent and Teachers Among the Guests

The closing event of the Class of 1914, Quincy High school was a grand banquet last evening at Hotel Thorndike, Boston. The only guests were Supt. and Mrs. Albert L. Andrew Deane the toastmaster spoke briefly and first introduced Harry Burr, the class president, who gave a few interesting facts. Joseph H. McPherson of the School Committee spoke in support of the movement to organize an Alumni association of High School graduates and introduced Albert G. Coffin, Jr., '06, who went more into detail on the same subject.

The class history was given by Margaret L. Magee. Supt. Marbour, Headmaster Collins and Ernest Gelotte, business manager of the Senior dramatics, also made remarks. The hit of the evening was the class prophecy by Marjorie L. Snow, who revealed a wonderful future for her class mates.

With cheers for the Class of 1914 led by Fred Atwood the banquet closed. The committee included Louise B. Wilson, Florence Crowell and Harry S. Burr.

SUDDEN DEATH MRS. HIRTLE

The many friends of Mrs. Effie A. Hirtle wife of Stewart L. Hirtle will be shocked to learn of her death Thursday at the Massachusetts General Hospital following an operation for appendicitis. Mrs. Hirtle was taken to the hospital suffering from appendicitis Tuesday and underwent an operation the following day. Apparently she was doing nicely but soon began to fail and her husband was sent for. Her husband and sister Rita were with her Thursday when she passed away.

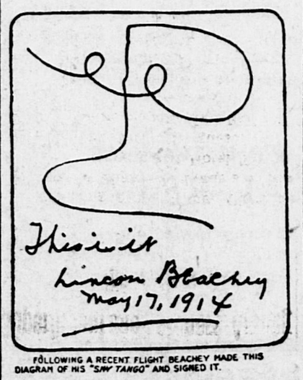

Mrs. Hirtle was about 37 years of age and enjoyed a large circle of friends. She was quite a vivacious woman and aside from driving her own horse she also was her own chauffeur.

Aside from her husband, who is a well known Wollaston plumber, she leaves a father and mother and two sisters ,Rita and Muriel, and two brothers, Ralph of Salt Lake city and John of Fargo, North Dakota.

She has been married about twelve years and was a general favorite with all. Funeral services will be held from St. Chrysostoms church, Wollaston Monday at 2 o'clock.

BEACHEY AT BROCKTON

Lincoln Beachey, the bird man who has startled the world with his antics in mid-air, has been secured by the management of the Brockton Fair, and will appear each day Sept. 29, 30, Oct. 1 and 2.

FOLLOWING A RECENT FLIGHT BEACHEY MADE THIS DIAGRAM OF HIS "SAW TANGO" AND SIGNED IT.

In addition to flying upside down and looping-the-loop, Beachey has just originated a new one which he styles the "Tango Dip." The above is a very clear diagram of this new evolution, drawn by its originator, and should be a great help to all who have a desire to try any flights in fact or fancy.

Beachey will fly at Brockton every day, rain or shine, and will not appear at any other fair in New England.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Services at the First Parish, Sunday morning will be the last before the summer vacation. The subject of Mr. Hudson's vacation sermon will be "Giving right Names to Things."

Miss Ruth C. Warren of Webster street who has just graduated from Burdett college was awarded the gold medal for proficiency in typewriting at special exercises held Thursday at the college.

Rev. Merrill C. Ward of the Universalist church and family left on the Monday night boat for Portland going to their farm for the summer. Their address is Buxton, Maine, telephone Bar Mills 13-6.

There was a slight shower early this morning but hardly enough however to lay the dust in the streets.

Miss Marion White, of 65 Union street, stenographer for the firm Richard E. Thibaut, Boston, is enjoying her annual two weeks vacation.

The minstrel show to be given by the Tonawanda club in the Atlantic school hall Monday night promises to be the biggest affair of the year. Clifton Young who was one of the ends in the ministrel show at Quincy High school last year is to be one of the end men.

Joseph DeLorenzo the Atlantic fruit dealer, who accidentally knocked a chip of stone into his eye while hoeing his garden last week is in the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary. He has been operated on twice and it is expected the sight of the injured eye will be restored although the cornea was almost ruined.

A much felt need of the boys of Atlantic has been met this week in the organization of a corps of boy cadets in the Atlantic Memorial church. Rev T. W. Davison will have charge of the Bible department; Charles Trafford the Military drill, and Clifford Whitney of the social games. The boys have enthusiastically taken hold of it and will meet once a week even during the summer.

The Citizens Gas Company has declared a quarterly dividend of one and a quarter per cent on preferred stock.

Salem is just 20 miles from Quincy in an air line, and one reason the conflagration could be seen here so plainly was that this line is across the water. The direct line touches Long or Deer island, Nahant and Swampscott. The only town to the east is Marblehead; while to the west is Boston, Winthrop, Revere and Lynn.

MOTOR CYCLE ACCIDENT.

Daniel Barry of Holbrook was thrown from his motor cycle on Quincy avenue this morning when the machine skidded on a soft spot on the street as he turned to avoid one of the three steamer horses that shied as they passed by. His brother Daniel who was riding on an extension seat jumped and in falling landed on his side. A chicken he carried in his pocket was uninjured.

Both were assisted to the Central fire station where the men rendered first aid treatment as taught them in a recent series of lectures.

Daniel was slightly bruised on the arms and hands and sustained a few abrasions on the face. Garrett was bruised on the arms.

The motor cycle was not damaged and both were able to continue their journey.

Vice-President Marshall Believes in Them

At Washington on Thursday Vice President Marshall elaborated on his speech to the editors of Virginia that there is no free press no public opinion and no free speech any longer in America.

He said that hardly a modern newspaper could stop printing murders, crime stories and scandals without failure. He declared that the newspapers of today are ruled from the business office because the penny for the paper was insufficient to give a profit.

"In the old days," said Mr. Marshall "when papers sold for five cents, we had news of the proper character. Then the papers could make a profit regardless of the advertising. I believe in a higher priced paper.

"The newspaper business is like law, in that it has ceased to be a profession and has become a trade. The reason for this is the same in both cases. Lawyer and editor, in order to exist, give to the public what it wants instead of giving to it what they would like to give it. It is the man who reads and not the man who writes who is responsible for the fact that there is no free press."

WILL MEET WEDNESDAY.

No meeting of the City Council will be held Monday evening, but there will be an adjourned meeting on Wednesday evening. At this meeting a public hearing will be held on the acceptance of Ocean street Atlantic. Outside of this there is but little business to come before the meeting, although it is among the probabilities that some action may be taken on the order providing for a four room addition to the Washington school. This order is now pending before the Finance Committee and the committee will hold a meeting Wednesday evening just previous to the Council meeting.

WEBSTER MEMORIAL.

A memorial bowlder in memory of Daniel Webster was unveiled at Marshfield on Friday by John Adams chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution of Boston. Miss Floretta Vining of Hull, regent of the chapter since its institution, presided. The stone is four feet high, of Quincy granite, taken from land formerly owned by President John Adams. Ex-Gov. Long was the orator of the day and made a defense of Webster.

In opening the meeting the Mayo said that the city of Salem had me with a conflagration that surpasse any in any state, and had called f financial aid. He also spoke of t call received from Gov. Walsh aski for aid from the citizens of the co monwealth. Much of the resident part of the city had been devasted, well as a large portion of its ma facturing district. If such a th happened to Quincy one might w understand what the feeling would here and he felt that a similar c would meet with a heary respo from Salem. Aid was needed and i mediately. Quincy must come forwa for some day we may be in a simil position. Mr. Conway of the stre railway had called upon him tha morning and stated that any packages left at their terminal would be promptly forwarded free of expense.

The meeting organized under the name of the City of Quincy Salem Relief association and these officers were elected:

President—John L. Miller.
Vice President—Joseph L. Whiton.
Secretary—A. F. Bromley.

Mr. Whiton urged that the local press inform all citizens through their papers that contributions should be left with Mr. Burgin, and said that $1,000 should be quickly raised.

John L. Hamilton, president of the Board of Trade, said that the Board of Trade had already taken up the matter and had started the ball rolling with a check for $25. He stated that the Board of Trade had seen several citizens and he announced the following contributions.

Dr. Phillip Kelley $25, Hon. E. R. Stone $5, T. L. Williams $5, Carl E. Carlson $5, Herbert S. Barker $5, S. H. Couch Co. $25, E. O. Woodward $5, John L. Hamilton $5, Milne & Chalmers $5.

WOLLASTON BAPTIST:

The last service of the season was held Sunday morning, and in spite of the rain, there was a large audience. Impressed by the recent catastrophe at Salem and having visited the ruins Rev. Joseph Walther, the pastor, took for the subject of his sermon "Fire." H... drew many lessons from his im...ressions; the insecurity of wealth, the unexpectedness of the event, the goodness of God in sparing some of the city, and the quick offers of aid to the stricken city, were all mentioned. He then changed the thought a little and applied "fire" as a symbol—in Scripture the word "fire" has been applied both to sin and to God himself. The idea was carried out along those lines.

The choir sang "The Lord is exalted" and at the close of the anthem, the pastor spoke a few words of appreciation for the faithful work of the young people during the past year; a rising vote of thanks was given by the congregation.

The last service of the day was held at 6 o'clock in the chapel, under the leadership of the Christian Endeavor Society. William E. Bullock was in charge. Subject "Civic reforms that Endeavorers should promote." The young people will continu... their meetings with other churches du...ing the summer.

WOLLASTON UNITARIAN.

Sunday's service of worship was the last till the Sunday after Labor day. Despite the rain a good congregation gathered and listened to a suggestive sermon on "The soul creates its own world." Two children—Carolyn, daughter of George Thompson Hutchinson; and Inez Howes Hutchinson; and Henry Irving, son of John Morgan and Sarah Spinol Morgan—were dedicated in the faith, fellowship and hope of the gospel to God, our Father in heaven, and were presented each with a white rosebud as a symbol of the unfolding of a beautiful life. The baptismal font used is one of pewter, which has been in use since the church was built. Just before the rite of baptism was administered the congregation sang James Freeman Clarke's beautiful baptismal hymn "To thee O God in heaven these little ones we bring." At the close of the service after the usual benediction by the pastor the Girls' choir sang very feelingly "God be with you till we meet again!"

Another box of books will be sent by the Ladies' Aid Alliance to Ossipee, N. H., where the ladies of our church last year started a public library.

PARK AND DOWNS.

"Children's Day" was observed at this church Sunday. The Sabbath school had full charge at the morning service. The church was charmingly decorated with flowers and potted plants. A motto in green was suspended across the wall of the chancel. "The Sunday school of today is the church of tomorrow."

The program began with a processional and hymn by the members of the kindergarten. One hundred children of about five years of age marched down the center aisle singing the processional hymn. These children furnished the numbers for the program. There were songs and recitations given by the little ones—some of them containing very valuable lessons.

There was also chorus singing by the entire Sabbath school. The school has been for three years under the direction of William J. Colby. He has orgapized and systematized the work so that the school is almost self conductive. He has kept the affection of the pupils and the confidence of the parents. The school has grown steadily under Mr. Colby's wise, efficient management.

The Kindergarten has been for two years under the direction of Mrs. James A. Boone. Under her direction it has graduated over 50 students and yet multiplied its own original number, having over 100 members at present. It is an important branch of Sunday school work and an important ministry in the life of the church. A charming part of the children's day program was the baptism of ten infants by the pastor. This was a beautiful and touching service. In spite of the rain the church was filled.

At the evening services the minister preached a powerful sermon on "Fire," and pointed out the great lessons from the Salem conflagration.

Frank C. Blake, 56 Elm avenue and Eugene Blaisdell, 50 Vassel street, have been appointed to receive contributions for the relief of the Salem fire victims. Mr. Blake to cover the Wollaston Park district and Mr. Blaisdell the Norfolk Downs district. There is not time to solicit—friends are requested to send money or checks to either of these men.

Two solos were beautifully rendered at the evening service by Arthur F. Capen.

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

Sunday morning's sermon on "The prospering soul," was especially interesting. Dr. Sneath presenting a message helpful to all from 3 John 1: 1-2. "The elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth. Beloved, I wish above al lthings that thou mayest prosper and be in health even as thy soul prospereth."

Our first duty is to our soul, to supply the needs that will make it a "prospering soul," and its greatest need is Christ. A prospering soul is one that daily approximates the character of Jesus Christ, Himself the revelation of God in the fullness of perfection.

Sunday school closed with Sunday's session until September.

Union services with the Methodist and Baptist churches commenre next Thursday evening at this church.

Next Sunday is Communion Sunday and a union service will follow.

AN UNLUCKY BRIG.

Once Abandoned, the Marie Celeste Came to a Bad End.

There are few people who have not heard of the case of the American brig Marie Celeste, which in 1872 was inexplicably abandoned in calm weather off the Azores by a crew never after heard from. Few, however, know that it ended its career many years later at the hands of the barrator.

On its last voyage it cleared from Boston for Port au Prince, Haiti, ostensibly with a cargo of valuable general merchandise, insured for $30,000. When within a few miles of its destination it went ashore near Miragoane and became a total wreck. The captain, Parker, promptly sold the cargo, sight unseen, to American Consul Mitchell for $500. Mitchell saved it at some trouble, but lived to wish he hadn't.

When the underwriters' agent arrived on the scene to investigate, he found several funny things about the cargo. One case shipped as cutlery and insured for $1,000 contained dog collars worth $50. Barrels supposed to contain expensive liquors were full of worthless dregs, a consignment of salt fish insured for $5,000 was rotten, and other articles mentioned in the bill of lading proved to be in keeping.

Consul Mitchell, not only duped, but outlawed, stood not on the order of his going, but cleared out for tall timber. The captain of the brig was tried in the United States district court in Boston, convicted and sentenced to a long term in prison, where he died three months later.—David A. Wasson in Outing Magazine.

PRIDE OF THE UGLY CLUB.

He Was the Prize Member of an Old New York Organization.

In the New York Evening Post of May 11, 1814, appeared the following notice:

UGLY CLUB.

Ugly brothers, hither fly.
With you bring the varying eye—
Bring here cock eyes and eyes askance
That cannot pass one tender glance.
Bring goggle eyes and piercers, too;
Eyes green, white, red, black and blue.
Bring with you the eagle's sight
To see your heart and keep it right.
But bring shortsighted eyes to spy
The mote that's in your brother's eye

The members of the Ugly club are directed to attend a special meeting at Ugly hall, 4 Wall street, on Thursday evening, the 12th inst., at 7 o'clock, to take into consideration the propriety of bestowing some suitable mark of distinction on a member who lately while viewing himself in the secretary's ugly mirror was so much pleased with his own ugly phiz that he involuntarily let fall the glass, which was dashed to pieces, and exclaimed, "I shall yet be president of the club!" The astonishing fortitude of this ugly member, in the frequent and public acknowledgment of his natural deformities, deserves the highest commendation.

The members are requested to be punctual in their attendance, as the new members elected at the last meeting and six of the ugly beauties are expected to appear.

The propriety of admitting ladies into the club will be discussed.

By order of His Ugliness.

A Round Trip.

The attorney for a street railroad company in a Kentucky town was examining a skinny sixteen year old negro boy who had sued for injuries ostensibly incurred in a collision on the highway.

"You say," he asked, "that when this street car hit that wagon you were riding on the front seat of the wagon?"

"Dat's what I said," answered the little darky.

"And you say the force of the blow knocked you up in the air?"

"Yas, suh—way up in de air."

"Well, how long did you stay up there?" demanded the attorney.

"Not no longer dan it tuck me to git down!" answered the truthful complainant promptly.—Saturday Evening Post.

Rays From a Searchlight.

The paths traversed by rays from a searchlight depend on the form of curvature of the mirror. If flat, the paths of reflected rays would be the same as those of the rays received; if the arc of a circle, the rays will be reflected to one bright focus. To have a band of parallel rays leave the mirror it must be the arc of a parabola. Then straight rays will be reflected all parallel to each other. In air, the intensity of this beam of light would diminish, but in absolute vacuum would be as intense at any distance.—New York American.

GROSSMAN---LOITMAN

Wedding of Great Interest to Jewish People

Joseph B. Grossman, one of the leading young Jewish residents of the city, and the youngest official in the family of Mayor Miller, was united in marriage Sunday afternoon to Miss Esther Loitman of Glenway street, Roxbury. The ceremony took place at the Temple Mishkan Telfila, Moreland street, Roxbury, and was witnessed by a large gathering of the relatives and friends of the bridal couple.

The ceremony was to have taken place at 3 o'clock, but just before that hour a telephone message was received from the mother of the bride, who a few days ago had undergone a serious surgical operation at the Frost hospital, Chelsea, that she was determined to witness the ceremony so the hour was postponed until her arrival. She arrived at the synagogue about 5.30 and insisted on remaining standing during the ceremony, supported by her husband and a hospital surgeon.

Another touching incident in connection with the ceremony was the death of the bride's maternal grandmother, which occurred last week, the news of which was kept from the bride until after the ceremony.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Loitman and is a singer of considerable note and sings largely for charitable organizations throughout greater Boston. She was attended by Miss Rose Loitman as maid of honor, while the bridesmaids were Misses Anna and Etta Grossman, sisters of the groom, Miss Jennie D. Loitman, a sister of the bride and Misses Sophie and Mary Jolles.

The groom's attendant was Edward Berman of Quincy.

The bride wore a white silk crepe de media trimmed with shadow and Irish point lace and tulle veil. She carried a bouquet of bride roses and lillies of the valley.

The maid of honor wore a yellow silk trimmed with white lace and green sash and carried a bouquet of roses. The bridesmaids wore nile green crepe de media trimmed with shadow lace and carried bouquets of sweet peas.

The ceremony was performed by Rabbi H. H. Rubenovitz. The ushers at the synagogue were Dr. Phil Castleman, Samuel Barron, Jr., of Harvard '14; Joseph Finkle, Harvard '11; Samuel Finkle of Harvard '10; Max Reismore, Julian Reismore, Jacob Grossman, Reuben Grossman, Leo Grossman and J. Loitman.

A reception followed the ceremony at which the bridal party were assisted in receiving by Miss Jennie Loitman, Miss Rose Loitman, Edward Berman and Morris Loitman.

After a brief trip Mr. and Mrs. Grossman will make their home at 93 Goddard street where they will be at home after Oct. 15.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

Ruth Sanborn Robinson of South Weymouth, daughter of Edwin C. Robinson, and A. Wesley Sampson, son of Mrs. Mary A. Sampson of North Weymouth were united in marriage Saturday evening at the home of David N. Crawford, Tower avenue, South Weymouth the Rev. H. C. Alvord of the Old South Congregational church officiating.

Arthur B. Cole of Dorchester acted as best man and the bridesmaid was Miss Sara C. Linnell of Thomaston, Maine. There were three ushers, Edwin R. Sampson, brother of the groom, Arthur G. Sampson nephew of the groom, of North Weymouth and Samuel W. Robinson, brother of bride, of South Weymouth.

The bride was gowned in a white crepe meteor with lace trimmings and carried a shower bouquet of white sweet peas. The bridesmaid wore a yellow crepe de chine and carried pink sweet peas.

A reception followed the ceremony, the best man and bridesmaid assisting in receiving. There were many beautiful wedding gifts of cut glass, silver, etc.

The house decorations were pink and green in the living room, yellow in the dining room and red and green in the hall. There was an arch of ferns and mountain laurel and pink flower and greenery in the living room where the ceremony was performed and the entrance hall was banked with green vines and foliage and red roses.

Mr. and Mrs. Sampson are to make their home in North Weymouth.

MISS COLUMBIA On the FOURTH

She has ninety million sweethearts—
All join in to sing her praise!
She's the gem of land and ocean,
And the Fourth's her day of days!

HOW BIDDY ENJOYED THE GLORIOUS FOURTH

BIDDY was born on the "ither soide," as she told everybody that was curious enough to ask her. Though foreign by birth, in feelings and actions she was thoroughly American. She had spent one Fourth of July in this country and had observed with intense interest the enthusiasm all boys and girls showed in the day. At the same time she resolved that when the Fourth next came around her celebration would be as lively as anybody's. And so it turned out.

Now, it might be said of Biddy that there had been a serious double mistake in her life. Instead of an Irish girl she should have been a boy and an American. But American she was bound to become, anyway, and no boy living could have entered more heartily into the celebration than this same Biddy O'Hare, in her straw hat with a wide drooping brim and her green frock.

There was just one peculiar thing in Biddy's makeup, and that, to call it by its gentlest name, was a tendency to prevaricate. Indeed, prevaricate will hardly do, for she often made up whole stories without even a foundation of truth. It was Biddy's weakness. Her parents fondly hoped that she would outgrow it—she was only eight—but, as things were now, almost all she said had to be carefully considered as coming from Biddy.

In the town where Biddy lived there was a public celebration, and this young Irish-American made her plans to attend. She did not think it worth while to ask permission. When the afternoon came she found it easy enough to get herself lost in the crowd and to follow the rest of the patriotic citizens out to the fair grounds.

This, she felt, made her fully an American. The flags waved for her as much as for anybody. And there was not a sight that escaped her. Wherever there was something extra to see Biddy would crowd in between the older persons or she would get under the ropes or the edges of a tent. When she wanted pink lemonade or peanuts she invited some man to buy them for her. She clapped when the band played. She even climbed to the band stand, where she could stand beside the man with the bass cornet.

So fascinating it all was that she did not notice when the sun went down and the torches and Japanese lanterns began to glow. She stayed right on into the evening for the fireworks. It was late when her father found her, high up in the grand stand. Of course there had been a fright when her absence was noticed, and so happy were the parents at finding her that they actually forgot to punish her for running away.

Many days passed before Biddy was through telling the wonders of her celebration. Everything she described became under her artistic touch three times as wonderful as it really had been. Biddy gave her imagination full play. The climax came when she told of going up in a paper balloon at night. She declared there were seats all around on the inside, that it was light as day in there and that the man who sent the balloons up wanted other children to go, too, but that she was the only one who dared do it. "And that," she explained, "is why they called me the hero of the celebration. And when I came down on the very spot from which I started the band played a new piece called 'Brave Biddy O'Hare.' And"—

Just at this point her father interrupted her to say very sternly that she need continue the narrative no further. There was a look in his face that Biddy had never seen before, and her story of the Fourth stopped right where it was.—Washington Star.

JOHN ADAMS' JULY 4 TOAST.

In the spring of the year 1826, fifty years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson was eighty-three and John Adams ninety, yet both retained the full enjoyment of their faculties. Throughout the land great preparations were making to observe Independence day, the national holiday. Party feeling was sunk in common love of country, and the attention of the public was universally turned toward these venerable patriots, who, with Charles Carroll of Carrollton, were the sole survivors of the signers. Both men were in the feeblest of health and were aware that their end drew near, but both desired to behold the glorious day, and life, like a flickering taper, prolonged itself in obedience to wills that had not flinched before the wrath of kings.

On June 30 the orator for the celebration at Quincy called upon Adams and asked for a toast. "I give you," said the feeble patriarch, "independence forever." When asked if he desired to add anything to the sentiment the old hero replied, "Not a word!"

Defeat Telephone Team by Score of 8 to 2

The Fore River team of the Manufacturers' league is again in first place. Bobby Gill, the southpaw of Boston College, baffled the N. E. T. & T. Co. Saturday afternoon, and the locals won 8 to 2. The game was very much Fore River's, the only inning the Phones scored being the eighth.

Gill will probably finish the season with the shipbuilders. Knight who was with them earlier in the schedule is now in Nova Scotia, his departure being rather sudden a week ago. The summary:

FIELD DAY OF N. E. O. P.

Winners of Interesting Series of Sports

Quincy lodge of Quincy, Sunset lodge of Braintree and Peerless lodge of Holbrook, N. E. O. P. held a field day on the lower Merrymount park field Saturday afternoon. The threatening weather affected the attendance but those present were enthusiastic and greatly enjoyed the program of the day which included dancing in the pavilion to hurdy gurdy music, and a series of athletic events for men and women.

The special guests of the day were Grand Guide Henry Edwards and Grand Sentinel Frank H. White of the Grand lodge of Massachusetts. They were tendered a fine reception on their arrival.

The ball game between teams composed of members of the three lodges was an entertaining feature, Team A, Captain Arthur Charnock defeating Team B, Captain Hoyt Macauley by a score of 23 to 22.

Tents were set on the field and considerable was realized from the sales. The refreshments were in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Sawin and Mrs. E. J. Beale. Archie Lightbody ran the Houpla tent, and Mrs. Bertha Thompson had charge of the candy wheel.

The general committee included Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Sawin, Hoyt Macauley, Chester Brown, J. M. Ellison and Velma Henderson of Quincy lodge; George Pike, Archie Lightbody, Charles Lightbody, Mrs. Bertha Thompson and Miss Elizabeth Beale of Peerless lodge; Arthur Charnock, John Fraser, Joseph LaBreck and Mrs. J. Billings of Sunset lodge.

The relay race between Chester Brown and Hoyt Macauley of Quincy lodge and Arthur Charnock and John Fraser of Sunset lodge was won by the former by a substantial margin.

The best athletic event of the day was the mile run in which Peter Americus, the marathoner, easily led the field of five starters and finished in 6m. 12s. on an uneven, hilly track. The summary:

Flag race for girls—Won by Alvah Lightbody.

50 yard dash for women—Won by Mrs. J. C. Gerrity and Mrs. W. Thompson.

Middle Age Mortality.

Insurance men are noting an increasing middle-age mortality. In this country it has increased 20 per cent in thirty years. In England it has been very much less.

Question Cleared Up

Quincy Readers Can No Longer Doubt the Evidence.

Again and again we have read of strangers in distant towns who have been cured by this or that medicine. But Quincy's pertinent question has always been "Has anyone here in Quincy been cured?" The word of a stranger living a hundred miles away may be true, but it cannot have the same weight with us as the word of our own citizens, whom we know and respect, and whose evidence we can so easily prove.

Mrs. George Atkinson, 80 Main street, Quincy, says: "One of my family had trouble from weak kidneys caused by his work. He also suffered from backache. He used six boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured him. He don't complain at all now. We give all the credit for this cure to Doan's Kidney Pills. We keep a supply in the house all the time."

ORIENTS LOSE.

The Orients lost to the Braintree A. A. at Braintree on Saturday 6 to 4. In the seventh inning loose playing gave the winners the runs needed and the South Quincy boys failed to come back. They add their complaint to the series that have been made about McLaughlin, the Braintree umpire, and in line with other teams say that he shades on the strikes and balls in favor of the home team. The score by innings:

The Queen Quality team beat the General Electrics of the Manufacturers' league Saturday 2 to 1.

The Atlantic All Stars won its ninth straight game Saturday in defeating the Walnuts at Ward Six 13 to 3, and claim the championship of the ward, the Atlantic A. A. having been defeated in a previous game. Batteries—Duffy and Gould; O'Neil and Morton.

The Holy Name team of St. John's parish lost to the Atlantic A. A. at Merrymount Park Saturday afternoon 9 to 3. Sawyer of Quincy High pitched an excellent game, allowing but three hits and fanning 12 men. St. John's would have been held scoreless but for two errors and a hit.

The Breezy Hills beat the Quincy A. A. at Hingham Saturday 7 to 6. It was the second successive defeat for the locals in 10 inings. The game was tied in the ninth by Hingham. Lane singled and was scored by Bergen's three bagger which would have gone for a homer if necessary. Peter Chapman pitched for Quincy and was bumped for 10 hits, and Bergen allowed but six.

BAD WEATHER FOR REFUGEES

Much Suffering at Salem Because of Drenching Rain

WORK IS PROMISED FOR ALL

Assurance From Governor That Aid Will Be Prompt—Ample Supplies of Food For About Six Thousand Homeless—Valuable Servise Rendered by Nurses and Military In Tented Camps—Bountiful supply of Clothing and Furniture

Salem, Mass., June 29.—Worn and weakened from exposure to a drenching rain, with only the canvas of their tented colonies to shelter them, Salem's refugees suffered real hardship last night. Huddled close, women and children lay shivering on their dampened mattresses while soldiers and doctors and nurses in charge of relief worked with might and main and did everything within their power to furnish warm, dry blankets to the victims of the conflagration.

Four hundred thousand visitors came to the stricken city Sunday further search of the ruins revealed the fifth victim of the conflagration. The body of an elderly man, frightfully charred and burned, was found under debris.

Governor Walsh spent all day in Salem and assured the refugees that everyone would be cared for and given employment, and that high state officials from the office of the insurance commissioner and the attorney general's office would be sent here to assist in adjusting insurance claims.

Fraud was discovered in connection with the relief work and many cases unearthed where people had secured more provisions than they were entitled to and had sold the surplus to small storekeepers.

One hundred girls from Malden, selling tags on the streets for 10 cents apiece, swelled the relief fund more than $4000.

Feeding the Homeless

Close to 6000 homeless and workless families were provided with rations for three meals at the commissary department headquarters at the state armory during the seven hours that food was distributed.

In addition to these several hundred were provided with food in the bread line at the rear of the armory, the meals being eaten on the premises.

At the two big concentration camps nearly 5000 sufferers were given meals and in other places probably 2000 others were cared for, besides those who are enjoying the hospitality of friends, relatives and charitably inclined people.

Before the refugees were up and dressed this morning, the state commissary department had piled up in the state armory many tons of food.

The shipment included 1250 pounds of prunes, 3000 dozen of eggs, 500 pounds of butter, 500 pounds of coffee, 600 pounds of tea, 200 dozen cans of soup, 2000 pounds of sugar, 500 pounds of salt, 300 gallons of liquid coffee, 1600 gallons of milk, 5000 pounds of beef, lamb and other meat, 31 tons of ice.

Cooked Fish For Refugees

Clam chowders, fish chowders, and all kinds of fresh cooked fish will compose part of the diet of the fire sufferers.

The New England Fish exchange, which has been sending a large amount of fish each day to Salem since the fire, set up a tent near Salem common equipped with the latest devices in cooking equipment and will cook chowders and various varieties of fish.

Previously the fish has been sent to Salem without being cooked, leaving it to the sufferers to cook their meals. This, it was found, was impossible, so the fish exchange considered sending several cooks to meet the emergency.

Gifts Are Pouring In

The call for clothing was bountifully answered. Clothing and dry goods stores in Salem practically emptied their shelves of clothing in the needed sizes. Many cases of new shoes were sent by shoe manufacturers. There will be further need for clothing, however, and the committee cannot get too much.

Because of the lack of clothing there was intense suffering from cold and dampness in the camps. Many of those in the camps left and begged for shelter in houses while it was raining.

Furniture of all sorts was delivered in all sorts of ways. Big furniture houses sent big truckloads. Individuals contributed what they could spare from their own homes. Baby carriages, rocking horses, baby chairs and toys were delivered by people whose sympathy went out especially to the children.

Many Nurses on Duty

Scores of Red Cross volunteers and trained nurses from the Boston City and Massachusetts General hospitals arrived at the Forest River refugee camp and helped to systematize the relief work.

A milk station for babies was opened in one tent and forty-one bottle-fed babies were cared for.

The medical corps officers on duty have every tent inspected twice each day. Laterines have been dug and they are burned out each day with crude oil. Sanitary problems have been handled on exactly the some principles as in military camps.

Hundreds of people are believed by the military authorities to have remained out of doors in the rain, having funds to provide themselves with food, but no opportunity to get shelter unless they went to concentration camps or a few other places were provided.

Washington, June 29.—By a viva voce vote the senate adopted the report of the conferees on the navad appropriation bill, which provides for the construction of two battleships from money now in the treasury and the building of a third from the proceeds of the two obsolete fighting ships ordered sold to Greece.

The conference report also strikes out appropriations for a $100,000 sea wall at Key West, Fla., and for a drydock at Norfolk.

REVENUE CUTTER SERVICE.

How It Came to Be Placed Under the Treasury Department.

The United States revenue cutter service is a military arm of the government attached to and under the direction of the treasury department. The service was organized in 1790 and constituted the original naval force of the country. There was at that time no navy department, and the service was placed under the treasury department, where it has remained ever since.

It is charged with the enforcement of the navigation and customs laws of the United States, the assistance of vessels in distress, the protection of the sealing industry in Alaska, the enforcement of the quarantine laws, the destruction of derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation and numerous other duties appropriate to its class of vessels. Each winter, by direction of the president, a number of the cutters patrol the coast for the special purpose of assisting vessels in distress.

The service co-operates with the navy when directed by the president and has so co-operated in every war in which the United States has been engaged. It is sometimes called the revenue marine service, but revenue cutter service is the proper name. There are forty-three cutters in the service, and they carry from one to five or six guns each.—Philadelphia Press.

HYGIENE IN THE DESERT.

Our Latter Day Methods Were an Open Book to Moses.

Nothing under the sun is new. Facts have proved that even the pitch which hygiene has reached at the present day was equaled and in many instances excelled under the laws of Moses.

The particular and careful manner in which animals are slaughtered according to the laws of the Talmud is acknowledged today to be the most sanitary method possible.

Professor Koch gave to the world the valuable results of his investigations in bacteriology, but several thousand years before that the Mosaic law pointed out the danger to humanity from tuberculosis in cattle, but did not forbid poultry as food. It was not many years ago that specialists discovered that fowl tuberculosis was harmless to man.

The yearly exodus to the country and seaside is no new innovation. Moses, the great lawgiver, prescribed not only feasting at certain seasons of the year, but the removal of whole families to great camping grounds in the open spaces, where they could live near to nature.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Chinaman on the Opium Habit.

In the American Magazine appears an article entitled "A Modern Opium Eater," written by a newspaper man, who became a victim of the habit and is now a convict in a penitentiary. In the course of the article the author quotes as follows what a Chinese den keeper said to him about the power of the habit to hold its victims:

"You no quit. Every man alleetime say he quit. Every man alleesame you. Smoke one time, smoke two time, smoke tlee time, then smoke alleetime. Chineman, white man, chokquay (negro) alleesame. No can quit. Bimeby you die you quit. Bimeby maybe you bloke—no more money, no more tlend bollow money, no can steelem money, maybe you quit one, two days. Bimeby maybe you go jail, no got tlend bling you hop, no got money givem policeman catchem hop, you quit. You got money, no go jail, you no quit. I heap sabe. Bimeby you see."

The Facile Mexican.

In the opening paragraph of one of his best stories Kipling wrote: "Let it be clearly understood that the Russian is a delightful person till he tucks his shirt in. As an oriental he is charming. It is only when he insists on being treated as the most easterly of western peoples that he becomes a radical anomaly, extremely difficult to handle. The host never knows which side of his nature is going to turn up next." There is a somewhat similar difficulty with the Mexican. He can be charming, but one never knows whether he is the most northern southerner or the most southern northerner, and he can change from one to the other with a facility that is almost genius.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Studied It Out.

One day two farm laborers were discussing the wiseness of the present generation. Said the first:

"We be wiser than our fathers was, and they were wiser than their fathers was."

The second one, after pondering a while and gazing at his companion, replied:

"Well, Garge, what a fule thy grandfather must 'a' been!"—London Express.

Wise In One Way.

"I don't want to brag about myself. I've done many foolish things in my time, but I've been wise in one way."

"What's that?"

"I never had the iden that I could paper a bedroom myself."—Detroit Free Press.

Repentance.

If our past actions reproach us they cannot be atoned for by our own severe reflections so effectually as by a contrary behavior.—Steele.

Literary Note.

Some men never think of reading a book till they run across it under a lot of rubbish when the wife is packing up to move.—Omaha Bee.

No man is wise at all times.—Pliny the Elder.

A Yankee Boy's Fourth In Russia

"I DON'T care if he is a grand duke! He has spoiled my Fourth of July!"

And Jack Langdon shook his small brown fist after the retreating carriage of his excellency the governor of O.

Jack Langdon's father was one of the growing number of Americans who have taken up business in Russia. He owned the ironworks of O. and was respected by both foreigners and natives throughout the province governed by the Grand Duke Alexis Alexandrovitch. Relying on this respect and the favor with which the authorities regarded him, Mr. Langdon had ventured to waylay the grand duke on one of his morning drives for the purpose of asking certain privileges. The reply of the governor was polite, but none the less decided. He said: "You ask, my dear M. Langdon, that your young son be permitted to celebrate your national holiday, the Fourth of July, by the setting off of certain toy explosives. I regret to have to inform you that such methods of jubilation, while common in America, could not be allowed in Russia. Two years ago your countryman, M. Moreland of the Vralsk mills, requested a like favor and was reluctantly refused. The fact is that our laws strictly forbid the use of explosives in any shape. My good cousin, the late czar, enacted the law immediately after his father had been slain by the nihilists. Firecrackers, in themselves harmless, would give the nihilists a chance to introduce dynamite."

"But surely," protested Mr. Langdon, "a tiny demonstration in honor of the birth of a friendly nation"—

The grand duke raised his hand deprecatingly.

"I cannot help it," he said, "but such is the law. Your son will have to forego his cannon crackers, I fear, this Fourth of July."

And then, signaling to his outriders, the governor drove on, leaving Mr. Langdon rather annoyed and little Jack very angry indeed.

He rambled out to the woods, scolding at the czar as he went. On the way he met Uncle Petronchka, a peasant with whom he had scraped acquaintance and who, instead of his usual friendly manner, passed him with a surly nod.

Jack's curiosity was aroused, and for the nonce he forgot all about the governor's refusal of his petition. At this point the road took a sort of long loop, so as to touch at a certain neighboring village, so that it was possible for Jack by cutting sharply across country to come out ahead of Petronchka's lumbering farm wagon two versts farther on. Across country went Jack, skimming the borders of the forest and encountering no living being until he once more leaped into the hard, white roadway on the opposite side of the loop.

"WHAT REWARD CAN I GIVE YOU?"

"This is a great joke on Uncle Petronchka!" he cried. "How the old fellow will cross himself and wonder to see me here before him."

Then it occurred to Jack to give the telecque driver a surprise, and, stepping into a little wood of pine and birch, he crouched down in the grass to await Petronchka's coming.

But the first wayfarers to pass along the quiet road came from the opposite direction—that in which Moscow lay. Peering out of his hiding place, Jack Langdon saw that these travelers were three in number, that they journeyed afoot and that each carried upon his back a heavy pack like that borne by peddlers. He also noticed that, although the latter were dressed in caps and sheepskin coats like ordinary peasants, their swarthy faces presented a keen, crafty aspect. They rested near Jack.

Lying concealed among the bushes, Jack soon found that the men were nihilists and that they had concerted a plan for the murder of a high Russian official, to which Uncle Petronchka was to contribute without knowing what he was doing. They had with them some packages, which Jack learned from their conversation contained dynamite instead of the rare Swiss clocks which Uncle Petronchka had agreed to smuggle with his vegetables into the market-town and deliver at a point agreed upon with the conspirators.

Fortunate was it for Jack that the men rose as they saw Uncle Petronchka approaching, walked forward to meet him and then moved off with him in the direction from which he had come. It gave Jack a chance to escape and allowed Uncle Petronchka to drive back to his farmhouse with only the supposed Swiss clocks hidden in his cart instead of taking with him a conscience burdened with the murder of the American boy, whom he liked.

Late that night a score of police surrounded the farmhouse of the old farmer, dragged him out of bed and captured the packs of dynamite. Dragged by torchlight to the steps of a carriage near by, Petronchka was horrified to perceive therein the grand Duke Alexis Alexandrovitch, seated beside his little acquaintance, Jack Langdon. When he learned that what he thought were packages of smuggled clocks really contained deadly explosives Petronchka broke down utterly and told the whole story, giving descriptions of the three conspirators, which afterward led to their capture, and completely verifying the account conveyed to the grand duke by little Jack Langdon.

Jack had saddled his own pony and ridden at full gallop into O., where he found the governor at a brilliant banquet. The news of nihilistic conspiracy, however, secured him an audience, with the result that Petronchka's house was surrounded, the dynamite captured and the state records saved.

"And now, my little hero," said the governor when all was over, "what reward can I confer upon you for the great service you have done to Russia?"

Jack thought a moment and then answered: "First I should like poor old Uncle Petronchka to get off, and, secondly, I want leave to explore firecrackers on the Fourth of July."

With an amused smile the grand duke wrote the following order and handed it to the petitioner:

For the reason that Ivan Ivanovitch Langdon has placed the empire under an obligation it is hereby ordained—

First.—That the prisoner Petronchka be remanded indefinitely in the custody of the said Ivan Ivanovitch.

Second.—That the said Ivan Ivanovitch be permitted on the 4th day of July next ensuing to explode firecrackers and squibs in such quantities as he thinks fit in honor of his native country.

Third.—That the municipality of O. be ordered to supply the said Ivan Ivanovitch with one ton of the very best firecrackers which its merchants can import across the frontier at the expense of the government.

Given under my hand and seal.

ALEXIS ALEXANDROVITCH,
Governor For the Czar.

And so Jack Langdon spent a happy Fourth of July in Russia after all.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

July 4 Is Forty-four Hours Long.

Independence day is really forty-four hours long nowadays. Uncle Sam has almost twice the length of time he has had in previous years.

The day dawns first on the island of Guam. There the new Americans have learned true American ways, and the cannons begin booming at 9 o'clock in the morning on July 3 (central United States time), which is midnight in Guam. An hour and a half later Manila bay resounds with cannon announcing liberty and freedom. The Filipinos reach the high tide in their celebrations before Americans are awakened by the first cannons at midnight. Midnight in Chicago is 3 o'clock in the afternoon at Manila. When Chicago sets off the last special piece of fireworks the small lads at Manila have been asleep for fourteen hours.

Sweeping on across the country to our western possessions, the celebration continues several hours after Americans have ceased burning powder. At Honolulu the fireworks do not begin until after midnight in Chicago, and the time for shooting firecrackers does not expire until after daybreak in the United States. When at last the day has been concluded at midnight in Hawaii, Uncle Sam has spent forty-four long hours celebrating.

Waiting For The Fourth

The third of July was a very hot day;
The "crackers" grew warm in the shop where they lay
Till what should one do but become so excited
Himself and the others he swiftly ignited.

Oh, then came a whiz! And, oh, then came a bang!
The "crackers" all left the old shop with a pang!
The people collected, the fire bells rang.
The engines were there with a roar and a clang!

But when it was over and all had been righted
The people—inquiring how it ignited—
Found nothing to prove that the fire was lighted,
So none blamed the "cracker" for growing excited.

BRINGS MAN IN CASE

New Footprint Clew Is Found In the Ballou Mystery

Stamford, Conn., June 29.—Discovery of a stained footprint, believed to be that of a man, alongside others in the vestibule of the Rippowan building, which are believed to have been made by Mrs. Helen M. Angle, has deepened the mystery of the death of Waldo R. Ballou.

The other footprints all measured nine inches and were assumed to have been made by Mrs. Angle when she carried Ballou from the hallway, where she asserts he fell, to the street.

When Chief of Police Brennan was measuring some of these footprints he discovered one which measured exactly ten inches and bore characteristics different from those first found.

KNIFE CURES BOY OF INCORRIGIBILITY

Lad Who Was Defiant of Law Has Become Industrious

Philadelphia, June 29.—Once incorrigible, defiant of the law and a constant fugitive from the reformatories to which he has been frequently sent, John Gorman, 14 years old, has been made a peaceful, industrious youth by a surgical operation.

The boy, who has been almost as many times as he is years old arraigned before Judge Gorman of the juvenile court, had exhausted the patience of even that kindly justice, when he came under the observation of Dr. Cornell, director of the division of the medical inspection of the board of education. He found that there was a noticeable depression in the top of the boy's head.

With the consent of the mother, the boy was sent to a hospital five weeks ago and an operation performed to relieve a bone oppression on the brain, due to a skull fracture received five years ago in a railroad accident. His physicians and surgeons pronounced the operation a success the moment it was made.

TRAPPING ELEPHANTS.

In India Tame Animals Aid In Capturing the Wild Ones.

In view of the vast strength possessed by full grown elephants, it seems at first sight almost incredible that they can be captured in herds and quickly subdued to the will of their masters.

At the present time, in Mysore, the regular method of capturing wild elephants is for a large number of natives to go into the jungle, some mounted on tamed elephants and many on foot, and to make a great noise and hullabaloo, which results in driving herds of the wild elephants into stockades, or often into ponds of water, which have previously been surrounded on all sides, except at the approaches, by immensely strong palisades. As soon as the herd is cornered the passages that had been left open are securely closed, and then the trained elephants are brought into play to cajole and subdue the perplexed prisoners.

In India elephants are no longer captured, as they still are in Africa, by means of huge pitfalls in the ground. In these traps they are often seriously injured or killed. The Indian elephant is somewhat smaller than the African and differs from it in other ways—as, for instance, in the fact that tusks are possessed only by the males, while both sexes are provided with them in Africa. In general, also, the tusks of African elephants are nearly twice as large as those of their Indian relatives, a single pair sometimes weighing as much as 250 or 300 pounds.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

WAGNER'S "PARSIFAL."

Its Cold Reception at First Moved Hans Sachs to Fury.

When Wagner's "Parsifal" was first performed in Baireuth, the critic Hans Sachs was almost the only one of all the writing fraternity to welcome it as a great work of genius. To the ears of the others its rude realism sounded unmusical. They wanted melody like that Verdi was turning out in Italy, Bizet in Paris and a few minor composers in their own Berlin.

But Sachs was a man of broader mold. He heard the great music of "Parsifal" with unprejudiced ears and recognized the genius of the man. He shouted it abroad in his writings and became furious at a world that would not, perhaps could not, find pleasure in the dramatic voices of the orchestra, its vivid emotionalism and marvelous appeal to the aesthetical nature that is in every man and woman. He knew that the Germans were merely refusing to listen, save for melody, and finally he told them that even in the melodic field Wagner was the greatest of them all.

Sachs has written eloquently of Wagner's melody, beside which the melody of the Italians is pallid, anaemic, insignificant. Only now and then, he said, were the Italian melodists other than artificial. Wagner's melody was the spontaneous song of a musical heart. The "Good Friday Spell" was the most exquisite song of praise ever written by any man, no less a song because it was wordless, sung only by the violin and woodwinds.—Detroit Free Press.

The Trained Voice.

Lawyers, clergymen and doctors all fail to secure the influence with the people with whom they come in contact because of inability to express their thoughts in an impressive way. Had the voice been trained the same as the eye and the intellect, had the exterior qualities been trained to express like the voice the best and the clearest facts, they would all have been successes. The melodious voice of Henry Clay always charmed his audience everywhere. Wherever he went people flocked to hear him, while the heavy bass tones of Daniel Webster failed to attract and actually drove people away. They preferred to read what he had to say, but wanted personally to hear Clay's pleasing voice.—Medical Record.

Fuller's Great Memory.

Thomas Fuller, the author of "The Worthies of England," possessed the useful accomplishment for a clergyman of being able to repeat a sermon verbatim after hearing it only once. Fuller once succeeded in naming backward and forward and without a single omission every shop sign on both sides of the way from Temple Bar to the eastern extremity of Cheapside. This appears a remarkable feat when it is remembered that Fuller lived before the practice of numbering houses was adopted, so that every shop he passed bore a sign.—London Chronicle.

Savage Game In India.

In the province of Sind, India, there are more than 3,513,000 people, and yet there are occasional tigers, panthers, leopards, wolves and hyenas. The gad, or wild sheep, the ibex, the chinker, the black buck and the hog deer are comparatively common.

Still Possible.

"Uncle, can't I be a pirate when I grow up?"

"Sure you can, son. What do you want to pirate—books or plays?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ROXBURY TROOP IS COMING

To Take Part in Quincy Fourth of July Parade

An enthusiastic meeting of the July Fourth committee was held Saturday evening and a call at the rooms of the Board of Trade found everybody smiling and all busy perfecting the minor details of the day's program.

Small circulars giving the full day's program were ready for distribution and today they will be generally circulated throughout the city.

John A. Phelan, chief marshal of the morning parade, announced that from responses already received the morning parade would eclipse anything yet seen in Quincy. Several military organizations would take part. These included the crack cavalry troop known as Troop D, First Squadron, M. V. M., of Roxbury.

This is the famous squadron that was organized in 1861. Since that time the troop has figured in many important events. It acted as escort to President Johnson in June, 1867, and to General Sherman in October that same year on their visits to Boston. It did duty at the great fire in Boston in 1872 and acted as escort to Prince Henry on his visit to Boston, also as escort to President Roosevelt and Admiral Dewey. It has also taken an active part in all of the recent war manoeveures in Massachusetts, at the Chelsea fire, the Lawrence strike and as escort for Presidents Taft and Wilson. When war with Mexico seemed probably it offered its services for the Mexican campaign to President Wilson.

In Charlestown Cardinal cadets will also be present and probably other military organizations. The Grand Army will be provided with a large auto truck in which they wil ride in the parade.

The division marshals as far as now arranged are as follows:

Military—Capt. David Hanson.
Societies—Fred E. Tupper.
Horribles—Galen V. Bowditch.
Floats and features—Ernest Collins.

It was announced that instead of cups and ribbons, that cash prizes would be given this year in the Horrible division.

It was announced that as an additional feature, that a valuable silver cup would be given as a prize for a yacht race to be held off the clubhouse of the Wollaston Yacht club at 10 A. M., open to all yachts affiliated with any Quincy club of any length up to 45 feet. The course will be one of seven miles. Entries for the yacht race must be made with R. M. Lathrop of the Wollaston Yacht club, and the entry should give the overall length of the yacht. Full particulars and instructions will be sent to each entry as soon as received.

The rooms of the association will be open every evening this week and meetings will be held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings.

BRITISH OFFICERS WOULDN'T FIGHT.

Sympathized With Rebellious Americans of 1776.

When King George III. of England wanted his army to coerce his American colonies into obeying the will of parliament there was mutiny—rank mutiny—by a lot of the most eminent officers of the time, with corresponding disaffection among the rank and file to such an extent that the king did not dare to try to send many of his own troops to America, but sent instead, first to Russia and then to Hesse and elsewhere, to hire mercenary officers and troops.

John Pitt, eldest son of England's greatest statesman and his successor as Earl of Chatham, was then a rising officer of the army. He inherited so much of his father's zeal for the American rebels that he vowed he would not serve against them, and if, therefore, the king wanted his commission, why, there it was. The king did not want it, however, but sent Pitt to help fight through the siege of Gibraltar, from which he came home to be first lord of the admiralty and privy councilor. Later he was at the head of that unlucky expedition to Walcheren which provoked the historic epigram:

Great Chatham, with his saber drawn,
Stood waiting for Sir Richard Strachan
Sir Richard, longing to be at 'em,
Stood waiting for the Earl of Chatham.

Augustus Keppel, Viscount Keppel son of the Earl of Albemarle, one of the most prominent officers of the navy, also refused to fight the Americans. That was in 1775. The next year he was put in command of the channel fleet, and two years later, as admiral of the blue, he was commander of the grand fleet against the French. His career was marked with inefficiencies and scandals, but he never suffered for his refusal to obey orders against America.

Lord Frederick Cavendish, a member of one of the greatest historic families of England, was another of the mutineers of 1775. He was then a major general, but he was not required to give up his commission. On the contrary, he was made full general in 1782 and later became field marshal. He was one of the famous quartet of officers who at the beginning of the French and Indian or Seven Years' war took an oath not to marry until France had been conquered. The others were Keppel, named above; Moncton and Wolfe, the hero of Quebec. The sequel was that not one of them ever married. Wolfe, indeed, became engaged to Miss Lowther just before he sailed for Canada, but a hero's death claimed him before his intended bride.

Also there was Henry Seymour, Baron Conway, veteran of Fontenoy and Culloden. He had been conspicuous as a "traitor" in parliament and in the cabinet. It was he who moved for the repeal of the stamp act, at which moment, said Burke, "his face was as it were the face of an angel." He swore that he would not raise a hand against the Americans. But that rank mutiny did not prevent him from being field marshal and commander in chief and after the war a member of the cabinet again. It was he, by the way, who offered the resolution in parliament which compelled Lord North to resign.

The Earl of Effingham, a member of the illustrious house of Howard, openly refused to fight against the Americans and was commended for so doing by the corporations of the cities of London and Dublin in public addresses and testimonials.—New York Tribune.

Spirit of the Yankees.

Gerard Hamilton, an Englishman known in history as "Single Speech" Hamilton, because when a member of parliament he made only one speech, visited America shortly before the Revolution. Writing to a friend in England, he said, "In the Massachusetts government in particular there is an express law by which every man is obliged to have a musket, a pound of powder and a pound of bullets always near him, so there is nothing wanting but knapsacks (or old stockings, which will do as well) to equip an army for marching and nothing more than a Sartonious or a Spartacus at their head requisite to beat your troops and your custom house officers out of the country and set your laws at defiance."

The Usual Fourth.

"How was July 4 observed in your town?"

"In the usual way. There were 100 people at the town exercises and 5,000 at the baseball game."—Judge.

G. B. BATES WRITES AGAIN

Says Responsibility Is Now on Senator Langelier

Editor Daily Ledger:

The mission of the press in a community, for good or for evil, cannot be over estimated. For the good of a community it is most essential that the press which moulds public opinion should be honest, fair and truthful in public matters pertaining to that community.

The Quincy grade crossing bill now pending in the Legislature which has been passed and engrossed by the House, and is now before the Ways and Means committee of the Senate, is an illustration of where the press can be used for good or for evil.

This bill, known as House bill No. 2757, an act relative to the abolition of grade crossings in the city of Quincy by depression the tracks, was drawn up by one of the ablest law firms on railroad matters in Massachusetts, and was also approved and recommended by the committee on Bills in the Third Reading of the House, June 18, 1914.

This bill calls for the depression—and not tunneling, as interpreted by the attorneys and engineers of the N. Y., N. H. & H., and as shown by their far-fetched flim flam plan.

I asked the N. Y., N. H. & H., railrood engineer, who drew this crazy plan, and upon his reply that he did, I scored the plan as the work of a knave, and that the City of Quincy would not ask a N. Y., N. H. & H. railroad engineer to work out plans for the city.

I then explained a profile plan of slight depression drawn by Frederick E. Tupper in 1908, and verified by the City Engineer in February 1914. I showed this plan as most desirable for the city, and at the same time make perfect railroading. I also showed that by slight depression there would be an average of less than two feet of solid excavating in the entire work from Norfolk Downs to South Quincy, and also that every street now crossing the railroad between Wollaston and the Braintree line, would be saved in its present location at a uniform level.

I also stated that I had consulted expert and practical railroad builders and that they informed me the cost by this plan of slight depression would be less, than by the Chinese wall decree plan of closing four streets and building four new ways.

I further brought out the fact that by the decree plan, Beale street, Warren avenue, Adams street and Dimmock street are to be raised four feet higher than they are now, and the grades of those streets today are prohibitive, so what will they be when they are four feet higher? When these streets are raised four feet higher and four new additional tracks are put in on the easterly side of the railroad what in the name of Heaven will be the grade of these streets?

Besides increasing the already prohibitive grades of these streets the decree plan closes up Saville street forever, make Granite street worse than it is now, raises School street 12 feet, and sinks Water street 10 feet, to say nothing of dividing our city for all times.

Another serious fault with the decree plan is the creating of a condition along Town brook similar to Stony brook in the Roxbury district, where an elevated railroad structure in that section has cost the City of Boston over one hundred millions of dollars, through freshets and water damages.

The question is not, what is the actual cost now; but what is the future cost to our city and its people. Permit this decree plan to be forced upon us by the railroad and posterity will credit us as living in day and generation of the jelly-fish.

Why was it your reporter omitted to have published Prof. Breed's answers to my questions, when he stated that it was not necessary to close Saville street and that it would cost more to close it than to keep it open? Prof. Breed stated that it would cost $45,000. (not including land damages) to keep Saville street open with a 40 foot street, and that it would cost $75,000, not including land damages, to close Saville street forever and erect a foot subway diagonally under the tracks from Upland road to Depot street on private property, and which will have to be maintained by the city.

Who wants their wife or sister or daughter passing down through this dugout after dark? If there are as many steps in this tunnel as at the Atlantic subway, it will be necessary to climb up and down 120 steps everytime one goes from the westerly side to the easterly side of the railroad to get a yeast cake.

This decree plan of a Chinese wall will also paralyze the westerly side of our city for business purposes for all times and diminish property value on the westerly side of the railroad millions of dollars.

At the hearings last week before the Senate committee on Ways and Means the invisible commission, the beneficiaries under the decree plan, and selfish interests were well represented and some of our city officials with their tools and emissaries were lined up in solid phalanx with the attorneys and engineers of the N. Y., N. H. & H. railroad to defeat the will of the people, the right to petition, the right to determine by a referendum the way a most vital question affecting the welfare of our city and its people.

Representative Sullivan has done his duty, for which he is entitled to great praise and the bill is now in the Senate. It is now up to Senator Langelier to see that this bill in some form shall pass the Senate.

Senator Langelier informed me last Thursday morning that the bill in some form would go to the people. He told me and others that the President of the Senate would help him to pass the bill in the Senate, and I have been informed by another member of the Legislature who has interviewed a great number of the senators, that if Senator Langelier wants the bill passed they will ratify it.

Senator Langelier, you have the power and the opportunity to ruin or save your city. Your responsibility is great. You cannot dodge it. Your duty is clear to yourself and your constituents. Have you the courage and the stamina? Under existing conditions the citizens of Quincy will hold you responsible if this referendum bill is defeated in the Senate, even if you should in a perfunctory way vote for it. Don't allow the N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R. to dig the city's grave and your own too.

G B. Bates.

AMENDMENT TO BE OFFERED

Representative Sullivan to Defence of Council

Editor Daily Ledger:

In your issue of Saturday last Paul R. Blackmur consumed space to lacerate our City Council for what? For passing on a resolution which in order to be effective should of necessity be acted on at that meeting.

It is regrettable that the members of our Council, who are serving without pay, should be subjected to such an unwarranted attack by one who during his term of office as City Solicitor, received compensation for his service.

I trust that the Council has learned its lesson, and in future wil lignore its present Solicitor and look to an "Ex." for advice.

House Bill 2757 is called a dangerous bill because of the interpretation of Sec. 1 by the Senate Ways and Means Committee. This can be remedied by an amendment in the Senate. Our Senator, L. F. R. Langelier has agreed to offer the amendment, and if successful the arguments of the opponents fall flat.

The adverse report of the Senate Ways and Means committee which we anticipate, should be of little account, as two similar reports have been negatived by the House.

I trust that our Senator will measure up to the occasion.

It is not my intention to discuss the merits of the bill, as it would prove useless if the bill failed of passage. One of our local engineers at the hearing on Thursday agreed that by the decree plan, School street, would be useless, but suggested that the difficulty can be remedied later by building a new street at the expense of the city. If this street was constructed under the decree plan, as it should be, the city would pay but 10 per cent. Will we stand for such an arrangement?

At the hearing stress was laid on the fact that the proponents of the bill did not furnish plans and figures. I desire to say that the plans and figures for the 21 foot depression plan, (which nobody desires,) were not furnished by our City Engineer but by the engineer of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R.

Are the interests of the City of Quincy and the railroad indentical at present? When the commission was appointed they were not considered so.

Has the lion devoured the lamb?

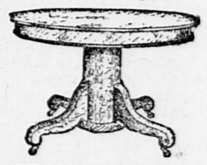

Very respectfully yours,
M. T. Sullivan.

VETO EXPECTED FROM THE MAYOR

Uncertainty About the $600 Appropriaetd by City Council for Fireworks

None of Appropriation Orders of June 22 Signed

The general impression about the corridors of City Hall is to the effect that the Mayor will veto the order passed at the last meeting of the City Council appropriating $600 for fireworks for the Fourth of July. The rumor is to the effect that the Mayor thinks that if the city has $600 to spend, better use could be made of it by contributing it to the Salem sufferers.

The orders reached the Mayor's desk on Tuesday following the Council meeting, that is on June 23. As the Mayor had ten days in which to sign veto or allow the order to become a law without his signature it will be seen that he has until 5 o'clock, Friday July 3, to make up his mind. There is no scheduled meeting of the Council after that date until the following Monday at which time the July Fourth celebration will have passed into history.

It has been argued that the Fourth of July Association could count on the Council passing the order over the veto, and that the celebration committee can rest easy on securing the money eventually. Right here however, a question arises. The order calls for the expenditure of the money by the Park Commissioners with the July Fourth association in a fireworks display, July Fourth. The question is, if the order providing the money does not become a law until after the Fourth, can it be used to pay the fireworks bill. In other words can the order be retractive

It is quite an important point to be considered, and in order that there may be no hitch in securing of the money the chances are, if the Mayor does not sign the order before Wednesday evening, on which date an adjourned meeting of the City Council will be held ,that an adjournment will be taken until Friday evening, the night before the Fourth ,that the veto may be received and acted upon.

It is quite natural to suppose that the members of the City Council will not be at all pleased at being called together the night before the national holiday, and there may be a question as to how many can be relied upon to answer to the roll call.

If an adjourned meeting of the City Council is held to act on the veto message it will require the affirmative vote of two-thirds of those present and voting to pass the order notwithstanding the objection of the Mayor.

Many have supposed that it would require two-thirds of the whole council, or 16 votes to pass the order over the veto, but such is not the case, as under the Revised Laws it only requires two-thirds of those present and voting.

If the Mayor wanted to veto the order he could do so and send his veto to the Council on Wednesday evening, but the chances are that he will take the full time allowed him for consideration of the orders. None of the orders passed at the meeting of June 22, had been signed when City Hall closed Monday evening.

NEW INDUSTRY FOR QUINCY

Company to Manufacture Auto Fire Engines

The auto fire engine which exceeded the fondest expectations of its designer at the Manchester, N. H., and Salem, Mass., fires last week will soon be on the market and the final steps in the formation of a company for its manufacture are being taken.

The present machine was built at the Fore River shipyard, but under the new program nothing but ships and machinery connected with their construction can be produced at the shipyard.

Men throughout New England are greatly interested in the auto engine and for the past three days several people well known in financial circles have examined the engine and pronounced it to be the product necessary to a real live manufacturing company's success.

Harry L. Houghton, its designer has been offered sites in several places, among them Manchester, but definite choice has not yet been made.

President Joseph L. Whiton of Quincy City Council is greatly interested in the formation of a company, and believes the apparatus can be manufactured in Quincy as well as anywhere. With this end in view he has been advocating a Quincy location and has extracted a provisional promise that Quincy will be the place.

If his efforts are successful a new industry will be added to Quincy's list which will employ in the beginning several hundred skilled mechanics. Mr. Houghton is prepared to build four types of engines, all smaller than the 50 horse power machine which throws 1600 gallons of water per minute.

Manchester has decided to purchase four pieces of auto fire apparatus and may include one of the Fore River engines.

NO REPORT ON MONDAY

Grade Crossing Bill May Be Killed Today

It is probable that the grade crossing bill will not come up in the Senate today. It was due to be reported on Monday, but for some reason was held back. Then the report came from the State House that today would see the report. It did not appear in the calendar for today's business, however, so that the chances of its coming up today are very remote.

AFFLICTED FAMILY.

The funeral of Margaret M. Eaton, wife of Pitt A. Eaton, a well known Wollaston Park resident, was held Monday afternoon, but because the family home has been under quarantine since two children contracted diphtheria only the immediate family attended the funeral.

Services were conducted at the grave in Mt. Wollaston cemetery by Rev. Joseph Walther of the Wollaston Baptist church. The stricken children are in the contagious hospital at Brighton and six other brothers and sisters, one a babe of 15 days are at home.

FOURTH OF JULY MINSTREL SHOW

Novel Way at Atlantic to Raise Funds for the Celebration

Tonawanda Club Have a Large Audience at School Hall

The minstrel show given by the Tonawanda club in the Atlantic school hall on Monday evening was a huge success in every way. Every seat in the hall was taken and those who arrived a little late found standing room only. Between 7.30 and 8 music was furnished by an Edison victrola

Promptly at 8 o'clock the stage was lighted up, and a large chorus of minstrels was seen. The opening chorus Clifton Young, James Butler, Raymond Cassidy and Byron Day were the soloists. Not enough could be said on the clever manner in which Mr. Cassidy sang the laughing song in this piece. The other soloists also came up to a high mark.

"All aboard for Dixie" was sung by Reginald Gay and the circle. Mr. Gay responded to the encore "Doan yo' cry my Honey," followed with Miss Jordine Davison in the solo part. Miss Davison responded to the prolonged applause.

Clifton Young, assisted by the chorus, sang "I love the ladies." In this Mr. Young with his flow of wit, kept the audience in an uproar.

"Nancy ma' yellow rose" was sung by the chorus followed by a tenor solo, "I will love you forevermore" by James Butler. Mr. Butler's well rounded voice brought forth a loud and long applause.

"Little Cotton Dolly" was sung by Mr. Cassidy and the chorus and "Sleep time, ma' Honey" by the mixed quartet composed of Messrs. Miller, Cassidy, Mrs. Holt and Miss Churchill.

"When the Angelus is Ringing," was sung by Miss Lora Churchill and the chorus. In this Miss Churchill and Mr. Young played together and kept the audience in a perfect gale.

The minstrel show closed with "Way down upon de Swanee ribber" by the circle. Between the songs the six ends furnished jokes which went home to several popular people of the audience. The ends were Clifton Young, James Butler, Walter Ryder, Reginald Gay, Raymond Cassidy and Harold Sherwin. Kip Young has been very popular in recent minstrel shows and was one of the ends in the minstrel show given by the Quincy

HALF HOLIDAY.

Saturday half holidays started at the Daily Ledger office on June 1, and will continue during the summer, which means that the Daily Ledger will go to press about three hours earlier each Saturday.

Merchants desiring large spaces in the Saturday Ledger are requested to forward copy on Friday, as considerable time is necessary to put advertisements into type.

When possible, special articles and news for Saturday should be forwarded on Friday. All long articles should reach the Ledger office not later than 8 A. M. Saturday.

It is very important that news should be forwarded promptly.

It may be too hot to work in a comfortable chair in a shady office, but not too hot to sit out on the hard and sunny baseball bleachers.

Assistant Secretary Sweeney of the Interior Department rejoices in the Christian name "Bo." If things don't go right in the department, the country expects to hear Bo Peep.

President Wilson will never have to write any apology for strong language used when he is almost hit by golf balls, as "Tut tut" is not against the rules of any Country Club.

Father's day was not generally celebrated, owing to Father's ungenerous refusal to shell out the funds for this purpose.

All the girls have to do to be perfectly proper is to have bathing suits in which they can't swim.

ADVERTISING ETHICS.

These principles were laid down at the Associated Advertising clubs meeting at Toronto:—

Protection against deceptive or dishonest advertising, to sell advertising only on the basis of honest circulation, rates as uniform as possible, no advertising antagonistic to public welfare, cooperation between newspapers in maintaining these standards. These are good principles, but they can not be enforced without cooperation of the public.

Many newspapers, particularly those located closely to the stock exchanges, persist in admitting notices of obviously fraudulent get-rich-quick schemes. Plantations in South America, unworked mining claims, a host of such rainbows allure the general public. They consume the scanty cash of struggling widows, school teachers, and ministers. No questions are asked by the majority of metropolitan papers.

The manager who admits three card monte to his advertising will fake news stories to make his paper interesting. Also he will sell his editorial column for cash. People who want to know what happens in the world, and who wish honest opinions will avoid that type of journal.

Newspaper sentiment is drifting against medical advertising. Still there are lots of good remedies, against which the wrath of the doctors sometimes seems like business jealousy. The public will buy bread pills or doctored alcohol indefinitely, yet newspaper sentiment has outlawed three-fourths of the bad advertising that every one accepted without qualms 10 years ago. So many patent medicine men have been cut rate pirates that they help elminate themselves. A medical advertisement that sounds unreasonable on its face will be cut out by conscientious publishers.

Let the public help the movement for better advertising by buying only clean papers!

CLOUDS GATHER OVER EUROPE

Likely to Feel Effect of the Assassination of Ferdinand

GERMAN INFLUENCE MAY GROW

Expected to Have Strong Effect on Untried Heir to Austrian Throne—Dual Empire Greatly Weakened by Tragedy, Which Is Regarded as Result of Widespread Plot

London, June 30.—Horror at the assassination of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and his wife is overshadowed in Vienna by fear that the gravest danger to the peace of Europe may be the result of the murders.

The killing of the archduke is regarded as a concrete expression of the Serbs' determination to resist to the last the absorption into the Austro-Hungarian empire. The dread is expressed in all quarters that other assassinations may follow, especially if Austria, enraged by the crime, puts into effect further repressive measures against the Slavs and Serbs in her recently acquired territories in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Should such measures be taken, or even without them, the Servian and Russian interests are expected to be drawn closer by the killing. German influence over the untried heir to the Austrian throne is regarded as certain to grow with the removal of Ferdinand, who, while a friend to Germany, was strong enough to nullify the preponderance of German influence.

It is believed lines will thus be clearly drawn between Russia and Germany in the contest for a dominant position in central Europe and the long expected explosion which has been feared for years may come quickly if the death of Emperor Francis Joseph follows soon upon his latest shock.

Austria, by her seizure of Bosnia and Herzegovina in direct violation of the Berlin treaty, and later by her policy during and after the Balkan war, greatly embittered all Slavs. The situation as it now exists in southeastern Europe is due largely to her selfish intrigues.

In the light of these facts, the assassination of Ferdinand, at whose door was laid the frustrating of Servian and Greek plans in regard to the territories conquered by them from the Turk, is not so surprising as it otherwise might be.

That the act of the murderers will weaken the dual empire is generally believed. Ferdinand was the strong man of the royal family. The new heir is a clever, popular young man, whose political tendencies are unknown and whose strength of purpose is yet to be demonstrated.

Not alone in Austro-Hungary will the effect of the tragedy be felt. The implacable hatred of southeastern Europe will be fanned into fresh heat by the affair. If Austria begins reprisals on the Slavs in Bosnia, the small Slav states will be stirred as well as Russia.

Gravest fears are entertained that Emperor Francis Joseph cannot recover from his latest of a long series of tragedies that have marked his life.

Careworn and feeble, the emperor arrived at Vienna. The populace, massed at the station, gave him respectful greeting in a tremendous demonstration. Upon his arrival at the palace he immediately called a ministerial conference.

Sarayevo is under martial law while the government seeks the details of the plot which they believe was responsible for the tragedy.

Scores of arrests have been made of those suspected of complicity in the assassination plot.

MARTIAL LAW PROCLAIMED

Furious Rioting Follows Assassination In Capital of Bosnia

Serayevo, Bosnia, June 30.—Serious rioting by furious mobs occurred on the streets here.

Scores of Servian business places and dwellings were demolished by pro-Austrian mobs while preparations were being made to remove the bodies of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his consort to Vienna.

Police and soldiers charged the rioters ineffectually in several quarters of the city. It is reported that several Servians were killed.

Martial law was proclaimed in the city and Austrian troops took possession of all the strategic points after warnings with drum and trumpet were sounded through the street.

This action followed the behavior of mobs, which became particularly threatening. Reports were current that their activities were started by the explosion of a bomb by a Servian on a corner near the city's centre.

TO HAVE MIDNIGHT BURIAL

Bodies of Archduke and Consort Will First Lie In State

Vienna, June 30.—The bodies of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife were conveyed from Serayevo by special train to Metkovitch, Dalmatia.

They will be transferred today to a warship, which will proceed to Trieste under the escort of a squadron, arriving there Thursday morning. A special train will carry the bodies to Vienna, arriving at 10 o'clock at night.

From 8 o'clock Friday morning until noon they will lie in state in the chapel of the Hofburg and the public will have an opportunity during those hours to pass through the chapel.

The interment will take place at midnight Friday at Artstetten, lower Austria.

SERVIA NOT SORRY

Ferdinand Has Been Looked Upon as the "Robber of Bosnia"

Belgrade, June 30.—Though the Servian government is attempting to secure clews of the assassination plot which Austrians declare was formed here, the great mass of the populace rejoices rather than grieves over the death of Archduke Ferdinand.

Ever since 1908 he has been termed the "Robber of Bosnia" because of the prominent part which he took in causing Austria to annex that province.

Despite this feeling of antipathy Servian officials declared that there was no basis for charges that the conspiracy had been secretly aided by members of their government.

ARE PLANNING DEFENSE

Foreigners Fear Uprising Among Troops In Mexico City

Vera Cruz, Mex., June 30.—The fear that the spread of the disaffection among the Mexican federal troops might result in an uprising in Mexico City caused the British residents there to hold a meeting to arrange final plans for the defense of the concentration district.

British refugees who arrived here, and who had attended the meeting, said the general opinion expressed there was that Provisional President Huerta's hold on the situation in the capital was wavering, and many predicted an uprising or a revolt of the federal army within a week or ten days.

Some of the refugees declared the federal defeat at Zacatecas to be partially due to the revolt of 5000 soldiers under the command of General Barron. These men are said to have fired on their own comrades.

GRAPE JUICE DIET GOES INTO EFFECT

Jackies Can No Longer "Splice the Mainbrace" Aboard Ship

Boston, June 30.—Scarcely had the battleship Nebraska made fast at her berth at the Charlestown navy yard than there was a long line of bluejackets, extending from the storeroom to the pier, each carrying on his shoulder a wooden box labelled "beer," which they left on a team waiting on the pier.

It was the beginning of the unloading of anything in the shape of liquors, which have been forbidden on any of the United States battleships after July 1.

The battleships Rhode Island and North Carolina have already disposed of their lot, one way being found without having express teams being compelled to cart it away.

CHARGED WITH LIBEL

Woman Says Soldiers Are Driven to Suicide by Officers

Berlin, June 30.—Charges that hundreds of soldiers in the German army have been driven to suicide by the brutal treatment of their officers caused the greatest interest here in the trial of Red Rosa, a Luxemburg leader of radical Socialists, who is accused of thus libelling officers of the army.

The woma's defense is in the hands of a noted counsellor named Levy, who stated that the court would be given record of 30,000 cases of army brutalities and that 106 witnesses would testify to the truth of Red Rosa's charges.

HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE

Two Million Chinese Flood Sufferers In Need of Aid

Washington, June 30.—Consul Cheshire, at Canton, in behalf of a committee of American missionaries, appealed to the state department for help for 2,000,000 persons made homeless and destitute by floods in two southern China provinces.

Cheshire reported that in the stricken districts crops were totally destroyed and people are starving. The state department was asked to transmit the appeal to the Red Cross and benevolent organizations.

GOING TO SUPREME COURT

Federal Income Tax Law Upheld In District Court at Detroit

Detroit, June 30.—Constitutionality of the new federal income tax law was upheld in a decision rendered by Judge Tuttle in the United States district court here. This is the first court ruling on the law.

The validity of the act was questioned by John F. and Horace E. Dodge, Detroit manufacturers. Appeal will be made to the United States supreme court.

Robbed of $1500 In Elevator

Buffalo, June 30.—Fitz C. Block, treasurer of a brewing company, was robbed of $1500 in the elevator of the federal building here. Three men jostled Block in the elevator and escaped at the third floor.

THE SPIRIT OF '76

Quincy's big day—Saturday July 4th—All day and evening.

Our collectors will report their collections to the chairman every day now.

There is plenty of excellent material for the horrible parade. Dig it out and enter and then take home the prize. Its yours if you win it.

The full programs of the day are ready for free distribution. Call at the Board of Trade rooms for a copy, and then you can leave your contribution for the association in case the collector has skipped you. Honestly he did not intend to. It was an oversight on his part. He is very sorry. Ask him?

One of our collectors reported Saturday night that he had not been refused by a single person that he had called upon.

The athletic sports this year are in the hands of one who "knows how" and "will do it."

The different prizes will be an ornament to any man's cabinet of trophies.

"George" says that our fireworks will be better than ever. I hope so, but I really cannot see how he can improve upon last year, with the same amount of money to spend. Be sure and go to Merrymount park on the 4th and see for yourself. Don't take his word for the "big noise."

We had several callers at the Board of Trade rooms last night, all full of enthusiasm. Some left money also. Others will send their check today to Clarence Burgin the treasurer of the 4th of July Association.

Several called to enter the parade, and it looks now as though it would be the "best ever."

The Boy Scouts came in and offered to do anything that they could—fold programs, run errands, etc.

Collectors reported. Fine showing and more promised; but let me say to you readers, the we can use all they bring in to an advantage.

Read the "General Order" as issued by the chief marshal in another column.

NORTH QUINCY MEN'S CLUB

The meeting of the North Quincy Men's club in Poland's hall was largely attended by the members. After a short business meeting at which much important business was attended to, the evening was given over to entertainment.

There was fancy dancing by Frederick Kennedy which was of a high character, the music being furnished by Senator Langelier.

After several recitations and stories, William Troy sang some of the latest songs which were very much appreciated by the members.

Charles McGilvary gave a timely and pointed talk upon the work of such clubs as this and pointed out the way to make it a factor in the community for good.

Mr. Linnahan and Mr. White gave selections upon the drum and piano, which together with the good cigars furnished by the committee made it a most enjoyable evening. The members wished Cornelius Duggan a happy voyage on his trip to Europe.

LETTER FROM DR. HARDY

Writes of Public Schools in Magic City of Gary

Editors Ledger:

The magic growth of Gary Indiana the U. S. Steel Corporation city is quite well known. The site of this city eight years ago was unbroken prairie and sand-dunes. Today Gary has forty-two thousand population, is a beautiful city, and because of the doubling of the steel plant will undoubtedly have at least one hundred thousand when fifteen years old. That is growing some. But the story of her marvelous growth shall be told another time. Now it is the school system which is attracting national and international attention.

The Rev. Eric Lindh pastor of the Congregational church, and Prof. W. A. Wirt, superintendent of schools invited the Congregational ministers of Chicago to spend the day in Gary. The invitation was accepted. Personally the writer was granted some special privileges for the following reasons He happened to be president of the ministerial union, was an intimate friend of the pastoral host and was intimately acquainted with Francis W. Parker, and his pedagogic aspirations. Since Gary has become an educational mecca the readers of this paper will welcome first-hand information concerning these famous schools.

The first thing which impresses the visitor is the larger, more practical and economic use of the buildings. The plant is worked to its fullest capacity for the whole year, save a few weeks in August, eight hours each day for five days, and half time on Saturday for the children; evenings for adults. There is something doing in every part of the buildings and on the grounds every hour of the session. Not a single room unused during the eight hours. Hence 5000 children are readily accommodated in a school with desk capacity of two thousand. Teachers are specialists, teaching a single branch rather than the work of the usual grade, in this respect following the collegiate plan with rotating classes. The day is divided into eight sixty minute periods some of which are for study the rest of the day is given to auditorium, work and play. The teaching force is doubled for each building with but little more than half the expense for grounds, buildings, equipment, heating, lighting and janitor service, etc. This is an exceedingly big factor in the financial budget for any city. The initial expense per capita for student population is only about sixty per cent of that of the average city.

A very complicated but perfectly workable plan has been devised where by children on reasonable request of parents may begin the work of the day at 8.15, 9.15, or 10.15 in the morning; can be at home one or even two hours at noon, or take lunch at the school. As the school has no long summer vacation and the year divided into four periods, three of which are necessary for the proper work of the school, each child may be excused for a fourth of the time. Thus in case of sickness and necessary absence from school this need not interfere with the year's work, unless covering more than the time of a single period. The required work of the year represents three periods and thus a child may be promoted three times a year. All the grades from kindergarten to first year's work in college meet in the one building on the theory that this means the greatest development to young and old alike. The curriculum is arranged for three classes of students. The first for those who work rapidly and finish the high school at sixteen prepared for college, second, those requiring more time and graduating at eighteen; and third those who will graduate at twenty. The system is so elastic that a child is readily changed from one grade to another without repeating the work but by slowing the pace, and also a child may be advanced in exactly the same way. This also applies not only to the group of studies but the individual branches as well. Everywhere the child is bigger than the system. It is distinctly understood that there is no disgrace in doing the work more slowly or any indication from this fact that at twenty-five the backward child may not be the better scholar.

The class-room work is especially noteworthy because of the emphasis upon student originality and initiative and the intense interest and application of the pupils. The school is a great co-operative institution very much like life outside. But that which merits the most attention is the vital relation between the cultural and vocational functions of education. It may be safely said that no other public school can compare with the Gary schools in this respect. As already intimated the plan for the day comprises study, auditorium, work and play and the last three receive just as much scientific oversight, as the first on the theory that the child is always learning, or at least should be and that every hour of the child's life should be fitting it in a natural, wholesome free and happy manner for the highest and best training for life.

The auditorium work is surprisingly interesting. Always one or more classes there for lectures-demonstrations, music, drama, speaking, with a fine blending of the instructive and entertaining the passive and active participation. It is believed a part of a well rounded education to be able to follow a logical address, sermon or lecture with unflagging interest And the children acquire this power. Sometimes groups for this hour visit the public library and are actually taught the science of library making. cataloguing, book-making and the like.

The schools are veritable workshops with a list of more than a score of the major vocations in actual operation. There is a class paying interest of deposits, issuing checkbooks, operated by the students of the school. A printing establishment doing most excellent work and all the printing for the school. A blacksmith shop, foundry, pattern room, paint shop, store for the school supplies, carpenter's shop doing cabinet work for the school and many other industries. The girls are equally well provided for in those vocations which more directly appeal to them. In each of these departments there are skilled workmen to supervise the work. Men who explain how and why the work is done. In every case scientific accounting is kept so that the child learns the actual cost of the articles it is daily using. This is particularly true of the domestic department where about two hundred are served every day on the cafateria plan. The group of children buy the supplies, do the cooking, determine the price and are expected to make the accounts balance at the end of the month.

Of course there are the usual, and some special laboratories and even the lower grade children are doing remarkably good special investigation work. Work of this kind of special merit is printed in bulletins of the different departments. There is also plenty of outside work, gardening, caring for lawn and flowers. The schools have quite a collection of domestic and wild animals which are cared for by the children. Also a hen house and dove cote where are demonstrated the value of different kinds of feed. The visitor is puzzled to understand how hundreds of children can be effectively set to work in these various ways. Yet it is done.

The play-grounds are models and here as elsewhere is found the best of trained supervision. Even the play is so correlated that it makes the child eager to study in certain directions, that they may excel in the games. The pupils are all examined physically and as we looked about the grounds we were interested to know that some neurotic and undernourished children had been given a cup of warm milk or broth and wrapped in a blanket and put to sleep for a rest rather than sent to the grounds for exercise. The child is always considered first and the system later. Children weeding onions seemed just as happy as those swinging, and everyone seemed to be having a good time.

Outside the city is a model farm but quite unlike the typical model farm. The buildings are small and not particularly convenient, and the expense budget so frugal and simple that any farmer can economically follow the model. But they are producing milk of the lowest bacterial tests in Chicago and are making the farm pay.

The superintendent believes that every child welfare agency of the whole community should have an adequate opportunity for expression. So the children are excused from their classes at regular times during the week to receive religious instruction at the various churches. These are regular appointments and there are examinations. The parents designate the church and the children meet at the church that they may acquire the church going habit and pschologically associate such teaching with the church. The hours given to these exercises are not at the tag end, but may be at the best hour in the day. Church social and philanthropic work is considered so valuable that it may take the place of other exercises of the child. Thus the home and the church are given a co-operative share in the work as essential participants in the task of training the child for life. It is a wonderful plan. Yet so reasonable and natural that the wonder is that the rigorous inelastic common school system of the day has so long been supreme. The child and its training for life and citizenship has the right of way. This system possesses all virtues of the oldtime school with weaknesses eliminated because of its emphasis upon individualism. Yet it is the working out of the highest and best type of socialism in its splendid co-operative features. In the opinion of leading American educators the Gary system will have to be reckoned within the next few years.

The man who is working out this noble experiment is Prof. W. A. Wirt, a man of about forty years of age of the best American type, smooth shaven alert, self poised, efficient to work with others and to direct the work of others. A strong personality a natural born leader, a man of highest moral sensibility, thoroughly trained in the best American and European educational institutions. While Gary offers some advantages it has its serious handicaps. A large proportion of the children are of foreign parentage and the city growing so rapidly that it is exceedingly difficult to provide for the new comers and to affiliate them with the new system. On the other hand the whole city is in the process of making the steel plants models of efficiency and economy. Perhaps nowhere else in the country has industrial efficiency reached higher attainments in the economic utility of the raw material. And something of this pervades the whole city making easier the working out of the Wirt system of life development. For he declares that his plan is more sociological than pedagogical. Keep your eye on the Gary schools for there is something there which every school committee and parent in the country ought to know.

NEW WATER SUPPLY MAIN

Additional 24-Inch Pipe Through Milton

Quincy property is to have better protection from fire. The Milton Record says: Adams street, from the Lower Mills to the Quincy line, will be dug up the latter part of the summer by contractors engaged in laying a 24-inch main for the Metropolitan Water Board. While the contract has not yet been made, it is expected that the work can start about the first of August. It will require the digging of a trench about 6 1-2 feet deep and 4 to 5 feet wide. While this will materially interfere with travel, the street probably will not be blocked at any point.

The main is to connect with the larger main at the Lower Mills and will be a duplicate of the present system in Adams street. It is designed to take care of the increased consumption of water in Milton and Quincy, to maintain the pressure, and to be an emergency source of supply so that Milton and Quincy will be certain to have water should anything happen to the older pipe.

The construction of this main and the tearing up of Adams street will make it necessary for the Selectmen to postpone for a time the resurfacing of the street, which the board had intended to undertake right away. It may be possible to do this work in the fall after the water pipe is laid.

REUNION OF ACADEMY BOYS

The Class of 1904 of the Adams Academy will celebrate its decennial anniversary Wednesday at Nantasket. The feature of the occasion will be the presence of two members of the class from two distant points of the country.

They are Fred Johnson who has been located in Eureka, Utah, since his graduation from Harvard, six years ago, and Dr. Alfred Brown, supervisor of public playgrounds at Baltimore, Md.

Alden W. Blanchard, Amherst '09, boys' director at the Y. M. C. A., has arranged an entertaining program for the afternoon and evening. The boys will go to the beach by boat, enjoy a dip in the ocean, weather permitting, and at 6.30 a banquet will be served at the Palm Garden at Paragon. Mr. Johnson and Dr. Brown are the only two married members of the class who will attend.

SPORT BRIEFS

H. W. French, teacher of penmanship and other studies at the Quincy High school, left Monday for Rochester, N. Y. where he will play summer base ball with one of the teams of Rochester city league. Mr. French is a pitcher, and during the school season has been performing well in the box for some of the fastest semi-professional teams in the state. His work with Everett was exceptional and with them he earned the title of the strikeout pitcher. Mr. French has been at Quincy High school the past year. He has assisted Frank Mansur, the football and base ball coach in the sports, but it was not generally known that he was playing the game on Saturday afternoons. He is at present studying law. Previous to taking up the profession of an instructor, Mr. French was a pitcher in the Virginia state league.

JUDGES' STAND.

The parish committee of the First church has granted the use of the steps of the church to the Fourth of July Association for use as a judges' stand for the parade on the morning of the Fourth. In granting the use of the steps for this occasion in no way establishes a precedent. The First church has always stood for patriotism in its broadest sense, and beneath its portals rests the remains of two of the country's greatest patriots, President John Adams and President John Quincy Adams. This portal therefore is considered as most sacred but in view of the fact that the parade is in celebration of the National patriotic holiday the use of the steps as a judges' stand is granted.

Challenger Gives a Good Account of Herself In Race With Sister

Torquay, Eng., June 30.—Shamrock IV., again rigged as a cutter, decisively defeated her older sister in a good wholesail breeze eighteen miles to windward and back.

At the outer mark the challenger for the America's cup led by twenty-two minutes, which she increased to half an hour in a dying breeze on the run home.

JEALOUSY THOUGHT TO BE THE MOTIVE

Officials Think Ballou Was Killed by a Third Person

Stamford, Conn., June 30.—A positive motive for the death of Waldo R. Ballou has been established in the minds of the officials investigating the puzzling circumstances surrounding his death in the home of Mrs. Helen M. Angle in the Rippowam studio building.

It became known that they have practically satisfied themselves that Ballou came to his death at the hands of a third person, who was jealous of Ballou's attentions to Mrs. Angle.

So thoroughly convinced are the officials in their latest theory that the inquest, which was to have been resumed yesterday afternoon by Coroner Phelan, was postponed until Friday.

Chief of Police Brennan made this positive statement: "Mr. Ballou was struck down in Mrs. Angle's apartment."

MAKES A CONFESSION

Bookkeeper Employed by City of Boston an Embezzler

Boston, June 30.—Frederick L. Gilhooly, a bookkeeper in the office of the overseers of the poor, confessed in the office of the finance commission to the embezzlement of $5066.69 of trust funds held in that department.

The defalcations were discovered by the special detective investigator of the finance commission, and after an expert accountant had certified that there were discrepancies Gilhooly was sent for.

He had hardly been asked the first few questions when he broke down and signed a written confession, which is now in the hands of the finance commission.

HELD ON DOUBLE CHARGE

Italian Accused of Murder and Attempt to Kill an Officer

Newton, Mass., June 30.—Vincenzo Paladino of Lexington, who shot and killed Antonio Gimalaro in Newton and was captured after a chase by Police Inspector O'Halloran of Newton, who barely escaped death when the Italian fired his revolver at him point-blank, appeared in the Newton court, charged with the murder of Gimalaro and with the attempt-tempted murder of the inspector.

Judge Bacon ordered pleas of not guilty, and Paladino was remanded to jail without bail. Hearing was set for July 7.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Fire on Long Island, a summer resort in Casco bay, Me., destroyed four stores and three cottages, with an aggregate loss of $50,000.

Punch bowls fashioned out of a block of solid ice is the cooling scheme started by a New York hotel.

Despondency, brought on by ill-health, caused Annie Russell, 30, of Somerville, Mass., to turn on the gas in her room to commit suicide.

Harry Noble, a mill worker, drowned when he fell from a power boat at Saco, Me.

Glenn Turner of Limestone, Me., aged 3, fell 200 feet from a railroad bridge to the ground and nearly every bone in his body was broken.

DELIVERY IS DELAYED

New Turbine is Necessary for the Rivadavia

Work on a new turbine engine, to take the place of the one destroyed on the Argentine ship Rivadavia at the shipyard Sunday, commenced this morning and it is now estimated that the damages done the engine room will mount into thousands of dollars and delay the delivery of the ship at least three months.

As far as can be learned, the engine was ruined when a defective link in one of four chains holding a 60-ton upper casing seven feet above the engine in a chain test snapped, causing the dogs on the other three chains to slip and release their burden.

The ponderous top fell and struck the turbine below with much force. The motor was crushed, the buckets bent as though they were made of paper, and the interior of the engine room was damaged by flying pieces of metal.

The members of the Argentine Commission, who were superintending the test, escaped as did nearly a score of workmen who stood close to the engine. Eight others were not so fortunate however. One jumped from under the mass of twisted metal that buckled just in time to avoid being crushed. The side of the casing struck him on the right shoulder and the sleeve of his coat was torn off. Another sustained a crushed heel and two others fractured ribs. Four were slightly injured but are able to work today.

The commission are keenly disappointed over the result of the test as many had planned to leave this city before another week.

The ship must leave the fitting out dock before July 11 so that U. S. S. Nevada to be launched on that day can be immediately swung into position and work rushed. Under these conditions the installing of the new turbine may take place at the Commonwealth docks where the Rivadavia will be taken within a few days.

MINSTREL SHOW

High School last year. Mr. Gay has been popular in several plays at the High school this year.

The circle was composed of Lora M. Churchill, Jordine E. Davison, Helen Day, Bertha Fuller, Helen Holt, Esther Jenkins, Viola Jackson, Lillian Palmer, Winnifred Pratt, Beatrice Rogers, Hilda Taberner, Nellie Thayer, Clara Von Emden, Marion Wilson, Paul Coombs, Byron Day, Henry Dolan, Byron Miller, William MacMahon, Herbert Smith, and Everett Suermeister. Spencer Appollonio was director and Miss Marion Letteney pianist. Miss Margaret Read accompanied the quartet and several selections of the olio.

The olio opened with several zither solos by Prof. August Schoefer of Boston.

The male quartet composed of Messrs. Miller, Stetson, Butterworth and Heap sang "Just a song at twilight," by Molloy.

A dancing sketch by James Butler and Walter Ryder came next. Both proved themselves very clever entertainers. Mr. Ryder is one of the most popular clog dancers on Keith's circuit.

A soprano solo by Miss Lora Churchill followed, entitled "The swallows are coming" and to the long and loud applause responded with "The gingerbread man."

Mr. Apollonio gave a stump speech, "Gettin married." He was very fancily dressed and was a perfect "take off" of a great many public speakers.

A character song entitled "Charity" was sung by Miss Jordine Davison, in costume. To the generous applause she responded with "Where the red red roses grow."

The program closed with "America" by the audience and chorus.

Charles Cherrington president of the Patriotic Association, spoke, in behalf of the association of his appreciation to the Tonawanda club for their work in giving the minstrel show to swell the funds for the Fourth of July celebration.

Much of the success is due to the energetic girls of the Tonawanda club and its thrifty young president, Miss Winifred Pratt. Also to Henry Von Emden the popular and efficient chairman of the finance committee of the Patriotic Association. Mr. Von Emden gave much publicity to the performance and is largely responsible for the great financial success.

ROBINSON TO GET SEPARATE TRIAL

Norton's Slayer Will Go Before Boston Jury on July 20

Boston, June 30.—Joseph Duddy may not be tried at all on the charge of first degree murder against him jointly with Lawrence Robinson in causing the death of Police Inspector Thomas J. Norton.

District Attorney Pelletier has decided to place Robinson on trial alone before Judge Keating and a jury, in the criminal session of the superior court, on July 20. Two indictments were returned against Robinson, one naming him alone and the other naming him jointly with Duddy.

The date for the trial was set by Keating on motion of Pelletier.

Anchor Liner California In Precarious Position on Rocks

Londonderry, June 30.—The 1016 passengers on board the Anchor liner California, which went ashore on Tory island during a dense fog while on her way from New York to Moville and Glasgow, were successfully transferred to two steamers without loss of life.

The crews of several British torpedo boat destroyers assisted in the operation of transferring the passengers.

The California lies in a precarious position on the rocky coast, but it is expected she will be floated as soon as fine weather sets in. Her crew continues aboard, although the water has penetrated three of her holds. Three hundred of the passengers of the California whose destination was Ireland were landed in this city.

Iron, Steel and Tin Workers In Widespread Wage Disagreement

Pittsburg, June 30.—Owing to the failure of the wage scale committee of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers and the representatives of mills employing sheet and tin plate workers who are members of the Amalgamated association to reach an agreement relative to the wage scale for the year beginning July 1, 140 mills will close at midnight tonight and remain idle until a wage scale is fixed upon.

The workers requested a slight advance in wages, but the manufacturers, in refusing this, held that the present market conditions did not justify any higher rate being paid.

GETS AID FROM ALL QUARTERS

Salem Has Large Offering of Money and Supplies

NOW NEAR NORMAL CONDITIONS

Leading Men Prove Their Belief That City Will Come Into Her Own Again —Employment For Refugees Skilled In Certain Trades—Credit of City Remains Good

Salem, Mass., June 30.—Somewhere near normal conditions prevail in Salem for the first time since the conflagration. Systematized in the fullest and most comprehensive manner, all work of aid and relief and rehabilitation is carried out expeditiously and with the greatest of efficiency.

Despite the rain and the excitement attendant upon thousands of visitors to the stricken city, the carefully prepared programs of the many committees in charge are followed with clocklike precision.

Aid and assistance continues to pour into Salem from every source and the well being of the refugees is assured. There is plenty of food for all and with wooden floors put in the tents and wooden walks through the several streets of the refugee colonies, conditions are made as comfortable as possible.

Contributions of money and supplies are pouring in from all over the state and from cities and towns in different parts of the country. The fund is moving well along toward the $250,000 mark.

The total amount received by Gardiner M. Lane, treasurer of the state Salem relief committee, at the close of business hours yesterday was $226,297.57.

Dayton, O., has come to the front with a contribution of $3000. That amount was wired to Mayor Hurley by the Greater Dayton association. Dayton promises to make the amount $5000 if necessary.

That the business men and manufacturers are confident Salem will come into her own again was evidenced repeatedly when announcement was made by several of the largest corporations that they intended to rebuild their plants at once.

Scores of insurance adjusters reached Salem and many claims were paid in cash. The adjusters charged 1 percent for cash.

Agents from different plants in many cities of New England also arrived in Salem with offers of employment for refugees skilled in certain trades.

Further evidence of Salem's assured rehabilitation, bringing with it cheer to the city officials, came when a bid was received from the Old Colony Trust company for a loan of $100,000 in anticipation of taxes at 2½ percent, which is the lowest known rate of any municipality in Massachusetts. The bid was made since the fire and was opened at a meeting of the city council.

The council also passed, under suspension of the rules, an appropriation of $15,000 for temporary housing. A loan order providing for the bonding of the sum went through at the same time. The money is to be expended under the direction of the director of finance.

Incendiarism as a cause of the conflagration was eliminated by the state police yesterday. At the same time, however, sufficient evidence was secured to indicate that one man at least was criminally negligent.

Officers ascertained that the first fire started in a wooden shed attached to the Korn Leather company plant in Blubber Hollow. In this shed, according to the police, Nahamen Adlin was conducting a series of experiments with a new process for treating patent leathers.

Evidence that explosives were stored in the shed was discovered and record that a permit to store explosives had never been granted to Adlin or anyone in his employ or connected with him.

Governor Walsh started plans for putting the unemployed to work in Salem yesterday. A beginning was made Saturday, more men were put to work Sunday, and yesterday a big gang was added.

The governor was in conference with Attorney General Boynton to obtain from him an opinion as to framing plans by which the state can aid the Salem merchants in getting on their feet again.

The troops now quartered in Salem will be gradually withdrawn and the police administration of the city turned over to the civil authorities.

Adlin has been summoned to appear at the state house before George C. Neal, deputy chief of the state police, who is conducting the inquest into the Salem conflagration.

Interested financially with Adlin in his new process are Max Korn of the Korn Leather company and Patrick Creedon, another manufacturer and owner of the property in which Korn's plant is situated.

Death In School Fire

LADIES' AUXILIARY.

Saturday the first real event of the summer took place when the Ladies' Auxiliary to the King Cove Boat Club kept open house at their clubhouse and incidentally replenished the treasury.

In the afternoon boat trips were in order to various points of interest in the harbor which were greatly enjoyed by the East Weymouth visitors.

The parties were conveyed by the Harbor Light, Capt. Lester Culley; Gloria, Capt. John Heibeck; Iola, Capt. Henry Miller; Ethel, Capt. Charles Abbott; Cupid, Capt. John Wolfe. The Cupid was formerly owned by Dr Cook of Arctic fame and when bought by Capt. Wolfe was named the Farthest North.

There was also a sale of fancy and domestic articles in charge of Mrs. Jacob Loud, Mrs. Lester Culley, Mrs Charles Abbott and a food and candy table in charge of Mrs. Irving Morgan Mrs. Josie Culley, Mrs. Lou Miller Mrs. Hannah Abbott and Mrs. Francis MacNeil.

Supper was served from five to seven by those in charge of the food sale, assisted by volunteers, and judging from the amount on the checks presented to the cashier the Auxiliary were wise in arranging harbor trips to whet the appetites of the guests.

Charles Abbott lost his hat while supper was in progress and from his hasty exit over the railing there was a suspicion that the cashier was being slighted, but all fears were unfounded. It is rumored that during a bombardment of rolls, the reporter was a target, although this has not been verified.

The menu consisted of baked beans kidney beans, ham sandwiches, rolls coffee, iced tea, pies and ice cream.

During the lull after supper, when everyone was enjoying the sea breezes and beautiful sunset on the veranda, Box 18 was sounded, and instantly, there was a commotion. This box is not near the club, but several members are firemen and they at once left. Some are inclined to believe that the next time Mr. Miller goes to a fire he will follow the road and not cross the meadow. Fortunately he was near home and had a change of khakis.

At this time the few articles on the fancy tables were sold at auction by Cy Howland who claims to be a licensed auctioneer. At any rate he was a successful one, selling an apron guaranteed to fit to Oscar Cox and getting high bids. Mrs. John Wolfe and Mrs. John Heibeck were also successful salesladies approaching their victims in a charming manner that brooked no refusal. Many purses that had a healthy appearance in the afternoon went home looking as if Molly Waddy and Tony had walked on them.

There was an entertainment in the evening in charge of Mrs. Edward Parker, Mrs. John Wolfe and Mrs Grace Walker, with the following program: Piano solo, "Anvil Chorus," Mrs. Fred McDowell; two selections, "Dawn" and "Swallows," Old North Trio, Mrs. Maidie Millett, Mrs. Eveline Philbrook, Mrs. Annie McDowell. Readings, "The New Stenographer," by the "Office Boy" and "Holding the Reins," Oliver Burrell; duet, "Abide With Me," cornet and voice, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Philbrook; solo, "Comin' Thro' the Rye," and "The Maid of Dundee," Mrs. Millett; spirited violin selections by Oliver Burrell; solos "In the Garden of My Heart" and "In the Vale of Dreams," Mrs. Philbrook; readings, "Clothes," and "State-ly Verse," Mr. Burrell; "Once in a While" and "Cupid," Old North Trio. Mrs. Mary R. Flint was the accompanist.

Every number was enjoyable but Mr. Burrell's readings deserve special mention ,as he is seventy-nine years of age. His rendition of "Clothes" was received with great applause. At the close of the entertainment Mr. Burrell and Mrs. Flint, violin and piano, furnished music for dancing of the newer steps and a Virginia reel.

The silk quilt was drawn by little John Heibeck and awarded to Calvin Salisbury; table mats to Mr. Doyle, and sofa pillow to Mrs. Grace Walker. About $50 was realized.

The Auxiliary officers are Alice Windward Heibeck, president; Mildred L. Morgan, vice president; Josie Culley, treasurer; Grace Walker, secretary.

Those present were: Capt. and Mrs. John Heibeck, John W. Heibeck, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Winward, Capt. and Mrs. John Wolfe, Capt. and Mrs. Lester Culley, Capt. and Mrs. Henry Miller, Capt and Mrs. Charles Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. I. W. While revolving they continually change showing different colors. This piece throws showers of fire 400 square feet and is one of our latest designs.

Special device 20th century set-piece. This piece represents an Arabic Mosiac. It shows color and design after design. The colors and tints are most perfect and after each design and color the piece dies out and then rekindles showing a different one. These changes occur five or six times and finally end in a shower of gold. A very wonderful creation.

ILLUMINATION.

Searchlight set-piece. This is one of the most perfect set-pieces that has ever been produced in the fireworks art and a special product of this Company. From a large frame a number of wheels are attached forming a hexagon. First the wheels all start with blue colors showing, then it makes five different changes of colors, and betwen each change will appear flashes, at equal intervals, as bright as a large flashlight. This will light up an area of one mile square so that every one can be easily distinguished and any one could readily read a newspaper.

Plain girandole.
Flight of wolf tail girandole.
Firefly shell.

Farfalle shell. This shell is one which repreesnts bats flying around in the night.

Fountanella shell.
Fumante shell.

Pupatella shell, three breaks with twenty-four sections.
Pupatella shell, four breaks with thirty-two sections.
Pupatella shell, five breaks with forty sections.

Special device, zuretto set-piece. This set-piece upon lighting first goes in one direction, with a ball of liquid fire throwing off sparks Then it flashes, after which all is darkness. The whole proceeding is again repeated and so on for all six times together. The seventh time it rekindles showing entire in solid colors and then it all changes and the air is filled with showers of gold. This set-piece is the longest burning and has the most changes of any ever made.

Transformation set-piece. This is one of the most beautiful set-pieces that has ever been made in the fireworks art and a special product of this company. From a large frame a number of wheels all start, forming a hexagon. First the wheels all start and blue colors show, then it makes five different changes in colors and between the changes flashes are sent forth at equal intervals as bright as a flashlight. This will light up a park one mile square.

Special device ,alternating speed wheel.

Special device, zodiac set-piece. This shows the sun, moon and stars arranged as follows:—In center is a large star of perfect proportion, which remains stationary, and slowly changes colors. Beyond it is a half moon which revolves around the star, which also changes colors. Then outside of all is seen the sun in pure gold, revolving in great speed from the common center, throwing out showers of gold like the rays of the sun. The whole device when burning covers a circle with a diameter of fully forty feet.

Shower of gold girandole.
Triple ascension girandole.
America girandole.
Surprise shell with parachute chain.
Special parachute chain. Salvo of parachute chain.
Rendella shell, eight breaks.
Rendella shell, sixteen breaks.
Rendella shell, twenty-four breaks.
Rendella shell, thirty-two breaks.

PALM TREE.

Special device palm tree. This set-piece is so large that it has to be made on the exhibition field. The effect is as follows. First in the center are three wheels, one above the other, then these turn rapidly and change color. Meanwhile from all sides huge showers of gold are thrown out like palm leaves.

Special device, brilliante set-piece. This piece is notable for its beauty of design and color. The design is in a beautiful figure changed according to the place of display. The color is the most dazzling white ever seen. It is so dazzling that one can hardly look at it. It repeatedly dies and rekindles with three changes of color. Finally ending with a shower of gold accompanied by a battery.

Special device, palomella set-piece. This set-piece is one of our most pleasing designs. First the light spreads over the piece, burns for a minute, then dies out as if it were the end. Then it rekindles with a change of color and new effect. This is repeated with each change of color. The effect is unique in that it produces practically three or four set-pieces, one after another, in one single set-piece. This piece is really wonderful because of the fact that the piece entirely dies out and as if by magic makes an entire change. Every color is effective instantly and in no case does one see blotches of different colors.

Special device, tracche set-piece. This piece is one which is very interesting, as it produces a very true description of a gattling gun in action giving numerous discharges with ever increasing rapidity.

Special device, tracche set-piece. This device shows a large fall of colored fire which looks like water breaking over the rocks on the falls and falling to the bottom. It almost seems to be water burning as it rushes on. As the falls start flowing, they are divided into the three parts of our National colors. They then change into the wonderful silver of the falls in the moonlight. No other set-piece affords such pleasure and with the new invention giving the American colors will be doubly pleasing.

Lambettoni shell.
Shell of Paradise, four breaks.
Troni shell with seven breaks.
Troni shell with seven breaks.
Troni shell with seven breaks.

Star shell, seven breaks.
Star shell, eight breaks.
Star shell, nine breaks.
Star shell, ten breaks.

Tremolanda shell, six breaks.
Tremolanda shell, seven breaks.
Tremolanda shell, eight breaks.
Flight of aerial shells.
Trip hammer shell, eight inch gun, twenty-five breaks.

Grand finale. This finale is a blending of the most beautiful colors known to the fireworks art and will be accompanied by the discharge of huge aerial maroon which are sent into the heavens in rapid succession, making a dazzling effect, which is simply sublime. The whole air seems to vibrate with force, the heavens are alight, the earth belches forth fire and noise. For the five minutes during this, every one is thunderstruck, all is wild and uncanny. It is a sight of exceptional beauty and unexcelled in splendor No battle scene could be more realistic. This finale consists of numerous pieces of fireworks, namely, mines, fountains, batteries, shells and maroons.

Salute of aerial maroon.

Good-night set-piece. This is one of the company's famous good-night set-pieces and will be of exclusive design.

THE LIVE WIRE

He Got the Reputation and Kept It

By EDWARD BOLTWOOD

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Carl P. Stryver jumped from the moving trolley car and hurried up a suburban cross street. His energetic gait was almost a run, but it was dignified by the important expression of his face. He had recently acquired the art of always appearing overburdened by vast and mysterious plans.

An appreciative passenger on the rear seat of the car spoke to the conductor.

"That lad's a live wire, hey?"

"You bet!" agreed the official. "The city of Leeton never had no such a booster as Carl P., nor any other city of our size here in Ohier, I guess!"

The 12 o'clock whistles shrieked hoarsely as Stryver burst into his house like a tropical storm. Since the day when he resigned his clerkship in the Leeton bank to accept the office of secretary of the new board of trade he very seldom came home for the midday meal, which he had of late learned to call lunch and which his wife still called dinner. Rose was therefore surprised and genuinely pleased to see him.

"WHAT IN THE WORLD ARE YOU CELEBRATING?"

"Deeley's man hasn't fixed the gas stove," she said. "I can't understand why I shouldn't attend to that, Carl, as well as you?"

"Of course you can't understand, dear," said Carl. "No woman could understand board of trade affairs any better than she could help in them. Deeley has just joined the board, and I want to get into personal touch with him, so I'll attend to the stove myself, perhaps tomorrow, Rosamond."

She smiled good humoredly, for she was not yet accustomed to the impressive alteration of her name which Stryver had established.

"And why not today?"

"Today?" he snorted. "Gracious powers! Today is the biggest day in the history of the board of trade. Mr. Niles is scheduled to arrive this afternoon—the great Amos Niles of Pittsburgh—and if he takes a shine to Leeton people and moves one of his boiler works here it will be a feather in the board's cap, I can tell you, that the city won't forget."

"I do wish you'd stay for din—for luncheon with me!" said Rose.

"We're going to show Mr. Niles how proud we are of the place we live in and how we're always trying to make it better. Goodby!"

It was nearly 5 o'clock when the accident happened. An automobile skidded against a post opposite the Stryvers' house. There was a muffled scream from the covered tonneau, and a stout old gentleman clambered out of it to the sidewalk and shook his fist at the chauffeur.

"You no 'count idjut!" he roared. "You've gone and scared my wife into coumption fits again, you French fool!"

Mrs. Stryver fairly flew to her dining room, back to the front door and down her front steps, bearing a bottle and a glass.

"There, there, dearie!" she said to the limp old lady. "Don't you take on. You drink this, and come right into the house and lie down, and stay as long as you want to."

The lady accepted the support of Rose's strong young arm without an instant's hesitation. The gentleman appeared to be equally accustomed to quick decisions.

"Thank you, ma'am," he acknowledged. "You're real folksy to strangers for a city woman, ain't you? Martha's sort o' has sick. I'd ought to 'a' known better than to fetched her on this trip, and—what's this? Currant wine? Well, say! I haven't seen any currant wine in a reg'lar dog's age!"

"I'll give you a farm made apple pie to go with it," laughed Mrs. Stryver.

He beamed gratefully, and while Rose assisted his wife into the house he turned on the French chauffeur, who was tinkering at the wheel.

"Listen, you!" exploded the old gentleman. "We'll stop here quite a spell. You can mend that axle or not; I don't care two cents. I'd as lief dump the whole shebang into my boiler works for scrap iron!"

"Vairy good," jabbered the chauffeur, touching his cap. "Vairy good. Meester Neels."

Meanwhile at the rooms of the Leeton board of trade the reception committee, high collared and frock coated, waited anxiously for Amos Niles of Pittsburgh. Each of the five members wore in his lapel a small badge shaped like the sole of a shoe and inscribed, "My Heart and Soul For Leeton." The badge had been happily devised by Carl Stryver in honor of the first accomplishment of the board of trade, which was the importation to the city of a shoe factory, now extinct.

Stryver sat at the secretary's desk in a corner of one of the rooms. Beside him sat the landlord of the Majestic hotel.

"We will have the claret served with the entree," said Stryver, scowling at a portentous dinner card.

"Wouldn't you rather have wine than claret?" hinted the landlord.

"That's right," put in Meyer, the committee's chairman. "We've got to blow Mr. Niles clean off his feet. He must be a great spender. Remember the day we called on him, Carl, and the way he ordered people round? I guess we can size up a man O. K. What jollies a millionaire like him is lugs, and plenty of 'em. Make it wine!"

"I had planned the champagne with the seventh course, the truffle croquettes," explained Stryver, "but we'll have it earlier, if you prefer." He glanced at his watch.

"After 5 o'clock already?" he announced nervously.

"Maybe the train's late," suggested the chairman.

"Maybe he won't come by train," Stryver rejoined. "His letter didn't say. By George, is that our telephone ringing?"

He secluded himself in a telephone booth. No sooner had he done so than the hall door of the room opened slowly. Mr. Meyer started and caught his breath. The committee stood at attention, as if being photographed. But the arrival was merely Judge Broderick, a tall, angular old fellow in a crumpled suit of tweeds.

Carl had not observed Judge Broderick. Carl's face was white and set, and he rested both clinched fists on the table, with the air of a United States president, whose entire reputation is at stake, confronting a national crisis in the cabinet.

"Gentlemen," he said firmly, "there has been a change in our arrangements. Amos Niles is at my house. I shall expect you there within an hour or so. Now, leave this to me. Don't ask me to waste time by explaining."

He could not have lucidly explained had he wished to. Rosamond over the wire had given him a jumbled report, femininely unbusinesslike and almost incoherent. It was clear from it only that Amos Niles declined to leave Stryver's house. Stryver plunged down the stairs and into a cab.

"Ryan's grocery!" he shouted to the hackman.

The drive gave him an opportunity to think. He checked items excitedly on his tremulous fingers. He must stop at a florist's, a wine merchant's, a butcher's—

Abruptly the gas stove occurred to him. He rapped frantically on the front window of the carriage.

"To Deeley's!" screamed Stryver. "Deeley, the plumber!"

Then, with a sudden spasm akin to toothache, he remembered the cracked glass of his street door. The parlor carpet too! What opinion would Mr. Niles have about that? Stryver leaned back in the cab and groaned penitently. Why hadn't he taken care of his home? His fingers strayed to the badge in his lapel, and he wondered if the Pittsburgh millionaire had noticed that the porch needed a painting.

The carriage rattled up the street to his house, and Stryver dismounted with his bundles, resembling an overworked Santa Claus. Rose serenely met him on the steps.

"Carl, what in the world are you celebrating?"

"Hush!" he whispered. "Smuggle this gasfitter into the kitchen, can you? Where's Mr. Niles?"

"Up in our bedroom with his wife. The sweetest old people! But, Carl, the stove needn't be fixed this instant. We've had supper."

"Had din—had supper?"

"Yes," smiled Rose. "Mr. Niles said it was the best he ever ate. I managed pretty well, considering."

"Considering my neglect of things, you mean," supplied Stryver sadly. "I guess, Rose, that boosting, like charity, begins at— Oh, my heavens, here he comes downstairs!"

A couple of hours later the five members of the board of trade committee left Stryver's residence, dinnerless, but happy. Amos Niles, genial in shirt sleeves and slippers, had assured them that he was thoroughly satisfied with Leeton and that one of his factories would be erected there. In the returning trolley car Mr. Meyer was moved to enthusiastic comment.

"And the old plutocrat did look satisfied, for a fact," said Mr. Meyer. "How he chuckled over that doughnut, didn't he? Stryver claimed that it was all because of a motor accident, but I believe Carl P. had the whole thing framed up, somehow. That lad's a live wire, hey?"

"You bet!" ejaculated the committee in fervent chorus.

SAVINGS BANKS BOUGHT NOTES

Leads to Charges of Larceny and Fraudulent Pretenses

LOAN FOR HAMPDEN RAILROAD

Unexpectedly Taken Up by Middlesex Grand Jury, Which Indicts Charles S. Mellen, Boston Bankers and Officials of Two Cambridge Savings Banks—Denial of Criminality

Cambridge, Mass., June 30.—Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New Haven railroad system, and six members of the Boston banking firm of F. S. Moseley & Co., were indicted by the Middlesex county grand jury on counts for conspiracy and for the alleged larceny of $25,000 from the Cambridge Savings bank and $20,000 from the East Cambridge Savings bank.

The indictments are based on the financing of the Hampden railroad by a number of banks of Greater Boston, including the two Cambridge savings institutions. It is alleged that the defendants procured loans from the banks by fraudulent pretences.

At the same time the whole investment committee of each of the two Cambridge banks was indicted for conspiring to loan the funds of the banks on security which was not indorsed by an independent and substantial surety.

A remarkable feature of the series of indictments is that in several counts a dead man, the late Ralph D. Gillette, former president of the Hampden railroad, has been indicted for conspiracy to steal. Gillette died nearly a year ago in an automobile accident in Springfield.

The total amount involved in the indictments is $25,000 alleged to have been obtained from the Cambridge Savings bank and $20,000 from the East Cambridge Savings bank. The duplication of counts represents various renewals of the notes, each of which is alleged as a separate offense.

In addition to the indictments against Mellen and the bankers, eleven secret indictments were handed down by the special grand jury. It was rumored that they had to do with the same transaction.

The presidents of the two savings banks, as well as Moseley & Co., deny there was any criminality in the Hampden railroad note transactions. They say they believed the notes were a good investment and will all be paid.

The indictment of Mellen, Moseley and the Cambridge bank officials was a complete surprise, for the district attorney had given no inkling that the subject was under consideration by the grand jury.

NATHAN HALE STATUE IN NEW YORK.

To drumbeat and heartbeat
A soldier marches by;
There is color in his cheek,
There is courage in his eye,
Yet to drumbeat and heartbeat
In a moment he must die.

By starlight and moonlight
He seeks the Briton's camp,
And he hears the rustling flag
And the armed sentry's tramp,
And the starlight and moonlight
His silent wanderings lamp.

With slow tread and still tread
He scans the tented line,
And he counts the battery guns
By the gaunt and shadowy pine,
And his slow tread and still tread
Gives no warning sign.

The dark wave, the plumed wave,
It meets his eager glance,
And it sparkles 'neath the stars
Like the glimmer of a lance;
The dark wave, the plumed wave,
On an emerald expanse.

A sharp clang, a steel clang,
And terror in the sound,
For the sentry, falcon eyed,
In the camp a spy hath found;
With a sharp clang, a steel clang,
The patriot is bound.

With calm brow, with steady brow,
He robes him for the tomb;
In his look there is no fear
Nor a shadow trace of gloom,
But with calm brow, with steady brow,
He robes him for the tomb.

Through the long night, the still night,
He kneels upon the sod,
And the brutal guards withhold
E'en the solemn words of God;
Through the long night, the still night,
He walks where Christ hath trod.

In the blue morn, the sunny morn,
He dies upon the tree,
And he mourns that he can lose
But one life for liberty;
In the blue morn, the sunny morn,
His spirit wings are free.

But his last words, his message words,
They burn, lest friendly eye
Should read how proud and calm
A patriot could die;
With his last words, his message words,
A soldier's battlecry.

From fame leaf and angel leaf,
From monument and urn,
The sad of earth, the glad of heaven
His tragic fate shall learn.
And on fame leaf and angel leaf
The name of Hale shall burn.

—Francis Miles Finch.

Webster on Independence Day.

This anniversary gladdens and unites all American hearts. On other days of the year we may be party men, indulge in controversies more or less important to the public good. We may have likes and dislikes, and we may maintain our political differences, often with warm and sometimes with angry feelings. But today we are Americans all, and all nothing but Americans. Every man's heart swells within him; every man's port and bearing become somewhat more proud and lofty as he remembers that the great inheritance of liberty is still his—his, undiminished and unimpaired; his in all its original glory; his to enjoy, his to protect and his to transmit to future generations.

Old Glory's Meaning.

And wherever our flag comes and men behold it they see in its sacred emblazonry no ramping lion, no fierce eagle, no embattled castles or insignia of imperial authority. They see the symbols of light. It is the banner of the dawn. It means liberty, and the galley slave, the poor oppressed conscript, the trodden down creature of foreign despotism, sees in the American flag that very promise and prediction of God. "The people which sat in darkness saw a great light, and to them which sat in the region and the shadow of death light is sprung up."—Henry Ward Beecher.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.
They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.
That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.
People know that there is quality behind them.
They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.
This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.
The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.
The world grows better.

RELIEF FUND IS LAGGING

Only Three Additions to the Salem Fund

Twelve dollars additional was added to the Salem relief fund on Monday making the total amount contributed up to this noon $159. The three contributions on Monday were Dr. Charles S. Adams $5, Herbert T. Whitman $5, E. G. Bergfors, $2.

All of the amounts contributed have been turned over to Clarence Burgin, treasurer of the Quincy Salem Relief Association. It is unfortunate that this call for funds comes at the present time when citizens all over the city have just been solicited for funds for the Fourth of July celebration and also for funds for the benefit to be given Edward Gisburn, the Quincy boy hero at Vera Cruz.

But fraternal orders and other organizations are acting independently of the city, and return from the churches have not been received.

The social and industrial committee of the Wollaston Woman's club have been collecting articles for the sufferers by the Salem fire and have been successful beyond their fondest hopes. The response has been most generous and they have a large number of boxes of goods already to ship. There was quite a question what to do with the packages collected until they could be shipped, but Mrs. Baker of Winthrop avenue came to the rescue and offered the use of a vacant house. The offer was promptly accepted and the house in now nearly full of packages and boxes awaiting shipment. It was thought best that the lot should be sent at one time and arrangements have been made with the express to forward all of the packages Wednesday morning.

THEIR RIGHTS AND DUTIES

Efforts Should Be Made to Assimilate Foreigners

Judge Avery, leading lawyers and prominent business men of this city, gathered at the District Court house Monday evening to discuss the treatment of foreigners in this city with a view of enlightening them as to their rights and duties.

The principal speaker was Secretary Stockwell of the commission on immigration. His talk was a review of the condition of the immigrant as he arrived, and many statistics were produced to show how large is the influx from across the water.

Elden S. Keith, a Brockton shoe manufacturer, related his experience with the foreign population of that city. He said everything possible was done in Brockton to assimilate the foreigners and to a great extent the people interested in it had been successful. He recommended that the men of Quincy confine their labors to this city.

Both speakers were questioned at length by those present and an informal discussion developed during which many gave their views on the question.

STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL.

George L. Gill Rebekah lodge, I. O. O. F., held a strawberry festival in Odd Fellows' hall on Monday evening which was well attended. The refreshments consisted of strawberries, ice cream, cakes and coffee.

During the evening there were cornet solos by Edward Critchley, accompanied by Miss Ellen Critchley and a farce, "The tipsy pudding," the cast which included Mrs. Mary Jones, Mrs. Sadie M. Wood, Mrs. Lillian Baker, Mrs. Annie Pushee, Mrs. Grace Welsh, Mrs. G. Richardson and Mrs. J. Hall.

Dancing was enjoyed, music being furnished by Mr. and Miss Critchley. The committee in charge was those who took part in the farce and Mrs. Addie Dewhurst and Miss M. Lizzie Furnald.

VISIT STATE HOUSE.

Several Quincy ladies accepted the invitation of Councillor Guy to visit the State House on Monday. They were introduced to Gov. Walsh by Mr. Guy, and then visited different departments. Councillor Guy says the Governor and Council would be pleased to have visitors any Monday.

B. H. BROOKS AMONG MISSING

Basil H. Brooks, the American secretary to the Argentine Commission at the shipyard, has been missing since June 19, and all that explains his absence is a letter saying that his mother was on her deathbed in a western town and that he was going to make a race against death.

On Monday, the presentation of a bill which should have been paid by Mr. Brooks, was presented to the commission. An inquiry as to why it was in the files receipted revealed that Brooks had never settled the account.

The amount of this bill was $129 and this, together with about $300 borrowed from commission members, is the total of the alleged debts of the young man.

Brooks has been in the employ of the commission for about three years and was a trusted employee. Monthly he has handled as much as $15,000 without any shortage, and his actions never gave rise to any suspicion. Although the police have been called in no steps will be taken towards his arrest.

Brooks was a linguist of no mean ability and conversed in three languages with ease. Last year he became interested in aviation and was a pupil of H. Roy Waite. It was his ambition to become a member of the aerial corps of the Argentine army, and it is said that his future as an aerial navigator was bright.

His Quincy friends were astonished to learn of his disappearance, and many believe that the letter is true in many respects. They are unable however to account for the nonpayment of the bill found in the files.

NEWSY BRIEFS

David Hamilton of Faxon road has gone to Prince Edward Island where he will spend his vacation with his wife and son who are visiting relatives on the Island.

One day recently the children at the Day Nursery were taken on an auto ride to Scituate by Mrs. W. E. Cooper, Mrs. E. E. Miller, and Mrs. George Pfaffmann. The matron and assistant and 18 children were in the party.

Mrs. George Sprague of Washington street entertained the Harmony whist club on Monday evening, her home being beautifully decorated with flowers. She has as guests members of a New York musical comedy company who assisted in entertaining. Whist prizes were awarded and a collation served.

Although not a member of the official family at City Hall, William H. Teasdale for several years chairman of the Board of Health, has not forgotten that the young ladies at the hall are very fond of roses. Mr. Teasdale has a large number of rose bushes and his blossoms are the envy of all in the vicinity of his home. He is also very generous with his roses and many of his friends have been remembered in addition to the aforesaid young ladies at City Hall.

LARGE WHIST PARTY.

The entertainment committee of the approaching festival of St. John's parish held a whist party at the home of Miss Nonie O' Connor, 112 Upland road Monday evening. There were 80 present and whist was played at 18 tables. The winners were Miss Theresa Wholley, Miss Julia Duffy, Miss Gertrude Duffy, Miss Sadie Gavin Mrs. M. E. Cook, George Germaine. The consolation prizes went to Miss Josephine Edwards and Edward Cook.

A short entertainment followed the whist and vocal selections were rendered by Miss Josephine McCarthy, Miss Angela McCarthy and Miss Bessie Lavery, and there were piano solos by George Germaine and Peter M. Sullivan. Refreshments and sherbet were served.

The special guests of the evening were Rev. Fr. Walter A. Quinlan and Rev. Fr. Florence McCarthy of the parish.

ANOTHER BONFIRE.

Another pile of rubbish which had been collected for a bonfire the night before the Fourth went up in smoke this noon and was the cause of the alarm from Box 37 at 12.58. This time the fire was in the field near the Quincy Adams station off Presidents avenue. If the boys keep on there will be nothing left to burn the night before.

Anna Snoame was fined $5 for drunkenness and $5 for creating a disturbance on the cars at Quincy.

William Pike was fined $25 for assault at Quincy.

James Madine was arraigned for robbery from Thomas Wylie at Quincy. Case continued until Wednesday.

BRIDGEWATER STATE FARM.

Just at the present time the authorities in charge of the State farm at Bridgewater are in need of men to care for the large farm. Potatoes, etc., are sadly in need of cultivating and this perhaps may account for the sentencing of a number of the unfortunates who appeared before the district court on Monday.

In the bunch of prisoners were five men arrested at Braintree for being tramps, one at Quincy for being a tramp and two from Weymouth for drunkenness, making eight in all who will pass the Fourth of July on the state farm at Bridgewater. One other man from Randolph received a similar sentence this morning but his plea with the court for one more trial resulted in his sentence being suspended until next October.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

SCHOOL NEEDS IN WARD TWO

A conference is to be held this evening between the Finance Committee of the City Council and the School Committee relative to the Washington school. An order for a four-room addition with assembly hall, calling for expenditure of $44,000 is now pending before the Council. The order as reported calls for $38,000 but since that time an estimate has been filed by the architect giving the estimated cost as $44,000.

In view of the fact that there is a movement on foot among the residents of the Quincy Point section favoring a new building in the Bigelow Park district there is some doubt as to what action the committee will take. The district seems to be divided, one element demanding an addition and assembly hall to the present building and another element in favor of a new building in preference to enlarging the present building.

Mr. Finn will arrange to have the money and material contributed distributed through a proper committee to the sufferers of our stricken neighboring city. Guy of Quincy has left a large collection of stereopticon views of Salem, together with a stereopticon with Executive Secretary Hamlin for the edification of any interested. Councillor Guy was formerly a resident of Salem and his collection is an interesting one at this time, in view of the fact that many of his views are of places that were wiped out by the conflagration last week.
